In some mysterious and sacred place, perhaps the temple itself, into which Isaiah had never before looked, he saw a lofty throne on which was seated the divine form. Above and on either side a chorus of seraphim chanted the holiness of God. The building trembled at the sound and smoke of incense went upward. Filled with terror at this august sight, the young man cried out in despair, conscious of sins of which he had never thought before. But one of the seraphim brought him assurance of pardon by touching his lips with a burning stone from the altar.

The vision of holiness melted into the vision of sin and this into the thrilling joy of pardon. At that moment Isaiah became awake of the divine inquiry for one to go to Judah with a message from God. The nation needed warning and exhortation. "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" was the question. And, though there was no angelic response, for no one coveted the ungracious task, and no one trained in the schools of the prophets made answer. Isaiah wakened by the sense of the divine holiness his own sin and the pardoninng grace of God, cried, "Here am I, send me!" Never before had he thought of such a work. All his training and prospects had pointed elsewhere. But the vision of the holy weal and the sinful reality fired him to consecrate himself to a ministry of life long labor for the faith of his people.

He was not left to imagine that this task would be easy. From the first he was warned that the effect of his preaching would seem to be the hardening of hearts and the deafening of ears against the truth. And when he wondered how long that condition would continue, he was told that only calamity could avail to bring the nation to repentance. Assyrian invassion, the hand of war, the devastation of the land, and the tragedy of captivity would all work their part as agents in the discipline of the nation. Only a remnant should remain. But that remnant should be the root of the true nation, the uncleus from which the glorious future might be expected.

Thus Isaiah was called to his prophetic task. It became the absorbing passion of his life. To court and to people he proclaimed the lessons of sin and righteousness and judgment as one who had spoken with God and was prepared to speak for God.

5. THE MESSAGE OF ISAIAH.

For forty years this great prophet proclaimed the truths made clear in the vision. In all that time he ceased not to bear witness to the four great truths which formed the basis of his message. The first of these was the sin of Judah. That sin he pointed out and denounced, as will be seen in other studies. The second was the impending punishment, the result of Assyrian invasion. The third was the assurance that the nation should not perish, but a remnant should remain to bring in the better time. And the fourth was that glorious future, the Messianic time of prosperity and peace, after chastisement had done its work.

In all of Isaiah's sermons these four ideas emerge. With varying emphasis, but with unfailing insistence they are kept in view. Nor did he hesitate to give vivid illustration of his meaning. His children were given names which bore direct relations to his great ideas. The oldest, "Shear Jashub," ("the remnant shall return") stood for the third of his thesis, and the younger for the destruction so soon to fall upon the land. With symbolic acts Isaiah set forth the meaning of his message. At every moment and with every device he gave emphasis to the will of God for his generation.

Thus in an age when Judah was in danger of losing its religious life through the influence of foreign luxuries and heathen vanities, the prophet was the living conscience of the nation, keeping alive such antagonism to the lower ideals of the time as stirred some in Israel, at least, to better things. It is not strange that he became the most notable figure in the prophetic ranks, and that the shadow of his life and influence fell far across the later years.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will deal with "Isaiah and Ahaz" and the one following with "Isaiah and Hezekiah."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The course and culmination of prophecy in northern Israel.
2. The leading features of the reign of Uzziah.
3. The Bible view of the leprosy.
4. The relation of Isaiah to the life of his age.
5. The library features of the book of Isaiah.
6. The relation of the call of Isaiah to his ministry and message.

LITERATURE.

Cornill, "The Prophets of Israel;" Kirkpatrick, "The Doctrine of the Prophets;" George Adam Smith, "The Book of Isaiah," (Expositors Bible, vol. 1); S. R. Driver, "Isaiah, His Life and Times;" McFadyen, "Isaiah" (Bible for Home and School); Willett, "Prophets of Israel." Articles on Isaiah in encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR LESSON

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Lessons From Great Lives. V. Ruth. Ruth 1:14-22. Topic for May 7.

We would needs search many pages of holy writ to find a better example of whole hearted consecration than that of the young woman whose life we study in this lesson. Naomi and her widowed daughters-in-law had not proceeded far on their journey to the land of Judah until they encountered the race prejudice and social barrier which any persons had to encounter when she sought a home among the Jews. When it was made clear by Naomi to them that they could not hope for social recognition outside of her own family and that there were no more sons in her family with whom a home might be made Orpha kissed her mother-in-law in sad fare well and turned back to her people, the Moabites and to their gods, but Ruth in dramatic words declared, "Whither thou goest, I will go, and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Thus in the fact of social ostracism, yes, indeed, of slavery—a condition where every hope that was dear to a woman's heart was renewed she, in pleadings and tears, made her choice and demonstrated her ability to be a true friend and worshiper of Jehovah. Here is an exhibition of real courage and true heroism which has ever been the means of moral and spiritual progress.

The thing we should remember is that the world has as much need today for loyal friends and true worshipers of the Almighty as it has had in any previous age. Perhaps it may not arise in the same form. We may not need to face social ostracism, it may, and perhaps will come in a less obvious form but it will come. Perhaps it may be to resist the temptation to yield to some form of dishonesty in trade or to sacrifice a principle of conscience to avoid the ridicule and scene of acquaintances and associates or to gratify an appetite of the body beyond the proper bounds or to omit some important task because many others who make a like profession do. We can all think of an endless number of examples of these things.

None but the courageous are true in such a struggle. It calls not for a courage to face glistening bayonets and hissing bullets but pointed shafts of criticism, of merciless ridicule, of cutting sarcasm, of bitter irony. Few indeed are the Christian Endeavorers who have been consistently true to their moral and spiritual ideals but who can look

(Continued on page 22.)

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

At Bridgeport where George W. Schroeder is pastor there were 5 additions on April 9th.

Chicago Heights where E. D. Salkeld preaches, had 4 additions, all of whom were by confession, April 9.

Assumption Church reports 6 additions on the second Sunday in April. The pastor is W. W. Weedon.

J. E. Pritchett is holding a short meeting for a country church near Carterville, where he is pastor.

C. R. Piety, pastor at Hillsboro is conducting a meeting for his home church with encouraging prospects and several additions.

It is reported that B. H. Sealock who recently resigned the Petersburg church is to become pastor at Edinburg to succeed G. W. Thomas who resigned.

Pontiac Church with its pastor, B. W. Tate, is rejoicing in an offering for missions of $125 which is 25 per cent more than was called for or expected.

Howett Street Church, Peoria, observed Easter Sunday. There were 261 in the Sunday-school, excellent congregations and ? additions. William Price is minister.

The Vawter meeting at Streator has resulted in 49 additions, during the first week. Fourty-seven of these are adults. The congregations are larger than can be accommodated in the edifice.

The revival at Sumner, being conducted by Lew D. Hill, has resulted in 12 additions, 7 being by baptism. The meeting will continue a few days longer and will be concluded with a lecture on "Shall we shoot the Boys?"

The choirs of the Presbyterian and Disciple Churches of Gibson City, where L. O. Lehman is minister, gave an Easter concert in the Presbyterian Church, to the delight of both congregations and a large company of people of the community.

The pastor of Ipava Church, Chester R. Gains, was united in marriage to Miss Mabyn McLaren, April 11. Mr. and Mrs Gains, after a short visit in St. Louis and Illinois cities, will be at home at Ipava. The Christian Century offers congratulations.

University Place Church, Champaign, will dedicate its reconstructed church soon. Assurances have been received from Charles Reign Scoville that he will be present and conduct the dedicatory exercises. This church is in a Sunday-school campaign lead by Miss Lemert, who is assisted by Wendel Coler, of Michigan.

Centralia Church where J. F. Rosborough is pastor has one of the most prosperous Sunday-schools in the state. An attendance of 1,000 was looked for on Easter Sunday. For many weeks the attendance has averaged between 600 and 700. Dr. I. N. McCash, of Cincinnati, is to address the congregation on April 26.

L. B. Appleton is pastor at Christopher where Rufus A. Finnell is holding a very successful meeting. The meeting is only well started. There have been nearly 50 additions, 30 of whom came in one day. The congregations are large and great enthusiasm is being manifested for the meeting.

At Camp Point the Brotherhood had charge of the services Easter Sunday night, and rendered a very creditable program to a large congregation. The men of the church are looking forward soon to the presence of J. K. Shellenberger, who is to deliver an address on "The Brotherhood Idea." The minister is H. J. Reynolds.

B. H. Cleaver will begin a revival meeting in his home church at Lewistown. On the initial nights of the meeting the sermons will be preached by Mr. Ashby, of the First Christian Church, and Mr. Barrett of the Free Methodist, and Mr. Bartle, of the First Episcopal Church, after which Mr. Cleaver will preach every night.

Charleston Church where George H. Brown is minister is reported in a prosperous condition. At the Easter services there were 7 additions. The attendance at Sunday-school was 375 with an offering of more than $20. It is reported that Mr. Brown has been called to succeed George A. Campbell at Austin Church, Chicago, and that the call has been accepted.

Latham Church where C. S. Weaver is minister, had an interesting prayer-meeting the first Wednesday in April. On this evening the subject was "Our Debt to the Baptists.—An Appreciation." The Baptist Prayer-meeting was adjourned and all came over to the Christian Church and enjoyed greatly the hour of fellowship. This church observed Passion Week, during which time ministers from nearby churches were in attendance and preached.

William E. Adams, pastor of First Church, Danville, is speaking at the railroad shops every Thursday at the noon hour. He is being assisted by a number of workers in his church, who preside at the portable organ and conduct the singing. This church has recently voted to try the combination preaching and Sunday-school service for Sunday mornings. The experiment will be conducted for three months. The Sunday-school hour for the little ones is at 9:30 and for the adults 10 o'clock. No intermission will be had between this part of the service and the preaching later, and the whole service will be adjourned a quarter of an hour earlier than has been the custom.

News Editorials

Observes Passion Week.

H. H. Jenner, pastor of Stuart Street Church, Springfield, observed Passion Week and invited several of his neighbor ministers to preach. It is encouraging to note the increased number of our churches taking advantage of this week to impress the great facts of our Lord's suffering upon their congregations. These were the great days of our Lord's life. They have pressed into them redemptive suffering which the Christian world cannot afford to know in a superficial way. Certain religious bodies have profited immeasurably by a serious annual portrayal of the facts relative to the experience of Jesus in the last days of his earthly ministry. There is intelligence among these people about these great outstanding facts, which it is very doubtful the Disciples can approach. We shall be the more intelligent and consequently stronger in our Christian life from a prayerful following day by day of the impressive scenes of Passion Week. It is not needful that the minister shall seek eloquence or that illustrations shall be advanced. The most impressive message to be brought by a minister to his congregation is the simple relating of the story itself. Illustrative material in connection with this story must prove so inferior compared with the story itself, as to seem irrelevant. The Scripture reveals the facts in their simplest and most convincing form.

A Union Country Church.

Every union movement is of interest to Disciples, if it is only a federation or a temporary truce. There is encouragement and material for reflection in it. That the Methodists and Presbyterians and Disciples and Congregationalists can fraternize at all, indicates an advance over conditions existing a few years ago. And that a co-operative movement can be carried forward without friction shows that a considerable oiling of our ecclesiastical machinery has been effected. A small union church in these days is likely to be of more vital value than a large denominational church in a city; yet, the emphasis and notice is usually accorded the latter. The men who are leaders or pastors in union churches are pioneers in a great movement. They ought to be thrilled with the importance and far-reaching possibilities of their task. The preacher is a discredit to the profession, if he covets a great task when he is ministering in such a situation. These humble demonstrations are the examples which prove the logic of a plea for union, more than any oratory or editorial discussion can prove it. What the cause of union needs today, and halts for, is a sufficint number of these demonstrations to afford conclusive evidence of the feasibility of the plan of union. Once these demonstrations are numerous enough, a tidal wave of co-operative interest may be expected. If the Disciples want to preach Christian union, let them practice it everywhere possible by organizing union churches. Near Lewistown is a union church composed of members of various denominational churches. The minister is M. N. Beeman, who is also superintendent of schools in Lewistown. The congregation is known as Isabel Union Church. The present pastorate has continued for a year. There is perfect harmony. If you were to inquire of the minister, he would speak humbly of his work. The congregations have never been large. He preaches on alternate Sundays. At New Year's time the minister went over and preached six sermons resulting in sixteen baptisms. Some of these to be baptized were Methodists and Presbyterians who came asking for the form of baptism which is the most natural expression of the conversion process and unquestionably follows closely the example of Jesus in addition to being a unifying element. This report is brief but it is significant. We will accomplish more Christian union by working at it than by talking about it. We will accomplish a completer following of Jesus for our neighbors by close co-operation and fellowship, if we ourselves are really devout, than if our work is undertaken in separate folds and we call across denominational lines for our example to be followed. If the doctrine we preach is true it will prove irresistible if other Christians have full and free fellowship with us who profess to embody this doctrine.

Secretary's Letter

W. T. Carley, of Stewardson, preaches half time at Mode in Fayette County. He can be secured by some church for the other half time. Mr. Carley reports the church at Stewardson in a very much better condition than formerly. J. E. Story's meeting there last summer was the turning point for larger things. They are planning for a great meeting this summer.

S. R. Lewis, of Harvel, is recovering from at attack of appendicitis. He says the work there is prospering; the Ladies' Aid gave an entertainment that netted them about $45; the parsonage will soon be remodeled; they are planning for a revival to begin Oct. 1 with Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Crabb; the Bible-school is growing and lacks but two points of being a "Front Rank School."

Wm. G. McColley, Normal, is available for a meeting in May. Mr. McColley was recently commissioned as a state evangelist under our society and he always holds a good sane meeting.

Geo. W. Schroeder is still having additions at Bridgeport, another confession last Sunday.

A good brother is not satisfied with their offering for Illinois missions and orders supplies for another offering. Glad of it, and we will be glad to fill other orders, and we will print more if we run short.

We kindly urge again that churches write our office concerning men whom they are thinking of employing, unless they are absolutely certain that the records of the men under consideration are clear and straight. It is not our desire to "butt in" and cause trouble, but to save the churches from having trouble with unworthy men. We only have a comparative few of the questionable kind, but each of them can tear up about two churches a year on an average. Be free to write us.

J. W. Kilborn, of Mt. Carmel, has accepted a call to Sullivan and will move about June 1.

J. F. Rosborough, of Centralia, is doing things in building up a great Bible-school. There was 680 in attendance April 2, and 68 in the men's class.

This is truly a Bible-school decade and great advance is being made in developing this part of the work. But may it not be possible that the Bible-school is sometimes exhalted and boosted and "rallied" until it overtops and over shadows the church of our Lord, the only divine institution for the salvation of men? Push the Bible-school work with all possible zeal, but keep the idea uppermost in the minds of all the people that the church of Christ is the biggest and best institution in the world and nothing can ever outshine it.

Harry M. Barnett is in a meeting at Creal Springs with prospects for a good work. In May he will hold a tent meeting with E. E. Hartley at Lewis' Chapel in Vermilion County. He is open for June. Harry is alright and delivers the goods. Address him at 703 W. Clay St., Clinton, Ill.

Jesse E. Story is in a meeting at Keyesport assisted by J. E. Stout, with large audiences and a number of additions. Stout is Story's assistant pastor at Mulberry Grove.

Nineteen have been added in the short time W. H. Kern has been at Cisne and the work is greatly revived.

C. B. Dabney has been employed for another year at Boston Chapel for half time. Mr. Dabney has part time not taken. He is a most worthy man and ought to be kept busy. Address him at Barry.

The country and village churches should identify themselves more closely with the interests and progress of the rural communities where they are. The church at Mackinaw and the Bell Ridge Church in Edgar County have both recently allowed their church buildings to be used for farmers' institutes, with exhibits of corn, poultry, sheep, etc., making the church a real and practical factor in the upbuilding of rural life. A church building should be dedicated to be used in the interest of the whole community in various ways, not for sermons and Bible-school only. The country church problem would be greatly simplefied if the village and country preachers and members would get hold of this broader view and make a practical effort to identify the church with all the interests of the community in social, intellectual, industrial and domestic life, as well as being a strong religious influence.

Do not fail to attend the Village and Country Church Conference to be held at Stanford, April 24 and 25. The program was published in all the papers last week and is an excellent one. This is one of the livest questions before us today and one of the most worth while. It has been said many times that our country churches are dying, and that is too true. The Stanford conference aims to help get at the cause and let those who have made a special study of the problem tell us how to apply the proper remedy Lodging will be furnished free and meals can be had at the usual prices. Write Bro. N. H. Robertson that you are coming, and take with you a small offering from your church to help defray the advertising expenses. Also take a few of your wide-awake laymen with you and let them see and study the situation, and when you return home they will help you apply the good suggestions.

Geo. J. Bramel's meeting at Johnston City had resulted in 15 additions at last report. They want a minister at once.

On Easter F. W. Burnham, Prelate of the Knights Templar of Springfield, delivered the Easter address to an assembly of 1,000 Knights of the city and surrounding towns.

The Field Secretary will dedicate the church at Minier on May 14, and on the 21st he will dedicate the $14,000 church called the Antioch Church, near Rossville.

The church and Bible-school at Hudson gave a splendid Easter entertainment, "Resurrection Rays," Sunday night to an overflowing house. There was a good collection for the N. B. A.

Just have word that H. J. Hostetler has accepted a call to Newman, and begins at once.

Bloomington, Ill.

J. Fred Jones, Field Secretary.
W. D. Deweese, Office Sec'y-Treas.

Beardstown

Our meeting of four weeks at this place closed with ten conversions and nine other additions. The attendance was good through it all and the interest fine. The church was incorporated and money raised to buy the German M. E. Church building or rather to make the first payment on it, the amount raised being $1,240.

C. W. Ross, fifth district evangelist, organized the church last fall and G. W. Morton was called to serve it, the Morgan County Bible-schools furnishing the money to support. Brother Morton is a steady, careful minister, doing his work well and with good judgment, and it was wise that he and his good wife were brought to the city.

Ministers A. M. Hale, Macomb, and Fred Nichols, Table Grove, came over to cheer us on and Wm. Hipsley, also of Table Grove came to beam on us.

Elmer E. Rice, Dixon, led the singing and he did it well. He is a modest, manly young man, kind in manner and of good judgment, and he is a fine leader and soloist.

Bloomington, Ill.

J. Fred Jones, Secretary.

Chicago

By Vaughan Dabney.

At the morning service of the Sheffield Ave. Church, Dr. I. N. McCash will be the chief speaker.

On Easter Sunday there were 17 additions at Jackson Boulevard Church, 16 of them by confession.

J. DeWitt Hull, pastor of the Metropolitan, reports the work there as progressing. He recently closed a short meeting assisted by his brother.

At the regular Wednesday evening service at the Hyde Park Church the 19th, Prof. W. D. McClintock gave an interesting review at Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird" to an appreciative group.

Basil Keusseff, our Russian missionary, reports that already he has trained up a helper. This young Russian is able to teach the classes and even to conduct a short religious service in the absence of Mr. Keusseff.

The executive committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement held the First Anniversary Supper Saturday p. m., April 22, at the Auditorium Hotel to receive the report of the work accomplished and to discuss a plan of work for the coming year.

On Sunday afternoon, Apr. 30, at 3:30 p. m. the regular quarterly convention of the Chicago Disciples will be held at the First Methodist Church, Washington and Clark. Dr. I. N. McCash, of the Home Society will speak; also several of our Chicago laymen. Churches are urged to bring an unusually large delegation and group themselves around the church standards.

At the open meeting of the Chicago Christian Business Men's Association on Apr. 17, a motion was passed relative to offerings for city missions. The substance of the motion was that the association should set a higher goal to reach. Some proposed an aim of $4,000 this next year for city missions; others $10,000. The matter was referred to a committee consisting of representatives from the association, the C. C. M. S. and the ministerial association. The report of the committee will be given the next quarterly rally.

One cannot but notice the number of special Sundays that are being observed among the Chicago churches. First there was Arbitration Day, then comes in rapid succession Tuberculosis Sunday, Laymen's Missionary Movement Sunday, and special observance by Sunday services of the Tercentenary of the King James Version. The observance of these many and varied special Sundays instead of weakening the local work, because of their enlarging influence are beneficial in the highest sense to the welfare of the local church.

In the Inter-denominational section of the April Messenger, the monthly church magazine of the churches in Chicago, O. F. Jordan interprets in an interesting manner the religious movements in Chicago. Mr. Jordan calls attention to the following movements of interest in this city: "The Suburban Church conference at Morgan Park." "The Revival of Missionary Interest as a result of the Laymen's Conference." "The proposed half-million dollar church building of the Fourth Presbyterian Church where John Timothy Stone is pastor." "The moral issues in the city election;" "The Sunday evening club; and "The great missionary church of the Disciples at Hyde Park."

ORGANIZED SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK

BY L. O. LEHMAN.

The year following my graduation from Eureka College I was sent as a delegate to the Illinois State Sunday-school Convention. The gathering was to me a spiritual feast, but all the time I was as a stranger in a strange land. I was able to locate just two other disciple preachers and they were unknowns like myself. Conditions have changed materially in the last nine years and yet I have never ceased to wonder that a people whose one great plea is for Christian union have given so little attention to the opportunities afforded for the advancement of their cause in organized Sunday-school work. During the present year I have been acting as Home Visitation Superintendent of the Ford County Sunday-school Association and in that capacity have organized and conducted a house-to-house visitation of the homes of the county. This work has impressed me more than ever with the opportunities for advancing the unity of God's people through the medium of Interdenominational Sunday-school organizations. Following are some of the items that seem to me worthy of consideration:

An Already-existing Unity.

I. Organized Sunday-school work presents an already-existing unity which ought to be cultivated for the sake of greater unity. Christian union will never be brought about by arguments or discussions. These are the very things that have been dividing us. Christian people must become acquainted, learn to know each other intimately, and come to love each other before there can be any real hope for further unity. Any opportunity for the promotion of these things ought therefore to be embraced by those who are interested in unity. This is just the opportunity afforded by the organized Sunday-school work. It is a union of Christian people for the ministry of teaching the Word of God. Note the words, "a union of Christian people." I use them advisedly as against the idea of a federation of denominations. In the inner circles of the organization care is taken to see that the various religious bodies are fairly represented, but aside from this the thought of denominationalism does not enter the work of the organization. The question is never asked, What church do you represent? It is sufficient that all are citizens of the Kingdom. I have known of W. B. Jacobs for ten or fifteen years and thought I knew what his church affiliations were until a few days ago when, upon inquiry, I discovered I was entirely wrong. The unit in the organized Sunday-school work is the individual disciple who is interested in the ministry of teaching the Word. This is the divine unit (John 15) and therefore I contend that we have here a practical, present case of Christian union. Moreover, the spirit of union is here, for only men of the broadest spiritual vision are given any place in the management of its affairs.

A Present Practicability.

It should also be remembered that this is the only union that seems at present practicable. Union Sunday-schools are far simpler propositions than union churches. People who have scruples against uniting with a different church have no such scruples against uniting with the Sunday-school of that church. Our recent church census in Ford County reveals that there are many people living in the county who are not in touch with active church life because the church of their choice is not present in their community. Yet many of these are enrolled in the Bible schools of their communities. So that our proposition resolves itself into this: Our Lord left to his church two ministries, preaching and teaching. We want to see his disciples united in both these ministries. At present we seem unable to unite them in the ministry of preaching, but they will unite in the ministry of teaching. Surely the way to the larger unity is through the cultivation of the present unity. People who study the Word of God together will eventually be ready for a closer fellowship.

The success of any plan of Christian union will probably depend much on local conditions. The people of the same community will be the ones who must live and work together and make or mar the union. It is, therefore, vital that the spirit of unity should be nurtured locally. The organized Sunday-school work is practically the only agency that brings the Christian people of a community together for a divine ministry. It is a splendid opportunity, therefore, for all believers in union.

Rev. L. O. Lehman.

The Proper Objective.

II. Organized Sunday-school work furnishes the proper objective for unity—"The Kingdom of God," rather than "Our Church." Christian union must be a dream until the people become more interested in the salvation of the community or the race than in the upbuilding of one individual church. The tendency of all organized Sunday-school work is in this direction. Its conventions bring together members of all religious bodies so that each speaker reveals the secrets of his success not to his own people alone but to competing religious neighbors as well. Some phases of the organized work compel people to work for the religious interest of the whole community. As for instance our house-to-house visitation. Such a work is not possible to people of sectarian spirit. Those who go out to visit the homes must forget their religious affiliations and work as sincerely for the neighboring school or church as for their own. Otherwise the plan defeats itself. Any work that commands such a broad interest in God's Kingdom ought to attract the people who are interested in union.

Scope Enhances Its Value.

III. The very scope of the organized work makes practical the objective mentioned above, and enhances its value for unity. It has pushed out the walls of the school until there is a place for all human beings from the cradle to the grave, irrespective of age, duties, or physical condition. By its house-to-house visitation work it unites all the people to spy out the whole community for the sake of reaching the last man and woman and bringing them to the place provided for them. By its graded lessons and organized classes it makes its work so effective and efficient as to draw all classes under its influence. For what better instrumentality for the promotion of Christian union can we hope than is found in an organization that proposes the salvation of the whole community by the united efforts of all the Christian people of the community through the teaching of the divine Word?

Facts of Division Revealed.

IV. Unintentionally, perhaps, the methods of the organized work furnish the opportunity to reveal the actual facts of division and so create a conscience for unity. For instance in our home visitation in Ford County it has been shown that one township has six churches, but seventeen churches are represented in the preferences of the people: another has five churches, with thirteen represented in the preferences: another six, with fourteen represented in the preferences: etc. 9.3 per cent of all the families connected with the churches in the townships whose statistics have been tabulated are divided in church relationship. The publication of such facts will surely create a desire for greater unity in the minds of the people and hasten the day when it can be brought about.

But what of all this? Are not our people supporting the organized Sunday-school work? They are doing very well, but there are larger opportunities in this service. I suggest two things:

A New Motive.

I. We need a new motive for our relation to this work. We need to give ourselves enthusiastically to it for the sake of our plea and help to work all these plans. Many of the above suggestions are based upon the ideals of the organization. Not all have been realized. Not all counties have made a house-to-house visitation, not every school has graded lessons or organized classes, not every Sunday-school worker has any conscious relation to this organized work. We ought to work intelligently for the realization of all these plans, accept responsibilities where given us, work faithfully in the ranks where that is our lot and by our sweet Christian spirit and broad Christian sympathies convince the skeptical that it is possible for Christian people to have interests outside their own church or school. And we ought to do it to help answer our Master's prayer for the unity of His disciples.

What Is Our Duty?

II. I put my second suggestion in the form of a question. Has not the time come when we ought to recognize the "union" significance of this work by discontinuing our own State Sunday-school Conventions in vor of the Interdenominational organizations We cannot hope to present a program that will compare with theirs. Our people will be gainers, not losers, in the practical value of the convention to them. And it might be that such a recognition of the State Sunday-school Association as an instrumentality for the promotion of union by a people committed to a plea for union would have a significance that would mean much to the cause we love. When full Christian union comes, will we still have our conventions of what were formerly our churches? Why, then, continue our Sunday-school conventions in the face of so real a unity in the ministry of teaching?

Gibson City, Ill.

If I knew you and you knew me—
If both of us could clearly see,
And with an inner sight divine
The meaning of your heart and mine,
I'm sure that we would differ less
And clasp our hands in friendliness:
Our thoughts would pleasantly agree
If I knew you and you knew me.

—Nixon Waterman.

Church Life

—Every attendant at the Congress will make himself a missionary of the Congress idea. Next spring should find at least five hundred at the Kansas City meeting.

—The May offering is the next thing on the program. 1911 should be a great year for American missions.

—Take the offering on the first Sunday. If it rains that day take it again the following Sunday. If any member is absent give him a chance, personally, to have a part in bringing America to Christ.

—The writer of the Ohio Secretary's Letter on page 21 of last week's issue is awarded the prize for best news item. He will please accept this statement as due notification and indicate at once by postal card which of the following books he prefers:

1. New Testament Theology, by Henry C. Sheldon, Macmillian, $1.50 net.
2. The Truth of Christianity, by W. H. Turton, Putman, $1.25 net.
3. Christian Unity in Effort, by Frank J. Firth, Lippincott, $1.50 net.
4. The Right to Believe, by Eleanor Rowland, Houghton Mifflin, $1.50net.

* * *

H. J. Loken is holding a meeting at San Jose, California.

A men's club has been organized at the Central Church, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Charles E. McVay, of Hardy, Neb., will sing in a meeting at Tonkawa, Okla., beginning April 30.

W. H. Bagby reports a daily increase in the interest of the work at West Side Church, San Francisco, Calif. Four united with the church on April 9.

Richard and Elbert Martin began a meeting at Smithville, Texas, Apr. 17. They report good progress in the work at Sweetwater, Texas.

Wm. Dunn Ryan, pastor at Youngstown, Ohio reports a triumphant Easter Sunday with twenty-two confessions and a Sunday-school attendance of 805.

The Men's Brotherhood of Central Church, Marshalltown, Ia., were entertained recently by a similar organization of the Methodist Church of that place.

The annual district convention of the churches of northern Ohio was held Apr. 12 in Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Ohio. R. H. Miller, of Buffalo, N. Y., was the principal speaker.

The ministerial institute of the Kansas churches was held this year at Central Church, Wichita, Kan., April 11-13. E. L. Powell, pastor of First Church, Louisville, Ky., gave the principal address.

More than $3,500 has been subscribed in excess of the required $150,000 to redeem the pledge of R. A. Long towards the hospital endowment. The site for the hospital has not yet been selected.

Claris Yeuell, who is serving the church at Paulding, Ohio, for the second year, has accepted a unanimous call to continue his services. Mr. Yeuell has recently organized a boy's brigade with thirty-five members.

During the first three weeks of Charles Reign Scoville's meeting at Enid, Okla., 714 were added. Mr. and Mrs. Scoville spent one evening at El Reno, Okla. during the meeting, resulting in thirty-four accessions.

L. C. Brink of Hamilton, Ind., has resigned his pastorate there to accept the work at Garrett, Ind. This church at Garrett was organized with twenty-seven members, and in three years grew to 257 under the leadership of O. L. Hull.

R. H. Crossfield, who recently concluded a meeting with nine of the churches at Los Angeles, Calif., has begun a meeting with A. C. Smither, at the First Church in that city. Large audiences are attending and there have been a number of additions.

A site has been purchased by the congregation of Grandview Church, Kansas City, Kan., and a church to cost $30,000 will be built, with special facilities for Sunday-school and institutional work. B. E. Stover is pastor of this church which began a year ago as a mission.

A union prayer-meeting service was held on Friday, Apr. 14, at the First Church, Hannibal, Mo., the pastor, G. A. Campbell, presiding. Talks were given by the pastors of the Baptist Presbyterian and Congregational churches, the subject being "The Last Seven Words of Jesus on the Cross."

About one hundred and fifty delegates from out of the city were registered at the union Sunday-school convention recently held at Manila, P. I. This was the first union convention ever assembled there, and a permanent organization was effected, which will hold annual conventions.

The services at Newton, Ia., were given over to a C. W. B. M. jubilee rally on April 13. Miss Annette Newcomer, state secretary, and Mrs. Anna B. Atwater were among the speakers. The local organization will support Miss Minnie Johnson as a living-link in the foreign field.

W. H. Allen, for five years pastor of Jackson Street Church, Muncie, Ind., has accepted the pastorate of one of our churches at Melbourne, Australia, and will preach his farewell sermon the last Sunday in June. Mr. Allen has had a very successful pastorate at Muncie, and his resignation is the cause of much regret to his congregation.

As a result of the recent evangelistic services at the First Church, Fresno, Calif., thirty-four have united with the church. The goodly sun of $673.45 has been given to foreign missions. Ray O. Miller is minister of this congregation which supports Mrs. Wilson at Bolenge and the Clovis Church at home.

The Sunday-school at Pickering, Mo., gave a good program on Easter and reached the high water mark in attendance, 240 being present. A splendid offering of $45 was received for the Benevolent Association. In the evening the pastor, Fred M. Lindenmeyer, delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the high school students.

Passion Week was celebrated at the First Church, Fresno, Calif., with services each evening. The pastor, Ray O. Miller, spoke on the following subjects: "The Triumphal Entry;" "The Book of Life;" "And the Door Was Shut;" "The Incarnation;" "Serenity;" "The Blood Covenant;" "What is Death?;" "Decision" and "Hope Born Anew."

Aetna Street Church, Cleveland, Ohio, is making excellent progress under the leadership of J. W. Leonard. During the past month there were twenty-five additions to the church. On Easter Sunday the Sunday-school had an enrollment of 330, with a collection of $25.50. An Easter bazaar held the previous week cleared $150.

On a recent Sunday evening the brotherhood of the church at Manhattan, Kan. took charge of the service. Members of the brotherhood gave addresses on the following subjects: "How May the Church Appeal to Strong Men?" "The Right of a Boy to the Example and Counsel of a Christian Father;" "Christianity an Appeal to Heroism".

A fellowship meeting of the various Disciple churches of Washington, D. C., was held recently at Vermont Avenue Church. The meeting was held to promote the general welfare of the churches and to give the members an opportunity to become acquainted and exchange greetings. The affair was a success in every way and it was decided to hold three meetings during the year.

Although seven years since excavations were begun, Temple Church, Kansas City, Kan., has just been finished. The building of brick and concrete has cost $25,000 and contains an auditorium seating five hundred persons, besides reading, reception and dining rooms. At the dedicatory services, April 30, the pastor, J. M. Crutcher will be assisted by Geo. H. Combs, pastor of the Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, Mo.

Jay Elwood Lynn, who has been upon a leave of absence from the Central Christian Church at Pueblo, Colo., for the past five months, upon a recent visit to the church presented again his resignation, which the church refused to accept last fall. It is his decision to remain in country life environment for two or three years to completely rebuild his nervous strength. He has accepted a call to the S. L. W. Ranch Church near Greelye, Colo. This is an ideal country church with some fine souls in it. The church contemplates at once building a country home for its minister upon a good sized plot of land in a beautiful location. A. L. Ward for several years pastor at Boulder was given the unanimous call of the church at Pueblo, without the usual trial visit, and will begin work about June 1st. J. E. Findley's work as supply during the winter was most efficient and was heartily appreciated by the Central Church.

The week preceding Easter was observed at Richmond, Va., by the observance of an inter-brotherhood week of prayer, services being held daily from 12:30 to 1:00 and from 6:30 to 7:00 p. m. One of the leaders was O. A. Hawkins, a prominent layman of the Seventh Street Church, who took for his topic the great intercessory prayer of Jesus for the unity of his followers and said in part: "The Christian world has been engaged for more than a century in trying to carry the gospel to the heathen. To many lands and much people it has been as a 'great light,' but the heathen of the East has been busy doing some thinking for himself, and has discovered our inconsistencies. The heathen are yet babes in the Christian religiou, but they are teaching us the lesson we so sadly need to learn, that the coming of the kindom is being delayed by divisions among the followers of Christ. Yet in reality, there are not any fundamental differences in the evangelical denominations. The time has come when it must be said, if we mean to do anything about it at all, that no man or body of men has the right to say that any one set form of baptism or the acceptance of apostolic succession, or the historic episcopate, or certain detailed ecclesiastical expressions and rights, that all or any one of these is essential to the fundamental idea of the Christian religion. Let us remember the words of the great apostle to the Gentiles: 'For I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.' "

Claire L. Waite, formerly pastor of First Church, Milwaukee, Wis., has been called to the pulpit at Green Bay, Wis.

J. J. Tisdall, pastor of Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, Ohio, has closed a three weeks meeting with home forces, with forty-six additions.

Work is soon to be begun on the new edifice of West Walnut Street Church, Portland, Ind. A brick and stone structure is planned, to cost about $15,000.

Howard G. Connelly has begun his pastorate at Grand Avenue Church, Minneapolis, Minn. Mr. Connelly was recently called to this congregation from Ardmore, Okla., to succeed T. J. Dow, who resigned recently.

James W. Brown was ordained recently to the Christian ministry at Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Brown came from the Methodist communion. Easter audiences large and great offering, and one young man was baptized.

Lowell S. McPherson has concluded his meeting with W. S. Lowe, pastor of Central Church, Kansas City, Kan. Large audiences, taxing the capacity of the auditorium, attended the meetings, and the whole church was greatly blessed and uplifted by the spirituality of his message.

George B. Evans has just accepted a call for a fourth year of service with the Christian Church of Chagrin Falls, Ohio. DeLoss Smith gave a recital in the Chagrin Falls Church, April 11. The Sunday-school raised over seventeen dollars at their exercises Easter Sunday. The Sunday-school is now in a contest with Chardon, Ohio.

Harry G. Hill began his fifth year with the Third Church, Indianapolis, the first Sunday in April. The occasion was celebrated by the entire congregation adopting resolutions of praise and pledges of renewed loyalty to the pastor. A handsome floral tribute was given him by the Business Men's Bible Class. The audiences in the new building are the largest in the history of the church.

First Church, Hutchinson, Kan., with a membership of 1,200 has divided its territory into forty-five districts, so that the problem of pastoral work may be simplified. Each district will be in charge of a superintendent who will report cases of sickness, changes of address and visit new families moving into their district, thus enabling the church to keep in touch with the members in every section of the city.

We have the following good report from Jefferson City, Mo.: Yesterday was our third Lord's day with this congregation. Had a fine day throughout. In the Bible-school were 200 present with an offering of $157.12. The services were well attended. We have one of the best choruses in Missouri of its size about twenty voices and as loyal to the church as people can be. We are delighted with the prospects of this new field and hope for great things. May we have an interest in your prayers as we labor in this most strategic field. A. R. LIVERETT, Minister.

Easter was a joyful day with the First Church of Joplin, Mo. The Philharmonic orchestra, consisting of thirty pieces furnished the music with a large chorus. The pastor, G. J. Chapman, preached a sermon on the "Glorious Resurrection." At the evening hour J. W. Baker, of Tacoma, Washington, formerly of Joplin gave an address on American missions under the auspices of the A. C. M. S. The First Church justly loves Mr. Baker and wishes him every success in his important work as superintendent of missions in western Washington.

Charles C. Wilson and the First Church, Milwaukee, have just concluded a series of meetings in which they were assisted by Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Kendall as leaders of song. The conception of the services as set forth by the advertising indicates that the social note, so lacking in popular evangelism, was prominent without any aluring of the evangelical note. Many strangers came to the services from night to night, drawn by the special advertising put out. "The dominant idea," says Mr. Wilson, "was not to get the people to help the church, but to get the church to help the people by ministering sunshine and sympathy and the grace of Christ." Mark Wayne Williams, pastor of the Second Church and the "Mark Wayne" of The Christian Century's Junior Pulpit, spoke to children each evening for three minutes. About fifty persons were added to the church and much seed sown.

DR. PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder

Made from cream of tartar derived solely from grapes, the most delicious and healthful of all fruit acids.

The annual business meeting held recently at the Union Church in Monroe, Wis., shows its affairs to be in a flourishing condition. The membership is now 140, and since the beginning of the pastorate of Cecil J. Armstrong the audiences have steadily increased. There is no outstanding indebtedness and the treasurer's report shows a good balance. The need of a new edifice is recognized by the members, and when the matter was brought up at the business meeting, much enthusiasm was manifested, and it is hoped that the building project may soon be under way. The congregation feels much encouraged by the commendation received from a number of persons who are not members of the church, but who have promised their support and co-operation along the lines of progress and improvement laid out.

Wm. J. Lockhart, who recently dedicated the new church at North English, Iowa, speaks enthusiastically of the pastor, Frank W. Sutton, and his congregation, and gives the following report of the service: "This is a rural community, the church drawing its strength largely from the country. The people are progressive and have built a church that rivals anything I know of in a town of 1,000 people. The building cost $13,000 and there was yet needed on the day of dedication $6,400. Amid great enthusiasm the people contributed over $7,000 and would have given more had I not told them we had enough. The afternoon was given over to a fellowship meeting and at the evening service nineteen more people responded to the gospel invitation, making over one hundred during the meeting. The new converts pledged over $480 to the current expense fund for the coming year."

G. I. Hoover, pastor of West Street Church, Tipton, Ind., sends the following annual report: Money raised: Through general fund of the church, $3,054.80; through auxiliary societies of the congregation, $1,508.25; through building fund, $2,489.50; for missions, $261.72. Total amount of money raised by the church and its auxiliary societies, less duplications, $6,338.17. Added to the church during the year, 286 persons—24 at regular services and 261 at special evangelistic services. Of this number 181 were added upon confession of faith, 80 by letter and statement from the fellowship of our own churches and 24 as immersed believers from the fellowship of other religious communions. The present enrolled resident membership of the church is 831, of whom 769 live in Tipton county; 351 persons have been added to the church during the two years of the present ministry. During the past year the minister preached 85 sermons, made 5 special addresses, conducted 30 funerals, and officiated at 13 weddings.

Joplin, Missouri

The annual convention of the Missouri Christian Missionary Society, Third District, is soon here. This annual gathering including 31 counties and representing 2,500 disciples in southwest Missouri, meets in the First Church, Joplin, Mo., May 1, 2 and 3. Prominent preachers, educators and workers of Missouri and also several of our international workers will be present and appear on the program. Lodging and breakfast will be free and dinner and supper served for 25 cents per meal. If expecting to attend this convention you would send me your name in advance it would be of great assistance to me in providing entertainment. Let every church with its various departments of the district be well represented at this convention. On the evening of May 3, the men will enjoy a banquet together and be addressed by specialists. We feel that no one can well afford to miss this great spiritual feast. Hasten all your preparations and come. The convention is, "at hand."

G. J. CHAPMAN, MINISTER, FIRST CHURCH.
301 Connor St.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

(Continued from page 17.)

back, to not only one, but many times when he was made to feel the sting of contempt of his fellows in the store, in the office or in the shop because he dared defend the right and oppose perhaps only silently the wrong. But we do well to remember that such was the experience of our Lord and of his apostles. Yea, it has been the experience of righteous souls in every age and it will be ours. But such is the price which all true spirits must pay. Indeed. "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for his sake."

Notes From the Foreign Society

Miss Kate Gault Miller will be associated with Miss Emma Lyon in the Women's College, Nankin, China, until some one else is sent out to take that position.

M. B. Madden and family are preparing to return to Japan. They have some thought of going by way of Europe. They are leaving the eldest son in the Wharton Home in Hiram.

There is great need of a fund of $250 to provide books for the Bible College in Japan. It may be that some one whom the Lord has blessed will furnish this fund for this purpose. This amount will buy three or four times as many books in Japan as in America.

The church in Southampton, England, needs a man for its pulpit. That church has a fine building and it needs a strong man as its minister.

The society has bought a home for Miss Alma Favors, of Lu Cheo Fu, at a cost of $1,500. Miss Favors is doing a remarkable work among the women of that city. She has never had a home of her own. From this time forth she will have a place to which she can invite the women in large numbers to visit her. She will have a place in which special meetings for women can be held.

Dr. E. I. Osgood reports five days Bible Institute held at Chu Chow, China. A. E. Cory, of Nankin, was present and assisted. Two or three from each of the outstations were present and made use of pencils and paper. The evening mass meetings were of an evangelistic nature. The speakers discussed such questions as "Gambling and Its Cure," "Street Morals" and "Street Cleaning." The evangelist Shi spoke on gambling. It was a great address. Shi and Chen later went up to a couple of outstations and held short meetings at two places and baptized three. Shi came home with an attack of pleurisy, but is nearly well now. He is a marvellous man and it is wonderful how the Christians sit at his feet and obey his orders.

The hospital at Chu Chow is growing slowly. O. G. Hertzog is helping with the plans and giving much counsel. It will accommodate about forty-five patients.

W. R. Hunt is going from Wuhu to Chu Chow. Chu Chow was his former home. He knows all the people in that part of China.

Alfred W. Place writes: "I think Japan has the greatest appeal of any mission field in the world and if properly presented would win the support of men of business who have real Christian vision. Right now is the crisis in Japan. There is a ferment on here that makes it a Christian opportunity. There never has been such an opportunity in Christian history. There has been a laymen's union movement inaugurated in Japan that means much for Christian union here."

H. C. Saum writes: "I baptized a low caste man last night. He is the first of his caste to come out here. He is opposed by his relations and by his wife. He has been a learner for some time. We attended a mela or camp meeting for a week. This was the third year for this one. It was participated in by the five missions in this district. Two days were for conferences with the converts and the missionaries. These free discussions are very helpful. There were between twelve and fifteen hundred present, most of whom are Christians."

Dr. C. C. Drummond, of Harda, India, reports that the plague still prevails there, but is confined almost entirely to the southeastern part of the town. In the western part people are returning to their homes. We are hoping that conditions will be normal soon.

Dr. Drummond reports the birth of a daughter on the 20th of March. Two of the older children are in school at Landur.

C. E. Benlehr, of Damoh, India, writes: "We are well and busy. The hot season is just beginning, and the boys are having their school examinations. Four of them go to High school this year, and a number will teach. They have been a great help in the Damoh work the past year. Seven have taught regularly. STEPHEN J. COREY, Cincinnati, O. Sec'y.

FORTIFICATIONS.

I like the program of the American Christian Missionary Society. It is clear, definite and practical—$1,000,000 by the opening of the Panama Canal in 1915, 1,000 new churches and 1,000 missionaries and evangelists. Splendid!

Roosevelt thinks the canal should be fortified. The religion of Jesus Christ erects the best fortifications. The new South will need the same old Gospel. The opening up of new territory in the West is opening up new opportunities. Denominationalism is demanding a basis of Christian union to supply the call that is coming from every quarter. It is time to show our goods.

If we are to evangelize the 25,000,000 apportioned to us by the Layman's Missionary Movement and do it within the next five years, we must increase our base of supplies.

Sincerely, C. R. Hudson.
Frankfort, Ky.

COMMODORE PEARY AND THE NORTH POLE.

Robert E. Peary was made an admiral and given $6,000 a year for life by the Congress which has just adjourned. The country applauds this well-earned recognition of our great explorer. The secret of his success is to be found in his establishment of adequate supply stations; without these he never could have reached "the uttermost part of the earth" and have returned to tell the story. So we will never preach our Gospel to "the uttermost parts of the earth" until we have established and adequately equipped our base of supplies. This is the great work of the American Missionary Society. Every dollar for American missions means dollars for the conversion of the world. Therefore, let us bring America to Christ as the speediest method of bringing Christ to the entire world. L. N. D. Wells.
E. Orange, N. J.

"CAST THY BREAD UPON THE WATER."

Albuquerque, N. M., March 20, 1911.

One phase of home missionary work impresses itself on the mind if you live in Albuquerque. It is this: You are cheering and saving your very own. They come out here from Eastern churches to help reclaim the desert. With mission churches established for spiritual rallying points, these pioneers are kept to the old faith and built into the foundations of a better and more prosperous day. They come out from Eastern churches seeking health. Albuquerque is near the center of the great dry district approved for tubercular afflictions. As our work grows and the ministry of our congregations becomes more efficient we are better able to make these victims of the great white plague feel that God has followed their ways, and is with them though they are far from home and friends. None of the donors to Home Missions can tell how soon they may be impelled to thank God for direct benefits received therefrom by themselves or their loved ones. "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." Then remember, that as you and yours are strengthened by the faith in times of poverty or distress, so there are thousands of other here whose needs are just as great, in prosperity as well as in adversity. And still we have said nothing of our 100,000 Mexican population in this territory and our several Indian tribes, all of whom are men such as we, among whom it is designed by our Lord that the Gospel should be preached.

Hermon P. Williams.

THE POPULOUS EAST.

The expression, "populous East," is not a figure of speech. Here is where we find the great bulk of our population. The enormous stream of immigrants that flows across the Atlantic yearly is absorbed almost entirely before it reaches the Mississippi valley. Among the special conditions that make the East a ripe field for our work are the following: The millions to be reached, the half-Christian foreigners, the numerous new centers of population constantly developing and the rapidly growing sentiment for Christian union. Henry F. Lutz.
Millersville, Pa.

BEHOLD WISCONSIN.

Behold a commonwealth of over 2,300,000 people, in most part splendid, sturdy representatives of the race. See the resources for sustaining a much larger population. See the wonderful progress being made in material and educational interests. But, alas, see the little progress in spiritual affairs! See the failure of sectism to longer meet the needs of the heart. But again see the splendid results of preaching Jesus, yes, and you will rejoice to see how eagerly He is accepted. The Disciples have only twenty-five centers in which their work is planted. Let us see a great May offering roll in.

Frank L. Van Voorhis,
Green Bay, Wis. Supt. of Missions.

THE NEED OF THE HOUR.

A person genuinely interested in missions hesitates to place any one society or its appeal above that of another. Be it far from this article to make any comparisons that would reflect on any other work. But

FOR SUNDAY EVENING TEA.

One need never be at a loss for a dainty bite for Sunday evening tea if Graham Crackers baked by the National Biscuit Company are kept on hand. They can be served either with or without milk, and have such a pleasing taste that they are always a delight. They contain nourishment in abundance, too, since they are made of the best of the wheat.

One particularly good feature about these Graham Crackers is that the National Biscuit Company packs them in moisture and dust-proof packages, so that they are always fresh when opened, retaining their original flavor and crispness. Each package always has the well-known In-er-Seal Trade-Mark on either end.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, New Christian Century Co.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, New Christian Century Co.

WANTED.—Ministers and teachers for organizers. Pleasant, profitable work. We teach you. Men are making $50 weekly. UNIVERSITY RESEARCH EXTENSION COMPANY, Milwaukee, Wis.

the fact remains that such is the strategic position of the United States to the whole world that the salvation of all distant lands seems to depend in a special sense upon the redemption of our own home land. When we think of the part the Disciples of Christ are to play in the evangelization of America we look at once to the American Christian Missionary Society as our most efficient agency. To this organization we pin our faith for a large measure of our future success.

The writer speaks out of a most intimate acquaintance with the A. C. M. S., covering thirty years. Six years of that time he was one of the acting board of managers. The whole history of this missionary society has been good, but there never was a day when we could give it such absolute confidence as we can today.

The May offering for Home Missions ought and no doubt will be a record-breaker.

Detroit, Mich. C. J. TANNER.

The Great Book

Views of the Bible As Expressed By Men of Note.

Huxley Calls It the National Epic.

"Consider this great historical fact, that, for three centuries, this book has been woven into all that is noblest and best in English history; consider that it has become the national epic of Great Britain, and that it is as familiar to noble and simple, from John o' Groat's to Land's End, as Tasso and Dante once were to the Italians; consider that it is written in the noblest and purest English, and that it abounds in exquisite beauties of literary form; and, finally, consider that it forbids the veriest hind, who never left his native village, to be ignorant of the existence of other countries and other civilizations, and of a great past stretching back to the furthest limits of the oldest nations in the world."

Hand in Hand With Civilization.

"For more than a thousand years our Bible has gone hand in hand with civilization," said Coleridge, "science, and law: in short, with the moral and intellectual cul[illegible] vation of our people; always supporting, a[illegible] often leading, the way. . . . Good and ho[illegible] men, the best and the wisest of men, the royal spirits of all our history, have borne witness to the universal influence of the Bible, and have declared it to be, beyond compare, the most perfect instrument, and the only adequate organ, of the best mind and the best heart of mankind."

Like Music That Never Can Be Forgotten.

"The English Bible lives on in the ear, like a music that can never be forgotten," says Father Faber. "It is part of the national mind: it is the anchor of the national seriousness. The memory of the dead passes into it. The most potent traditions of childhood are perpetuated in its most powerful passages. All the griefs and trials of a man are hidden for him beneath its solemn words. All that is soft, and gentle, and pure, and penitent and good, speaks to him forever out of his English Bible."

Ruskin Tells of His Debt to It.

"My mother forced me, by steady daily toil, to learn long chapters of the Bible by heart. And to that discipline—patient, accurate, and resolute—I owe, not only a knowledge of the Bible, but much of the best part of my taste in literature. I have, this moment, opened my oldest copy of the Bible, and my mother's list of chapters, with which she established my soul in life, has just come into my hand. And, truly, this maternal installation of my mind in the Bible I count, very confidently, to have been the most precious and, on the whole, the one essential part of my whole education."

A Christian Atmosphere

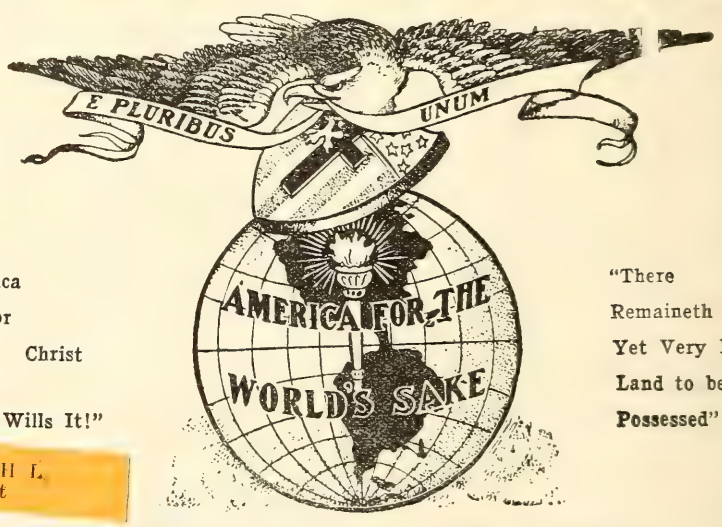
A friend writing a letter on board an Atlantic steamship as it reached port on the other side said to her correspondent at home, "The voyage has been without a flaw, delightful from first to last, because on board we have had a Christian atmosphere." The phrase lingered in the thought of the one who read it, lingered like music with many little variations and now and then a rest. What is, in the best sense, a Christian atmosphere?

Naturally, it is an atmosphere vitalized by the presence of Christ. It is not so much unworldly as other-worldly. Living in a Christian atmosphere there is no unkind friction, no foolish irritation and no spirit of contradiction. The household in which the atmosphere is Christian is a household controlled by principle and permeated by love. Parents and children alike share the sweetness and grace, the serenity and strength that belong as of right in a home where Christ reigns. In a neighborhood settlement in New York city a framed motto in the dining room reads: "Christ is the Master of this house. We try to say no word that would be displeasing to Him." A boy who grew up in a home where this atmosphere was always felt, wrote above his desk in large letters, "What would Jesus do?" and tried to shape his life as an answer to the question.

In a Christian atmosphere there is good fellowship, and there are sure to be good times. Fun is not ruled out, but, on the contrary, is spontaneous and effervescent. It should go without saying that it is never malicious, that jests are at the expense of no one's feelings, and that no shade of impurity or hint of profanity mars the sweetness of the hour of pleasure.

In the Christian atmosphere flourish plants of faith and impulses of love and intentions of helpfulness to all who need help. Not only to those who want help, but to those who need it they who dwell in the Christian atmosphere extend sympathy and aid. Of the Master it was said when he was here on the earth that he went about doing good. Of those who follow him, who are divinely led by him along the highways and by-ways of life, this too should be said as a matter of course.

"A SQUARE DEAL" FOR AMERICAN MISSIONS



America for Christ

"God Wills It!"

"There Remaineth Yet Very Much Land to be Possessed"

Willett Prof H L
1220 E 56th St

EVANGELIZE THE HOME LAND

BECAUSE

1. America is on God's Map of the World and Needs the Gospel.
2. Evangelization of the World hangs on Redemption of America.
3. "Physician, Heal Thyself!" is Paganism's Response to American Missionaries.
4. This is the Order of March in "Our Marching Orders."

THE GOSPEL WILL SOLVE EVERY AMERICAN PROBLEM

"Nothing but Jesus Christ and Him Crucified" CAN ANSWER

The Cry of the Country.
The Challenge of the City.
The Appeal of the Prairie.
The Prayer of the Frontier

Prepare for the "Every Member Canvass" in Behalf of Home Missions OFFERING FIRST LORD'S DAY IN MAY.

$150,000 from the Churches this year will enable the American Christian Missionary Society

TO Reinforce its 400 Heroes on the Firing Line.

Organize One Church Each Day of Year.
Employ Evangelists to Strengthen Missions.
Establish Work for Immigrants on Ellis Island.
Enter Alaska with the Gospel.
Promote the Plea for Christian Union Everywhere.

I. N. McCash
GRANT K. LEWIS Secretaries

Carew Building, Opposite Fountain Square
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Bible College Library
Mar 12

Volume XXVIII. May 4, 1911 Number 18

A Layman's Prayer

COMPOSED BY EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES.

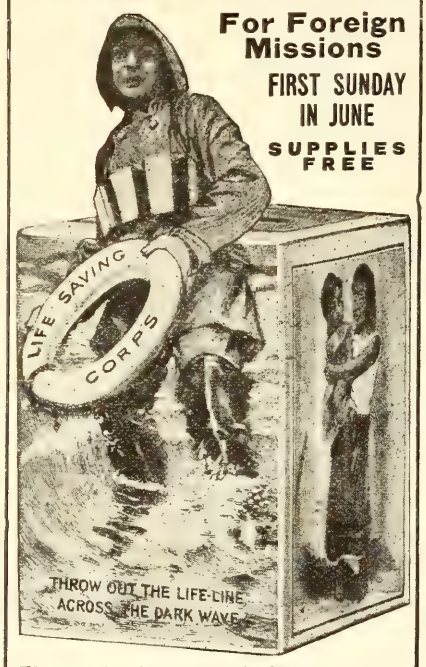
O Lord, send unto us living prophets of thy truth—prophets who know the world of men and women and are willing and able to help them. We desire true prophets; men who have heard the voice of great love and great hope calling them; men who have meditated upon thy handiwork and upon the word Thou hast given of old and dost yet give to those who seek and listen. We pray for the coming of these thy chosen ones, who will show us our sins and thy pardoning love; who will uncover the hidden habits of our unconscious selves and give us courage and power to break them; who will take the measure of our narrowed, unshapely souls and teach us how to grow to a full spiritual stature.

O Lord, we believe we might do better things than any we have done, if strong prophets would speak to us. There are stirrings within us. We need human help, guided by Thee, to bring them into fruitfulness. We need companionable teachers, like ourselves, but closer to Thee, to win us away from our cares, to lead us into the quiet paths of thoughtfulness and consecration. Sometimes such messengers from Thee do find us. They quicken us. They revive our spirits. They fill us with power to be faithful in our tasks. They soften our hearts toward our neighbors and teach us how to forgive. They make us tender and thoughtful of our homes, of our friends, of our companions and our little ones. They fill us with courage for thy battles against wickedness and folly. They move us to empty ourselves of pride, of riches, and to use all our energy to toil mightily for justice and mercy and truth.

O Lord, help us to encourage these thy servants to do thy work in us more completely. They too are but men. They weary of their labor because we are impatient or indifferent or unwilling. Grant that we may bear our part. Make our deeds equal to their words. Help us, with them, to serve and minister in loving comradeship with Jesus Christ. Amen.

CHICAGO

DON'T FORGET
CHILDREN'S DAY
For Foreign Missions
FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE
SUPPLIES FREE



The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will furnish CHILDREN'S DAY SUPPLIES for the first Sunday in June FREE to those Sunday Schools observing the day in the interests of HEATHEN MISSIONS.

FREE SUPPLIES

1. CRUSADERS FOR CHRIST. The beautiful new Children's Day Exercise by P. H. Duncan. Sixteen pages of song, recitation, and drill. A bundle of sunshine. A high class exercise, yet simple enough for the smallest school.
2. LIFE-SAVER MISSIONARY BOXES. Like the picture above. Automatic, self-locking. They will please. Put your school to work with them.

ORDER AT ONCE. Give local name of Sunday School and average attendance. Write

STEPHEN J. COREY, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

Minister's Work Appreciated

At a reception given recently in honor of the new members added to First Church, Milwaukee, Wis., the congregation expressed its appreciation of the work of their minister in a most substantial way. Although C. C. Wilson, the minister, has been in Milwaukee but six months, the success which he has already achieved, is quite noteworthy. During this time the Sunday-school has practically doubled its attendance; a Men's Brotherhood has been organized; the attendance at the services has been greatly increased, especially at the popular evening people's service when Mr. Wilson usually lectures upon some live theme; and in addition to this, there have been sixty-five people added to the membership of the church. It was in appreciation of this valuable service that J. O. Klapp, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, presented on behalf of the whole church, a splendid gold time-piece and a bag of gold containing $65. The church is facing the future with bright prospects. A Boy Scout organization is being started by Mr. Wilson for the boys of the neighborhood, and in the Sunday-school a contest is being arranged with the Trinity M. E. Church of Bay View, which is expected to provoke an unusual amount of interest.

The First Church of Rochester, N. Y., Robert Stewart, pastor, has recently held a good meeting with home forces which strengthened the church in various ways and roused the membership to greater activity.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Please mention this paper.)

Bethany Graded Lessons

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, Editor
International Interdenominational

Sixteen denominations have united to prepare a non-sectarian body of literature for the new Graded Lessons authorized by the International Committee.

The result is a most practical, fascinating, scientific and artistic series of lesson helps for teachers and pupils.

The Bethany Graded Lessons are now developed to the point where they supply the entire school—children, young people and adults.

Send today for prospectus.

The New Christian Century Co.
700 E. Fortieth St. CHICAGO.

A TRUMPET CALL TO DUTY

The American Christian Missionary Society was organized in 1849. It is the pioneer promoter of our co-operative work. In these sixty-one years it has planted one-third (3,803) of all the churches in our widening fellowship. Its evangelists have baptised 172,025 persons, and added as many more otherwise to the churches. Its treasurer has handled $1,985,599.69, each one of which upon reaching the mission field called into service five other dollars.

This Society is the supply for men and means for world evangelization. Scores of "Living Links" and thousands of liberal contributors to our foreign and benevolent work were once wards of the American Board. To withhold offerings from American Missions is to starve "the hen that lays the golden egg."

The work of the American Society is convicting the Church of the sin of sectarianism and making popular the plea for Christian Union. The churches it has planted are in their local communities leading factors, making for the union of the people of God. In America forty-eight millions of people are churchless. A divided, devitalized, denominationalized church will never win these to Christ. The loyalty of these millions lingers for the liberality of the Disciples. The regular receipts are already in excess of last year by $8,566.44. This is an earnest of our largest offering—a testimony of the awakening conscience of the churches.

Let the May offering for American Missions be made unanimous. Let no church be satisfied with a "hat collection." Everywhere let competent committees canvass the membership and secure an offering worth the good name of the Church, the needs of the work and the cause of Christ.

Send all offerings promptly to

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
108-12 Carew Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, - - - - EDITORS

Getting the Most Out of the Preacher

IT IS NOT ONLY LEGITIMATE BUT VITALLY IMPORTANT FOR A CHURCH TO CONSIDER WELL HOW IT CAN GET THE BEST WORK OUT OF ITS PASTOR AND MAKE THAT WORK YIELD THE MAXIMUM OF RESULT.

It may seem to some sensitive readers that this way of saying it is too secular, too commercial; that when a congregation begins to talk of getting the maximum of work out of its pastor it is degrading the pastoral relation to the "hired man" level, making him merely an employe and not a spiritual leader.

The danger of so conceiving the minister must not be ignored. There are churches which treat a minister as a mere hireling. He must do the church's work—and in such a way as it has always been done. He must preach the church's doctrines as they have ever been preached.

But a church that treats its minister as a hireling gets little more than a hireling's service. A preacher who does work mapped out for him and preaches certain doctrines because they are set down as acceptable to the church is not a true preacher, not a prophet of God, but a time-server.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the pastoral relation is fundamentally a spiritual, not a commercial or contractual, relation. But it is not on that account any the less a practical relation. And it is important for its practical aspect to be squarely faced and thought through, both by the preacher and the congregation.

It is the lack of this thinking through of the practical implications of a pastorate that explains many a failure. The congregation did not know how to get the most out of its pastor.

* * *

The thing of primary importance for the congregation, and especially its office-bearers, is to discern just what sort of work a pastor is intended to do.

There has been a deterioration of the pastoral function in modern times. Churches have fallen into the habit of allowing the pastor to do "the church's work." What becomes of the pastor's own work is not taken into serious account. If he can raise money, if he is a good organizer, if he is a "hustler," if he gets along nicely with people, if he has the knack of putting attractive "features" into the services, such as music or moving pictures,—many a church thinks it is getting its money's worth out of its pastor.

But if his main contribution to them can be stated in such terms as these they may be getting their money's worth but they are not getting the man's worth out of him. He was not especially trained to raise money. It was not the desire to administer a church enterprise that burned in his soul when he obeyed the call to become a minister.

He became a preacher because he had a message in his heart he wanted other people to hear; because he wanted to communicate his own experience of Christ through word and life, and to enrich and strengthen the souls of the congregation over which the Holy Spirit might make him an overseer.

The church should help him to keep this desire uppermost in his ministry by refusing to allow him to become entangled with small administrations.

It is poor economy for a church to pay a preacher to do what its office-bearers should do without pay—and could do much more effectively than the preacher untrained in such work.

Let a church board settle in its own mind that it wants its preacher to be a moral leader of the church and community, a creator of religious passion, an interpreter of God to the souls of men, and let this self-same board set to work consciously to provide the conditions within which its minister may do his best work and it will be astonishing how much more that church gets out of him than before.

For the truth of the matter is that a preacher is not just an individual: he is a situation.

Many a preacher is succeeding today because he is surrounded by church officers who know how to get the most out of him. Put him in another church and he might seem mediocre.

Contrariwise, many a ten talent man is doing the chores of his church while prophetic fire burns in his soul. His church doesn't know how to get the most out of him. They have low conceptions of the preacher's work and no conception of their own responsibility to provide the conditions under which their leader may rise to his full height.

* * *

There are certain very practical and obvious things a church must do to stimulate its preacher to his highest efficiency.

It must pay him a comfortable living salary.

It must pay this salary promptly, every week, or every month, as he prefers.

It must provide leaders for the departments of the church.

These are elemental. They are not to be attended to just for the preacher's comfort but for the church's economy. A church gains nothing by paying a minister $800 when he cannot live properly on less than $1,000—even though he is willing to accept it, or $3,000 when he cannot live properly on less than $5,000. In its own interest it should pay a comfortable salary.

And it should pay it promptly. The preacher holds business relations with the outside world—the grocer, the landlord, the bookseller. He makes purchases that must be paid for. He makes promises that become due like any other body's promises.

The church that is behind with its preacher's salary not only embarrasses him but robs itself. It cannot get the most out of him. He cannot work with a free hand and heart. Time and wit that ought to be spent in their service he is compelled to spend in manipulating his affairs so as to make ends meet.

It is hard on the preacher: but it is harder on the church.

And he ought not to be the head of any of the departments of the church. A pastor as Sunday-school superintendent is the poorest economy. The question asked is usually, "Will he do it?" It should be, "Can the church afford to have the pastor act as superintendent?"

No church in which the pastor is active head of its main departments is getting the full worth of him. It may be getting its money's worth. But he has something worth infinitely more to give them if they only knew how to get it out of him.

* * *

There are certain other things, less obvious, perhaps, that a church may do for its own sake as well as for the minister's sake.

It can express its appreciation of his work, its gratitude for his sermon, its hopefulness for the future of the church.

It can give him a reputation in the community by personal loyalty and praise that is worth far more than newspaper publicity.

It can pray for him in the closet and in the prayer-meeting. How sweet to his ears is the petition, God bless our pastor!

It can give him a fair chance to study—remembering what a vast thing it is, after all, to prepare one hundred and four messages a year that will truly feed and hearten the soul and make the service of worship rich and satisfying.

It can treat him as a true man in personal intercourse—neither as a hired man nor an autocrat. It can defer to his judgment as that of a specialist, a leader—but it can meet him with such intelligence as will silently challenge him to make good his ideas.

Above everything else the church can strive earnestly to practice the great gospel he praches, taking him seriously—not as a performer to be congratulated if he has done his stunt well, but as an earnest leader up the path of holiness. Let the church study the Book that he expounds, practice the presence of God in a deep and thorough-going prayer-life, and show forth in deeds of unself-regarding love the fruits of the faith that he interprets, and they will marvel how much they are getting out of their pastor.

And when he falls down—he must not, but he will—and scolds, or sulks, or threatens to resign, or makes an imprudent statement in the pulpit or takes an indiscreet step in his daily life—then it is the church's chance to be a pastor to its pastor.

And this is the biggest chance a church ever gets.

Social Survey

Infamous Relief Refusal

Recently The Christian Century devoted a paragraph to the curse of the opium traffic in China. Mention was made of the heroic struggle of this "father of nations" to throw off that frightful burden. The government has about stamped out the growth of the poppy in China. This has been done only at a tremendous outlay of money and determination, and yet it has been done in the face of an increase in the use of the drug. With every decrease in home production came a corresponding increase in its importation. To check this foreign supply, China is helpless because of a treaty with England which makes it impossible for the Chinese to interfere with the traffic for ten years. Although that treaty was practically forced upon China, she rues the day on which she reluctantly accepted it. Petitions with many thousands of names were presented to the British people praying that the provisions of this infamous treaty be abrogated, that the lives and souls of thousands of Chinese might be saved from the opium den. They elicited only the reply that China had not officially asked for such release. In response the Chinese parliament petitioned England as a Christian nation for release. Driven, at last, into a corner and forced to face the issue, the British government refused to heed that cry from suffering China. India has grown and thrived mightily on the production of opium for China. Many districts are devoted almost entirely to the production of it. To it they owe their prosperity. Vested rights is the ground of the refusal. The long story of the opium crime tells in scarlet letters the iniquitousness of that business. The Public well says: "Whether its profits are moral, or secured by laws that foster vice, that sanction slavery, that grind the poor, that exploit workers nominally free, and that honeycomb the land with working children's graves, is all one under the doctrine of 'vested rights.' Such vice must continue to be fostered, those slaves must continue slaves, the poor must be content to be plundered, workers nominally free must submit to exploitation and think of God as having made them for it, and their babes must be slaghtered—all this, generation after generation in perpetuity, unless at some utopian period human sympathy animates the prosperous strongly and widely enough to win their consent to buying off the aggressors. Such is the doctrine of 'vested rights.' Could a more infamous theory of human relationships be invented anywhere outside of hell?"

Development in the Mexican Situation

The number of combatants, it has been conclusively demonstrated, is not a reliable criterion by which to estimate the seriousness of the situation in Mexico. Probably in no battle have there been 10,000 men engaged upon the two sides combined. It seems strange that, in a country of aproximately 15,000,000 people an army of perhaps 5,000 men could keep the government at bay. Yet while but few have actually taken up arms against the government, the entire country is in such a state of unrest and dissatisfaction with the administration that the government is nearly paralyzed. Moreover, the insurgents have almost adopted the tactics of marauders and have confined their operations to the hill country, hugging the advantage which the mountain fastnesses afford. The fear that the rebellion might become more general and endanger the capital has forced Diaz to retain a strong force near Mexico City in idleness, so far as putting down the insurrection is concerned. With no prospect of being able to crush the rebellion for many months, perhaps for several years, President Diaz is at last yielding to some of the demands of the revolutionists. He hoped to restore peace by the reorganization of his cabinet with younger and more liberal men. This was a good measure, but it did not satisfy the revolutionists. Then other demands were conceded. One of these which will appeal most strongly to the insurrectos is the proposed law making it impossible for any man to be elected to the office of president of the republic more than once. In fact, President Diaz is anxious to adopt almost any measure which will induce the revolutionists to return to their homes satisfied that the government at Mexico City is their own. From an attitude of aloofness in the early days of the insurrection, when he refused to recognize the rebels or to arbitrate with them, Diaz has changed completely. An armistice of five days, beginning Sunday, Apr. 23, was signed in order that the matter might be negotiated. During this armistice neither army will move its troops, or engage in the building or strengthening of fortifications. The Mexican government has not made its proposals public, but great pressure, undoubtedly, will be brought to bear on both parties by the United States to reach some kind of a satisfactory agreement. This effort will demand that both sides shall make concessions, and may end in a deadlock unless the insurgents recede somewhat from their ultimatum that Diaz resign the presidency before the expiration of his present term.

A Comment on the Chicago Elections

The attitude of Republican progressives in Illinois may well be inspiration to the country and especially to the city of Chicago. Weary with months of struggle, and thus far beaten at practically every point they still are able to "come back" and are already preparing for the next fray. Not the least courageous of this growing, courageous army is its leader in the recent mayoralty election of Chicago. When it was known that Professor Merriam had lost the mayoralty race, he intimated dryly that the fight had only begun, and though this skirmish had been unsuccessful, it represented merely the beginning of a fight to the death upon corruption. Quite rightly the late Chicago election has been called but a single battle in a war for righteousness, and though it went against the forces which are seeking the best interests of the people, its losses are but temporary. The strength developed by the progressives was surprising even to the leaders of that movement. As Harrison was almost defeated at the primaries by the progressives of his own party, so he was the winner only by a comparatively small plurality in the election. His success in the primaries is said to be due to the aid of the "Hinky Dink" and slum vote, and at the election to the support of the Hearst faction. This does not mean that these agencies gave large followings. The strength of each is relatively small. Mr. Harrison already had the powerful support of the liquor ring, of the big "interests." But it was the addition of those two other forces which held the balance of power that brought about his victory. Mr. Harrison made claim to entire freedom to obligations to any one, but already he has begun to pay his election debts by filling the offices with the men whose efforts secured him his nomination and subsequent election.

Reciprocity in Hands of Senate

For the second time the national house of representatives has passed the President's reciprocity bill in the exact form in which it came from his hands. The vote on the question stood 265 for and 89 against. A majority of the Republicans cast their vote against it, but were completely "snowed under" by the heavy Democratic support given the measure. The bill did not pass congress without a lively skirmish, however. Democratic indecision in the early days of the extra session, as to whether to pass the bill without tariff reduction riders, was eagerly seized upon by the Republicans to create confusion. They proposed amendments to the tariff bill which would have made sure its death, but the ruse failed. Now the bill faces a more serious situation. In the lower house the Democrats, who favor the measure, are in a comfortable majority. In the senate they are in the minority. But President Taft does not despair. He is not appealing to party loyalty. The Republicans failed to take advantage of their opportunity to get the credit for the measure and Mr. Taft is now appealing to all who are the friends of the people and the people's interests. According to report, the administration is looking for the measure to pass the senate by a vote of fifty-seven to thirty-five. If this estimate is anywhere near correct the fight will be like that in the lower house, i. e., whether it will pass with or without amendments. If it is amended and the house of representatives should refuse to accept the amendments, there would be a deadlock which would be hard to break up. Recently the president declared that he would force action upon reciprocity of some kind by keeping congress at it until a final vote was secured.

American Railroads in French Politics

The superiority of American railroads is likely to become an issue in French politics. The disgraceful condition of the French roads, notably the Chemins de Fer de l'Ouest (Western Railways), owned by the government, has occasioned several interpellations both in the senate and the chamber of deputies. The obstructionists, claiming it is impossible to better conditions, have always carried the day. Senator d'Estournelle de Constant, writing from the United States, where he is traveling, flays the obstructionist policy. In a letter published in the Temps he cites the American roads as models for the world.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Presbyterian

The Everlasting Expectation.

The church of Jesus Christ exhorts us to live the eternal life. It comforts the sorrowing with the hope of blessedness in the city of God. It says there is no old age for the soul. At Easter time the pulpit and the religious press lay special stress upon this aspect of our faith. We take from The Continent some short paragraphs which point out the usefulness of this hope:

The young man who now thinks that the promise of immortality in the Gospel of God's Christ answers to no call of his own soul will confess his mistake if he lives to the hour when the hopes of the present have passed their springtime, and these can be no springtime for him except in the calendar of a heavenly year.

Then if he must resign his faith in immortality—which God forbid!—he will resign it not jauntily, still less boastfully, but with the grief of a bankrupt soul robbed (perhaps by its own conceit) of the very treasures which alone have made life worth the trouble of living—the treasures of perennial hope.

And the youngest of us are growing old—coming on apace to the hour when the want of an eternal expectation will come home to our hearts in all the bitterness of its colossal tragedy.

It, therefore, behooves us all to include among our hopes betimes that hope to which there can be no day without promise, no epoch of life whereunto a greater epoch does not succeed—that hope which is able, as the lives and deaths of a myriad Christian saints have proved, to watch the sun descend in perfect confidence of its rising, to see the winter come on in fearless assurance that a better and eternal spring will follow.

On a spring day rose from the dead the resurrection and the life. And yearly in each spring that returns to restore the bloom and the beauty of the earth, the Easter, which commemorates that day, repeats to mankind its great tidings of hope.

There is no endless winter. But there comes an endless spring.

Baptist

A Baptist Idea of Unity.

Dr. L. D. Crandall of Minneapolis, Minn., recently delivered an address in a Congregational church in Minneapolis on the subject of unity. He did not hestitate to predict that within the next quarter of a century the Protestant world will be doing its foreign work under a joint board composed of representatives of the different denominations. "This board will have under its observation the entire foreign mission field; and it will be considered disgraceful for any sect to enter upon new work, occupy a new field, except as such a step may be approved by this advisory committee." The time is also coming when the work in the cities at home will be under the direction of boards representing the Protestant bodies. The Journal and Messenger has no such views as these. It quotes from the address of Dr. Crandall, and adds:

All of which seems to signify that Baptists, as a religious denomination, have no missions in the world. It was a mistake that they broke away from the other denominations in the seventeenth century; a mistake that they organized independent churches in America in the same century; a mistake that they organized an independent missionary society in 1814; a mistake that they have maintained such a society during these ninety-seven years, and it will be a mistake and "disgraceful" if they do not half-mast their flag, allowing another of a mongrel hue to be placed above it. Six millions of baptized Christians unable to carry on mission work in foreign lands without the consent and approval and superintendence of some organization, a majority of whose members have no sympathy with the Baptist position and which propose to tell these Baptists where they may and where they may not labor for the conversion of the world to Christ!

The World Alliance.

Dr. E. Y. Mullins contributed an article to the Baptist papers on the significance to Baptists of the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance. This alliance is a new thing under the sun. "The World Alliance, then, means first of all the ripening of the highest known principle of human coöperation for divine ends, the free and voluntary association of believers, under the Lordship of Jesus Christ, for bringing in God's kingdom." The alliance ought to aid in curing the half-truth of individualism. It ought to deepen, says Dr. Mullins, loyalty to the principles of universal validity for which Baptists stand. Yet self-glorification is not the object of the meeting. "Are Baptists really doing their part in the social service of the world? Have we the social idea adequately developed among us? Are there ways in which we may more positively and really affect for good the commercial, civic and industrial life of the world? Questions of this sort ought to receive answers at the Philadelphia meeting in a way which will greatly increase our Baptist efficiency." The service that may be rendered to missions and education is thus set forth:

Again, the meeting of the alliance ought to give us a fresh grasp and appreciation of our missionary task. The missionary crisis of the time in which we live has become a commonplace in our thinking, so completely so, in fact, that it has lost its power of appeal in large measure. Nevertheless we need constantly to be brought to a fresh realization of it. The missionary enterprise is the best antidote to our materialism, and is the sovereign corrective agency for a thousand ills in the spiritual life. Baptists share with all other bodies the great missionary obligation. But in Europe today, especially in Russia, there are opportunities which are of supreme significance to the Baptists. Our principles are the antitheses to European despotism in all forms, and the rise of a powerful Baptist movement is most logical, as being a new example of the law that action and reaction are equal. Shall we seize the opportunity and hear the call of this new man of Macedonia? Shall a school be provided for the education of European preachers? The alliance meeting ought to answer this and other related questions. In fact, the meeting of the alliance must surely bring home to us as never before the vital and fundamental place held by education in our whole conception of Christianity. There is not a principle held by us which does not carry at its heart the educational ideal, and most of all the principle of a regenerated church membership.

"The music and splendor
Survive not the lamp and lute.
The heart's echoes render
No sound when the spirit is mute."

Our witness to truth can not survive in power if the lamp of learning grows dim among us.

Congregational

Nearing the End of Church Competition.

The Congregationalist and Christian World promises us something interesting in its studies of overchurched towns and cities. The first article deals with Ayer, Mass. This is a town of 2,797 inhabitants. 1,000 are Roman Catholics. There are about 1,700 Protestants. The Protestant churches are five in number. The value of church property is $59,000. The five ministers are paid $4,400. The total running expenses of the five churches are $5,775. The total morning attendance on a fair Sunday is 286. The gifts to work outside of Ayer are negligible. It takes all the energy of the minister to keep the churches from disintegration. The one Catholic church has as many in attendance at its services as the five Protestant churches. The condition of this town, which does not differ from hundreds of others in its religious impotence, moves The Congregationalist and Christian World to say:

We believe we are nearing the end of the era of competitive church extension. Said a prominent and broad-minded Methodist official in our office only a short time ago: "Our point of view is changing. Formerly when our mission board contemplated a city like Chicago, or a state like Minnesota, the ruling thought was, how can we strengthen Methodism there? Today we are beginning to ask, what can we as Methodists do to build up and apply the Christian religion in Chicago or Minnesota?" We hope and expect that this will come to be the dominant policy of all missionary boards. Indeed our investigations show that as a rule state and national denominational officials are more cordial toward local coöperation than are the people on the ground. We welcome this new era. It means when fully established that the old and often partisan slogan, "Every town needs a Methodist church," "Every town needs an Episcopal church," "Every town needs a Congregational church," will yield to the nobler rallying cry, "Every town needs Christ and such churches as can best represent him and do his work.

The question for earnest Christian men and women in their personal relation to this problem of unity is not, what do I personally like best? not, what am I used to? but, what is best for this community of which I am a part and for the kingdom of Heaven for which I pray daily? Nothing would electrify many communities more or prove a more potent means of increasing public respect for the churches than a striking demonstration of the reality and depth of Christian unity underneath denominational divisions.

In some cases fewer churches will ultimately mean more religion, more of the power of Christ brought to bear upon young life and those now outside the fold, more of the power of Christ made to operate in behalf of the weak, the unprotected and the overlooked members of the community. To bring this about calls for wise, resolute and unselfish action, but the sacrifice and heroism involved may be the means God would use to save his church from two great perils that have threatened it, apathy and selfcenteredness.

It is a great thing to see God in the manna. It is a greater thing to see him in the fields. It is a great thing to see God in the miracle. It is a greater thing to see him in the usual. To waken in the dull morning and feel that God is there; to go to our drudgery and have his presence; to live in the faith that the hairs of our head are numbered, and that not one sparrow can fall without our Father, that is the mark of growing trust in God.—G. H. Morrison.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

The Unchanging Gospel

We have this week the first of eight studies in the Epistle to the Galatians. These studies ought to give us a clearer grasp of the fundamental principles of Protestantism. "The Epistle to the Galatians is my epistle: I have betrothed myself to it. It is my wife." These words of Luther reveal the relation of the Epistle to the Galatians to the Reformation. The errors which Paul and Luther combated are common to no particular time or place; they are the errors of narrowness and bigotry against which all men must guard themselves.

It was Paul who first preached the gospel to the Galatians. They received him and his message gladly and manifested toward him unusual affection and loyalty. Their progress in the early years of their faith was gratifying to the apostle. They seemed to understand what it meant to follow Christ and they were willing to make sacrifices for the furtherance of the truth. Then came to them men who were personally hostile to Paul and who thought he was untrue to the faith of his fathers. These men believed that all Gentiles should be required to submit to the ordinances of the Mosaic law. The Galatians lent their ears to the new teachers and they were on the point of apostatizing when news of the situation reached Paul. His response was immediate. The Epistle to the Galatians is a war document. It has been called a sword thrust. It meets a definite need in the most direct manner.

The Judaizers were trying to persuade the Galatians to substitute a provincial for a universal gospel, a national religion for one that could be preached to every tribe and nation on the face of the earth. They were unable to see how anybody could have faith in God and be acceptable to him unless the faith was expressed in the forms which were dear to them. Their reasoning ran thus: The Jews are the chosen people of God through whom the commandments and promises have been made. All those who would enjoy the blessings of God must become a part of the Jewish people. Gentiles therefore must be circumcised and keep the law if they are to receive the favor of God, or, at least, if they are to inherit the promises in full. The Judaizers had not, apparently, told all their story to the Galatians, but Paul saw the drift of their teachings and he knew that he had to fight for the freedom and universality of the gospel.

As Lightfoot says, Paul here asserts "the oneness, the integrity of his gospel. It will not brook any rival. It will not suffer any foreign admixture." Let us see what this means. A Jew could be a Christian and still retain Jewish customs and ceremonies. Paul knew the pride of the Jew in his race and he shared that pride. The Greek might become a Christian without ceasing to be a philosopher. The Roman was no less a citizen because he believed in Christ. But when the Jew exalted his peculiarities into a test of fellowship, when the Greek wrought out a metaphysical creed whose acceptance, he insisted, was necessary to salvation, and when the Roman created an institution which, he asserted, had a monopoly of the grace of God, the gospel preached by Paul was abandoned and there came in bigotry, dogmatism, and tyranny. As Paul contended in his day in behalf of free faith against the bondage of law, so have true believers in all the generations since his day expressed their loyalty by protesting against the narrowing influences of race, occupation, social status, and culture.

The unchanging gospel is the basis of democracy. Paul was a man of universal sympathy. He felt the woes of all mankind. The salvation he preached was for all men. The church of his vision was composed of men of every race and condition. Nothing was excluded from that church except what was evil. Hence many things were matters of indifference to him which other men regarded as supremely important. He allowed men to be themselves. We are not ready to appreciate the gospel of Paul. When the Chinese, the Japanese, the Turks, the Hindus, and the rest of the non-Christian races have made sufficient progress in Christianity to influence powerfully the thought of Christendom, we shall feel as we cannot now the greatness of Paul's message. We have race pride that keeps us from doing justice to men of other races. We patronize the yellow man and the black man. Paul patronized no man. He had too much sense and too much religion for that sort of thing. [Midweek service, May 10. Gal. 1:1-12. Other references: Mark 1:14, 15; Acts 20:24-27; Rom. 1:14-16; I Cor. 9:12; II Cor. 4:3-7; 11:14.]

The Christian Evangelist's "Snags"

On this page last week it was pointed out that the Disciples of Christ stand in a strategic position in relation to the Christendom-wide movement for the practice of Christian union.

The largeness of our opportunity is equalled only by the seriousness of the test to which it subjects us.

For one hundred years the Disciples have been forced against their protests to take a position in all outward appearance like that of the denominations. Have they now become so habituated to their denominational status as to be incapable of practicing Christian union—this is the searching question which they face in these crucial days.

Attention was directed to various aspects of this question. Our main concern in that article, however, was to interpret the inhibitive attitude of two Disciple newspapers toward any actual endeavor by our people to practice the unity for which we have so long pleaded.

The impertinent and threatening attitude of the Christian Standard toward our missionary societies in view of the possibility of Disciple missionaries practicing Christian union on the foreign field was passed by with a mere remark. The opposition of that paper to anything that looks like the practice of union was regarded as too well known to need any interpretation.

The Christian Evangelist, however, occupies a somewhat different place in the minds of the Disciples of Christ and of the general Christian public. It has long been a pleader for Christian union. Against the unrelenting opposition of its Cincinnati contemporary, its former administration under Dr. Garrison championed the Federation movement with a frankness and courage not surpassed even by The Christian Century. Its voice has ever been eloquent in pleading for the union of God's people as an abstract duty.

It was a painful task, therefore, to which our article addressed itself, namely, that of pointing out the utter absence of the Disciples' spirit in The Christian Evangelist's treatment of a concrete opportunity for the practice of Christian union. Our contemporary was timid, cautionary, inhibitiv and, in the last analysis, sectarian in its attitude.

The case referred to was that of a proposed union of a Congregational and a Disciple church, the paster of the latter having appealed to The Christian Century and later to The Christian Evangelist for counsel.

The Christian Evangelist magnified differences and discouraged action. What positive counsel it gave had in it implications that would postpone union to an indefinite future. It poked fun at The Christian Century for cherishing a dream of unity that could not be realized this side of fairy land. But when asked for a program of unity that could be realized this side of fairy land it formulated a creed of three ambiguous articles and called for a joint Bible class of the two congregations to study these straw questions for a year in the hope that they might come to an agreement upon them as a basis of union!

The "baptism question," while not included as an article of this creed, was called the "chief" of a considerable number of points of difference between the two congregations, none of which could be "waived" because "they have to do with the terms of church membership, and good people on both sides have conscientious scruples about waiving them."

It is a sorry admission, in the light of the Disciples origin and historic purpose that we now have certain "conscientious scruples" which make it impossible for us to practice Christian union with any body of Christ's people that is disposed to unite with us! It makes pertinent the question whether the Disciples are a solution of the problem of a divided church or a further complication of the problem.

The Christian Century is compelled to say, with a frankness that is only equaled by our utter lack of unkindness, that The Christian Evangelist's attitude toward this concrete chance to practice Christian union is utterly devoid of the Disciples' insight. There is no prophetic word in its two editorials. There is no note of exultation and rejoicing. There is no note of hope—except to say that what is impossible today may be possible tomorrow, and we must not give up our plea!

Every paragraph in its editorials betrays its super-consciousness of "our" doctrinal position and "our" institutional interests which must be safe-guarded no matter at what cost to our Christian union ideals. The obstacles to unity are magnified, baptism is erected into an awful bugaboo, the Congregationalists are treated as if they had everything to gain by union with the Disciples, and the most impossible "snags" are pointed out which The Christian Century or any one who believes in the practice of union is challenged to remove.

What is the effect of this uncatholic temper in a Disciple newspaper? The answer is obvious. It tends to sectarianize the brotherhood. It makes us conscious of the wrong things. It turns our minds in a direction where unity is impossible. It is only a guess, but it is safe to say that the ardent spirit of the young minister who appealed to The Christian Evangelist for guidance, was completely discouraged by the reply he received and he has, no doubt, given up his hope of practicing Christian union with this body of Christian neighbors.

We promised last week to consider the "snags," as The Christian Evangelist calls them, which obstruct the way to the practice of Christian union by Disciples and Congregationalists. These "snags" take the form of two sets of questions—one set conceived as being asked by "conscientious" Disciples and the other by "conscientious" Congregationalists as they contemplate the proposal to unite. They will be considered here in the order set down.

* * *

And first the questions likely to be asked by the Disciples:

1. Since our churches have always claimed that they had nothing to do in (a) fixing the terms of membership in Christ's church, but that they accept the conditions as laid down in the New Testament, when would we find a precedent, or other authority, for (b) waiving the question of Christian baptism for the sake of union?

(a) It is a most vital consideration to which the query calls us. Pleading for Christian union, the Disciples have taken the strongest theoretical position possible in insisting that the Church of Christ is a divine institution, that its terms of membership are not arranged by man but by God, that it is impious to tamper with the terms of admission so as either to admit those whom God rejects or reject those whom God admits.

The tap-root of the whole sectarian iniquity is the assumption that a group of Christian people have the right to divide Christ's Church by withdrawing themselves into a sect apart and admitting into their fellowship only those Christians whom they choose. The fact that they mean to use the sectarian principle to enforce what they conscientiously understand the word of God to teach—whether in respect to doctrine or polity or ordinance—lessens, in no degree, the mischief wrought by their dividing the Church of God.

The essential sin of sectarianism is the taking out of the hands of God the prerogative that belongs to Him alone, that, namely, of fixing the terms of fellowship in His church.

The essential principle of unity—without which no scheme whatsoever is a scheme of unity—is that every Christian, every member of Christ's church, is full brother to every other Christian, and entitled to all the rights of membership in the Church of Christ.

Any so-called program of unity which does not make this basic principle clear or which declines to accept the full consequences of it in practice is not a program of unity at all, but just another sectarian enterprise added to the scandal of Christendom.

The Disciples, we repeat, have seized upon this essential principle of unity and have succeeded in applying it in many directions. With respect to creeds, the communion, the name, and the practice of baptism, their procedure and position are set squarely against the sectarian principle.

But with respect to church membership the Disciples' practice does not generally conform to their principle of unity. Their churches, as a rule, decline to receive those whom God has received into His Church. They stand on the sectarian principle when they stand at the door of the church and refuse admittance to those whom God has accepted. In doing so they transcend the authority of the New Testament which bids them call not that unclean which God hath cleansed, or treat those as aliens whom God himself hath received.

(b) It is not necessary to "find a precedent for waiving the question of Christian baptism for the sake of union." The question of baptism cannot be "waived" by those to whom it is a question of conscience, a matter of duty. No question of conscience must be "waived" by the Christian. Two conflicting duties might, of course, confront a Christian, but his solution of such a conflict is rarely, if ever, made by "waiving" one for the sake of the other. As a rule he finds his way to a larger view of his duty in which the conflict of duties is reconciled.

But, fortunately, in the question of practicing Christian union, no such problems of ethical casuistry are involved. It is possible, even for one who looks upon immersion as a command of Christ, to practice Christian union straight out, in obedience to Christ's supreme desire, and at the same time obediently to practice immersion only, in the fulfilment of his understanding of the terms of Christ's will.

The practice of Christian union with Congregationalists involves absolutely no question of conscience concerning baptism except on the part of those who deny that Congregationalists are Christians, members of the Church of Christ.

We do not believe the Christian Evangelist will deny that Congregationalists are Christians, members of the Church of Christ. Nor will our contemporary affirm that Congregationalists are without baptism.

As such Christians, members of the Church of Christ, baptized,—albeit in a manner that both The Christian Evangelist and we regard as irregular—there is no sense in talking of "waiving the baptism" question in uniting with a congregation of Congregationalists to practice Christian union. It is equally without sense to talk of "waiving baptism" in receiving them as individuals into the fellowship of a local church of Christ. They are already baptized, already IN the church, just as truly IN as are any who presume to sit in judgment upon their Christian status.

2. As quite a number of our members personally would be compelled, conscientiously, to withdraw their membership from the congregation in case of such action, would we not be promoting division rather than union by such a step?

It would be a sufficient response to this question simply to cite the cases of Thomas Campbell and his co-workers for unity whose endeavor at practicing union resulted in division from the Presbyterian church, and of Alexander Campbell who, unable to practice Christian unity in the Baptist church, withdrew with about thirty thousand of his followers.

To these instances, however, might be added the still more weighty precedent of Paul who promoted considerable division in the apostolic church by his determination to practice union with Gentile Christians.

3. How would our relation with the great body of churches with which we have been associated, [Disciples' churches, we assume. —Editors C. C.] be affected by such action.

This, of course, would be mainly a matter for those churches to decide. That the Disciples of Christ would give anything but the heartiest fellowship and the highest honor to a congregation that takes its Christian union ideal seriously enough to actually practice it is unthinkable.

* * *

Questions 2 and 3 cannot be passed by without calling attention to the subtle sectarian threat hardly concealed in them. It is this threat which keeps up the sectarian order. Considerations of the kingdom of God are subordinated to the advantages of denominational regularity. The party lash is used by the sectarian organizations with no less effectiveness than by political organizations. It is not a point we care to dwell on just now, but the naive suggestion of such considerations betrays the essential sectarian point of view from which the enterprise of Christian union is being regarded by The Christian Evangelist's editorial writer.

* * *

The Congregationalists also will ask certain questions. They are as follows:

1. If you Disciples believe immersion to be the New Testament form of baptism, and the only form that has New Testament authority, how can you yield it to unite with uus?

To which the Disciples who believe that way as to immersion will make the obvious reply that they do not yield their conviction in uniting with Congregationalists to practice Christian union. Our convictions concerning immersion are no more involved in the practice of union with Congregationalists than in the practice of division. In the case of our union as in the case of our separation we are ourselves immersed and are not involved in responsibility for the church to which we belong practicing any other form except immersion.

2. But since you do agree to yield it in the case of our reception, [Our answer above denies this construction.—Editors C. C.] (a) thereby recognizing our affusion as baptism, (b) why do you insist that the united church shall henceforth practice only immersion?

(a) The Disciples do not recognize the baptism of the Congregationalists because they unite with them to practice Christian unity. They recognize their baptism as valid whether the two congregations unite or not. Congregationalists are members of the one and only Church of Christ—just as truly members of it as are Disciples. As we say above in answer to the first question of the first set, they are baptized already, and to treat with them in a program of unity as if they were not baptized is to adopt a sectarian attitude of patronage and bigotry which blights the fine flower of unity in the bud.

(b) We, the Disciples, do not insist at all upon immersion only, as the practice of the united church. The ideal of Christian union "insists" upon it as the only ceremony of initiation and consecration upon which a united church can be maintained. Congregationalists believe in it and already pratice it as an optional form with affusion. With them so far as conscience is concerned the form is a matter of indifference. Baptists practice immersion only, as a matter of conscience.

The Disciples, a Christian union people, whose membership is composed of those holding with Congregationalists to an optionist view and those holding with Baptists to the immersionist view have long since discerned that the two sets of minds could be held in unity at this point only by the exclusive practice of immersion. They, therefore, have no hope of a union proposal that undertakes to solve the baptism question in any other way.

The Disciples are open-minded about the subject, however, and if a Congregationalist or another Disciple will suggest how the high demands of Christ's ideal of unity may be met by any other procedure they will be found ready to consider it.

3. Moreover, if we admit, (a) as you require us to do, that immersion was the baptism of Jesus and his apostles, and the only form of baptism consistent with the plea for unity, (b) why should not we ourselves submit to that baptism which we are henceforth to recommend to others?

(a) The Disciples do not "require" the Congregationists "to admit that immersion was the baptism of Jesus and his apostles." As a matter of fact, most Congregationalists do already admit this, though denying the mandatory character of such a precedent.

(b) There is no reason in the wide world why a Congregationalist member of the united church should not be immersed at any time that he came to regard it as his duty to be rebaptized. So long as he was satisfied with his baptism, however, there is no principle of consistency to impel him to be rebaptized.

4. Besides, what about infant baptism, which is an integral part of the Congregational system, concerning which nothing is said in the proposed basis [The Christian Century's suggested basis] of union.

To say that infant baptism is an integral part of the Congregational system is to write carelessly. As an answer to this question we refer our readers to an editorial published in The Congregationalist, the leading paper of its denomination.

In reply to a Baptist writer who argues as follows: "No enlightened Congregationalist attaches any sacerdotal significance to infant baptism. Then why not abandon the baptismal part of the ceremony and retain only that dedicatory service which is today precious alike to Congregationalists and Baptists?" the editor of The Congregationalist says:

> Congregationalists as a body do not regard baptized infants as members of their churches. Historically they hold that in such baptism the parents and the church enter into covenant to work together to prepare the child for membership in the church, and that a promise of our Father to coöperate in that work may be assumed. For many and we think for most Congregationalists the dedication of the child by all those sharing in the service is the principal meaning attached to it.

Some such solution of the controversy is practicable for both Congregationalists and Disciples and by it the spiritual life of the Disciples homes would be appreciably enriched. In some Baptist churches and some churches of the Disciples this ceremony of dedicating young children to God has become a beautiful custom. It conserves all those perfectly real values which Congregationalists find in infant baptism and at the same time it does not infringe on the most sensitive Baptist or Disciple conscience.

Playing Hamlet With Hamlet Left Out—An Instructive Possibility

AN EDITORIAL IN THE PACIFIC CHRISTIAN.

The old saying about playing Hamlet with Hamlet left out contains a suggestion every member of the Church of Christ should seriously ponder in connection with the present movement towards Christian union.

For a century we have made the most eloquent and effective plea for the oneness of God's people heard since the days of the apostles. However much we may have severally differed on other matters, we have been a consistent and vital unit here. And, partly at least, because of our persistent and unfaltering advocacy union is today the uppermost thought in the Christian world.

Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Methodists and Presbyterians are actively interested in it; and the form it is assuming on the great world-stage is suggestive of Shakespeare's famous play with its chief character omitted.

There are unmistakable signs of union in the not distant future with the most pronounced unionists of the century left out. The movement has assumed a momentum today which appears to depend upon no one particular people. And what is vastly more significant to us is, it seems to be moving on toward a glorious realization along lines which very largely converge outside our own brotherhood.

The superficial critic will probably conclude this is due to some real or fancied defect in our doctrinal position. In our judgment there is very little, if anything, wrong at this point. We wear the divine family name, administer the apostolic order with painstaking precision and regularity, and submit all questions of faith and practice to the adjudication of the plain and accepted teachings of the inspired Word of God. Such a position would seem to be absolutely unassailable.

If, as many of our wisest leaders believe, there is ground for the apprehension that union may be consummated with its recognized champions left out, we have no one to blame but ourselves. The plain unvarnished truth is, in our present state of Christian development we are as unprepared as our religious neighbors to offer a proper ethical and spiritual basis for union. It is a painful but illuminating reflection on the progress we have made that at the end of a century our plea for the restoration of the pure, simple Christianity of Christ seems to have wrought no great corresponding refinement of the life and character of our people. It is an open question today whether we are one whit better from a moral and spiritual point of view than the churches whose heresies we have denounced as sins and against whose divisions we have recorded such an emphatic protest.

Sooner or later we must come to see that the only enduring basis of union is ethical and spiritual. The nucleus around which the wandering stars of a divided Christendom shall eventually gather will be the one most thoroughly charged with the spirit, passion and purpose of Christ. Unless we seriously set ourselves to the task of bringing the life and character of our people into actual conformity to the simple, undefiled Christianity we have so long sought to restore, we need dream no more dreams of leadership in the consummation of union.

Our course for the future is absolutely plain. We are in sore need of a great renaissance of individual and collective righteousness, so that we may be in fact what for a century we have been in theory—the true exponents of New Testament Christianity. The olive branch must be substituted for the bayonet. Kindliness must supplant coercion, and our barbed polemics must give way to a manly piety and a manly peace. We must beat our swords into ploughshares and our spears into pruning hooks, and against those who sincerely differ from us, but who just as sincerely honor our Christ, we must learn war no more.

We record it as our solemn judgment that the very day we make our practice correspond to our theory, so that we shall be Christian in fact as well as in doctrine, we shall be invincible in the earth—in union and in everything else. But woe unto us if we rely upon a sound doctrinal position to enable us to weather the open seas of the world! Men of Israel, beware! for there are dangerous breakers ahead.

"God will be with us tomorrow as He was yesterday. There is no misfortune that can befall us but by His permission, and if He permits it surely He will give us strength to bear it."

Shawlands Church, Glasgow.

Roxburgh Church, Edinburgh.

Bryson Road Church, Edinburgh.

Churches of Disciples in Scotland

Modest Congregations, Devout and Loyal, but Ineffective

BY ERRETT GATES.

It was my surprise when I arrived in Edinburgh to find that there were churches here sprung from the influence of the Campbells. I was invited, the first Sunday I spent in the city, to preach for one of the two churches holding meetings.

I was informed that these churches repudiated the settled ministry, opposed the use of the organ in public worship and met Sunday mornings solely for the purpose of mutual exhortation and the breaking of bread. It was, thus, with fear and trembling that I ventured to accept an invitation to meet with one of these churches Sunday morning with the ostensible purpose of speaking to them. I was afraid, since I had had no experience in their meetings, that I would violate their order and usages and wound their feelings in everything I should attempt to do. I was afraid to go with too formal an address, lest I should outrage the spontaneity and freedom of their service; and I was afraid to go into the pulpit lest I should seem to be monopolizing the service which belonged to all. But I went in spite of all these scruples and misgivings, and this is what took place.

Order of Service.

Three brethren took their places on the platform behind the covered communion table; one acted as leader for the service and the others as helpers. A hymn was announced and every stanza read before the singing, which took place without the use of an organ, though one stood closed up in the front of the room. Then the leader led in prayer. Then a hymn was called for from the audience and brother arose, announced the number of a hymn and read it through. After singing, the leader called upon a brother from the audience to come to the reading desk at the side of the platform and read the Old Testament lesson for the morning. After several voluntary prayers from the congregation another brother was called from the audience to the reading desk to read the New Testament lesson for the day. Then a hymn was called for and sung, and the leader made a short talk appropriate to the communion service. Then prayer for the bread and its distribution and prayer for the cup and its distribution, after which they took an offering only from the immersed believers present. It should be said that the bread and cup were offered only to those present known to be immersed. This order of service had consumed just an hour. After the singing of another hymn, and the "intimation" of notices the leader said: "Our Brother Gates from America is here and we should be glad to have a word of teaching or of exhortation from him."

I arose in front of the seat where I was sitting as if I would speak there, but the leader insisted that I go to the platform. I spoke about fifteen minutes on the parable of the Good Shepherd and sat down. After singing another hymn the audience was lead in a closing prayer, and went out, not hastily, but only after first sitting down in a reverent manner and waiting quietly a moment.

Striking Democracy of Worship.

I have attended at least one of these services, more often two of them, every Sunday that I have been in Scotland, and this is the order always followed in the morning. I was doubtful of being asked again to speak for them, but the very next Sunday I was invited to spend with one of these churches in Glasgow where I spoke three times; and every Sunday that I have been in Edinburgh I have been asked to speak at both services and have done so with one or two exceptions. I am impressed with the studied democracy and mutuality of their services. They are a standing rebuke to the clericalism that flaunts its authority and millinery in the face of the people in this land of established churches. The difference between them and the American churches is largely created by religious conditions; though to some extent also to the legalistic interpretation of the principle of primitive example and precept.

These churches adhere strictly to the principle of a "mutual ministry," though they have what they call "evangelists" who go about among the churches spending a few weeks or months in a place teaching, visiting and preaching. Along with their opposition to a settled ministry goes their opposition to a salaried ministry. The evangelist (for they do not tolerate the title minister) if he is paid by the church, serves a few weeks and takes the free-will offerings of the people; otherwise he is paid a stipulated sum by the "missionary committee," to whose work both at home and abroad, the churches send offerings.

Apt in Prayer.

These Scotch laymen who become the elders and deacons of these churches become wonderfully apt in prayer and in Scripture reading. This practice of mutual edification tends to raise up speakers out of the ranks of the laity who acquire a surprising fluency of speech. The elders are really the local ministers and are recognized as such by the state which gives them the right to perform the marriage ceremony. They are rather proud of the independence of the ministry they have cultivated, and boast, as a lady did to me in Glasgow, that none of their churches were ever without a service, as other churches were when no minister was to be had. Each of these churches, in proportion to their size, have from two or three to a score of men, capable of conducting a fairly edifying and orderly service on short notice. Of course they never get anything sensationally profound or brilliant, and what is more, they do not expect it. It is rather unbecoming, so they think, in the worship of the church, which holds its services for worship and not for amusement or entertainment.

Absence of Evangelistic Urgency.

One thing that struck me in contrast with the American churches is the absence of evangelistic urgency. These churches depend for their increase, for the bringing in of converts, upon the annual meetings that are held by the evangelists. But there is not the same practice in their evangelistic meetings as in America. They do not ask the convert to come forward to make a confession. That is too demonstrative for the Scotch character. They ask the penitent person to wait until the close and meet the elders privately. High pressure revivalism and quick responses to emotional appeals have no chance under these conditions.

No Fellowship with American Reactionaries.

One would suppose that these anti-organ, anti-society, and anti-clergy churches would be in close fellowship with the American churches of the same order. But they look with aversion upon such a journal as the "Octographic Review," and have suffered from its divisive spirit among their churches. While they oppose the use of the organ, yet they believe in the Sunday-school and its printed helps and have young people's societies and other local organizations. These churches are not entirely agreed among themselves. The two churches here in Edinburgh are not in the most cordial fellowship. A few of the members of the old congregation did not sympathize with some of its methods and withdrew and formed a new church in another part of the city. The new church introduced the use of the organ in the Sunday-school and at the evening service, which is regarded as the more open service, and began to take money from the unimmersed. These new practices have set this church apart from the others in Scotland, so that it is looked upon as mildly apostate.

Curiosities of Arrested Development.

I have heard complaints from younger members of these churches, and from the more progressive against their outgrown usages. They are looked upon by the outside world as curiosities of arrested development and are avoided as ecclesiastical Ismaelites. The young people suffer from the ostracism in their social life. It is inevitable that some sort of adjustment should be made by these churches with the conditions of the time for the sake of continued existence.

The churches of Christ are quite evenly distributed over England and Scotland and Wales. There are only three churches in Ireland—two in Belfast and one in Londonderry. In England there are 118 churches, in Wales 19, in Scotland 45; total for Great Britain, 185, with a membership of 14,482. They have 19 evangelists and 9 missionaries.

"American" Churches.

The progressive churches, sometimes called the "American brethren" because they are supplied very largely with American preachers and were started by American missionary effort, number 2,235 communicants. Thus the "Old Brethren" as the anti-churches are spoken of, have 10 churches to one of the progressive. Between these two groups there have been neither fellowship nor coöperation for many years. An effort was made at a conference in London in July to bring them closer together.

The first convention of these churches was held in 1842; the second in 1847, where Alexander Campbell was present and was elected chairman. From that year to the present time there have been annual conventions without a break. In 1847, they reported 80 churches with a membership of 2,300, their growth has been steady but very slow.

Coplaw Church, Glasgow.

The two churches in Edinburgh—the Roxburgh and Bryson Road— meet in audience rooms constructed out of the ground floor flats of three and four story apartment buildings, in very poor sections of the city. The second church is in a somewhat better residence section while the first church is located on the very border of the slum district. There were 170 scholars present at the first session of the autumn opening. Most Sunday-schools are closed in Edinburgh during the summer.

In both of these churches there is a group of intelligent, and in a few instances, of influential business men, who are foremost in their management and in the conduct of services. And surprisingly enough, there is a large group of young men in each, growing up to take the places of the older ones as they drop out.

Membership and management in these churches seem to pass from father to son; domestic relationship is a large factor in preserving them from dissolution.

There are five churches in Glasgow, two

(Continued on page 15)

WATCHING THE PEWS

The Kind of Worshipers Seen by the Preacher.

BY ROBERT J. BURDETTE.

The Sleeper.

It may be that he resteth his chin upon the head of his cane, and when the moment of deep sleep cometh upon him, his chin slippeth and the bang of his head against the back of the other pew awaketh him and startleth the congregation. Or, peradventure he sleepeth with his head bolt upright, and noddeth the same in time with his deep breathing, each nod more violent and far-reaching than the one that went before it, and at last as he smiteth his breast with his chin he awakeneth right suddenly and fixes a reproachful gaze upon you from half-opened eyes, as though he would say, "Don't you push me that way again."

Or, if it be so that he letteth his head decline backwards twenty-five degrees, seeking rest that is not there, until the lid of his head seemeth about to fall off, and his mouth is open like unto the bill of a young robin when it crieth for food, he playeth fantastic tunes with his nose, whereat the boys in the gallery make merry, and the congregation is much scandalized. And when it shall be that the wife of his bosom shall smite him under the fifth rib with her two-edged elbow that he lifteth up his head and openeth his eyes wide and glareth around upon the congregation as one who shall say, "He that sayeth I was asleep the same is a weather prophet and the truth dwelleth not in him." But if he foldeth his handkerchief upon the back of his brother's pew, and devoutly boweth his head upon the same as you pronounce the words of the text, then will that sleeper disturb no one, but will slumber calmly on until the time of the benediction is come; and he will awaken refreshed and smiling, and he will clasp hands with the brethren and greatly extol the preacher, and with a loud voice magnify the sermon.

The Lounger.

He falls into the pew and slides into a comfortable, but not graceful position. At least he calls it comfortable. He sits on the small of his back on the edge of the pew. His legs are extended and his feet are hidden away out of sight somewhere under another pew. He carries one hand in his pocket. The pliant hinge of one elbow rests on the arm of the pew, and in the fearful hollow of his hand he drops his face, whereof one cheek is pushed clear up into his eyes, giving him a weird, inhuman expression. Every time you look at him you have a nervous fear that he will slide away clear out of sight. And although you are a good man, you sometimes half wish that he would, and never come up again.

The Fidget.

When he sits down he assumes an attitude as bolt upright as though he had swallowed a hoehandle. He hooks his shoulder-blades over the back of the pew, and there is a look of grim determination on his face that assures you he is going to sit still that Sunday if it kills him. Then he immediately kicks over the hassock. He unhooks his shoulder-blades and puts a hymn-book behind his back to lean against. Then he bends forward and lets the book go thumping down during the long prayer. He turns halfway around, and, planting his elbow on the high back of the pew, tries to lift his disappointed chin up into the palm of his inaccessible hand. Then he faces around and extends both arms out along the back of the pew as though they were wings and he was getting ready to fly away and keep still ten minutes. Then he reaches for the hassock with his feet, picks it up with them, drops it, and in a frantic effort to recover it, sends it crashing against the pew in front. By this time everybody in his neighborhood is as nervous as himself, and as he beats a rapid but muffled tattoo on the floor with his heels, making the pew quiver from end to end, he wishes he were dead. So do you.

The Watcher.

His head is set on a ball socket and can turn three ways at once. If the door opens, he turns around; if the window moves noiselessly, he looks up. He watches the fidget with one eye, and the parson and congregation with both. He sees you lose a page of your manuscript. He sees that Deacon Slowboy has put on only one cuff. He sees in the basket the quarter with a hole in it, and he saw young Mr. Slyboots drop it in, too. He sees Brother Lightpay feel in every one of his pockets for something smaller than a nickel. In vain in the choir does the tenor attempt to smuggle a little note to the soprano. Between the leaves of the hymn-book the Watcher sees that note, nor would it be a great wonder if he also sees what is in it. All things that somebody, and some things that nobody wants him to see he sees. He sees so much he has no time to listen to anything.

The Timekeeper.

As you announce your text this brother pulls his watch upon you—and I do believe, when I am punishing an audience, I would rather see a man draw a revolver than a watch. He gets the time to a second, and shuts his watch with a snap that sounds like the "go" from the judge's stand at the agricultural horse-trot; something, young gentlemen, of which you are profoundly ignorant. And with that brother sitting before you, his eye on you and his hand on his watch, as though he feared you might steal it, you preach like an express engine; you feel that you are running on schedule time, you have just so far to go and just so many minutes to get there in, and you must haul that entire congregation with you. Oft as the Timekeeper looks at his watch, you give yourself a little more steam, and rush along regardless of signals, orders, flag-stops, or crossings. By and by, when you have been preaching only a short twenty-five minutes, the Timekeeper suddenly looks at his watch, starts, looks at you with an expression of voiceless amazement: you can see his eyes saying, "Man, alive, do you know what time it is?" If the Timekeeper, when he is feeling usually accurate, cannot utterly destroy the closing passages of the best sermon you will ever preach, you are proof against human annoyance. And you will be, you must be superior to annoyance else you cannot preach.

The Squeaker.

He comes a little late, and he weareth the shoes that are sacred to the sanctuary, the boots that remember the Sabbath day to keep it noisy. His pew is away down in front, close to the pulpit and "squee, squaw" he tramps discordantly down the long aisle. If he walks flat-footed the dismal thump of his heels mingles dejectedly with the shrill dissonance of the squeaking sole. And if he endeavors to improve matters by teetering along on his toes, the result is a stridulous horror of squeak and grumble that even frightens the most hardened squeaker. When he reaches his pew, there are strangers sitting there. The Squeaker is the soul of hospitality, and he would not disturb a stranger for a hat full of money, so modestly ignoring all the pew doors held open for him, he squeaks all the way back to a retired seat under the gallery. Then he remembers that he has a notice for the pastor to read. He squeaks up to the pulpit, hands the minister the wrong notice and does not discover his mistake until he is half way down the aisle again, and back to the pulpit he goes. He is invariably a good man, too; one of the best men in your church; so good you cannot endure to reprove him on account of his boots, which are essentially pedobaptists in their economical use of water, and their loud protests against immersion as an ordinance of efficacy.

The Traveler.

This brother is also a Talker. Moreover, he is usually a sister. She comes to church early, and is careful and troubled about all the unfinished and projected missionary and sewing-circle business of the week. Save by accident or mistake, she never goes immediately to her own pew. She heads directly for a sister in some remote and lonely part of the room, and fills in the quiet that precedes the service, and all the time the congregation is assembling, with much sibilant buzzing. From the first sister she flits to a second and again to another and another. You will observe that she talks with her head turning this way and that, on the lookout for another committee. And buzz, buzz, buzz, she keeps it up. And then, espying on the other side of the church a sister whom she had been unable to include in her itinerant caucus, she says some noiseless words at her with a voiceless mouth, which she opens and shuts and expands and contracts a few times in such extravagant and frightful pantomime that you hold your breath and look to see the good sister fall down in a fit.

Hopeful, the Worshiper.

It rests your soul to turn toward this pleasant companion of a toilsome pilgrimage. His face shines up at you from the pew and his soul looks at you through his eyes. Now the kindly face kindles with your enthusiasm and now the eyes are misty when some touch of pathos in your words or manner plash the waters into them. Sometimes an assuring nod of the head carries to the pulpit the warm approval of the pew, and sometimes the knitted brow asks you to say that again and say it slowly, and by this you know how closely Hopeful is following you. You always look for him and always you find him, and looking down into his face as you open the Book, you forget the Timekeeper, you cannot see the Sleeper, the Traveler is still and the sound of the Squeaker blends into the closing strains of the hymn in sweet accord; and your heart is strong and light. Let us be of good cheer, there are more Hopeful than Bosses in the church, and one Hopeful is of more value than many Fidgets.

Glimpses Into Mission Homes

BY W. REMFREY HUNT.

Rev. W. Remfry Hunt, F. R. G. S.

The mission stations become a sort of home within a home. The missionaries live in the most intimate contact with heathenism and with each other. The homes are as little bits of sunlit beauty in the midst of the dark, cruel, lonesome heathenism around about them. The little children live their lives mostly within the compound walls. They are kept in strict and careful quarantine from the moral leprosy without. Any little bits of refinement in the homes in the way of ornaments, furniture, toys, pictures, or magazines are as gleams of sunshine. Critics who would deny them these things would never have the moral courage to stay one night outside of the protection of treaty ports, not to mention the nightmare they would have if told Dr. Macklin had been attending cholera pestilence and leper patients half an hour before he was serving at the head of the table and hastening to get through to meet a Chinese official in the guest room.

Visit of Professor Paul.

Some time since our beloved Professor C. T. Paul trekked the veldt of Anhwei province and visited Chu Chow. The Osgoods and the Hunts were dee-lighted. Visits as these are as a dream of heaven to the dear children. The wives search with two-candle-power the larder for the choicest viands. New stories are told and all are refreshed. But a trip had been planned into the far regions of the north. Never thought of putting off a well-planned trip before, but here was Professor Paul, and his genial wife, and the joys and felicities that such a visit would mean counted high. Next morning a caravansary was at the door, and, chocked at the thought of what we should miss at home, we waved them a farewell, and went off into the pagan fields to open strategic centres for evangelism. It was a great privilege, but it gave me an inexpressible feeling, and this is the first time it has been mentioned, and that only to "stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance" that the mission fields has its little Waterloos, no less than our fatherland its Gettysburgs and Missionary Ridges. Of the mission home and its experiences it may be said that the half has never been told. There are many unrecorded deeds of love done by the workers within and without the mission compounds that count for so much in the winning of China to Christ.

Missionaries Do Not Fear Searchlight.

The missionaries do not fear the searchlight of publicity. The more people come the more it is appreciated, especially if they come in the season of the year when the indigenous smells and the exogenous stinks are normal. The tourist who sees China from the deck of a luxuriously appointed steamer, or who is rushed through the narrow streets merely to purchase a few curios at a jewelers or a porcelain store, will not be able to expose his sensitive plate to the light. It will blur because it is undeveloped.

Types of Travelers.

Travelers of the type of men and women like Archibald McLean, Dr. Morrison of the Times, Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop, F. R. G. S., Dr. John R. Mott, Colonel Denby, and Theodore Roosevelt, and William Jennings Bryan, are sane, sound, and salutary in their visits as in their judgment They leave impressions that do good. But when men of the uninformed classes like Sir Hiram Maxim, and Rudyard Kipling's "Pagett M. P.," snatch both first and second hand the astigmatic views of those who do not know, then it is that the situation is indeed pitiful. The recent explosions of the famous gunmaker were so very ill-timed; but it revealed the aim, the missive, and the miss. In the "Rationalist Press Association Annual" Mr. Maxim says, "the missionaries are and always have been the greatest liars on the face of the earth." He asks what the world would think of a sixteen-year-old girl coming to England to teach steam engineering to the yards when she had never seen a steam engine at work. The answer to our critic is plain, and it is that we should think exactly the same of such unthinkable folly as we do of Sir Hiram's cloudy excursion into the arena of missions and missionary affairs.

Kipling's Travelers.

Rudyard Kipling describes the traveler "Pagett M. P." in his own inimitable style. He says the "fluent liar" had said the heat of India was a "solar myth," and that missions were a farce. The missionaries invited the tourist to stay on till summer. The result was lovely. The missionaries smiled, the old man b'iled, his temper riled.

Mr. Hunt's Home at Chu Chow.

The prickly heat tried him, the mosquitoes bit him, the dust storms blinded him, dysentery laid him low, and cholera scared him so, till the crisis was reached in the last stage act, red heat 120 deg. in the courtyard at noon—he fled, and is yet to be discovered.

The mission field and the camping grounds of its home-life is the place where one is tested for service. Who knows the soul-longings and the heart-pantings of the homes where the dear children are away in the homelands being educated in more congenial surroundings and with better chances of realizing that they inherently belong to the lands of civilization? The Chinese letter-carrier who brings the mail from home is remembered by the children in their bedside prayers. The ragged Chinese peanut vendor, who sells his spicy morsels on Chinese streets, enjoys smiles of welcome from the missionary children such as would be valued at millions by the absent members of the missionary families at home. But the mission life is, nevertheless, one of unique joy. It is a sunlit life.

Bright Gleams in Mission Circles.

There are a lot of bright gleams in the mission circles just now. Dr. Macklin and family have returned, and the doctor is always as optimistic as a good morning. Dr. Paul Wakefield and family seemed the happiest little freight that every returned to China, and we wish for them the gladdest of service. The Osgood's are more than fortunate, for the visit of loved parents is as rare in the mission field as strawberries in March. The visit of Mr. and Mrs. Hertzog to Chu Chow and all our mission stations will give tone to the workers, and inspirational talks to these splendid parents of missionaries for long years to come. Mrs. and Abe Cory are in their new home in Nanking, and although "Abe" is too busy to know whether his porridge has sugar in it or to notice the pictures on the walls, he feels fine. Frank Garrett and his good wife are ever successfully at work, and the girls, I mean Miss Mary Kelly and Miss Eva May Raw, are living in their Chinese home down in the midst of Flowery Street touching the hearts and winning the women of that densely peopled mart. The same is true of Miss Rosa Tonkin in the factories at Shanghai. Miss Edna P. Dale is pressing her work among the women of Wuhu, and Miss Kate Gault Miller is getting the language with real credit and ability. The acquisition of the language alone is enough for any ordinary test of one's religion as well as its mental gymnastics. Miss Emma Lyon is building into the lives of those fine girls at her school the type of Christian character that will mould the homes of the new China that is coming so surely as the reclining shades of heathenism predicts the new era that is to be. President F. E. Meigs has done a splendid service in the Christian College in Nanking, and the mission waits to welcome them back with the sincerest love and admiration. Mrs. Meigs is the mother of the mission, and their home in Nanking is ever open to all. It is the popular rendezvous of the missionaries and shines in every corner with the love of Christ.

Missionaries Young and Hopeful.

Most of the missionaries keep young and are full of hope. In the face of clenched antagonisms in heathen Chow-Hsien, the home of Brother and Sister Titus is a challenge to the defiant and evil faiths that are arrayed against them in its wicked idolatries. Little Virginia is alone in her playtime as in her home-life in that city; and when it is possible for a convenient boat trip the family go out into the regions of paganism and preach Christ with no uncertain sound.

Mission life, albeit, is not all preaching. Its practice would make the physicians of America and Europe envious: weighing the logs for fuel, tending the cows for "pure" milk, watching to see if the docile "boy" does not wear for a night or so the underwear of the family when it is handed out for laundry work, reckoning accounts with the cook who "never squeeze mission money," patience with the Chinese callers who can stay all day, talk lots and say nothing, keeping back your disgust "lest offending" when the uninitiated guest remarks upon the fine house, compared with his mud hut, and forthwith forgets and spits on your floor, shuffling the children out of the way when the women callers are talking with you and boldly breaking all sense of refinement by some vulgar and indelicate reference to the sacred relations of family life—these and a thousand and one other little trivialities wear the Aryan down, and the evening prayer—utterances abound with thanks for the privileges of telling them of Jesus, and asks, too, for "grace sufficient" to do as Jesus would do if he were here right now.

A Group of Missionaries' Children.

No Better Homes Anywhere.

We were recently in all our mission homes and there are none better in the two hemispheres: the Butcharts in Lu Chow Fu, with the doctor so busy he hardly has time to spin Baird's top as a special privilege; with Mr. and Mrs. Brown sharing the laying of the foundations of the Christian Church in that city, and Miss Alma Favors doing the best women's work for tact, grace, and consecration that we have seen in any province in China; these workers are true gold indeed.

Two geniuses are at work, too, in Lu Chow Fu and they live at a place styled the "Roost." They are bachelors at this writing, and of course nobody knows what time the roost may evolute into something beautiful for situation and the joys of the whole prefecture. Baird's practical and sound philosophy, and Buck's genial and appreciated work in a fine grace of friendship with the young men of the city, links up these two workers in a fine team.

Pathos of Separation.

While we were at Tungchow visiting the Johnson's we had ample time to see the fine work these pioneers have done in that vast unevangelized center. It has told on these consecrated workers. At the table it was mentioned that Mrs. Johnson and the children were to go home on furlough in the coming spring; and Brother Johnson whispered to me that he would stay and stand by the stuff. Something happened that cannot be written; who can write sighs, feelings and—but we are hoping Brother Johnson will go with his family, for he is worthy and is faithful, and he needs the renewal a vision of the dear homeland gives.

Foster Poland said he wished we were going to live all the time in Tungchow so he could have some fun. These children missionaries seem to breathe in the language, and maybe if our missionaries could learn the lingua like the children do, it would get home quicker and do its work easier. Dr. and Mrs. Poland are acclimating, and diagnosing his own case he says, "it takes time."

A Missionary's Son.

We enjoyed a visit to the beautiful home of Mrs. Molland, and took Hal Molland over to Chu Chow on horse back. We told Hal of the rue and euphrasy of our pioneering work in Chu Chow, and he took fire; and if China wins him as one of her own missionary sons, it will be because Harold Molland has the rich inheritance of his sainted father, whose grave in Wuhu still articulates the prayer, "Thy Kingdom Come." Mrs. Molland rejoices in the companionship of Muriel and in the examination of the Chinese language we gave her in the summer; she showed how the very idiom and accent was as nearly native to her as in the girlish days when with Charlie and Kathleen she enjoyed one of the happiest of childhood's times.

We are fortunate in being the co-workers with Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Paul in Wuhu. They are fine people and their home stands for grace, culture and service. We found the Shaws in Shanghai rejoicing in setting in order the new "Institute" work. Brother and Sister James Ware, always full of service, were crushed under the news of the death of their eldest daughter in California. The Lord give them sustaining grace! Sunshine and shadows alternate here as in all spheres. Professor Charles Settlemeyer pushes the union schemes and is recommending to the boys at the "Roost" that marriage is no trifling thing, and that this new living link can make a "roost" hatch out the sweetest fruits and most gracious nucleus of a new social community.

Missionary Home a Real Home.

Twenty-one years of varied experience in China has instructed me that the mission house in the east should be more than a mere residence; it should be, and aims to be, a real home. While we do not "live on ambrosia" or "sleep on beds of rose leaves" we enjoy larger, roomier, more comfortable abodes than those natives around about us. The mission home is the truest exhibit of the civilization of the West. The children must not be orientalized, nor must the parents stay too long in the moral malarial miasma of climates that enervate and in conditions that burn out life and dry up its tissues. In a word, the missionaries' homes are little bits of the dear homeland set right down in the midst of a wilderness of sin and shades that are dusk with horrid shapes of evildom.

Religion Must Begin in Home Life.

The new religion that comes to China begins as it did in Bethlehem, in the home life. It takes its level, however, from the achievements of the twentieth century; and any one who would have missionaries begin where aborigines eat with their fingers, sleep on mats, live in a mud hut, dress and act like the heathen, should receive this immediate invitation to come and test it, as we did; and then see which he likes best, and which is really best in utility, economy, and common sense.

Nor are the mission homes the manufactories of martyrs. Only at the crucial and sacrificial call do we face death and flinch not. We would rather live and serve. At the Boxer crisis we missionaries were sentenced to death; it felt uncanny, and we could, even at that critical moment, have restrained ourselves and said to our friendliest and readiest critics, "Gentlemen, the situation, with all its assets, is open to you."

The Influence of the Home.

Peeps into our mission homes would do up all good. As the representative of all that is best in our own homeland civilization, the men and women on the lonely outpost roads of the far-flung-battle-line of the new moral and intellectual creations in a thousand cities in Asia need the best equipment! Whether teaching Biblical, scientific, industrial or literary subjects, he or she communicates gifts, traits, habits, knowledge, and builds character with the material supplied from Christian civilization. "Thoughts that breathe and words that burn" surge up in our hearts as we are solemnized with the bigness of the Christ-commissioned and Spirit-empowered service in which we have proved is the highest investment of influence and the truest message of God's redeeming love to these "other sheep" who are embraced by the bleeding hands that still reach in travail to the uttermost parts of the earth.

God gave me a beautiful vision divine,
Its horizons opened new windows sublime:
O dream of the Homeland—rare glow for these eyes—
Reunions with loved ones; what wonders surprise.
White angel-robed escorts with Jesus attending,
All kindreds redeemed their glad anthems ascending.
Not pearl gates, or gold streets, or sunlit white throne Makes Heaven. 'Tis Jesus at home.

Churchitis

So many people suffer
From this dread malady.
It comes on Sunday morning,
And lasts till after tea.

Its symptoms often vary;
It brings on prolonged sleep;
Induces shrinking nervousness;
Young patients often weep.

But one thing I have noticed
In cases roundabout;
The victims all seem anxious
To have their church cut out.

—Etta Anthony Baker in Lippincott's.

MYSTERIES OF EGYPT

Discoveries in the Land of the Nile.

PROF. JAMES H. BREASTED INTERVIEWED.

The remarkable discoveries of the Germans at Elephantine, Egypt, has renewed public interest in the work of the excavator among the buried treasures of the past centuries. That the readers of The Christian Century might have reliable and scholarly information regarding the significance of the papyri found at Elephantine, a representative of this paper interviewed Prof. J. H. Breasted, the renowned Egyptologist and orientalist. He is director of the Haskell Oriental Museum at the University of Chicago and professor of Egyptology and Lecturer on oriental history. He has made several extended trips to Egypt, the last time spending two years in that wonderful land. He was found in his office, surrounded with evidences of his interest in his chosen work and full of enthusiasm regarding Egyptian matters.

A Meager Year.

"Doctor Breasted, I have come to ask a few questions about Egypt. What is the latest word?"

"This has been a poor year for Egyptian news in my line," he replied, "the most meager year for several years. However, I have just now received a letter from Petrie, W. M. F. Petrie, who has just returned to London from Egypt. He writes that he is just back from Hawara with a lot of Roman portraits, the finest he has ever seen. These portraits," remarked the professor, "are made of wax and they must be pretty good to be the finest he has ever seen. Hawara is the happy hunting grounds for Roman portrait hunters."

"Did Doctor Petrie bring back anything else?"

"Yes, he got an eight-ton colossal granite shrine Monolith, with two carved figures of the great dynastic king, Amenemhet II. He also reports the discovery of two new pyramids at Marghouner."

"Will you not tell us something about the Elephantine papyri?"

"Elephantine is awfully interesting. I was out there when the papyri were found; I mean I was in the Soudan in the Upper Nile Valley."

"Did you see the papyri in Egypt?"

"No, they were packed for shipment. But I saw them in Berlin where they are now. They are most magnificent documents; written with black ink and in splendid condition."

"Why are they at Berlin?"

"Well, the best workman in the world for mounting them is in Berlin; and then they were found by Germans. They shipped the papyri out of Egypt without the knowledge of the Egyptian government; there was no intent to deceive. After they had safely arrived in Berlin, the Egyptian government was informed of the great discovery. Probably the papyri properly mounted will be placed in the Cairo Museum; perhaps the Germans hope to keep them in Berlin."

471-408 B. C.

"What is the date of the papyri found at Elephantine?"

"471-408 B. C. They are about 1,500 years older than the oldest Hebrew parchment of the Bible. The papyri relate facts much older than the date of their composition; events which occurred in the time of Cambyses in the sixth century B. C."

"What is the most important fact brought to light?"

"The existence of a great temple to Jehovah at Elephantine, which was attacked by the priests of Anubis; the Jews appealed to Bagoas, satrap of Jerusalem and to the sons of Sanballat, rulers of Samaria, for redress."

"Then Bagoas and Sanballat were real persons and not legendary characters, as Winckler declares?"

"They were not legendary characters."

"What light is thrown on the date of the Levitical code by the papyri? Wellhausen, you know, says it must have been of late date because it presupposes the existence of only one temple, all other high places and altars having disappeared."

"The payri prove the use of another temple at an earlier date and will have to be taken into consideration in determining the date of the Levitical code."

"How will it affect the Aramaic passages in Ezra, Nehemiah and Daniel?"

"The papyri prove the use of Aramaic words in the fifth century B. C., two or three centuries before the accepted date. However, I believe that they will confirm in general the position of the critics. But they will require careful study."

"What do the scholars think about the Aramaic passages—Ezra and Nehemiah, in view of these papyri, Doctor Breasted?"

"Torrey, of Yale, says that it discredits them, while Meyer, one of the greatest scholars, takes the opposite view and says it establishes their genuineness."

Epoch-Making Material.

"Where is Elephantine?"

"Opposite Assuan, 400 miles south of Cairo. It is uninhabited. It is rich in ancient treasures. There are household documents found there which go back to the 26th and 27th centuries B. C. The town is especially rich in Aramaic papyri."

"What else has been found, doctor?"

"There has been a second find—I dare not say anything about what it contains until they are out."

The professor thought a moment, and then said: "I will say this, however, about it: It is epoch-making material. It is about ready to be published. It contains the oldest tale in international literature. We have the tale in Greek but now we have discovered the Aramaic original and it is the oldest tale in such literature and the oldest manuscript of international literature in the world. More, I cannot say."

The Tables Turned.

"By the way," said the professor, "have you seen the newspaper reports of the identity of the sphinx having been discovered by Reisner?"

"Yes, what about it?" was the reply.

"Well, every sphinx is a portrait of some king," said the professor, "and we have believed for some time that the great sphinx was the portrait of Khefren—his name occurs in an inscription on the sphinx. Reisner found confirmatory evidence to prove that of which we were certain."

Nubia.

"Do you know what is being done in Nubia?" the doctor asked.

The scribe confessed ignorance. The doctor answered his own question.

"It is a most interesting condition of affairs," he said. "The Assuan dam is to be raised 22 feet, 9 inches and a great part of Nubia will be flooded. It is rich in hidden treasures. For three years the excavator has been busy there securing these treasures of the past before the waters prevent further exploration. The government has made an appropriation for the work. Relics dating back to 3600 B. C. and 4000 B. C. have been found. It has been proven that Nubia was once inhabited by the Egyptians, but Nubia was retarded in development and Egypt flourished."

Greatest Oriental Museum.

"Professor, where is the greatest collection of Egyptian antiquities?" "We haven't much here," he replied, "only a working museum. The Field Museum is good and also one in Philadelphia; on the whole, I think the Field is about the best. And there is one man who has done more than anybody else to make it what it is today, I refer to Mr. Edward Ayer, former president of Field Museum. He spent his own money and when that failed he compelled wealthy American tourists in Egypt to purchase for the museum. He got friends here to subscribe."

Railroad Mummy.

"Have you ever heard of the railroad mummy in the Field Museum?"

"No."

"Well, Mr. Ayer got a lot of his railroad friends to subscribe to a fund which he used in the purchase of this mummy which dates back to the 22nd dynasty and it is known as the 'railroad mummy.' He found a large boat in Egypt which floated on the Nile in the time of Abraham, and which is good yet, and persuaded a wealthy Chicago lady to buy it and it is in Jackson Park today. The latest thing he has secured is a chapel chamber tomb made 4600 B. C., before the time of the pyramids. It has not been unpacked yet. When it is set up you can walk in a tomb 65 centuries old. Do not forget to mention Mr. Ayer, for he has done great things for the oriental department in Field Museum."

Professor Breasted certainly can take a mighty dry and mighty old subject and talk entertainingly and instructively on it until it becomes fresh and new under his enthusiastic genius. In his own museum is a remarkable Egyptian relic of past centuries. It is a bar of gold about 4 inches long, worn by King Menes, of the first dynasty of the Abydos kings. It is not later than 3200 B. C. and is the earliest inscribed piece of royal jewelry in the world. It is of pure gold and its purpose is unknown. Professor Breasted himself secured this priceless jewel for Haskell Museum.

Charles Reign Scoville in Enid, Okla.

The labors of Evangelist Scoville and company came to a close in Enid, April 19. In many respects it was a most remarkable meeting. The gospel invitation was given for twenty days in Enid, and four days outside of Enid. A total of 757 people responded. We doubt if this has ever been equaled in the brotherhood, considering the brevity of the meeting. Could the company have remained a week longer the number of additions to the church would have been greatly increased. Of the 757, about 100 take membership in cities and towns within reach of Enid. The great majority are by confession of faith and baptism.

The meetings were held in the Loewen Theater, the largest and best auditorium in the city. This building seats about 1,700. Often 2,000 people crowded in to hear the gospel, and then hundreds were turned away for lack of room. I was unfortunate that a larger building was not available.

Mr. Scoville found a good atmosphere in Enid. The pastor, W. J. Wright, has been here nearly a year, and has won the name of being the "best preacher in the city." Oklahoma Christian University is here, and it gave the right-of-way to the meeting. The classes of the Bible College met only every other day, that the young ministers might identify themselves with the meeting. Faculty and students alike recognized the opportunity and endeavored to make the most of it.

Mr. Scoville brought to Enid his entire company. What an array of talent and consecration it is! The singing of Mrs. Scoville, the Rockwells, and Baird; and the personal work of Minges, the Leonards and Miss Brazelton, aided by the others all make the force a well nigh irresistible one. The entire city was shaken and filled with the spirit of the meetings. The University adopted the company, and has received untold benefit from the songs, and addresses given in chapel. The young ministers and the missionary class have been fired by the burning zeal of Scoville.

Letters come in inquiring about the "methods" of Scoville. First, I never heard the New Testament doctrine preached more earnestly. Christian Union, Faith, Repentance, Confession, etc., all received strong emphasis. Hundreds were baptized, and all during this ceremony one of the evangelists explained the Scriptures on the subject, aided by charts. A number of people in other churches requested and received the one baptism. Earnestness and hard work enforced by prayer and faith on the part of the company account for their great success. Personal work has become an art with them. Mr. Scoville did not say an unkind word about the denominations, although their pastors, with one exception, kept aloof. Not even a Jew, who attacked Scoville through a daily paper, could elicit an unkind remark. But sin, the saloon, the dance hall, and other breeders of vice were held up before torrents of invectives that came like blasts of brimstone. His command to repent was with the spirit of John the Baptist. His message of redemption was with the prayerful, tearful, pleading of the Master.

The meeting was eventful. Various evangelists of Oklahoma came to help and learn. On the last night an old church debt of years' standing, the skeleton of the closet, was dragged forth and covered with bankable notes. A great membership meeting on the last Sunday introduced the new members to the departments of church work. The pastor, the church, and the University are all stronger, and the entire city feels the great moral uplift. We must truly exclaim, "What hath God wrought!"

FRANK H. MARSHALL.

New York Secretary's Letter

Roy E. Deadman, of Buffalo, recently assisted Pastor Patterson at Gloversville in a short meeting which resulted in thirteen added to the church. This is a good meeting for the Gloversville Church.

Good reports come to the office concerning the work of I. L. Parvin of Auburn. New life is manifest in the various people and we have no doubt but that with this happy union of pastor and congregation the Auburn Church has some of its greatest years before it.

Prof. Philip Parsons, of Syracuse University, has been doing splendid work with the Brewerton Church during the last six months. He is enlisting a lot of good men of the community in the work of the church which will be of permanent value to the church.

D. H. Bradbury has recently received an unanimous call to remain with the Throopsville Church for another year. We are glad to know that Mr. Bradbury has decided to stay with them while he finishes his course at Auburn Theological Seminary.

The two pastors of the Syracuse Churches, Arthur Braden and C. R. Stauffer are at present conducting meetings at South Park, a settlement on a trolly line out of the city a couple miles in the direction of the most rapid growth of the city. There are about one hundred families on the field at present and we are the only people doing religious work there. For once we are in on the ground floor in this section of the country.

A committee representing the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and the Disciples of Syracuse has been appointed to work out a plan to organize a Union Church among the Italians of the city, of which there are many thousands. The writer is secretary of the committee and has had some of the most interesting hours of his life in the sessions of the committee. Just what the outcome may be he is not yet able to report, but it is certain that only good can come from such efforts as this.

R. B. Matthews, formerly of Mayslick, Ky., has located with the Columbia Ave. Church of Rochester and has things well in hand. Good reports are coming in from the work there and we shall expect greater things from this church.

The Jubilee State Convention will be held at Buffalo, June 20-26, at the Richmond Ave. Church, of which R. H. Miller is pastor. This church has recently completed one of the greatest Bible-school plants in the East among any religious people and we will have the use of this for the sessions of the convention. We hope that every congregation will be well represented. The program committee is hard at work in their effort to prepare a program worthy of the occasion.

C. R. STAUFFER, Cor. Sec.

Syracuse N. Y.

The Junior Pulpit

BY "MARK WAYNE."

MY WATCH.

I have a splendid gold watch, set with jewels, and having Elgin works. But the other day it stopped, and do what I could it would not run right again. All the winding in the world did not help.

I might have taken the watch to pieces; maybe the mainspring had slipped, or a cog was broken, or the works needed repairing. I once took a watch to pieces, when I was a boy, but when I went to put it together again, there were such a lot of little wheels that couldn't possibly go back into that case! Like all the king's horses and all the king's men, I couldn't put my watch together again.

A splendid carpenter lives across the street. Could he repair it with hammer and saw and plane? The cobbler down town, could he stitch it together with awl and thread? Or Farmer Boaz, shall he plant it and let it grow up to be a better watch?

I know what I shall do. The watchmaker lives just around the corner; he made my watch and he can set it right.

Boys and girls, your soul is a precious jewelled watch made to keep the right time. It should run too slow to do evil, but be swift to do good. If the dust of sin has clogged, or trial has broken your life, do not risk your soul by trying to set it right yourself, nor by trusting it to people who know no more about setting souls right than carpenters and cobblers and farmers would expect to know about repairing watches. Surely, if God has made your soul, will he not make it right when it has gone wrong? He is not far from any one of you; bring your soul to Him and let Him put you right for time and for eternity.

The Daily Altar

An Aid to Private Devotion and Family Worship

SUNDAY, MAY 7.

Theme for the Day—The World-wide Empire of Christ.

Scripture—He shall have dominion also from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him, and his enemies shall lick the dust. -Psa. 72: 8, 9.

Eternal Lord, from land to land
Shall echo Thine all-glorious name,
Till the kingdoms bow at Thy command,
And every lip thy praise proclaim.

Exalted high on every shore,
The banner of the cross unfurled,
Shall summon thousands to adore
The Saviour of a ransomed world.
—Anonymous.

Prayer—Our Father, Thou hast made plain to us Thine eternal purpose, that all the world shall know the Gospel of Jesus, and by it be brought to the new life. Today we join with Thy people in many places to promote by our offerings this great cause of world-wide evangelization. Save us from the sin of small and unbecoming gifts. Help us to give as we pray, as we love and honor Christ, and as we can with hearts unashamed lay our offerings in his precious hands. In this way we worthily join with all who pray, labor and contribute for the coming of the kingdom in all the world. Amen.

MONDAY, MAY 8.

Theme for the Day—Early Saints and Martyrs.

Scripture.—And they stoned Stephen, calling upon the Lord and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And when he had said this, he fell asleep. And Saul was consenting unto his death. And there arose on that day a great persecution against the church.—Acts 7: 59, 60; 8:1.

Saint, did I say? with your remembered faces,
Dear men and women, whom I sought and slew!
Ah, when we mingle in the heavenly places
How will I weep to Stephen and to you.
—F. W. H. Meyers ("St. Paul").

Prayer.—Father of lights, and God of infinite grace, we draw near to Thee to ask Thy forgiveness and Thy mercy. Thou who givest hope and power to them that trust Thee, grant us the faithfulness of Thy martyrs and the portion of Thy chosen. May we in the hour of trial be able to see Thy glory, and Jesus our Saviour standing at Thy right hand. Perfect Thy strength in our weakness, and may Thy gentleness make us great. Enable us to be followers of those who through faith and patience inherit the promises. And receive us to Thy glory, through the atoning love of Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

TUESDAY, MAY 9.

Theme for the Day.—The Word of God.

Scripture.—How sweet are thy words unto my taste, yea sweeter than honey to my mouth. Through thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way. —Psa. 119: 103, 104.

We search the world for truth; we cull
The good, the pure, the beautiful
From graven stone and written scroll,
From all old flower-fields of the soul;
And, weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden from our quest,
To find that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read.
—Whittier ("Miriam").

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, Thy Word is a lamp unto our feet and a light to our faith. It has come to us like a precious legacy from the past. We do not understand all of its wonderful words, but we discover in it ever deeper springs of wisdom and of life. Through the ages it discloses new truth to each generation. It endures, while men and institutions pass. May we study it that we may catch its spirit, and see how the men who have written down for us their messages and experiences upon its pages have spoken for God, and that through them God ever speaks to us. Most of all, may we see that the heart of the Book is Christ, the Light of the World. Amen.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10.

Theme for the Day.—The Far-off Divine Event.

Scripture.—He shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have abolished all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all his enemies under his feet.—I Cor. 15: 24, 25.

My own hope is, a sun will pierce
The thickest cloud earth ever stretched;
That, after Last, returns the First,
Though a wide compass round be fetched;
That what began best, can't end worst,
Nor what God blessed once, prove accurst.
—Browning ("Apparent Failure").

Prayer.—O God, our Father, we thank Thee that in the life and purpose of our Lord we discern Thy own great plan of the ages. Our hearts would grow faint and discouraged if we could not see the goal toward which we are striving. We cannot obscure from our eyes the present evil world, nor ignore its sin and sorrow. But we can look to the future, and mark the slow but steady coming of Thy kingdom, for whose triumph we ever pray. Comfort our souls, we beseech Thee, with this vision of the better time to be, and grant us a share in its blessedness.—Amen.

THURSDAY, MAY 11.

Theme for the Day.—Perversions of Truth.

Scripture.—Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil: that put darkness for light and light for darkness: that put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter.—Isa. 5:20.

O purblind race of miserable men!
How many among us at this very hour
Do forge a lifelong trouble for ourselves,
By taking true for false, or false for true;
Here, thro' the feeble twilight of this world
Groping—how many—until we pass and reach
That other, where we see as we are seen.
—Tennyson ("Geraint and Enid").

Prayer.—O God of our life, we would escape the dangers that lie about us in the world, and reach the safe and sheltered life of trust and love. Save us, we pray Thee, from vain and foolish thoughts, from dilusions, falsehoods, and self-deception. Knowing the power of untruth to ruin character, to blight happiness, and to bring discord into the world, may we arm ourselves against it, and search our hearts to banish it wherever found. And may we abide in Christ, who is the Truth. Amen.

FRIDAY, MAY 12.

Theme for the Day.—"The Wreck of Matter and the Crash of Worlds."

Scripture.—But the day of the Lord will come as a thief; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements dissolve with fervent heat, and the works therein shall be burned up.—II Peter 3:10.

The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind.
—Shakespeare ("The Tempest, 4:1").

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us that here we have no continuing city, but that we seek one which hath foundations, whose maker and builder is God. Help us to build on no foundation but Christ, that our house fall not in the day of testing. In the fires of trial may our work abide. Fortify all Thy servants against the sorrow of defeat, and the sense of failure. Bless our home and our household, the young and the old. Give to us, whether our years be few or many, the sense of permanence and confidence in Thee. And give us redemption through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

SATURDAY, MAY 13.

Theme for the Day.—Gaining the Heights.

Scripture.—To them that by patience in well doing seek for glory and honor and in corruption, eternal life.—Romans 2:7.

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.
—Longfellow ("The Ladder of St. Augustine").

Prayer.—Refuge and strength of our souls, we offer Thee our daily adoration. Thou dost beset us behind and before with Thy blessings. Thou dost crown our lives with Thy mercies, so that we have no speech with which to thank Thee. But we know that our best expression of gratitude is a cheerful heart and a ready purpose to bring our lives into likeness to Thine. We thank Thee that salvation does not depend on works of merit, but on Thy pitying grace. Yet help us to be of some service in this our day of life, before we fall asleep. And then receive us to the nobler labors of a world without end. Amen.

Disciples in Scotland

(Continued from page 10.)

of them—the Shawlands and Coplaw churches—having very attractive and commodious chapels of their own, while the others meet in rented halls. The same conditions obtain among these as in the Edinburgh churches, with this exception that the two mentioned above are located in superior residence districts. The Coplaw church is numerically the strongest church in Scotland, having a membership of 260, while the Shawlands has 196. Mr. J. C. Drummond, a member of the Glasgow City Council, is an active member and elder of the Coplaw church; and Mr. H. L. Tickle, son of G. Y. Tickle, of Liverpool, one of the leaders of the early days and a member of the committee that welcomed Alexander Campbell on his arrival in England in 1847, is a leading member of the Shawlands church.

Edinburgh, Scotland.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XX. Isaiah and Ahaz

May 14. Text for Special Study, Isa. 7.

QUESTIONS.

1. Explain the circumstances of Jotham's joint and individual reign.
2. What was the verdict of the Biblical writers upon the reign of Jotham.
3. Are there any indications of Isaiah's influence in the reign of Jotham.
4. How did Ahaz differ from his father?
5. Is it probable that his conduct was influenced by the heathen party at the court?
6. What features of the heathen religion did Ahaz restore?
7. What is the general outline of the sermon on the "Exalted Mountain?"
8. What contrasts did it point out between the ideal and the reality in Judah?
9. What elements of foreign influence does it specify?
10. On what is destruction soon to fall?
11. What power did Isaiah have in mind as the instrument of these troubles?
12. In what regard did Isaiah continue and emphasize the work of former prophets?
13. What specific sins of the nation are mentioned and denounced in the sermon on "The Vineyard?"
14. What political crisis occurred in 734 B. C.?
15. What was Isaiah's view regarding a safe policy all this time?
16. What was the conduct of Ahaz?
17. How did Isaiah try to change the king's purpose?
18. What prediction did Isaiah make?
19. What was the value of Isaiah's reference to the birth of the child?
20. Does this refer to the birth of Jesus?

1. AHAZ OF JUDAH.

It will be remembered that Isaiah's call to the prophetic task came in the year that King Uzziah, or Azariah, died (739 B. C.). For several years Jotham, the prince and heir to the throne, had exercised the powers of the sovereign, because of Uzziah's leprosy. The Biblical statement that Jotham reigned sixteen years must cover the entire period of his own rule and his joint sovereignty with his father.

Of his reign little is said, but that little is favorable (2 Kings 15: 32-38). To be sure he did not remove the local sanctuaries, where the worship of Jehovah was mingled with heathen rites. But no king of Judah had yet felt it his duty to take so drastic a step. Not till the Deuteronomic reformation in the reign of Josiah, a century later, was such a program of purification carried out with any thoroughness. Jotham built the upper gate of the temple, and otherwise strengthened his capital. In his reign also began the efforts of the two northern kings, Pekah of Samaria, and Rezin of Damascus, to form a triple alliance against the growing power of Assyria. The fact that Jotham was unwilling to enter this confederacy was no doubt due in large measure to the influence of Isaiah, though of the prophet's active work in this period we have no record.

After a short reign as sole king, Jotham died leaving the throne to his son Ahaz. The Biblical narrative stated that this prince was twenty years old when he came to the throne and that he reigned sixteen years. However, the latter statement is probably somewhat general, as are many of the chronological data of the Old Testament.

Ahaz was a man of very different type. It maybe that the heathen leaders at the court had impressed the mind of the prince with their views. It was often the case that the opposition party shrewdly planned to make friends with the heir to the throne, and thus prepare the way for their subsequent return to power. At any rate Ahaz almost from the first displayed the spirit of a heathen reactionary. He revived the rites of Baalism, restored the high places to their full significance as local shrine, surrounded the temple itself with the images and altars of the obscene nature worship, and even introduced the terrible Phœnician custom of human sacrifice, in which he shared by offering up his own son as a fiery sacrifice. The reaction to heathenism thus seemed complete, and even Isaiah and his friends were powerless to stay the tide of idolatry and immorality which swept over the land. (2 Kings 16: 1-4).

2. ISAIAH'S WORDS OF REBUKE.

It is impossible to date the different utterances of the prophet with precision, but it seems highly probable that we have at least two of his most notable sermons from this period. The first is the one contained in chapters two to four. It takes as a text an oracle which is also employed by Micah (4: 1-3), and which may therefore have been first uttered by some earlier prophet. In it the ideal condition of Jerusalem is pictured, as the city which shall be exalted above all others, and to which the nations shall come for tidings of the true God. As a result of its world-wide influence, the races of mankind shall exchange the arts and implements of war for those of peace, and the glorious era of happiness shall arrive.

In contrast with this ideal the prophet now turns to the reality (2:5). What he sees about him is very different. The land is full of the signs of that heathenism which is most to be feared. Foreign customs prevail. Dependence is placed upon military strength rather than righteousness. From pleading and warning Isaiah turns to threats. He knew too well how rapidly the Assyrian power was growing in the East not to be certain that soon or late its heavy hand would fall on Judah. Already its western conquests were disturbing the politics of the Mediterranean coast-lands. At the close of Uzziah's reign, the very moment at which Isaiah began his preaching, the strong cities of Hamath and Arpad on the northern and eastern frontier of Syria had fallen into the grasping hands of the Assyrian king. What would be the next step? Isaiah felt free to use this menace with all his power, for he was certain of its import and he wished to awaken Judah to a sense of her peril.

But he knew that the evils of luxury, idolatry and forgetfulness of God were greater than any chastisement at Assyrian hands could be. It was the moral decay of the nation that he dreaded. He would even welcome political disaster if the vitality of the national faith could be preserved. In this he stood heart and soul with all the great prophets who had gone before him. His concern was not for material strength, but for religious conviction and obediance.

Se he warned the people that as the result of the present waywardness and disregard of the right, a time of disaster was at hand. Nature and the objects of national pride should suffer (2: 12-21). These men, the leaders who were weak and inefficient, should be cut off, so that no one would consent to take the tottering ruin of the state in charge (2: 22; 3: 15). And even the womanhood of the nation should be brought low in sorrow and humiliation because of pride and selfishness (3: 16; 4: 1). No finer picture of manners and morals could be desired than Isaiah has given in these graphic sections. But the ruin will not be complete. A remnant, purged by suffering, shall survive, and the future shall be glorious.

Similar is the tone of the "Sermon of the Vineyard" (5:1-25; 9:8-10:4; 5:26-30), of which a portion has been misplaced in the compilation of the book, as may be seen by reading it as indicated in the references. Here again the sins of the nation are drawn up as in an indictment and the disasters already suffered, which should have served as warnings, are followed by the catastrophe which is sure to come.

3. THE CRISIS OF 734 A. D.

But it is Isaiah's part in the great political emergency of the reign of Ahaz that is of chief interest. Already in the reign of his father Jotham, steps had been taken by Pekah of Israel and Rezin of Syria to induce Judah to join with them in a compact against their dreaded and threatening foe, Assyria.

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

This step was a wise one, and if left to his own political sagacity Jotham might well have joined his northern friends in such an alliance.

But Isaiah saw at once the significance of the crisis. It was impossible that these little states should be able to keep the eastern conqueror long at bay. History had proved that when the Euphrates Valley poured its legions out upon the westlands, there was little use in resisting. The best policy was submission. If Judah went into the triple alliance she would be preparing the way for her own undoing. It would only be a question of time, when all three of these little kingdoms would fall into the hands of the great king.

On the other hand, if Judah kept herself out of all entanglement, reserving alike her favors and her animosities, she might escape. There was little to tempt the conqueror into the rough and meager tracts of the south. Unless provoked by opposition, he might leave her unmolested. This was the counsel of the prophet to Jotham, and afterward to Ahaz. The former seems to have acted with wisdom in adopting it.

But when Ahaz saw the preparations made by Pekah and Rezin to compel him to come into the alliance, he was terrified. In the menace of a danger close at hand he forgot alike the greater foe at a distance and the advice of the prophet. He prepared for war with his two neighbors and he undertook what he must have regarded as a shrewd bit of diplomacy in dealing with the entire situation. He fortified Jerusalem, and sent a costly present to Tiglath-pilesar, the king of Assyria, asking him to come to assist him in facing his northern foes. This conduct, from the standpoint of any sound judgment, was an act of the greatest folly.

4. ISAIAH'S POLITICAL PROGRAM.

It was the feeling of the prophets that the nation was always safest when least concerned with the affairs of its neighbors. Israel had never been strong enough to resist the seductive influences of foreign customs, either social or religious. In the present instance these general considerations were reinforced by the particular circumstances, which increased the peril. Isaiah understood only too well the danger which Ahaz faced when, terrified that the two kings of Israel and Syria had leagued themselves against him, he committed a blunder worse than would have been an alliance with them, by putting himself into the power of the Assyrian.

For Isaiah knew that when Tiglath-pilesar had overthrown Syria and Israel, the very fact that Judah, which lay just beyond to the south, had been able to send him a rich bribe to assist her against her foes, would convince him that it was worth while to plunder this land as well. And no considerations of league or political friendship would stop him for a moment. His one object was the spoiling of the nations. And Judah, having attracted his notice by her foolish conduct, must now pay the penalty.

For the northern kings the prophet had only the feeling of indifference. Within his strong walls Ahaz might well have defied all that they could do. But with inexcusable errancy of judgment he had taken the wrong course. The only safe policy, as Isaiah and the earlier prophets had affirmed, was one of non-interference. Isaiah maintained this view until the action of Ahaz in seeking the help of Assyria compelled him to face a new situation—the Assyrian alliance. Henceforth he remained faithful to the new policy, mistaken as he deemed it, and tried to save his sovereigns from the error of revolt.

5. THE MESSAGE OF THE HOUR. (Chapter 7.)

Meantime, the scene of the present study is laid at the moment when the forces of Pekah and Rezin began to make serious inroads upon the realm of Ahaz. The king of Syria moved southward with his forces to strike the power of Judah through her territories on the Gulf of Elath, south of the Dead Sea, while Pekah invaded Judah from the north.

Ahaz was thoroughly terrified. He was unable to see what appeared so clear to Isaiah, that they could do no serious harm. He made urgent efforts to fortify the city and especially to divert its water supply from outside the walls to some point within, where it could be used in a seige, and be kept from aiding the enemy. One morning when the king was busy at the upper pool, from which in later days his son Hezekiah constructed the water tunnel through the rock under the city, Isaiah came out to speak with him, taking with him his son, Sheas-Jashub, whose very name was significant of God's deliverance in days to come.

Isaiah begged the king not to be troubled about his enemies. What were they more than expiring firebrands? They could not harm him now, if he would but trust in God and in his strong walls. And in a few years at most, less than the seventy years that was the usual measure of extended time, they would both be swept away by the advance of Assyria.

The king listened, but made no response. His conduct was suspicious. Did he have another plan which he was concealing from the prophet? After the interview was over Isaiah was more than ever suspicious. In fact Ahaz had already sent his present to Tiglath-pilesar with a request for help. The prophet was too deeply moved by his apprehension of just such a scheme to let the warning rest with the word he had spoken. Later on he sought Ahaz again and begged him to let him prove the truth of what he said by a sign. In the stress of the moment and with such danger involved in a mistake, the prophet felt that he could successfully invoke the power of God in any wonder that would convince the wavering monarch.

But Ahaz, already committed to his course, declined any such test, saying he did not wish to put the Lord to trial. Then Isaiah's anger broke out in full force. He charged the king with trifling with the divine warnings and then he uttered one of the most startling of his predictions. A young woman would conceive and bear a son, in times which allowed of but meagre fare. By the time that such a child should reach the age of discernment, the two kings, of whose destruction one prediction had already been made, would be forever removed from power. In fact, said the prophet, times would come, the equal of which in disaster had not been known since the ten tribes turned away from the house of David. Assyria was certain to bring ruin to Judah.

Then Isaiah, in four brief pictures, sketches the ruin that is to come. It will be like a bar-keeper calling his swarms, only Jehovah will call the swarms for chastisement. It will be like the shaving of the hair and beard, in token of disgrace. It will be a time when the land will have only the fewest of flocks and herds and its choicest vineyards will be waste land.

Thus in figurative words, which referred to the shortness of the time, Isaiah made his royal hearer comprehend something of that folly which was now beyond repair. Of course the reference to the young woman who should have a son, whose youthful years should see the fulfilment of all these predictions, is not to be understood as a personal reference to a particular woman, much less to a virgin birth. The word does not bear such a meaning. Rather the prophet affirms that within a time it would take for a young woman to have a son, who should grow to years of comprehension, the whole drama would be played. It is a time measure, signifying some six to ten years. Thus more definite and more imminent have the predictions of approaching disaster become.

Nor must the use of this passage in the Gospel of Matthew in attestation of the Virgin birth of Jesus mislead any reader regarding the real meaning of the passage. The use of Old Testament passages as bearing on the life of Jesus is often without the slightest reference to their original meaning, and by a principle who proved its propriety and value in the work of the evangelists.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic May 14—The Universal Duty of Making Pledges. Ps. 61:5-8.

(Led by the Lookout Committee.)

From the beginning many good and sincere and devout people have objected to the pledge feature of the Christian Endeavor movement. It is only fair to say that the objection was not altogether groundless. Certainly the original pledge was too Puritanical. To many it seemed unreasonably exacting. It has always been perfectly plain that in the exigencies of modern life the carrying out of some features were well nigh impossible. But we must not forget that a large part of that objection arises from our too legalistic and literal interpretation which we put upon the pledge. If it is read with a discernment of the spirit in which it was conceived and written, there can be little real objection. Moreover if it is signed and kept in spirit, it is a powerful aid and stimulus to active and vital Christian piety. And if we will read some of the modified forms of the Christian Endeavor pledge, it becomes perfectly evident that there can be no valid objection. Perhaps the chief reason for people not wanting to sign the pledge is one that is rarely expressed, though it is the father of nearly of all those objections which are expressed. It is that the individual does not wish to definitely and specifically commit himself to such a high standard of Christian activity and life. This is rarely expressed because most people are ashamed to admit it for the simple reason that it is indefensible. The fact is when one becomes a Christian he in reality by that very act commits himself to all the things contained in the pledge and much more. To reject the pledge he is virtually saying, "I have committed my life to the Christian ideal, but I do not want the inconvenience of living accordingly."

We ought to make pledges because they specify and make definite the duties we ought to perform. The danger is that we in a general way commit ourselves to the Christian ideal and then fail to apply the principles in any given situation. The result is our actual lives are full of contradictions to the Christian ideal which we say we stand for. It is not surprising then that the world says that the church is full of hypocrites. But if we, in the name and fear of God, attach our names to a pledge of habitual private devotions, and attendance upon the Sunday and midweek hours of worship, we feel in a more direct way that we have been untrue to God, that we have broken our pledge to Him, if we fail to do these things. This has kept alive the spirit of loyalty and faithfulness of thousands who otherwise would have been carried away by the importunities of friends and associates who themselves had no interest in things religious. Yes, it has given added influence to the personality of young Christians who from their sense of loyalty have matched their influence with those who had no religious interest and prevailed in their attendance upon public worship instead spending the time in idle loitering if not in questionable or vicious amusement. We ought, therefore, to make pledges for our own sake. They will help some more than others, but they are a profound benefit to all.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

A. C. Foster, of Decatur, is preaching every second Sunday in Pana.

W. A. Taylor is pastor at Golden where an offering of fifty dollars was received for the benevolent association on Easter Sunday.

H. L. Maltman spoke to the Knights Templar of Rushville on Easter Sunday. They attended his church service in a body.

The church edifice at Sandoval is being improved with repairs and otherwise. E. U. Smith is the pastor.

The church at Sidell where P. F. York preaches received an offering of twenty-three dollars for benevolence on Easter Sunday.

Johnston City is having a successful revival meeting conducted by George P. Bramel. At last report there were nine additions.

The benevolence offering at Pekin on Easter Sunday was more than forty dollars. The pastor, O. C. Bolman, and congregation are happy over the result.

Waverly congregation, where Guy B. Williamson ministers, made an offering from its Sunday-school, for benevolence, of more than eleven dollars.

Allen Wilson and Jack Lewis are in a meeting at Monmouth with D. E. Hughes, with nearly one hundred additions at the last report.

W. T. McConnell is pastor at Arcola where an offering for the benevolent association was received Easter Sunday evening, amounting to twenty-five dollars.

Jacksonville Church where R. F. Thrapp is pastor had an offering on Easter Sunday of $215.00 for the Benevolent Society. The Sunday-school gave $132.77, the largest offering from any school in the state.

Ivan W. Agee is doing a successful work at Greenville where he has been located for some time. The Sunday-school is the best in the history of the church, numbering almost two hundred and fifty on Easter Sunday.

Centralia Church reports a Sunday-school attendance of nearly nine hundred on Easter Sunday, with an offering of more than fifty-two dollars. This school is the largest in the state. The pastor is J. F. Rosborough.

Rufus A. Finnell is in a meeting with many additions at Christopher. At last report there had been seventy-nine additions in seven days, sixty-three of whom were by confession and sixty of these adults.

The C. R. L. Vawter and Marty meeting at Streator has resulted in seventy-three additions in less than two weeks' time, seventy of whom were adults. The whole congregation is stirred, the Sunday-school being largely increased in attendance.

A cash offering of nineteen dollars was made for the benevolent association by Latham Church, where C. S. Weaver preaches. In addition to this there was also sent a box of provisions to the Orphanage Home and seventy dozen fresh eggs.

R. Sheeler Campbell is prospering in his new work in Girard. On Easter Sunday there were large congregations and a large Sunday-school. Sixty dollars was raised for the benevolent society.

The Sunday-school at Stanford made an offering Easter Sunday of $65.25 for the benevolent association, in addition to sending one hundred and twenty dozen eggs to the St. Louis Orphanage. The work of Norman H. Robertson is prospering.

Litchfield Church had nearly eight hundred in the Sunday-school Easter Sunday. The congregation recently listened to a home missionary address by Nelson G. Trimble of Gary, Indiana, which was highly commended by the members and the pastor, Charles W. Ross.

W. E. Adams of First Church, Danville, Ill., is preaching a series of sermons that is bringing a responsive interest from his congregation. The following have been the subjects: The Progressing Glory of Man; The Origin and Nature of Man; The Three Births.

Shelbyville Church has made an offering this year of one hundred fifty dollars to the educational association of Eureka College. Miss Miner, representing the college, recently spoke there and received high praise for her address. R. H. Robertson, the pastor, is now living in a modern seven-room parsonage, recently purchased by the congregation.

Robert H. Newton, minister of Atlanta Church is engaging with the men of the Brotherhood Bible Class in a week of prayer and counsel for men and boys. Meetings are being held each evening in the library of the church, which are open to all men and boys over ten years of age. The movement is inspired by "The Men and Religion Forward Movement."

Keensburg Church made an offering of six dollars to the benevolent association, in addition to twenty-five dollars a year, which is being paid by five members of the congregation. The pastor, J. E. Moyer, preached at Antioch Easter Sunday afternoon and raised eleven dollars for benevolence in addition to twenty dollars which four members of this congregation pay annually.

The best offering for benevolence ever made by Marion Church was made on Easter Sunday and amounted to eighty-five dollars. There was also contributed, one hundred twenty dozen eggs for the St. Louis Orphanage. The eggs were received as the result of an appeal made in the public schools for contribution from the children. John I. Gunn has been pastor here for only a few months.

Literberry Church, of which C. G. Cantrell is minister, gave more than one hundred dollars on Easter Sunday for the benevolent work. This offering was the second largest in the state, and was made partially as a memorial to Mr. Liter, who for many years had been a faithful member of the church, and whose death occurred this year. It is the intention to have a room furnished in the orphanage at St. Louis in memory of the faith and service of this good man.

C. H. Hands, of Flanagan, completed a series of six Lenten sermons on three successive Sundays, including Easter Sunday, as follows: "Gethsemane," "Master, Is it I?" "Self vs. Christ." "Pilate Washing His Hands in Innocency," "The Reflective Power Of the Resurrection Life," "A Cluster of Easter Lilies." The latter sermon was for children, and was listened to by a large multitude of them. A large offering for the benevolent society was received.

First Church, Springfield, and a number of other congregations of the city celebrated the Second Anniversary of the Billy Sunday revival recently. A special service was held on Sunday evening at which testimonies and reminiscences were given. Over 5,000 persons were reported as converted in the revival and more than 2,500 united with the churches of the city. Those who attended the anniversary meetings in the churches were not impressed with the abiding character of either the numerical results or the enthusiasm which the revival had produced.

First Church, Springfield, will open bids from contractors for the new church edifice May 1st, and it is anticipated that work on excavation will be begun shortly thereafter. It was hoped that the foundation would be laid last fall, but the original plans demanded modifying, so that considerable delay was occasioned. The congregation has been meeting in the Masonic Temple for nearly a year, and will probably not be able to get into the new edifice for another twelve months or more. The church celebrated April 23, in an informal way, the second anniversary of the reception of the Sunday revival converts. Brief responses were received from several of those present. On Easter Sunday graduating exercises were held in the Sunday-school for the promotion of seven children from the cradle roll to the primary department. F. W. Burnham, the pastor, attended the conference in New York of the commission of the Disciples' Council of Christian Union with the Unity Foundation of the Episcopalian Church, April 25 and 26.

News Editorials

Not Sour Grapes But Ministerial Conscience.

A heartening message is the following received from J. H. Gilliland. After briefly recounting the incidents in his winter vacation, spent with his family in Florida, during which time he preached at Jacksonville, Daytona and Eustis, he relates his purpose relating to future work. His own words convey this in the best terms:

"I am now ready for special services or supply work during the summer. I shall begin meetings the first of September. I do not care to hold meetings with the prime purpose of making additions to the church. Others are doing this and succeeding far better than I can. I feel there are other phases of our great evangelistic movement which need emphasis at this time. Some men should sacrifice the ambition for numbers to these interests. I should like, if possible, to make a contribution of this kind. I shall be glad to correspond with pastors or churches desiring work of this character. My entire ministry has been spent in Illinois, it would please me to render this service to Illinois churches. However, I shall give due consideration to calls coming from other states."

Mr. Gilliland holds a place as one of the most successful pastors of the brotherhood. As a pastor-evangelist, also, there are few whose record surpasses his. During his nearly twenty-five years' ministry in Bloomington, where two new churches were established under his leadership, there were frequent additions at regular services, and several revival meetings with accessions reaching in some instances beyond three hundred. It cannot be assumed, therefore, that there are sour grapes in his announcement. He has the gift and message for evangelism which wins numbers. It is a matter of conscience. The need of cultivation is apparent. We are a great people in numbers. The discipline which men equipped like J. H. Gilliland can give is of vital importance. Our cause will be richer and more powerful from the unpraised and often unappreciated work to be done by such men. This type of work will not elicit so many telegrams of commendation, but it must tell mightily in the reckoning of years to come. Mr. Gilliland's address is Bloomington.

Taking Christian Unity Talk in Earnest.

A. L. Cole, pastor at Mt. Sterling writes: "We have talked Christian union in this little city until we are actually believing one-another is in earnest." There are four protestant churches in the town with 2,000 inhabitants. Mr. Cole says it would be impossible to get up a denominational "fight" amongst the Christians of these churches because there is genuine oneness of spirit. He gives credit for this fine fraternal feeling to the pastors of all the churches during many years who have been singularly high-minded Christian men. Mr. Cole has been pastor of the Christian church nearly two years. He sends us the manuscript of an excellent address on Unity prepared by the Presbyterian pastor at Mt. Sterling, Rev. E. Hubert Broyles, of the broad spirit of which this concluding paragraph will afford a taste:

The Czar of Russia was once showing a visitor about the palace grounds. The visitor observed a guard standing by a small grass plot and asked why he was placed there. The Czar sent for the officers of the day, but no information could be secured from him; likewise was the general of the army ignorant of the reason. After a great deal of trouble it was found that eighty years before Catherine II looked out of the window and saw the first spring flower in this little grassy spot and ordered a sentinel placed there to keep it from being trodden down. No one thought to recall the order and for eighty years sentinels had been standing guard. It may be that these old divisions once had a reason; but is it not time that we cease to observe the old divisions which served whatever purpose they may have had in the remote years of long ago. Let us call in our sentinels; let us forget the things which divided, and let us prayerfully emphasize the unity of faith, and the oneness of the body of Christ which is not churches, but the church.

I am a thorough Presbyterian: not because my parents were, either; for I was not born to that faith. I thoughtfully chose the Presbyterian church because it stood for those doctrines, and that polity, which made the strongest appeal to my heart. Yet I am willing to abandon Presbyterian separateness and unite with the followers of Christ in making the organized church a real expression of the Master's ideal of the visible manifestation of His Kingdom on earth.

Champaign's New House Dedicated.

The new church house of University Place congregation, Champaign-Urbana, was dedicated April 23. Charles R. Scoville was in charge of the exercises and led in the raising of $28,000. There were forty-five additions to the congregation on dedication day.

The total cost of rebuilding was $35,000. The value of the present entire plant is $80,000. It is complete in its appointments for public worship, Sunday-school and the social and institutional needs.

There are two large auditoriums, situated side by side, and easily made one splendid room by the use of an electrically operated disappearing wall. The building then has a total auditorium capacity of about 2,200.

Beautiful New House of Worship at Champaign.

In addition to the auditorium equipment there are some thirty apartments for class work, each one fully equipped with black boards, etc., and each with electrical connection with the superintendent's office. Most of them are on the main and balcony floors and command a fine view of the speakers platform.

The new building is 96 feet wide and 110 feet long. It has four floors and its appointments include gymnasium provision for the smaller children on the basmeent floor, and for those of high school age on the fourth floor. The baptistry is of white Italian marble with beautiful dome and colonade effect and lined with white tile.

The Church of Christ in the University cities of Champaign and Urbana is a little more than twenty-five years of age. Eight years ago, about the time of the beginning of the present pastorate, the first University Place building was completed and two hundred members moved from their early home on White street to what seemed a veritable palace.

The work grew rapidly. During the interval J. H. Gilliland, John W. Marshall, Brooks Brothers, Chas. Bloom and the pastor, Stephen E. Fisher, have each lead in meetings. More than fifteen hundred have been added to the congregation in that time and the present membership is almost a thousand. The enlarging life of the church and the tremendous needs of the local and student community made better facilities imperative and one year ago rebuilding began and the capacity of the former building has been almost trebled.

Miss Eva Lemert, of Kansas City, is with the church, and as the congregation occupies the new building, she will lead in a ten weeks' Bible-school campaign. She will be assisted for one week by Wendel Coler, of the University of Michigan.

In the student work, which is necessarily a very large factor in the life and plans of the congregation, ample provision has been made in the building for the housing of such special Bible and religious and educational work as it is hoped may be inaugurated in the near future. The pastor has two student assistants, Carl Colvin and Mildred Seyster, juniors in the university, whose service is provided by the Illinois Christian Missionary Society, and who are doing a most effective work among the young people who go to the university from our church homes of Illinois.

The church has a well appointed business office, adjacent to the pastor's study and employs a competent stenographer, who cares for the business routine of the work, and enables the pastor to keep in close touch with all departments and workers, and relieves him of endless detail, that he may have time for study and pastoral duties in addition to administrative work.

The new era being inaugurated by the Disciples, at the Illinois State University, is of vast importance to the cause of Christ throughout the state and the middle west.

The congregation is not a rich one, it is comprised largely of salaried and working people. They have great faith in the future of the work in this important center. They invite all friends to attend the dedicatory service. The church has many friends among former students, and among the parents of Illinois, who are vitally interested in Christian education.

Eureka College

Several years ago a history of Eureka College was published by the Alumni Association. An unusually large edition was brought out, and we have about 400 copies on hand. It does not tell the story of recent years, of course: but it contains much valuable information that the friends of the college ought to know. We have decided to give these to friends of the college, who have enough interest in the matter to call for them and to pay the postage. The postage will be 13 cents. A movement is being inaugurated to write the history of the college in briefer manner, bringing it up to date. But there will be objections to this so long as we have so many volumes of the old history on hand. We are, therefore, very anxious to have these disposed of, and are perfectly willing to lose the money we have invested in them, provided the friends of the college will meet the necessary postage. Write me at once and I will see that you get a copy of the history of Eureka College.

Eureka College was represented at the recent Congress of Disciples held in Springfield, Ill. D. H. Shields, pastor of the Eureka Church, delivered one of the principal addresses. Prof. Silas Jones, of the department of Philosophy and Psychology, was in attendance, and the writer was present to absorb a little of the wisdom of the occasion. The congress did the cause in Illinois much good. The addresses were of a high order, and sanity prevailed throughout the entire congress. The attendance from Illinois was very good, due, I presume, to the fact that the congress was held in this state. The attendance from other states was very poor.

It does one good to receive a letter like this: "I have your note, and in reply will say that I am heartily in sympathy with Eureka College and sincerely hope you may achieve your ambition in raising $125,000 endowment. I enclose as it were my mite. While I am not in a position to do more and justify myself, I must say that my stay of one year in Eureka gave me a very favorable impression of the college and its sphere of usefulness is much to be prized." This letter is from a man, who was here with his family for one year and lived across the street from the college during that time. He has a son, who is a member of the graduating class of this year. We appreciate an opinion of this kind from a man who knows the real purpose of Eureka College.

President A. C. Gray and Prof. S. G. Harrod, of the department of Greek and Latin, attended the Federation of Colleges at Kankakee, Illinois, Monday and Tuesday, April 24-25. Eureka College is always represented at functions of this character. We feel that we have a double mission to perform: one to the cause of education in general, and the other to our own people.

In closing up our endowment campaign we are trying a little experiment. We are asking 200 people to see five persons each during the month of May in the interest of our proposition. Already quite a number have promised to do this service and are at work on the proposition. They will, of course, visit people largely who have been seen. This will enable us to reach possibly 1,000 people during the last days of the campaign, that we might not be able to see otherwise. I am aware of the fact that most of our preachers are too busy to take up with special interests of this kind; but is is very gratifying to receive the encouragement that they expect to help us out at this time. "The Committee of 200" will, without a doubt, justify its appointment.

During the three years we have been working for the endowment of Eureka Collge we have talked with a great many men and women who have not given. Many of these are interested in the college, but for one reason and another have not been willing to make contributions. That we might give everybody an opportunity to help, even though the amount was not as large as it should be, about three weeks ago we began a special feature of the campaign, to get 100 people to give $100 each on the proposition. We will get many pledges less than this, and we will get quite a number considerably larger. If we can get 100 people at $100 each, I feel sure the balance can be taken care of without much trouble. During the past few days we have secured 16 of the 100, and have promise of quite a number more.

Mrs. R. E. Hieronymus, wife of our former president, Mrs. A. T. Ross, matron of Lida's Wood and Misses Idella Wilson and Bertha Lyon, two of the girls of Eureka College, attended the National Y. W. C. A. Convention in Indianapolis recently. They brought back encouraging reports and great enthusiasm for the cause. They reported a large convention.

President A. C. Gray delivered his stereopticon lecture in Eureka Sunday evening, April 23, on "How We Got Our Bible." Pres. Gray has made a careful study of the history of the English Bible, and by means of a fine collection of slides, is able to tell this story in an attractive and instructive manner. He has delivered the lecture in several places in Illinois and has several invitations for this spring. He gets out as much as he can in view of his many duties in the colleges. H. H. PETERS.

Chicago

C. C. Bunker reports frequent additions and large crowds at the Irving Park Church.

The West End Church recently paid $150 on the church extension loan. Two additions here recently.

C. A. Pearce, of West Pullman, spoke Apr. 30, at a union service held in the Congregational church.

E. S. Ames, C. C. Morrison and W. D. Enders, reported the Springfield congress at the last regular ministers' meeting.

J. D. Futcher reports progress at Ashland Ave. Frequent additions; strong adult class of over sixty.

George W. Brown of Charleston, Ill., preached last Sunday for the Austin Church, Chicago.

A note from Dr. Errett Gates says that he will leave Marburg, Germany, May 10, and sail from Rotterdam for home May 20.

The Ministerial Association on Monday, May 1, met with I. N. McCash, at the Memorial Church. The city work was discussed.

Geo. H. Brown, of Charleston, Ill., preached Sunday for the Austin Church. Mr. Brown has been called to the Austin Church but will not begin his work until the fall.

A social dinner for the members of the business men's and ministerial association is being planned for May 15. E. M. Bowman and C. G. Kindred are the program committee.

W. B. Clemmer of Rockford exchanged pulpits with O. F. Jordan of Evanston, Sunday, April 23. Mr. Jordan reports, "the greatest Easter in our history" at Evanston with congregations equal to the dedication day attendance and splendid offerings for home and benevolent work.

C. C. Morrison, of the Christian Century, spoke Sunday, April 23, at Tolleston, where the building was erected in less than a day. However, there is nothing spectacular about the work being done there. There seems to be a steady normal growth, which in a few years should result in a strong church.

The Jackson Blvd. Church is now in possession of the property just east of them. An eight room frame building and lot has been purchased. This will be used for young peoples social work. Sunday-school classes will be held there on Sunday. This month there have been thirty additions to the church at the regular services.

Representatives from the C. C. M. S., the Business Men's Association and the ministers have recommended to the city brotherhood the raising of $2,000 more for city work than was raised last year. The amount is necessary and used under the direction of our city society, will strengthen materially our city work.

Book Award for Best News Item or List of Items

In order to raise the quality of our news contributions and increase their quantity—The Christian Century proposes to give each week until further notice, a book worth from $1 to $2.50 for the best-told news item or list sent in. Copy must reach the office not later than Friday morning, and is to be furnished exclusively to The Christian Century. The points on which the award will be made are: (1) The importance of the subject matter (2) the interpretation of the subject matter, and (3) the interesting style in which it is reported. The length of the article will not count. It may run from 100 to 600 words. The writer will take the editorial point of view unless his name is to appear as the author. The award will be announced in each issue of the paper for the preceding issue. The item will be designated and at least three books given from which choice may be made, but the name of the author will not be published. Illinois reporters will send their news to the Springfield office. All others should be sent to the main office.

Church Life

—Heartening reports from the Easter offering are being received by the Benevolent Society and the Young People's department of the C. W. B. M.

—The writer of item concerning the Pueblo, Colo. Church, on page 21 of last week's issue is awarded the prize for best news item. He will please accept this statement as due notification and indicate at once by postal card which of the following books he prefers:

1. New Testament Theology, by Henry C. Sheldon. Macmillan. $1.50 net.
2. The Truth of Christianity, by W. H. Turton. Putman. $1.25 net.
3. Christian Unity in Effort, by Frank J. Firth, Lippincott, $1.50 net.
4. Americans All, by John Merritte Driver, Forbes & Co., $1.50.

—It is singular circumstance that the Disciples' Congress, of which The Christian Century gave a two page report last week, is not reported either in The Christian Standard or The Christian-Evangelist. The latter paper has an editorial word of appreciation for Doctors Moore and Lindley, the guest-speakers, but no mention of the Disciple participants. Which testifies again to the superiority of The Christian Century's news service, of course: but does it signify anything beyond that?

There were twelve additions at the Easter service at Lenox Avenue Church, New York.

D. W. Moore is leading an evangelistic meeting with his congregation at Carthage, Mo., assisted by V. E. Ridenour.

H. M. Hall, pastor at Athens, Ohio, reports an attendance of 618 on April 16, with a collection of $53.63.

Central Church, Dayton, Ohio, where John P. Sala ministers, has become a living link in the foreign work.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new edifice being erected by Central Church, Portland, Ore.

M. L. Buckley of Collinwood, Ohio, has accepted a call to Fifth Avenue Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., to take the place of Homer E. Sala, who recently resigned.

A union has been effected between the congregations of First and Central Churches, Marion, Ohio. L. I. Mercer represented the state board at the meeting.

Easter was a notable day at Jefferson Street Church, Buffalo, N. Y., with seventeen additions and over five hundred in the Sunday-school.

Since April 1, ten persons have been added to the church at Salina, Kan. The pastor, Ben L. Smith, has received a call for his third year with this congregation.

Jesse M. Bader has been called to the pastorate of First Church, Atchison, Kan. This church has a membership of 800 and during the next year a $25,000 structure will be built.

Everett Hollingworth, for three years pastor at Fitzgerald, Ga., has resigned. He will be available for a new work after June 28. Mr. Hollingworth will make an effective minister for any church that secures him.

First Church, Marion, Ind., is prospering greatly. There have been 212 additions to its membership since October 1, 38 the past two Sundays. J. P. Myers, the pastor, believes the growth is normal and substantial.

V. E. Ridenour recently assisted in meetings at Bristol and Portsmouth, Va., the latter resulting in 146 additions. Mr. Ridenour is now in a meeting at Carthage, Mo., with D. W. Moore.

Work will soon begin on the new church at Washington, Ind., to replace the one destroyed by fire several months ago. A joint meeting of the men's clubs, of ten churches of Des Moines, Ia., will be held in Central Church, May 12. President Bell of Drake University will be one of the speakers.

H. Gordon Bennett has closed a successful meeting at Binger, Okla., with twenty added. This field has been without a minister for a year, but the congregation will now call one for full time. Under the leadership of Mr. Bennett, the Sunday-school and other departments of the church were reorganized.

The church at Waldron, Ark., is taking on new life, many of those who have gone to this locality to secure homes being added to the congregation. At a recent evangelistic meeting, about thirty were added. This congregation will co-operate with Heavener and employ a pastor.

The work at Bowling Green, Ohio, starts out auspiciously under the leadership of Z. E. Bates, who has recently come to this field, from Atchison, Kans. There were nine accessions on April 23. A Christian Endeavor Society has been organized and good work is being done in the Sunday-school.

Professor Willett was University preacher at Yale Sunday, April 23. His address memorialized the King James translation of the Bible. Last week Dr. Willett preached at the chapel service of Columbia University in New York, and addressed the Disciples' Social Union in that city.

W. J. A. Smith, pioneer preacher and elder of Los Angeles, Calif., died April 15, at his home in this city. Funeral services were held April 18, from Naomi Avenue Church. He was one of the faithful men who fought the first battles for our church in Southern California.

F. M. Cummings, who has returned to his home in Winfield, Kans., after an absence of some months in Arkansas and Missouri, reports the work at Winfield in condition of under the leadership of Albert Nichols, who has been pastor there for the past six years. They have a fine new house of worship and progress is being made in all departments.

Budd Park Church, Kansas City, Mo., where B. L. Wray ministers, will at once begin a campaign to raise $12,500 toward building a superstructure over the basement in which the church is now holding services. A gift of $12,500 has been made to the church on the condition that the church raise a like amount.

L. W. Klinker, assisted by singing evangelist James A. Myers, closed a tent meeting, April 9, which resulted in the planting of a new church in Los Angeles, which will be known as the Cypress Park Church. They begin with 86 members, and a Sunday-school of 82, also a Y. P. S. C. E. of 42. Mr. Klinker is called as their pastor, The church is self-supporting.

At the Richmond Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., a meeting was held recently of about one hundred representatives of the Disciples churches on the Niagara frontier. Plans were made for a campaign to raise money and build more churches and missions in this locality. A fund of $250 was subscribed at the meeting. On April 30, the pastors of the various churches of the city exchanged pulpits in order to stimulate the movement.

As beautiful and appropriate a program of celebration of Holy Week as came to our eye was that put out by F. M. Rogers and the church at Long Beach, Calif. Two "Meditations" were held daily at 10 a. m., and 7:30 p. m. The gospel narrative was used as the subject matter for each of the days of "His Last Week." Mrs. Princess Long greatly assisted in the musical part of the devotions.

Norman F. Johnson, pastor at Crafton, Pa., held a meeting at Homestead recently where Ross E. Wood is pastor. The meeting was successful. Mr. Johnston speaks in the highest praise of Mr. Wood's work at Homestead where against great obstacles he has settled discords, paid debts and added many to the church during the few months of his pastorate. Prospects are bright for a new church house before long.

The Southern California ministerial association formed resolutions recently regretting the illness of A. F. Roadhouse and J. R. Jolly which has compelled them to relinquish their active work, the former at Santa Ana and the latter at San Bernardino. Both men are commended for their faithful and unself-regarding services and their brethren present them with an expression of love and solicitude that is indeed Christian.

Preparations for the Home-coming Week, May 23-30, for the Alumnae of Christian College, Columbia, Mo., in honor of the 60th anniversary of the founding of the College are quite elaborate. The little College city of Columbia is much interested in the Jubilee Week and scores of the visiting Alumnae have already accepted invitations to be guests for this occasion in hospitable Columbia homes. Dr. H. L. Willett will deliver the Baccalaureate sermon on Sunday morning, May 28. The Commencement address will be delivered on the Tuesday following by Rev. T. P. Haley of Kansas City.

Central Church, Walla Walla, Wash., had twelve additions at the Easter services, eight by confession from among the young ladies of the Sunday-school. This gives twenty-eight additions to the church since the first of the year. Joseph D. Armistead, the minister, has been honored with an invitation to deliver the baccalaureate sermon for the graduates of Eugene Bible University, May 21. Herbert Yeuell has been engaged for an evangelistic meeting for the month of November. Walla Walla is rejoicing over the fact that it has been chosen as one of the ninety cities of America for the Men and Religion Forward Movement.

C. C. Morrison spent a recent Sunday with the Union Church, Waupun, Wis. This congregation is composed of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples. Their union was consummated twelve years ago. They worship in the most adequate and beautiful church house in the town, and should have a prosperous future under competent leadership. During recent years the work has not been flourishing and some of the members are somewhat depressed. The four pastors since the union was effected have been Baptists, among them some excellent leaders. A man of the true union spirit should be able to accomplish a highly significant work there. Waupun has about 3,000 people, and is a substantial community.

Notwithstanding the constant excitement due to the war activities over the border line in Mexico, the church at El Paso, Texas, reports encouraging progress. The Sunday-school average has been 250 for the past three months. Congregations of gratifying proportions have been hearing a series of sermons by the pastor, P. J. Rice, on Four Great Realities, "God," "Ourselves," "Others" and "The Future." The church is growing in numbers and in substantial strength. Mr. Rice expresses strong favor toward the Insurrectos who he says, have been very moderate and just in their demands. He believes President Diaz has been a good ruler, but has become too much the tool of men of wealth and the masses are suffering grievously under his administration.

In an interesting paper read before the Disciples' Ministerial Association of Cleveland, O., George B. Evans of Chagrin Falls, O., contended for "the closet versus the study and the gym," as a place of preparation for the minister. He held out high ideals for the preacher's own inner life. "Has our study usurped the place of the closet?" he asked. "Was Jesus a book-worm? See how meditation moulded the Master! Do we take hours each week to work out our sermons, and begrudge moments spent in preparation for prayer?' Is it right to be so careful about what we say to men and so careless about what we say to God?" Mr. Evans used concrete illustrations. "The lean, lank, ethereal-looking Peter Ainslie is no less powerful and persuasive as a preacher than the sturdy, sinewy 'Stuffy' Place, and I would just as soon hear the squeaky voice of Benj. L. Smith as the stentorian thunders of the leather-lunged S. M. Martin."

At the meeting of the Minister's Alliance of greater Kansas City, April 17, there were reports from seventeen churches and Bible schools as follows: the total number in attendance at the Bible-schools on the 16th 5,879; total amouunt of offerings, including some for the National Benevolent Association, $312.92; total number of accessions to the churches, 38; 15 of them by confession and baptism. On April 24, the reports for the Sunday previous showed a total from 16 churches of 4,389 in the Bible schools, offerings amounting to $108.00 with 16 additions, 6 being by confession. Lowell C. McPherson of New York, who was in a meeting with the Central Church, Kansas City, Kansas, was requested to occupy the time on the 24th in an address on the "Operation of the Holy Spirit in Conversion." It was listened to with marked attention and warmly commended by the ministers.

An Idaho preacher sends The Christian Century a statement of his purpose to go out independently in the smaller places of his state and establish union churches. As an initial preparation for his work he says he will "sever all connection with the Christian church," and has notified the state officials of the various denominations that it is his purpose so to do. This is a rather odd commentary on either the sort of churches the Christian churches are or else on the way this particular preacher conceives his membership. The closest connection with the Christian church should be, it seems to us, no impediment but a positive re-inforcement in the enterprise of establishing union churches. Every Christian church is or should be a union church. If it is not a union church it is not a Christian church in very truth, but a sectarian church. Stay with the Disciples, brother preacher, and let us help you to establish union churches of Christ.

A UNION CHURCH INDEED.

The Union Church, at Monroe, Wis., reported fine progress at its annual meeting recently held. A church supper, served free to all, was enjoyed, after which the past year's work was traced out and the new year's program outlined. This church made something of a venture six months ago in calling to its pastorate a well-trained and experienced man whose salary was much more than they had been previously accustomed to pay. Cecil J. Armstrong is justifying the hopes reposed in him. Leaving a city pastorate, he conceived the union character of the work at Monroe as investing it with more significance than the average church in a city field. With this interpretation of his task he has set to work patiently but progressively to develop in his people the true spirit of unity. What denominational prejudices still survived in the congregation are gradually being displaced by the strong social conscience toward the local community which pastor and people are cultivating. This is precisely the line along which unity is to come, not in one case alone but in the case of the church universal. Mr. Armstrong is supported by a number of strong large-minded laymen and capable women who are strongly possessed of the union sentiment. At the annual meeting just referred to the pastor introduced a recommendation that the church should practice union not with one class of Christians alone—those who were immersed at baptism—but with all members of the church of Christ who present certificates of such membership from Methodist, Presbyterian or whatever body. He told his people that his recommendation was not conceived in a dictatorial spirit, nor did he ask even for immediate consideration of the proposal. What he desired was that they think and pray the subject through until they felt its full bearings, and then on their own initiative he would rejoice to have it brought up and decided. This is the true spirit in which progress can be made. It reveals in the pastor a patient mind, willing to wait for action until the truth has been fully grasped by his people. The pastor's suggestion met with great favor in the congregation, most if not all of the members being ready to adopt it at once.

TO HELP SAVE THE BOY.

The church is not looking after the boys of the streets as it should. These orphaned or deserted ones, who wander lonely and unprotected through the city streets, exposed to the allurements of all its glittering vices, enduring all its sordid misery, should be the church's great opportunity. Surely, the church, which is the representative of the Saviour of the lost, should go out after the lost manhood that is in embryo in the waifs and strays of the city and save it for future usefulness in the kingdom of our Lord.

Yet, too often, such work is left to the Associated Charities, while the church, as an organization, unheeding, passes by. Of course, the church, when asked to do so, contributes a small part of its means towards the support of the Associated Charities, but it has little personal, vital interest in the work that is being done by this latter organization.

In Richmond, Va., the Associated Charities have equipped a Boys' Settlement, a place of refuge, recreation and instruction for the neglected and unsheltered news-boys and vagabonds. That is, they have the mechanical equipment, but funds have been lacking with which to put a worker in charge.

The pastor of the Seventh St. Church, Richmond, H. D. C. Maclachlan, feeling the burden of his own obligation as a Christian towards the children of the slums, and desirous of enlisting the real sympathy of others suggested to a literary class that he has on Friday afternoons that they no longer meet merely for self-culture, but together begin also some practical Christian service—laying before them the need of the Boys' Settlement. As an outcome of this suggestion, the initial effort of the class on behalf of the boys was the conduct of a pilgrimage, on Easter Monday, to the historic town of Williamsburg, Va.; the proceeds of which are to be applied to the salary of the prospective settlement worker.

As the class has thus interested itself in the employment of the worker, it is to be presumed that the members of the class will want to inform themselves about what he will do. And increased knowledge will doubtless lead to increased zeal and larger service.

Why cannot the church give itself more to this sort of ministry? How better could it show that it has the spirit of brotherly love than by getting down close to these little brothers of the byways, and feeding and clothing and sheltering them, and helping them to live, and making them acquainted with the Big Brother of us all?

Commencement at Enid, Okla.

The Fourth Annual Commencement of Oklahoma Christian University will be held in the University Chapel at Enid, Okla., Tuesday, May 30, 1911. The commencement address will be delivered by Archibald McLean, president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached Sunday evening, May 28. This school is closing its fourth annual session, which is in everywise a great advance over the three former years. The attendance for the year is in excess of three hundred and fifty, which is about 15 per cent of an increase over last year, the best former year, and this notwithstanding the terrible drought which prevailed over all this section in 1910. There is a large graduation class coming from all the departments and numbering about fifty-five. Fifteen of these will receive degrees from the College of Arts, others receiving diplomas as trained nurses, book-keepers and stenographers and others from the departments of business, oratory and music. It is hoped that there will be a large attendance of friends at commencement and that those who attend will remain a day or two more and be with us in our State Convention, which convenes the morning following Commencement, that is, Wednesday, May 31 and June 1 and 2.

W. J. WRIGHT,
Acting President of O. C. U.

Bethany, Nebraska

Our short meeting with R. W. Abberley and J. Ross Miller closed with sixty-five added to the membership of the church. Of this number, thirty-five were conversions, the rest came by letter and statement. There were two from the Methodist Church. An interesting thing about the conversions was that all of them, except three, were from the Sunday-school. The meeting was an excellent one from the standpoint of numbers, as this field is well gleaned; practically all in the community are members of the church. The meeting did much to increase interest and encourage the membership to greater work.

DR. PRICE'S CREAM Baking Powder

Pure, Healthful, Dependable

Known everywhere and guaranteed a strictly cream of tartar baking powder; no alum—no ammonia—no phosphatic acid.

Low-priced powders and those which do not give the cream of tartar guarantee are made from alum.

Of what use to give 25 ounces of baking powder for 25 cents if 8 of those ounces are alum?

STUDY THE LABEL

ing is free from those objectionable features which sometimes characterize evangelistic sermons. His method is the old-time way of preaching the message and giving the invitation without undue pressure. This part of Mr. Abberley's work deserves high commendation.

Mr. Abberley's preaching was excellent. His sermons were didactic in style and covered the ground of Christian doctrine along the lines familiar to our people. His preach-

J. Ross Miller led the singing and did splendid work. Mr. Miller is a fine Christian gentleman, thoroughly unselfish. His unselfishness was very evident throughout the whole meeting. At the close of the meeting, he gave an entertainment which was of very high class and he deserves to be ranked as one of our very best chorus leaders and soloists. He has had a thorough course in voice culture and understands how to do the work he is attempting to do.

The Bethany Church is unique in that it is closely identified with Cotner University, one of our splendid Christian Colleges. The work of the college and the church overlap until in reality they are one. This makes the work most pleasant with this great body of college students to aid in the Bible School, The Endeavor Society and other organizations of the church.

The Bethany Church has a reputation as a missionary church and in fact is doing excellent work along all lines of Christian activity. We have one of the best equipped

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

Located at Columbia, close to the University of Missouri, the unrivaled advantages of which are open to all Bible College students. Ministerial and Missionary Training. Faculty of trained specialists. Property and endowment $200,000. Excellent opportunities for self-support. No Tuitions.

For Catalog and full Information, address and efficient Bible Schools in the country. It is a joy to labor with this great church and to have the support of these splendid Christian people.
CHARLES M. SHARPE, Dean

H. O. PRITCHARD, MINISTER.

Notes from the Foreign Field

D. O. Cunningham of Harda, India, reports that the plague is abating. The missionaries expected to open up the work in a day or two. The papers state that it has broken out in an exceptionally bad form in the large cities of Lucknow, Agra and Benares. Thus far our Christians have all been spared.

Dr. Mary T. McGavran is planning to return to India at the expiration of her furlough. She will visit the churches in England that support her and attend the annual convention. She has been doing some special work in the hospitals of Philadelphia. She paid special attention to the diseases of children and women. Through the courtesy of Dr. Holmes of the University, she had the opportunity of studying the children in the psychological clinic. Dr. McGavran spoke at the First and Third Churches in the city.

H. A. Eicher of Bilaspur, India, writes: "We have just returned from our District convention and Christian mela. It was good this year and more practical good was done than in former years. One of my teachers who had been dismissed, was brought to conviction of conscience. He came confessing his faults and humbly asking forgiveness. One man of low caste, who had long been an inquirer, was baptized the day following the mela, having been brought to the crisis of faith while there. Many of our Christian children are being neglected and have no schools for their education because we have no funds for buildings and teachers in one or two villages. The larger Christian children are being neglected in their education and great opportunities are being lost because we have not yet received permission to enlarge our school in Bilaspur and make it an English middle school. This is a necessity and the crisis is growing. We are hoping and praying that things will take a turn this year and that the deficit will be the means of awakening the people to the need and appreciation of our Christian stewardship in this matter.

A good woman from California sends in $600 and becomes a personal Living Link, supporting her own missionary in the foreign field.

The teachers and officers of our Sunday-schools in Indianapolis came together at a supper in the Y. M. C. A. building on Tuesday evening, April 25. There were two hundred and fifty present. The evening was spent in considering the teaching of missions in the Sunday-school. The enthusiasm was high. The Seventh St. Church begins May 1 "A Missionary week." Five evenings are taken in a great missionary educational campaign. The Seventh Street Church has recently become a Living Link in the foreign society.

The great missionary exposition which is now being conducted as "The World in Boston" has been secured for Cincinnati in March 1912. It will hold forth for one month in spacious Music Hall and its annexes. It is estimated that ten thousand pages and helpers will be enlisted from the Protestant churches of the city for its conduct.

The Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, is publishing the diary of Dr. Zenas S. Loftis, who died soon after reaching Batang. This diary will make a book of about two hundred and fifty pages. It is the best description extant of the country through which he passed on his way from Nankin to Batang.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Secretary.

Cincinnati, April 26, 1911.

ZU ZU 5¢
GINGER SNAPS
Rain! Rain!! Rain!!! All in vain!
If you lack snap and want ginger, use the old established countersign
ZU ZU
to the grocerman
No one ever heard of a ZU ZU that wasn't good
No! Never !!
5¢
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

DRAKE UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL

Credit Courses in Usual College Subjects
Credit Courses in Education and Psychology
Professional Work for Teachers of All Grades
Courses in all Certificate Subjects for Teachers
Courses in Music and Art
Courses for Music and Drawing Teachers and Supervisors

For Announcement, Address DRAKE UNIVERSITY, DES MOINES, IOWA.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

Chicago Christian Church
SPECIAL TRAIN

Convention at

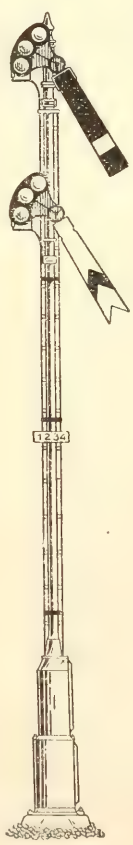
PORTLAND, ORE., JULY 4 to 11, 1911

Arrangements are now being made for the benefit of all members, their friends and families, to go to our Convention, leaving from Chicago the evening of June 27th, via C. & N. W., Union Pacific, D. & R. G., O. S. L., and O-W. R. & N. Co., passing through Omaha, Denver, Colorado Springs, Royal Gorge, Salt Lake City, Pocatello, Huntington and along the Columbia River, arriving at Portland the morning of July 4th.

This will be an exceptionally well planned trip for both sight seeing and pleasure, and with stop-overs enroute to visit a number of different interesting points. Round trip rate from Chicago $62.50.

Compete itinerary now being printed. For details of rates, and all information, address,

O. F. Jordan,
Pastor Evanston Christian Church,
822 Washington St., Evanston, Ill.



"IT IS COOL IN THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST"

No other place can afford as many attractions to tourists. There is something new for every day—fishing, hunting, riding, motoring, and mountain nights for restful sleep. Make the most of your trip by traveling over the UNION PACIFIC, Standard Road of the West, and select your return through different routes via San Francisco and Los Angeles; rates slightly higher.

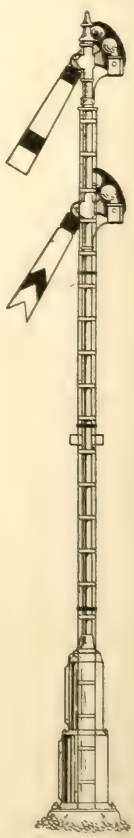
New and direct line to Yellowstone Park

ELECTRIC BLOCK SIGNALS
EXCELLENT DINING CARS

For literature and information, call on or address,

W. G. NEIMYER, General Agent,

73 W. Jackson Blvd. CHICAGO, ILL.



The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. May 11, 1911 Number 19

A Minister's Prayer

COMPOSED BY EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES

O God, deliver thy servant from indolence. Grant that the days of the week may not be wasted by lack of plans, by little errands, home tasks or social temptations. Help thy servant to remember how busy other workmen are, how early they rise, how faithfully they toil, and how much they enjoy a little leisure. Reveal through a sense of the world's need and by a vision of the spiritual capacities of men things yet to be accomplished, and may every opportunity for service be met with energy and strength.

O Lord, preserve thy servant from impatience and irritability. Thou knowest how easily men forget Thee and live for themselves, how they cling to their little interests and how prodigal they are of their divine birthright. They spend their money for toys, for physical comforts and for the increase of power. Grant thy servant patience when looking upon these follies and sins. Help him to persuade men by love, and make them know by instruction, that their life is more than meat. When those who profess to love Thee do not labor in thy cause and do not meet to worship Thee, but deny and blaspheme thy holy name by their unworthy lives, then teach thy servant how to forbear and to forgive, how to be full of gentleness and of unwearied love. May he be overwhelmed by no impulse of petulance or passion of anger, but may he more steadfastly behold the goodness of thy kingdom, and joyfully labor for its coming.

O Father, make thy servant strong in the truth. Teach him to company with those great souls who think thy thoughts after Thee. Free his mind from all hindrances to clear knowledge. Quicken in him the will to do thy will so that he may surely know what is right and good. And with the vision of truth may there be courage and zeal. When thy servant is tempted to suppress the truth for pleasing speech; when he is tempted to be silent where the truth is hard to utter, then may he have singleness of purpose and unwavering loyalty. So may thy servant work with Thee, partake of thy Spirit, and help to establish in the world thy Truth, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHICAGO

Chicago Christian Church
SPECIAL TRAIN

Convention at

PORTLAND, ORE., JULY 4 to 11, 1911

Arrangements are now being made for the benefit of all members, their friends and families, to go to our Convention, leaving from Chicago the evening of June 27th, via C. & N. W., Union Pacific, D. & R. G., O. S. L., and O-W. R. & N. Co., passing through Omaha, Denver, Colorado Springs, Royal Gorge, Salt Lake City, Pocatello, Huntington and along the Columbia River, arriving at Portland the morning of July 4th.

This will be an exceptionally well-planned trip for both sight seeing and pleasure, and with stop-overs enroute to visit a number of different interesting points. Round trip fare from Chicago, $62.50.

Complete itinerary now being printed. For details of rates, and all information, address,

O. F. Jordan,
Pastor Evanston Christian Church,
822 Washington St., Evanston, Ill.

Be Sure to Plan Your Trip

Via

UNION PACIFIC

Standard Road of the West

New and Direct Route to Yellowstone National Park

Choice of routes returning through San Francisco and Los Angeles with slight additional cost

ELECTRIC BLOCK SIGNALS
EXCELLENT DINING CARS

For literature and information relative to the Pacific Northwest, call on or address,

W. G. NEIMYER, General Agent,

73 W. Jackson Blvd. CHICAGO, ILL.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

The Surrendered Will

"TAKE MY YOKE UPON YOU!"

It is this word of Jesus that our age stumbles at. What the Cross was to both Jews and Greeks of the first century the Yoke is to the modern world. Christ offering a yoke to mankind is the most repellant picture which the mind of our time can contemplate.

The temper of our age is self-sufficient, swagger, egotistical. We boast much of the great things we have done. Like Nebuchadrezzer we walk forth and look upon our civilization—its machinery, its art and architecture, its science, its democracy—and we say, Behold great Babylon that I have builded!

By the untrammeled will of man has progress been made, we are wont to say. It is by the assertion of my will and my reason that I have at last brought nature into my control so that her forces now serve my ends instead of, as before, hindering and blasting them—this is man's proud boast.

And now to be asked by Christianity to wear a yoke, to surrender my will and even my reason to another will and another reason—this would be to yield up the priceless secret of progress, to gain which has cost mankind so much.

It is not strange, therefore, that this spirit of the age has made to itself a philosophy and an ethic of individual might which it sets over against Christianity's meek doctrine of the surrendered will. Whether or not one has come into contact with this conscious philosophy, one cannot escape being everywhere face to face with the spirit which lies behind it.

* * *

Is it true that man has made nature surrender to him? Is it true that progress is won by man's conquests? Within nature has man wrought any readjustments at all?

Is it not more deeply true that the reason man gets along so much better with nature than he used to is that he has surrendered to her, that he has given up his fear of her and his struggle against her, and having yielded to her power is carried on to mighty triumphs?

A little close looking at the actual facts will show that not self-assertion but the fine art of self-surrender is the explanation of the big gains mankind has made in recent times.

* * *

It is surely absurd to say that man has changed the forces of the physical world. He speaks in a picturesque and braggadocio way of having "tamed the lightning." But the lightning in the telephone system or the street car system is no more "tame" than the lightning in the storm. The inventor has found out that the lightning has certain habits which he calls "laws" and he has adjusted his human enterprises to these habits and so gained the use of the vast energies of the sky. It is not because in some triumphant way he whips the lightning into his service like a slave, but because he obediently puts himself in a position where nature can help him.

He has learned to wear her yoke.

Professor Huxley once said the first law of scholarship was to walk humbly amid the facts. It is this humility of the intellect that distinguishes modern learning from that of the ancients. The strong tendency of most thinkers before Bacon was to force the facts into the already accepted conception.

But the primal thesis, plainest law, of modern scholarship is to be obedient to the facts. Throw away your prejudices, your preconceived opinions, your self-interest! says the teacher to his pupil. Surrender yourself to the world as it is and the truth will rush in upon you!

No man can know truth except by wearing the yoke.

In the world of personal relations, too, we are learning that progress is to be made by the law of the yoke. In the social life of man the great achievement of which he is so proud is the establishment of democracy.

And when we think of democracy we think of the rights of the individual, his self-assertion, his emancipation from the yoke of kings or priests or blue-bloods. Democracy, we have been taught, means marked individuality, liberty, for each man. He submits to no man, to no institution, to no law. Laws are made for man, not man for laws.

It is in this direction that the political thinking of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries has tended.

But the finest note of democracy is being struck in this new century. If the foundation of democracy was laid in the rights of man, the superstructure is to show forth the duties of man. Hitherto the catch-word of democracy was independence. Its great future word will be inter-dependence.

And interdependence means that the individual must surrender to the common welfare in order to his own highest welfare.

And thus the law of the yoke is the basic law of democracy.

* * *

With this deeper insight into the laws of mechanics and of all science and of personal relations not any of us should stagger when the apostle exhorts, Submit yourselves, therefore, unto God, or when Christ calls, Come unto me and take my yoke!

For if the yoke is the principle of power in the secular order it should not surprise us to find it the principle of power in the life of the soul. It is just here that our Christianity is marked off from all other religions. It offers man not a sacred book, nor an ethical code, nor a philosophical system, but a personal will to which to surrender his own.

Christ's purpose is to command us from the very center of our personality. He asks the surrender of our whole self to Him. No other founder of religion presumes to do this. None other ever said, Take my yoke! But Christ knew that the secret of power for the disciple was the same as for the Master. For the Master the secret of power had been complete submission to the will of God. For the disciple it must be complete submission to the will of the Master.

Except from this point of view it would seem almost ironical for Jesus to offer a yoke to the multitude on which he looked that day he spoke these words. They were weary and heavy laden. A yoke was the very thing they wanted to get rid of—the yoke of their circumstances, their drudgery, their sorrows that weighed their hearts down. And it is to such as these Christ offers a yoke!

Yes, but it is "my" yoke. They already have yokes, heavy, hard, grievous. But my yoke is easy. My yoke is freedom from bondage. My yoke is emancipation from drudgery. My yoke is the glorification of sorrow. My yoke is power—to wear it is to possess the secret of utilizing unmeasured energies compared with which their own are but faint pulse-beats.

* * *

Precisely what man is learning to do to make progress in the physical world and in science and in the social order Christ long ago taught as the essential secret of power in the spiritual life.

You are tempted. You have fought an evil habit with your own will. Again and again you have gone out in the morning resolved to play the man this day, to crush the tempter, to assert your true self. But again and again the evening has seen you coming home with garments stained and hands defiled.

O, wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me?—this is the cry which Christ answers with his call to take the yoke. I will deliver you, he says, if you will take my yoke, if you will give me your will.

Or you are in grief. Some great miscarriage of your hopes or your love overwhelms your soul. You hurl your fiat that it shall not be so, but your little fiat is ground to bits in the teeth of the inescapable reality. Your resistance makes you feel as if you were acting the part of King Canute sweeping back the tide with a broom.

No, resistance cannot conquer sorrow. The protests of one's own will may land one in bitterness, in hardness, in cynicism.

But the yoke of Christ will empower you to bear never so crushing a grief. The will of God is a good will, it means good for you, it makes all things work together—sorrows included—for the soul's deepest welfare.

Submit yourselves, therefore, unto God. Accept Christ's yoke. For His yoke is easy.

Social Survey

Federal Income Tax Amendment

There appears to be ground for believing that the proposed income tax amendment to the constitution will go into effect before the gathering in regular session of Congress, next winter. Already thirty state legislatures have given it their approval. Of the states which have acted on the measure, only four have gone on record against it. Senator Brown, of Nebraska, who is championing the income tax, is convinced that the remaining five necessary for a constitutional amendment in ratification by the states, will have given their approval before the regular session. If it should become a law before congress again convenes, it would undoubtedly have a strong effect upon tariff legislation in that session. Senator Brown claims that such a law would net to the government about $100,000,000 annually, and the treasury officials are said to admit that it would yield at least $70,000,000 per year. Tariff revisionists would undoubtedly find such an increase in revenue a powerful weapon for reduction in many of the tariff schedules. Some of the force of that argument is lost, however, when it is remembered that the policy of expense retrenchment to correspond with increases in income has hitherto not been followed in the matter of tariff. Federal expenditures have been increased, instead. Even with the granting of federal authority for an income tax, important questions such as the uniform taxation of the states, and double taxation will have to be settled. Adjustment of these questions may delay operation of the laws, if passed.

A Successful Scholar in Politics

After being in the chair as governor of the state of New Jersey but a few months, Gov. Woodrow Wilson seems to be justifying the confidence which the people of the state expressed in electing him. His bitterest opponents, the machine men, called him a visionary, and predicted that his theories and "book learnin'" would quickly collapse when they came to measure up against the real "practical" problems of government. Perhaps that would have been the dismal result in the case of a man of smaller caliber than Governor Wilson, but he has so distinguished himself that he is easily in the front among the leaders of the Democratic party. His success is the triumph of personality and of direct appeal to the good sense of the people. His first act after assuming office was to throw down the gauntlet to those who were seeking nothing but personal and selfish ends. His fight was the people's fight and under his championship one excellent measure after another has become law. The first of the measures adopted by the New Jersey legislature amended the election laws in the interest of honesty and popular control, and incorporated the legalized primary in the existing body of laws. The second is a corrupt practices act, modeled on the English law, which prohibits the use of even liquor or cigars in behalf of any candidate. A third is an employers' liability act, and another is an act which gives power to a commission to supervise and fix rates of public utilities corporations. These compose only a portion of the work accomplished by a legislature, one house of which was controlled by Democrats and the other by Republicans, with Governor Wilson leading both. His popularity is equal to that which Governor Hughes aroused in New York.

The Greatest American Cathedral

On Apr. 19, the completed portions of the new Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York City, were dedicated. Of no little significance in the Christian world was the occasion. The building, which was begun in 1892, when completed, it is said, will be the fifth largest cathedral in the world. The others, in the order of their size, being St. Peter's in Rome, the Cathedral of Seville, the Duomo in Milan, and St. Paul's in London. While all work on the cathedral has been prosecuted with a definite end in view, construction has not been pushed. The work has been carried on only so fast as funds have been available. The choir and two chapels represent the completed portion thus far. The choir, the gift of Hon. Levi P. Morton, cost $1,000,000; Belmont Chapel cost $250,000; and King Chapel $150,000. Two chapels yet remain to be built. The estimated cost of the whole when completed is about $10,000,000. St. John's will easily be the greatest structure of the kind in the United States. The dedicatory services were solemn and impressive. Twenty bishops and several hundred rectors of the Protestant Episcopal Church, together with as many laymen as could find admission into the great building were present. Included, by special invitation, were many of the leading representatives of other Protestant denominations, who were given seats among those reserved for the Episcopal clergymen. The intention of the donors was that the church should serve not one denomination, but many, and this was emphasized in the sermon of Bishop Greer. Among his closing sentences were these words: "For the sake of our common humanity, to bless and to crown it; and for the sake of our common country, to help us more and more to love and to serve it and to make it take its place, its true and destined place for righteousness and peace, among the nations of the earth, we consecrate today, as the offering of our love, these memorial chapels and this cathedral choir, to the service here among us of the incarnate Jesus Christ." It is a debatable question how far it is justifiable to use vast amounts of money to pile up these huge church buildings. They are too large for preaching services, they serve few practical religious purposes. Yet it cannot be denied that they stir the spirit of worship and help to lift us upward to God. Solomon believed the temple was worth spending millions to secure. But on the other hand so did Herod. Surely those of us who are inspired by the majesty of great Gothic churches are glad when men are minded to give for their erection. As few of us have helped to build this house, we ought not to grumble, especially as none has been compelled to give as in the olden days, when popes and bishops forced unwilling contributions.

A Half Century of Coming Together

These are heart-stirring days to the grey-bearded men who wear bronze buttons in their coat lapels and who used to wear blue or grey uniforms fifty years ago. We who know of the beginnings of the Civil War only by what we have read, or from the impressions made upon youthful minds by the tremendous events of half a century ago, cannot appreciate the emotions which well up in the hearts of the men of '61. There never was a war which had just the characterists of that which is commonly known as the War of the Rebellion. It was a conflict which was fought by soldiers who believed they were fighting for a principle. Human passion was at white heat, undoubtedly, but behind the anger and the bitterness and the hatred there was the belief shared by the two sections of the country that great principles of democracy were at stake. No wonder the struggle was maintained with a dogged determination on both sides which seldom, if ever, has been paralleled in history. Although the war was carried on for four long and bloody years, although hundreds of thousands of homes suffered, some of them losing the fathers and sons and brothers who maintained them, others being obliterated by flame and pillage, nevertheless when the end came, the nation reunited its divided household, in a manner and in a spirit which showed how deeply planted are the roots of American democracy. Where can the student of history find record of an internecine strife in which the contestants, after peace had been declared, so speedily laid down their arms, so promptly returned to the duty of earning their livelihood, and so generally smothered hate? The last fifty years' phenomenal growth of the United States is ample testimony to the prevalence of the spirit of fraternity which with wonderful rapidity spread over the nation. Bitterness has not altogether died out, as we all know, but that it has so generally been put aside, even before historians have agreed among themselves upon a name for the war, is something for which to be devoutly thankful. The whole country, with some exceptions, few though noticeable, now agrees that the war, awful as it was, terrible as its consequences were, was decided in a way that made for the betterment of humanity, not only in our own land but throughout the world. "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform"—but he moves, and men move with him. The next half century ought to see the obliteration of the word "solid" from the vocabulary of our politics, save as it describes a nation solid for good government, for high patriotism, for righteousness, a nation "whose God is the Lord."

A Note from the Editors

For the past few weeks Professor A. W. Taylor, whose conduct of this page has made it exceptionally valuable to our readers, has not been writing these items. He begged us to free him temporarily that he might prepare a book on the Sociology of Missions which he was under promise to the Foreign Society to complete at a near date. It is only just to him and to the editors to state this fact definitely, that he may not be held responsible for any statements which he did not utter. It will not be long, we hope, until Mr. Taylor's name shall be again found at the head of this page.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Presbyterian

The Passing of Evangelists.

The Presbyterian Advance raises the question whether "the results of professional evangelism are such as to warrant the church in continuing to give that form of work the prominence it has hitherto enjoyed." Changing conditions call for new methods. We should not be disturbed by this fact. We must look to results. Reverence for a method because it has been effective in the past does not justify its continuance unless it produces results today. The Advance reasons thus:

In an editorial on the Passing of Evangelists, which has just come under our notice, the Omaha Bee takes the ground that the evangelist has served his day, and says: "A new order of worship as well as thought in the church is responsible for this change, and that new order is simply a part of the general transition toward a safer and more permanent system of public expression." It thinks the change due not to the fact that people are less emotional, but rather to the fact that they are more thoughtful. After pointing out that statistics show "steady increases in church populations," it continues: "Ministers maintain that their people are more inquiring, more honest in their thought, and therefore more and not less pious, but the difference between their piety now and that of yesterday is that the preachers are appealing more to their reason than to their emotion."

There is much truth in all this. We may not agree with the Bee that the evangelist has served his day, but we believe that professional evangelism must decrease, while the educational method must increase. There will probably always be need for evangelistic work, but as the educational work of the church increases in efficiency the work of evangelism will come more and more to be the gathering up and clinching of the results of this work. After all, evangelistic campaigns are to be looked upon as periods of harvesting. The harvesting must be done, whether all at once by an organized company of workers or by the "hand-picked" process—such as the "Win One" plan; but there must be seed-sowing and cultivation before the harvest is ready for the reaper. Possibly one reason why evangelistic campaigns do not yield large results is because in the church and in the home they are not preceded by the old-fashioned kind of patient sowing of gospel truth.

The Minister's Chief Business.

Dr. J. H. Jowett, who recently began his ministry in New York, is looked upon as one of the greatest of living preachers. It is not by accident that he has won his reputation. Hard work and strict attention to the business of preaching the gospel have been and are necessary to his success, according to his own statements. At a reception he said to his people:

My mind probably works more slowly and laboriously than that of any other person in this room. Ideas do not come to me in lightning flashes. They creep in slowly like the dawn. I must confess that it is my custom to begin my preparation for my Sunday sermons on Monday.

Many ministers, I know, wait until Friday, but I cannot work that way. Therefore I ask you to let me have my mornings to myself in order that I may give you my best service. It is not my habit to speak of myself, but this is rather an intimate meeting and there is one other personal matter that I would like to touch upon. I have been beset ever since my arrival with invitations from all parts of the United States to speak at all sorts of functions and celebrations scheduled to take place in cities located at various points between Maine and California.

Now, I am not a public speaker. I love to preach, but I shrink from appearing on public platforms. Surely there is no reason why I should go down South, for instance, to do something which I am not at all qualified to do or even do something for which I am fairly well qualified. I should like to feel that I have the backing of my church in this matter. I feel that my chief mission here is to preach the gospel of Christ from the pulpit of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, and I do not wish to undertake anything that will in any way interfere with it.

Congregational

Oxygen and the Holy Spirit.

"No matter how great the preacher, he labors in vain if the people before him are semi-asphyxiated by an atmosphere laden with poison." This sentence is from Dr. Charles E. Jefferson. He is evidently writing from experience. The average church is poorly ventilated. The blame for the miserable ventilation of churches is charged to various persons—the sexton, the building committee, bald-headed men and shivery women, and the preacher. Whoever is to blame, there ought to be something done. "What the saints need just now is fresh air." We give one paragraph from Dr. Jefferson's article in The Congregationalist and Christian World.

A few years ago a religious worker of distinction came to the United States to lay his work before our churches. Several months were spent in making a hour of the more important towns and cities. At the end of the tour our visitor wrote a letter recounting some of his experiences for publication in one of our leading newspapers. The letter was full of indignation, both hot and righteous, against the intolerable conditions which he found in the majority of the churches and halls in which he spoke. No piece of work, he said, had ever so eaten up his vitality and broken down his vigor as this speaking, night after night, in the stuffy atmosphere of overheated rooms. If this letter were published by the Tract Society and scattered broadcast, many sinners might be brought to repentance. A good question to ask a candidate for the ministry would be, "Do you understand the nature and uses of oxygen?" Many a preacher would cease to grow husky when halfway through his sermon, and many a congregation would enjoy a spiritual revival, and many a benumbed prayer-meeting would come to life again by the introduction of fresh air. When patients are nigh unto death, the doctors now call for oxygen.

United Presbyterian

Unofficial Evangelism.

The responsibility of every Christian to do the work of an evangelist is the theme of a recent editorial in the United Presbyterian. The opinion has been too common that the preacher and the evangelist are the only persons qualified to invite men and women into the fellowship of the church. In many communities it has been believed that the only way to make the church an aggressive force for the Kingdom of God is to have a specialist conduct a revival campaign. Fortunately the churches are coming to see that periodic paroxysms of emotion have no necessary connection with religion. The editorial to which we refer continues:

We believe a better sentiment is manifesting itself. The accent is being thrown upon individual initiative and responsibility. The Laymen's Missionary Movement seemed to bring to the unofficial church member a new vision of duty and of the fine possibilities that lie in an enthusiastic and business-like religious activity. The Men's Movement has emphasized the same thing. The Men and Religion Forward Movement is proposing to make personal evangelism one of its key notes. It proposes to win three million men and boys by awakening some millions of Christian men to go after these unsaved with loving, personal, tactful, but persistent invitation. If the Men and Religion Forward Movement shall succeed in awakening any considerable number of men in our churches to such activity it will have a success far beyond the calculations now made. If it does not succeed in getting the average layman to become an active and persistent evangelist the movement will not count for very much.

We greatly rejoice in the successes of the soul-winning specialists who are traveling from city to city and conducting their great campaigns. But we rejoice still more in every indication that the average church member is coming to feel it his duty to be evangelistically active, that he is coming to feel that the key to the situation is in his own hands, that he is disposed to give some of the energy and enthusiasm that build up great business enterprises to the work of the Kingdom of Jesus, to the work of saving the unsaved brother.

Jewish

Call Them Jews.

The words "Hebrew," "Israelite," and "Jew" are familiar to all readers of the Bible. Perhaps few know how these words differ in meaning and which of them should be used in speaking of or to the descendants of Jacob living among us. We are indebted to the Christian Advocate for the following statement from Dr. Joseph Silverman, pastor of the Temple Emanu-El:

Hebrew, Israelite and Jew are used interchangeably today, and they designate the same person—that is, a devotee of the Mosaic faith. Originally "Hebrew" was applied to Abraham and his immediate descendants, because they came from "the region beyond," which the word "Eber"—not of Hebron—signifies. From the fact that the twelve tribes descended from the twelve sons of Israel, the name "Israelite" became more popular than "Hebrew." Later, however, when the ten tribes were lost and what was left of them, including the tribe of Benjamin, became assimilated with the tribe of Judah, that part of Palestine inhabited by Israelites became known as Judea and the people as "Judeans," of which "Jew" is a corrupt contraction. Technically it is correct to speak of the Hebrew language, the Jewish people or the Jewish religion.

Until a few years before the close of the last century a tendency existed among the Jews of this country to use the word "Hebrew" in place of the shorter and correct one. This tendency caused the choice of such names as the "United Hebrew Charities," the "Hebrew Orphan Asylum," the "Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society," etc. This designation has been spoken of as "apologetic" by Jewish writers and has fallen into disuse. The word "Hebrew," when used by a non-Jewish writer, a writer on that subject said, "to designate a member of the house of Israel, is usually an evidence of politeness on his part. It implies: I know that you are a Jew, but I dislike to hurt your feelings by calling you one—I make it less disagreeable and call you a Hebrew! But of late our neighbors have learned that this consideration is uncalled for and that we prefer to be known as Jews.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

A New Life in Christ

It is probably impossible for those of us who have grown up where it was the fashion to profess faith in Christ and where the children were taught to look forward to the day when they should be members of the church to realize what it meant for a man like Saul of Tarsus to leave the side of the enemies of Christianity and join himself to those whom men everywhere regarded as fools and fanatics. Perhaps it would be a good thing for many of us if we were placed where the opposition to our faith is open and violent. Then we could know whether we were Christian in fact or only in name. It will be of some advantage to meditate upon the clearness with which Paul saw his duty and the courage with which he performed it.

The first part of the Epistle to the Galatians is a defense of Paul and his gospel. The fact that his authority had been called in question compelled the apostle to give reasons why his Galatian converts should feel that they had been rightly taught. Until his readers were convinced that he was not an impostor it was not worth while for Paul to lay down for them the fundamental principles of the gospel. His career as a persecutor was painful for him to contemplate but he shrank from nothing that was necessary to the fulfillment of his duty. There was no reason why he should desire to be known as a Christian unless he had the convictions of a Christian. Hence those who question his motives were without excuse for their base insinuations. The new life in Christ was a life of hardship and persecution. No sensible man would have chosen it if he had not been assured of inner peace and of the divine approval.

The world could not very well doubt the sincerity of Paul. He bore on his body the marks of his loyal service to Christ. The world does doubt the sincerity of not a few who at the present time are loud in their praises of the faith once for all delivered to the saints. The world is not the final authority on every question relating to life and godliness, but its judgment as to the genuineness of the faith of the church has to be respected. It does not believe much in the religion of the man who puts comfort above integrity and helpfulness. In other words, the wise old world knows that it need not pay much attention to the religion of a man who will not deny himself for the honor of his Lord. Stories of marvelous conversions make very little impression when the life subsequent to the conversion has been devoid of enthusiasm for the things of the kingdom.

The life new of Paul was seen immediately by friend and foe. "Straightway in the synagogue he proclaimed Jesus, that he is the Son of God." A committee of one of the largest and most active denominations in America reports that "in the five cities reporting to your committee it requires 23.5 members to win one convert each year. These churches, with a total membership of 38,381, enrolled only 33,897 in their Sunday-schools." The committee, after considering the conditions in several fields, came to the conclusion that the churches are lacking in efficiency. The efficiency of the local church needs to be increased. Now if every one who unites with a congregation of believers in Christ understood that he was called to do something and that he was expected to have use for his own brains in finding out what he ought to do, the amount of work being done by the churches would agree better with the number of members reported at annual conventions and conferences. Jesus discouraged the man who thought discipleship was easy.

The knowledge that he was divinely commissioned to preach the gospel of Christ sustained Paul in the presence of difficulty and danger. It was not his duty to ask about the hardships connected with his missionary journeys; he asked where the gospel could be preached with greatest advantage to the world. But not only did Paul emphasize his own call to be a Christian and to the apostleship, he also insisted that all Christians were divinely called. The same word that he uses of his own call he uses to express the summons of every Christian to follow Christ. It was an exalted privilege to be a Christian. The greatness of the privilege was measured by the work men were permitted to do. The work was God's and he invited men to assist him in doing it. How is it with us today? How do we feel about what we call religious work? Do we feel that God has any need of us? If we are in a real fight for the betterment of the world, we have a right to feel that God is with us and works in and through us. But if our battle is a sham, the less we say about God's call the better it will be for religion. [Midweek Service. May 17. Gal. 1:13-24; Matt. 18:3, 2; 2 Cor. 5:17; Gal. 6:15; Jas. 5:19, 20.]

S. J.

Concerning "Immersion-Baptism."

The following communication from the well-known evangelist and our esteemed friend, Rev. James Small, has been received. At first thought one would say that a criticism on the use of a single word might be responded to adequately enough with a few sentences at most. But the criticism goes beyond mere vocabulary to the meaning lying behind the vocabulary and seems to justify a more extended consideration.

Editors The Christian Century: In several issues of The Christian Century of late you use the term "immersion-baptism." It is used in the issue of March 30. You say:

> "Reduced to specific items, it may be said that the two dogmas of immersion-baptism and the historic episcopate are the outstanding, if not the only remaining, obstacles in the way of union, where union is earnestly desired."

It is difficult to imagine what is meant by "immersion-baptism." Any discriminating reader who believes that the word for "baptize" in the Greek has a distinct meaning will only smile at the term and perhaps wonder as he passes along, "can that term fool any reader of our Christian papers?"

It seems to me the very question is obscured by the use of such a term. To talk of "immersion-baptism" is to assume as true what the editor of The Christian Century knows he cannot prove to be true, namely, that immersion is only one "mode" or form of baptism. Translated into plain English his words are "baptism-baptism," which is simply absurd. That The Century on so important a subject as baptism or union should resort to a play upon words that can only deceive the unwary reader is greatly to be deplored.

Kansas City. JAMES SMALL.

The Christian Century is humbled by its respected correspondent's last sentence above. The one ideal to which our current writing is consecrated is clearness. The one sin for which this paper could not forgive itself is the sin of "playing upon words" in such way as to deceive "the unwary reader."

If the use of the term "immersion-baptism" has been misleading to any one it can only be to those readers who have read into our statements certain preconceptions of their own and have consequently not allowed these statements to stand in their own right.

The term was chosen not to "obscure" but to elucidate the subject of church membership which was under discussion. The Christian Century does not find any better term to designate precisely the thing in mind.

Of course if our correspondent's statement that the term "immersion-baptism" means the same as "baptism-baptism" were true it would indeed render our use of the term absurd and misleading. But as was recently stated by a correspondent in Our Readers' Opinions page and by the editors also, the word "immerse" is by no means the equivalent of "baptize."

To be baptized means a great deal more than to be immersed. The root meaning of the Greek word baptizo, the etymological meaning, was "immerse," "bathe" or an equivalent. But through the use of the act of immersion in the initiation of proselytes into the Jewish religion the word finally took into itself all the rich meaning possessed by the religious ceremony.

The essential meaning of baptism in the New Testament use is not a mere physical act at all. It is because this is true that there is difficulty in choosing words to clearly discriminate the distinctions which the confused state of thought in our time compels.

To use the word "baptism" in such way that it can apply only to those who have been immersed carries an implication that cannot be tolerated. Some distinction must be made possible in the vocabulary itself. If "immersion-baptism" is used it calls, of course, for a corresponding term—"affusion-baptism," "irregular baptism," "substitute-baptism" or some such designation depending on the point of view of the speaker.

That baptism was solemnized in apostolic times exclusively by an act of immersion in water The Christian Century has no doubt. That Jesus himself was thus immersed at the hands of John there is no room for question. That the modern church should abandon all irregular practices in inducting converts into the church and practice only that ceremony which prevailed in the early church and to which Christ himself submitted, is one of the elements in the plea of the Disciples of Christ which The Christian Century advocates with earnest conviction.

Between this paper and any true Disciple of Christ it is impossible to get up a controversy over the practice of baptism.

There may be between us, as between any two Disciples, differences of reasons for the practice of immersion only, but there are no differences as to the imperative character of whatever reasons we may severally hold. Those reasons we may talk over at our leisure and without heat, while we go right on together in the practice of that physical act of induction which we agree best honors Christ.

The Christian Century is not willing, however, to conceive the membership of the Church of Christ as limited only to those who have been immersed at their baptism. We joyfully acknowledge, not the Christian character only, but the Christian church membership also of Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists and the rest. They are just as truly members of the Church of Christ as are the members of a Baptist church. Their churches are just as truly churches of Christ as are churches of the Disciples.

If certain isolated passages of Scripture should seem to us to teach that these persons were not Christians and these churches not churches of Christ we could more easily doubt our understanding, our exegesis, of the Scripture passages than we could bring our mind to disfranchise the great body of the existing churches.

Nor can The Christian Century deny that this large section of the Church of Christ has been baptized—and we do not believe Mr. Small's convictions will differ with our own at this point. Presbyterian Christians and the others are members of the Church of Christ. They became members of the Church of Christ by baptism.

We, at least, know of no other way of becoming members of the Church of Christ except by baptism. The fact that the physical part of the ceremony of induction into the church was irregular from the standpoint of apostolic practice and the example of Jesus does not, in the present confused state of mind among Christians, render their baptism invalid.

Presbyterians are members of the Church of Christ—let us say it straight out with no equivocation, no mental reservation, no concealed purpose to shift our position when we are confronted with the practical consequences of our declaration.

Presbyterians are baptized members of the Church of Christ—let us likewise say this straight out, we Disciples of Christ who know so well the force of such texts as speak of our being baptized into Christ.

It is because The Christian Century wishes to do full justice to its glad conviction that Presbyterians and Congregationalists are not without baptism even though they have not been immersed, that we have need of terms to discriminate the difference between their baptism and that of those who have been immersed. "Immersion-baptism," therefore, or something like it, seems necessary for plainness of speech.

Mr. Bryan and Premier Asquith on the Bible

Chicago's celebration of the tercentenary of the King James version of the Bible last Thursday evening was one of the last of this long chain of memorial gatherings which began in London on March 29th.

At the London meeting a letter from President Taft was read, and Ambassador Reid made one of the addresses. At the New York meeting a month later, a message was read from King George, and Ambassador Bryce was one of the speakers. In each of these gatherings the flags of Britain and the United States were intertwined, and the common possession of and veneration for the English Bible was interpreted as a bond of unity between the two nations.

In Chicago Hon. William Jennings Bryan was the chief speaker. In accepting the invitation to participate Mr. Bryan asked that two speakers should precede him who would more expertly than he could be expected to do, interpret the literary and historical aspect of the occasion. Bishop Anderson, of the Episcopal diocese of Chicago, and President Ozora S. Davis, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, were chosen to precede Mr. Bryan. Dr. Davis was unable to be present on account of illness. Bishop Anderson made a very brilliant and effective address in the few minutes allotted to him.

Mr. Bryan's address was a decided disappointment. His unmagnetic style gave every evidence of the lack of a big burning idea, which he was under moral compulsion to utter. Mr. Bryan came nearer ranting than in any address we ever heard him deliver.

He had flung out this challenge: "Let the enemies of the Bible produce a better book than the Bible and we will accept their theories." He devoted his hour to the expounding of this challenge—a perfectly legitimate challenge, of course, but he would have saved many of his auditors from going to sleep on his hands (a phenomenon we had never before witnessed while Mr. Bryan spoke) had he indicated with any degree of definiteness who these "enemies" of the Bible are.

Had someone arisen in the audience and asked him to name a half-dozen of the "enemies" or even one, or to identify them definitely as a class, he would have revealed the utterly vague, if not fictitious existence of the foe against which the orator was hurling his heavy artillery.

At times Mr. Bryan fell into the vulgar error of taking the technical words "critic" and "criticism" in the sense of "fault-finders" and "fault-finding," showing a total lack of information as to the purposes and methods of the so-called "critics" and the benignant results which their scholarly work has accomplished for spiritual religion.

In striking contrast to Mr. Bryan's attitude is that of Premier Asquith, who spoke at the London tercentenary celebration. Mr. Asquith showed that his experience of life had taught him two fundamental principles which are seldom vividly realized by the merely academic scholar. Those principles are, first, that all great literature springs out of the active, struggling life of whole nations; and, second, that the test of greatness in literature is not merely its beauty of form, but its effect in moulding the ideas and the life of those to whom it comes.

Viewed in this light, the Bible is undeniably the most important collection of books in human history. It is, through and through, a social product. Every page of the Pentateuch shows that its compilers were out for political business, and not for mere entertainment or the stimulation of individual piety. The exigencies of a community struggling to preserve its liberty, its national identity, and its national ideas gave birth to the Old Testament, and dictated the selection and rejection of the documents from which its canon was composed.

Further, as Mr. Asquith pointed out, it was the translating of the Bible into English, far more than the policy of Henry VIII., which produced the Reformation, and "delivered us from a tyranny to which we will never again submit." It was the democratic spirit, the self-respect and independence, engendered by the Bible which led to the Lutheran revolt in Germany, provoked the English Revolution against the Stuarts, and moulded and inspired the American colonies for generations. We have seen in our own time, in the case of the late Boer Republics, the power of the Bible in creating and sustaining the spirit of national solidarity and iron resistance to tyranny.

Here, in the British Premier's address, was a true statesman's vision. He perceived the presence of God not simply in the letters of the Book, but in the national life, the social organization in whose active stress and struggle this literature was produced. Such a conception connects the Bible vitally with human life, with present problems and struggles and gives it power to throw its revealing light upon our present duties.

It is one of the tragedies of history that this greatest body of our race's literature should have fallen prey to the small dogmatic theories of an age which in other departments of life is being fast outgrown. We do not wish to hold our great laymen, like Mr. Bryan, whose uplifted voice on behalf of the Christain faith carries so far and with so much weight, to too severe an account for the nice distinctions of theological thinking. That surely would be unfair. But there is no doubt that Mr. Bryan's message on this occasion would have been greatened, and he himself greatened in the eyes of his hearers, had he not gone to the cemetery to find an enemy to attack.

The real, live enemies of the Bible today are those who tie up its authority to an obsolete theory of its origin, and those "slovenly Christains," as Bishop Anderson characterized them, who profess reverence for the Bible but never read it and wholly neglect to teach it to their children.

The Visitor

There are few experiences in a preacher's life comparable to the duty and privilege of taking the service at Battell Chapel on a Sunday morning at Yale University. It is one of the ancient and sacred traditions that the attendance of the undergraduate body of students is required. And a tradition at Yale is not to be set aside. Many a time has the question been raised in the meetings of the academic body as to whether this tradition should be preserved. There are few other institutions of the rank of Yale in which required attendance at a Sunday morning preaching service is continued. But the overwhelming decision on each occasion when the topic is up for discussion is that the custom shall continue. One is not quite sure whether the decision registers the actual love of the students for the service, or whether the tradition is preserved by the upper class men who have suffered under the operation of the rule, and take a certain malign pleasure in binding it upon the consciences of the unhappy freshmen who are to follow them. Unofficial opinion gives both explanations.

* * *

But whatever the motive that prompts the continuance of the custom, it is an inspiring sight to watch some twelve or fifteen hundred young men crowd into the old chapel where so many generations of the student body have gathered. It is hard to imagine an audience which puts a preacher to the test more completely than does this one. One has a certain consciousness that though these young men seem to be there in actual visible form it is a problem as to what extent any one of them is really there, or would have made his appearance on the particular day, had it not been for the custom which he had no power to break or evade. That puts upon the preacher the stimulating obligation to go after his audience and really bring it to attention. It is as exciting as a hunting adventure, and withal not without dangers of its own. There is no finer and more inspiring attention to be obtained from any audience than may be won from these alert and critical hearers. But there is no disapproval more manifest and remorseful than that which may fall upon a speaker who fails to bring a message that gains attention.

* * *

Yale is making most interesting advances in material equipment in the present period. It is an astonishment and gratification to one who loves the place to return from year to year and see the changes that are taking place in the architectural enrichment of the University. In fact, town and gown seem to vie in this fine activity, for several handsome public buildings recently erected add to the beauty of New Haven, whose natural attractiveness needs only adequate civic devotion to make it increasingly the most beautiful of American cities of the smaller type. The administration at Yale is vigorous and effective. In spite of the venerable years of the institution, one is constantly surprised at the youth of the men who are leading in its work. President Hadley is of the younger generation. Mr. Anson Phelps Stokes, the Secretary of the Corporation, is a young man of remarkable executive ability, and is proving one of the most efficient officials Yale ever had. A man of wealth, with the best traditions of the University inherited in his family, he has been the potent factor in securing much of the recent enlargement in the material equipment of the institution. Many of the most effective men on the faculty are young men who are winning a name in the world of scholarship.

* * *

The Disciples at Yale are about the same in numbers as last year. It was one of the disappointments of the Visitor's brief stay at New Haven that he was unable to accept the urgent invitation of the Campbell Club to share its hospitality. For several years he has found that fellowship delightful, and has come to look upon the club luncheon as one of the choice features of his annual visit to Yale. But the greetings of several of its members by letter and personal interviews during the Sunday spent there, made clear the fact that the body of Disciples at work in the Divinity School this year is not less satisfactory in numbers and character than for several years past. And a later conversation with Peter Ainslie of Baltimore, who enjoyed the hospitality of the club on Tuesday of that same week, confirmed the impression. The Campbell Club of Yale is doing admirable work in keeping alive and active the sense of fellowship and loyalty among the Disciples in the University, and in creating the ideas of competent graduate scholarship in the minds of our younger men who have recently finished their work at our colleges and need to be stimulated to undertake the further tasks of a preparation which every year makes more imperative for the successful preacher.

* * *

The Monday of the same week was spent by the Visitor in Boston. One ought to make a pilgimage to the chief scenes of interest here as often as he may, for the sheer joy and profit of renewing great memories. It is not alone the historic sites which give interest to the place, though these would be sufficient. But one goes back on every possible occasion to Harvard University, to the Boston Public Library with its Sargent and Abbey canvasses, to Trinity Church, where Phillips Brooks was wont to preach on memorable days in one's earlier experience, and where now his statue occupies a niche framed on the side of the great church, and to the other places made dear or significant by artistic, literary, patriotic or religious associations. He feels as if he were a pilgrim returning to shrines at which his best ideals and emotions have been awakened in the past.

* * *

There are several Disciples in Harvard University, as has been the case for several years past. Professor E. C. Moore, who rendered such inspiring service at the Congress of the Disciples at Springfield, Illinois, the week before, had given admirable account of our men in the theological department of the university. It was a pleasure, therefore, to get a closer view of the situation, and learn more fully regarding our representatives in this oldest American university. W. A. Parker, recently of Emporia, Kas., has been working for two years in the institution, and it was the high words of praise uttered by Professor Moore regarding his character and work that made it clear that he and others of our men at Harvard are appreciated by the faculty. Mr. Parker has been offered the position of assistant to Prof. Moore in the department of the philosophy of religion for next year, and it is probable that he will remain at least two years more at the university. He is preaching for the church at Everett, in Boston. F. E. Livengood of Hutchinson, Kansas, makes his M. A. this year, after which he will accept a position in the college at Harpoot, in Asia Minor, under the direction of the American Board, where he will have charge of the boys' work and athletics. His appointment is for three years. He is a Drake man. Dana Murdock is from Pullman, Washington. He is a fellow in social ethics and will make his Master's degree this year. He has received an appointment at South End House, a social settlement of Boston, with the stipend of a fellow of Harvard. This is one of the best appointments at the disposal of the university. C. M. Eppard of Drake University received his B. D. last year and is working for his M. A. this year. He preaches for a Congregational Church at Plymouth, Mass. Two other Drake men, Knott and Nance, have the M. A. in prospect for this year. Nance preaches at Roxbury and Knott at Lynn for a congregation which came over to the Disciples from the Christian Connection. The congregation is small, but the property is worth some twenty thousand dollars.

* * *

Of our churches in and near Boston a word ought to be said. The Roxbury Church, which is the old Shawmut Avenue congregation to which some of our best men have ministered in other days, is now in rather moribund condition. Dr. D. L. Martin, a physician and Methodist minister, is preaching there at present. The Everett Church is prospering under Mr. Parker's ministery. At Swampscott J. W. Robbins is the pastor. Harry Minnick and A. B. Cunningham are preaching at Worcester at the Main and Highland street churches, respectively, though I understand the resignation of the latter has been presented. At Danbury, Conn., E. J. Teagarden continues his long and successful pastorate. He is by far the senior pastor in all our eastern work, having continued his ministery at Danbury ever since he was a student in Yale, and he was one of the first of the Disciples to attend that institution. At Haverhill, Mass., W. R. Mains is doing good work.

* * *

Of the Disciples in New York, including the group at Columbia University, and of the annual banquet of the New York Missionary Union and other interesting features of our work in the east I hope to speak next week. And a little later I mean to give some interpretation of the great exposition entitled "The World in Boston," which was one of my chief reasons for visiting the Hub this year.

No man ever looked into the eyes of Jesus without longing to be at home with him.

The Current Mexican Revolution

Uprising Against Abuses of Democratic Government.

BY P. J. RICE

In the early autumn of 1910 a general election was held in the Republic of Mexico. General Porfirio Diaz, who had been president for thirty years, was re-elected. He was opposed in the pre-election campaign by Francisco I. Madero, a member of one of the wealthiest and most influential families in Mexico. For some years Madero had been openly advocating reforms, insisting particularly upon greater respect for the constitution on the part of those in authority. This had brought him into disfavor with the administration and he was subjected to arrest and temporary imprisonment on several occasions, and finally was obliged to flee from the country.

Francisco I. Madero, Insurrecto Leader.

The result of the election, in which Maderists had been forcibly prevented from voting, only served to add fuel to the flame of revolution which was already burning in many hearts, and soon after Madero's flight he was importuned by many prominent Mexicans to institute an armed insurrection. In response to these importunities he declared himself Provisional President of Mexico, and appointed provisional governors of the several states. He also organized Juntas in Douglas, Arizona; El Paso, Texas; San Antonio, Texas; St. Louis, Mo.; Washington, D. C., and in several other cities in the United States. Through these he was able to collect funds and purchase arms and ammunition. In order to finance the revolution adequately he disposed of his own private railroad and land holdings, but he has been assisted materially by contributions made by other wealthy patriots and by many of the poorer people. It may be said with certainty that a report which has gained some currency to the effect that the revolution is being financed by a great corporation of the United States is absolutely without foundation.

Army's Spantaneous Origin.

The army seems to have sprung almost spontaneously into existence. Leaders, who were such by nature rather than by training, began to gather about themselves bands of men mostly from the poorer classes, and these bands began at once to conduct a sort of desultory warfare, destroying railroad bridges and lines of communication so as to make it difficult for the Federal Government to reach them in any effective way. Such bands were formed in practically every state in the republic, but they were more active in the northern states of Chihuahua and Sonora. Throughout the entire period of revolution thus far there has been a manifest restraint exercised on the part of the Insurrectos toward foreign investments and foreign residents of the Republic. At no time has there been any wanton destruction of property or life, and when ranches were raided for supplies and horses, returns in cash or certificates have been made to the owners.

Early in February, Pascual Orosco, leading a force of perhaps six or seven hundred men, marched on the city of Juarez, just across the Rio Grande River from El Paso, Texas. The city was totally unprepared to defend itself and there seemed every reason to believe that it would be captured. But for some reason Orosco delayed the attack until Federal re-enforcements pushed their way into the city in spite of his opposition. There were several skirmishes in the vicinity of Juarez, but nothing like a battle, though there was some loss of life on both sides during the days immediately following the arrival of Federal troops.

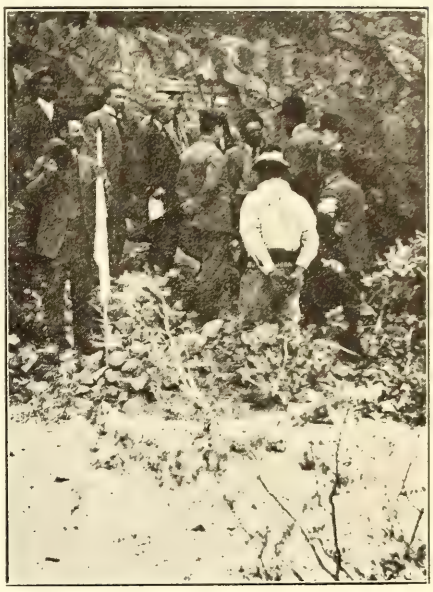
Leader Shares Hardships.

During this time Madero was in El Paso, having come hither from San Antonio, but having been warned of a warrant for his arrest on the ground of violating neutrality laws, he joined the revolutionists and has remained with that division of the army which has operated in the state of Chihuahua, sharing all the hardships of army life in a desert country with the men under his immediate command. About the same time he assumed general charge of all the revolutionary forces over a Board of Strategy which he created.

The operations in Chihuahua have been aimed for the most part against the smaller towns and have been notably successful. At present the greater part of that state, except the capital, Chihuahua, and Juarez, is under the control of Madero and his forces. Elections have been held in the captured towns and all the functions of government have been exercised to the complete satisfaction of practically everybody, resident Americans included.

The most notable activity of the revolutionists outside of Chihuahua has been in the state of Sonora, lying immediately to the west. The town of Agua Prieta, just opposite Douglas, Arizona, was besieged and captured. But the Federals laid siege to it again and the Insurrectos, partly because of lack of sufficient ammunition, evacuated. In this series of battles several citizens of Douglas were shot and threatening international complications arose but were soon adjusted, at least temporarily.

A Typical Insurrecto.



Peace Envoys Conferring with Madero.

About the middle of April, Madero, with his force of about 3,000 men, marched again on Juarez, and after stationing his army in the mountains which nearly surround the city except on the river side, he made a formal demand for its surrender. But the city was now quite completely fortified and had a small company of Federal soldiers under General Navarro to defend it, who manifested no disposition to surrender. For a day or two a battle was almost hourly expected, and had it been fought it would undoubtedly have been attended with great loss of life on both sides.

Madero Importuned for Peace.

In the meantime, however, Madero was being importuned by his father and brothers who had come to the scene of conflict, by certain influential Mexicans residing in El Paso, and others representing Diaz unofficially, and by Dr. Gomez, his confidential representative in Washington, to agree to suspension of hostilities long enough to discuss terms of permanent peace. At first Madero flatly refused to talk peace at all until Juarez was held by the Revolutionists. Later, influenced by the possibility of further international complications arising in case of a battle so near the border, and by semi-official assurances that the reforms he advocated would be speedily inaugurated by the Administration, he signed an armistice to continue in force for five days. Since then he has agreed to continue the armistice for another five days, making it expire at noon May 3. Representatives of both sides in the conflict have been summoned and peace terms are now being considered.

In the meantime the Insurrectos are encamped in the arroyos and canyons in the mountains skirting the river just west of the city of El Paso. In company with a number of friends I spent an afternoon recently at the camp. In many respects it presents a sorry picture indeed. Madero has established headquarters in a small adobe hut within a stone's throw of the New Mexico border. Here he is besieged constantly by curious throngs of people, and here, too, he holds daily conferences with peace envoys.

The soldiers are poorly clad, having nothing that resembles in the slightest degree a uniform. They are of all ages and conditions. There is one group of Indians who wear clothing only because they are compelled to do so. But all seem in good health and good spirits. Every man is armed and carries about his person an ample supply of ammunition. The discipline is very poor. Indeed, to an onlooker there seems to be no discipline at all, and yet the camp seems orderly. No drills of any kind are held, and in the matter of getting food it seems that every fellow gets what he can and prepares it himself. Under the terms of the armistice they are allowed to purchase supplies of food and clothing in Juarez and El Paso, and they seem to have enough. No sanitary precautions are observed and all of them are drinking the muddy water of the Rio Grande, in which they bathe and wash their clothing. If they remain long in this camp sickness is almost sure to afflict them. They have only improvised tents, made by spreading their blankets over the low mesquite bushes which abound.

Characteristics of Madero.

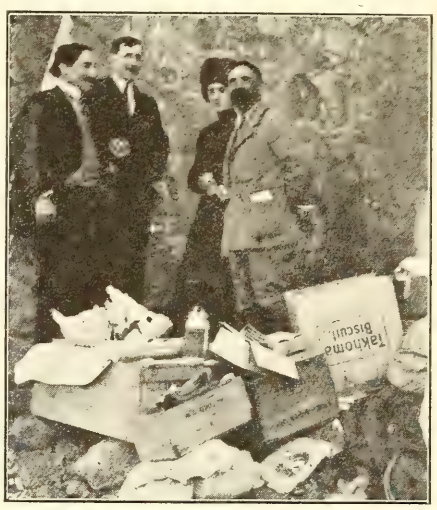
Madero is a man of about forty years of age, short of stature, with a pleasant eye and wearing a short, full beard. He is most cordial to all callers and holds an informal reception for the crowd every afternoon. Standing in front of the door of his adobe hut he shakes the hands of all who pass by. He is more a reformer than a soldier. He seems to have no knowledge of military tactics and does not care to inform himself. He is of humane disposition and desires to avoid bloodshed if possible. By consenting to an armistice he has placed himself in position to merit for himself and his cause the sympathy of all who are familiar with the situation even if he should be compelled to prosecute the war to the bitter end.

But what are the reforms advocated? They have reference to the elections, which have been little more than a farce for years; to the proper distribution of lands which are now owned almost entirely by a few wealthy men; and to the judicial system. All of these reforms are recognized as just by Diaz himself in his most recent administrative acts. But there is a pronounced and widespread feeling that he cannot be trusted to carry forward such measures even with the help of the new cabinet. That he has been, in many respects, a good executive, no one denies; but he has grown old, has been too long in power, and is too much under the control of certain wealthy families like those of Terrazas and Creel and others like them.

Masses in Poverty.

The condition of the masses is pitiful. They are in abject poverty, in practical serfdom, ignorant and priest-ridden. The vast resources of the country lie undeveloped and the people suffer for the common necessities of life. No one who is at all acquainted with the situation can fail to regard the motives which have prompted the present revolution as entirely worthy, and to applaud as patriots the men who are leading. The army of insurrectos is a crude one and doubtless many of the soldiers are mere bandits; some are American outlaws. But the cause appears to be just. It is the cause of humanity against vested interests, and it should succeed. Madero is an unassuming man with no grasping aspiration for place or power. He dislikes war and sincerely hopes for a peaceful settlement of the whole affair; but he insists that he must have ample assurances that the reforms he is advocating will be speedily inaugurated and vigorously prosecuted.

At present the dove of peace is hovering over the whole warlike situation and it is quite confidently believed here that the war is practically over. If such a result is secured, it will be a notable indication that we are rapidly coming upon times when our difficulties are to be settled by milder and more humane measures than by force of arms. In any event it is an eloquent testimony to the growing sentiment averse to war that an army of revolutionists on the eve of almost certain victory in arms, should be persuaded to pause to consider peace measures. It was not always so.



Dr. Cook, the Arctic Explorer (on the Left) at Lunch with Madero and His Wife.

El Paso, Texas.

San Francisco Letter

An article in The Christian Century on church conditions in San Francisco is being widely discussed on the Pacific coast, and the end is not yet. Edward I. Cahill, of "The Call," reviewed the article favorably, but took occasion to comment on the city's clergy and here the fun began. Dr. Rader, of Calvary Presbyterian, took Mr. Cahill to task, and preached a sermon on the place and power of the preacher in the life of the nation. Several other laymen and ministers mixed up the controversy and the text was so twisted as to make the article a criticism of San Francisco's clergymen. And now come certain Catholic papers citing all this as the proof that Protestantism is breaking down. And all this without seeing the article in question.

The San Francisco papers are not usually open for religious discussions, but this time they seem to have been interested, so the author of The Christian Century article was given space to reply. He did so under the caption, "The Cause of Impotency in the San Francisco Churches." What he said touched off a little more powder. That Eastern and Middle West preachers may know just what touches off powder out West in church circles, here are some of the things that were said:

"The church in San Francisco is wedded to the past; between it and many of its ministers there is a great gulf fixed. It is not the failure of Protestantism, but of institutionalism and of dogmatic and traditional religion. There is not a particle of truth in the oft-repeated assertion that the pew is ahead of the pulpit. The view-point of the church is that of the sixteenth century; the view-point of its clergy for the most part is modern. In a new society like this, alteration is the very genius of the social order. The church is the only institution that is refusing to undergo the process. In the history of civilizations any institution that refused to be altered was destroyed. The West has inherited a folk-lore from the sections the other side of the Rockies. It has not sensed its new environment. No wonder there is not adaptation. Ask most any layman the trouble and he will say, 'We need more preaching of the old Jerusalem gospel.' Press him to explain himself and you will quickly learn that his conception of such a gospel is highly colored by the traditional theology of his own denomination. Ask any thoughtful minister as to the trouble and he will respond, 'The church out here must accept the conclusions of modern scholarship and also shift the point of social emphasis.' But right here the church and the clergy part company.

"The West has three kinds of preachers. First, there is the one who is preaching traditional dogma and doesn't know it; secondly, there is the one who is doing the same and does know it; thirdly, there is the one who deals in spiritual platitudes. There is a rapidly developing fourth class who refuses to preach either traditional dogma or pious babel, and it is significant that these are about the only ones who have any trouble with their congregations.

"The theory current in orthodox circles that the great wickedness of San Francisco explains the decadence of the church is not true. The weakness of the church proves nothing against the morals of this city; if it proves anything it is that San Francisco has rejected many Middle Age dogmas that other cities accept. The time may come when this city will fawn upon a powerful institutionalism, but not now. What a pity it is that religious authority out here is looking backwards when all else faces the radiant future."

It is strange that any thing so mild as this and so obviously true should cause acrimonious discussion. The significant thing about it all is that denial of the text of the original article is not being made: instead, there is exhortation, personal invective, and not a little cant. On the other hand many clergymen of all denominations are saying, "The things said are true; keep it up." But no fear, it will keep itself up, for a new day in the life and the thought of the church out here it at hand, and most of the Disciple preachers are to the fore.

Alameda, Calif. J. R. PERKINS.

Every parent who allows himself the luxury of his children's society may expect to be imitated in such measure as the child approves. Such imitation is obedience, even though it may accord very imperfectly with the word of the parental command.—E. S. Martin.

Book Award for Best News Item or List of Items

In order to raise the quality of our news contributions and increase their quantity—The Christian Century proposes to give each week until further notice, a book worth from $1 to $2.50 for the best-told news item or list sent in. Copy must reach the office not later than Friday morning, and is to be furnished exclusively to The Christian Century. The points on which the award will be made are: (1) The importance of the subject matter (2) the interpretation of the subject matter, and (3) the interesting style in which it is reported. The length of the article will not count. It may run from 100 to 600 words. The writer will take the editorial point of view unless his name is to appear as the author. The award will be announced in each issue of the paper for the preceding issue. The item will be designated and at least three books given from which choice may be made, but the name of the author will not be published. Illinois reporters will send their news to the Springfield office. All others should be sent to the main office.

God or Mammon

The Story of a Young Preacher Who Was Led Into the City and Tempted

BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES

Rossman, Ph. D., Professor of Sociology in McMullen's Theological Seminary, glanced down the list of names in his class book. He was deciding who should make the first recitation. Near the bottom of the list his eyes rested; "Mr. Wakefield!" he announced in the crisp, copperplate tones, so easily recognized about the campus.

A tall, brown-haired young fellow at the extreme left of the class-room stood up. A fine-looking fellow, this Wakefield, with frank open face, bright eyes, and an orator's mouth. He was so clean, so alert,—the type of young man that stands a good chance of succeeding in life no matter what he undertakes.

Rossman, Ph. D., liked Wakefield, though it was doubtful if that young theologue was ever sure of it. Rossman was not demonstrative; most people called him cold, but the student body had labelled Rossman, "O. K." and that ended it. In truth this Doctor of Philosophy was the star of McMullen's faculty, and a star despite his abrupt speech, his cynicisms, and a disagreeable habit of pointing out the thorns on the roses. But then, when a college professor is well up in his line, and the author of a book on socialism that is selling in its "eightieth thousand," he becomes quite immune to petty criticisms.

Wakefield idolized Rossman. He worked harder to please him than any other member of the faculty and Wakefield took high rank in all his classes.

"Mr. Wakefield," continued the professor, "I am thinking more and more that our work in the class-room is too theoretical, too technical. I fear we spend too much time among the clouds. I dare say that you and the rest of the class,—you at any rate, have the text of today's lesson down pat, but as to the practical application of the principles of the lesson? Ah, that is quite another and a different matter, isn't it? Suppose we get down to a homely everyday sort of a discussion. I want to put a question to you, Mr. Wakefield. You must know that there are in numerous churches rich men whose wealth is ill-gotten—'predatory wealth'— we call it. It couldn't have been made honestly. Now, these very men are oftenest holders of front pews, occupants of church offices, deacons and elders, if you please. Usually, these men are generous givers, too. They make big gifts annually to philanthropic enterprises and their gifts are invariably accepted. Now, just as long as the churches tolerate this condition and preachers gloss it over with pious platitudes, what can we expect but the fattening of the classes off of the masses? And, sir, what attitude do you think the minister should take when he finds such a state of affairs in his own church?"

Wakefield's answer came glibly enough: "I should say that when such a condition as you describe, is known, really known to the pastor, he should make it his business to waken the conscience of his people, point out their sin, and insist on the fullest restitution to the injured persons. If they refuse to do this, then I think the minister's duty is plain—he should resign."

"Very good, Mr. Wakefield, very good—for the class-room, splendid for a baccalaureate; but," and the professor's voice grew cynically raspy, "I have observed when theological students get into the active ministry, they experience a 'change of heart'—that's the term, isn't it? Big salaries, prominent pulpits and social position seem to count most then."

It was an unkind stricture, and while Rossman's pupils were used to his sarcasm and rather liked it, this was different, and it stung. Wakefield's face flushed, but his voice was firm and very even-toned as he replied:

"Pardon me, Doctor Rossman, but I think you have painted the picture darker than facts would seem to justify; I believe most ministers have a conscience on just such a condition as you pointed out, though, of course, it is frequently difficult to get at the facts."

"Very few try, I venture to say," rejoined the professor, smiling grimly. "I shall watch your career with much interest, Wakefield. That will do."

This incident took place in February, and in June of the same year Baxter Wakefield was graduated from the seminary with the honors of his class. His commencement speech was on "The Minister's Social Message," and the views of Rossman, Ph. D., were written large all over it. As for that eccentric scholar he was so moved by the delivery of Wakefield's address that he did that which for him was unique—he openly praised the speech and alluded to Baxter as "a coming man."

Wakefield by virtue of his natural ability and student attainments had his choice of half a dozen pulpits. He found it difficult to decide between two of the places, but by the aid of Professor Rossman he finally selected Albany, Indiana. The church there was only an average congregation judged by the usual standards of wealth, numerical strength, building, etc., but it was a promising field nevertheless. Besides, Professor Rossman pointed out to Baxter the proximity of Indianapolis and the advantages that would accrue in the way of lectures, libraries and other aids to culture.

So Albany it was. In September Baxter Wakefield was duly installed as pastor, and almost from the first the little church realized that it had drawn a prize. The young minister's next move of importance was the not unusual one of falling head over heels in love with one of the fair members of his flock and in the autumn of his second year at Albany he married pretty Mattie Lander. The young couple were well mated. And they were so wholesomely enthusiastic and likable that the church grew much after the fashion of Jack's beanstalk. Among other features of progress a campaign for a new building was launched by Baxter and successfully carried to completion.

After the dedication the first out-of-town speaker to occupy the pulpit was Professor Rossman, who lectured to a crowded house on "The Peril of Vested Interests." It was a proud minute for Baxter when he introduced the professor as "my distinguished friend and former instructor, Professor Harmon Rossman, Ph. D."

One bright spring morning well toward the close of his fourth year as pastor at Albany, Baxter went as usual to the post-office for his mail.

"Only two letters for you this morning, Rev. Wakefield," commented the comely assistant as she handed them to the popular young pastor. Baxter bowed his thanks and stepped away from the little window to give his place to others who waited their turn, glancing as he did so at the letters he had just received. One he noted was from his denominational publishing house and the other bore the return card of "Alanson Waller, Cincinnati, O."

Usually, Baxter tarried awhile in the post-office, for in a town of 3,000 inhabitants that place serves as a sort of social clearing house for the people. But on this particular morning, after receiving his mail, he lingered just long enough to inquire concerning the health of a single parishioner, then left the office and shaped his steps homeward.

"What business, I wonder, can Alanson Waller have with me?" he mused. "Well, I'll soon see," and he slit the envelope with the blade of his penknife and took out the letter. Baxter's eyes opened very wide as he read the single sheet, and as he finished it he gave a short, sharp whistle. Then he put the envelope and letter in the side pocket of his coat and as he came alongside the parsonage yard fence, vaulted nimbly over it, ran across the yard and disappeared through the front door.

"Mattie, what do you think? 'Calvary,' Cincinnati wants me!" he exclaimed, as he burst into the cozy sitting-room where his wife sat sewing, and before that very pretty person could reply proceeded to pull her out of the low rocker and whirl her about the room in a most unministerial manner, to say the least.

"Stop, Baxter, stop it!" the pretty one managed to say, midst many whirlings, "I'm not a top and there's no use trying to spin me. Really, Baxter, I'm ashamed of you. If you don't have a care no church will want you. Behave yourself now, or someone will report us as dancing in our home and setting a bad example!"

"Let's sit down then," laughed Baxter, "and read this letter together."

And the young couple sat down on a convenient couch, quite like two rollicking children. Baxter spread the letter out on Mattie's knees and they read:

Cincinnati, O., April 20, 1907.

"The Rev. Baxter Wakefield,
Albany, Ind.

Dear Sir and Bro.:—As you doubtless know, Calvary Church has been without a pastor for several weeks. We are looking for just the right man to take up the work. You have been highly recommended to us by men in whose judgment we have every confidence.

"Then, too, several of our members heard your address at the State Convention two years ago and were delighted. They have not forgotten you. We have every reason to believe that you would fit into the situation admirably.

"The field here is almost unlimited and to the right man affords wonderful opportunity. We want you to visit us Sunday, May 7, preach for us and look the field over. In case you secure the call, I may say the salary will be $2,200 per year with modern parsonage and six weeks' vacation.

"We hope for a favorable reply at an early date. Fraternally yours,

Alanson Waller,
For the committee."

"Twenty-two hundred a year and a parsonage!" exclaimed Mattie.

"And six weeks' vacation!" chimed in Baxter.

"And lots of wedding fees," continued Mattie.

"Well, there is some difference between a twelve hundred dollar salary without a parsonage and a twenty-two hundred with a modern one," admitted Baxter; "but," he added, "we can count on a big difference in living expenses, too."

"And the people here! Have you thought how hard it will be to leave them, Baxter, to say nothing of my own folks? Just think how good they've all been to us. Why, some of them are saints. There is blind Miss Elsa. We will never find her equal anywhere; and there's our modern Enoch, Uncle John Bell."

"Yes, and there's dear old mother Palmer—Matt, she idolizes you."

"Bax', it's going to be a whole lot harder leaving Albany than we ever imagined." Mattie's eyes were swimming now.

"What geese we are, pet." Baxter's voice was low and vibrant as he went on: "I haven't got the call yet and maybe never will. Anyway it will be time enough to consider these things when I do. The question is, shall I visit 'Calvary' at all. What do you think, pet?"

"I think you should go. Why, it's a great opportunity, one you've made for yourself, too. Here, for four years you have put in your best licks and don't the people know that you have had half a dozen calls to larger fields at increased salaries and that you turned them all down instanter?"

"Not quite 'instanter,' pet. I tell you I was a good week getting my courage screwed up sufficiently to say "Nay" to that Lexington proposition."

"Well, you did it, so there! I don't like to think of leaving Albany. It is the only home I've ever known and you have made friends here that you may well prize. Everybody has been just lovely to us; but I am sure it will be a big mistake to decline the invitation of Mr. What's his name, Walker?"

"Waller," corrected Baxter, the Honorable Alanson Waller, the man who gave $10,000 to our Foreign Missionary Board last year. He's a Congressman, a big manufacturer, and one of our leading laymen. Don't you remember that it was he who presided over the business men's session at the Nashville convention?"

"Seems to me I do recall him now, but Bax', you know we were just married then and I hadn't eyes for anybody but you—not even for the great Congressman Waller, destined to be one of your parishioners, 'Doctor Wakefield.' " And Mattie affected a very dignified posture and bowed very low.

Baxter laughed heartily: "Matt, you are all right—if the 'Calvary' folks could only see you, there'd be no doubt of my getting the call. Say, I do wish I could take you along."

"So you are going then, sure enough going?" she inquired, ignoring the wish he had expressed so fervently.

"Well, I don't know, but I think I shall," he answered, the smile on his face giving place to a sober expression. "I think you are right, as you usually are. I have been here for four years, built a new church, added over a hundred to the congregation, and got the debt paid. Some other man can take the work and do even better than I."

They were standing up now and the pride and love-light in the girl-wife's eyes were softly brilliant. "Bax', my boy, I never was prouder of you in my life," she said, "and now run off to your den and tell Mr. Waller you will come. But before you go, I will kiss Dr. Wakefield." And she did, once, twice, three times.

Baxter held her fast. "Won't Rossman be surprised should I get this call? Dear old Ross." He spoke the words very low and affectionately.

Mattie's face sobered. "Maybe so. I don't know. He's too much of a knocker to suit me. I don't like his looks, Bax', nor that picture you carry everywhere with you, either. Actually, Baxter, I wonder sometimes if you don't think more of that man than you do of me."

"Sh! Why, Mattie, one would think you were jealous. Ross isn't a good looker, I'll admit that; but, my girl, he's pure gold; he's a real man through and through."

"Well, it was nice of him to send you an autographed copy of his latest book," Mattie acknowledged. "But now, that letter, answer it right off and say you will go."

Baxter was a long time writing that letter to suit his critical taste, but it so happened that the seventh copy impressed him as just about right and that evening as he went to prayer-meeting he posted it.

The fast Cincinnati train on the Big Four carried many passengers the evening of May 6th, but none who felt on better terms with Providence and mankind generally than the Rev. Baxter Wakefield. As the train swept through the suburbs of the Queen City, he felt strangely elated. Twenty-eight years old and announced to preach tomorrow in old, historic "Calvary"—a possible successor to a long list of brilliant and scholarly men, among them the celebrated Dr. Pillsbury. Was every young fellow so blest? What a great world and how good God was!

Baxter was the first to swing off the car as the train came to a stop. A very handsome, well-groomed man, with a smooth-shaven face and a singularly winsome smile, was waiting for him. Baxter recognized him instantly. It was Alanson Waller.

"Is this the Rev. Mr. Wakefield? Ah, yes, I thought as much," exclaimed Mr. Waller, as he gave the young clergyman a warm clasp of the hand and relieved him of his bag. "You ministers can never quite conceal your calling, even if you do wear business clothes when you travel. What is it that gives you away—something about the mouth, isn't it?" Mr. Waller smiled broadly and continued, "I am very glad you came. My car is just outside the station. This way," he directed, taking his guest by the arm and gently ushering him out of the building to the side of a large touring car, from which the chauffeur alighted to take Baxter's bag. They seated themselves in the automobile, which was soon gliding smoothly away. How fine and luxurious it all was!

"Are you familiar with Cincinnati's streets?" affably inquired Mr. Waller.

"Only partially so," replied Baxter, "I have been here a dozen times, I suppose, but never for more than a day or two."

"We have a great city, dirty down here, but very beautiful out on the hill tops, I assure you. I think you would like it here. This is Fountain Square and now we turn north."

Alanson Waller was certainly an entertaining conversationalist. He chatted pleasantly about Cincinnati's attractions, its many places of interest, such as the "Zoo," "Eden Park," "Burnett Woods," etc. The young minister was charmed. He had not supposed that a man of as large affairs as his host could be so cordial, so courteous. As the car bounded along, past business streets and through residence avenues, Baxter was conscious again of the spirit of elation, such as he had experienced on the train. How good to be living! How fine to be young! What a privilege to preach the gospel; and was ever another ministerial fledgling so blest as he? "If only Mattie were along," he kept repeating under his breath.

"Here is our home," Mr. Waller announced, as the car turned into a well-kept yard and glided up to a commodious brown stone residence. They left the machine coughing its way to the garage and entered the house. In the reception hall Mr. Waller presented Baxter to Mrs. Waller and their two daughters, Jessie and Florence, girls still in their teens. The Wallers were a hospitable folk and they took a genuine pleasure in showing young Wakefield every courtesy. Baxter was delighted. Only once during the evening did he get entirely back to earth and that was when Jeff Clayton, a fraternity brother and fellow student at McMullen, called him over the phone.

Baxter had quite forgotten that Jeff, who—after a year in theology—had taken to law, was now located in Cincinnati. After an exchange of greetings, Jeff explained that he had seen that evening the newspaper announcement that Rev. Baxter Wakefield was to preach tomorrow at "Calvary," and was likely to be called to that church. Jeff was mighty proud of his "frat" brother and hoped he'd land the job. Jeff was also sorry that he had to be out of the city Sunday and so couldn't hear the sermons, but he was to return Monday morning and would Wakefield lunch with him at the Unity Club? Wakefield would, and, furthermore, Wakefield would like to know how Clayton hit on his being at the Waller's.

"Dead easy," was Jeff's answer. "He is 'Calvary's' big man; everybody knows that. Soon as I read that notice, I knew where to locate you."

Baxter returned to the library with an increasing admiration for Mr. Waller and his Christian home, an admiration that deepened into something close akin to awe when a few minutes later that good man conducted a beautiful, yet simple, family devotional service.

"Sunday is a very busy day with us, Brother Wakefield," his host said as they rose from their knees. "I teach the Bible class; Mrs. Waller has a girls' class and my daughters teach in the mission Sunday-school. You, too, will need a good night's sleep that you may be fresh for your work, so let us say good-night and pleasant dreams."

Baxter feared he was in for a battle royal with insomnia, for the events of the afternoon and evening were telling on his nerves. Fortunately, his fears were not realized; he had been in bed only a little while when sleep came to him as it comes to a healthy child. When he awoke the Sunday morning's sun was flooding his room.

It was eleven o'clock Sunday night when the Rev. Baxter Wakefield switched off the lights in his room at the Waller home and slid beneath the fine white coverlets of the bed. He was very, very tired and also very, very happy. It had been a great day for him, and the young clergyman lived it all over again as he lay there resting his weary body. To begin with, the weather was perfect, and a clear sunshiny Sunday always cheers the minister who has a carefully thought-out message to deliver.

Promptly at nine o'clock he entered the automobile with the Wallers and was present at the opening of "Calvary's great Sunday-school.

At 10:30 a. m., he marched out of the choir room at the head of the quartette and took his place near the desk. How fine and how very large the auditorium looked. What a vast sea of faces! Now, the great organ was sounding and its mighty notes seemed to shake the building. Then came an inspiring song service and after this a devotional period in which the soul of the young preacher went out to the Heavenly Father in a prayer of eloquent simplicity and childlike trust. Then the sermon—Baxter felt he had never preached better in all his life. The boy preacher was eloquent—naturally so—and something quite indefinable told him that that audience was his very own. After the benediction, a great throng pressed about him, shaking his hand and pouring praise into his ears. Baxter began to feel he had something in common with the political candidates for high offices for his arm soon ached dreadfully and he wondered if he should be able to close his right hand again. Back then to Waller's for dinner. More gracious words in appreciation of his sermon. Then a little season of quiet in his room, interrupted shortly by the arrival at Waller's residence of two reporters, seeking an interview with "Doctor" Wakefield. Next, the evening service and a sermon that Baxter knew to be far below the standard of his morning discourse; still after the service people praised it and many came

(Continued on page 17)

Our Readers' Opinions

A Little More Light.

The writer has been connected with the Christian church for fifty years, and while he has passed the Osler age, he yet feels an interest in many of the religious and social problems of the day. He does not feel too old to learn and is ever ready to receive instruction from any source and from any one who has knowledge to impart. Even before he entered his "teens" he became a reader of the periodical and general literature of the Disciples. The Millenial Harbinger and Christian Baptist were as entertaining to him as a novel. The Christian Century, the Standard and Evangelist have always found place in his home from the beginning of each. He reads them with pleasure and profit, finding much to commend and little to condemn.

1. In all the years that have passed, it was not until very recently that he had noticed the terms "affusion baptism" and "immersion baptism." These terms he found in a recent editorial in the Christian Century. When he saw them he rubbed his eyes, looked at the title of the paper, and wondered if he was awake. He had been taught that baptism was a specific act and that was immersing or dipping, that Christian baptism was the immersion of a penitent believer in water in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. He had been taught that baptism and sprinkling were different words in the original and had different meanings: baptism meaning the immersion of a body in water, and sprinkling the application of water to a person.

2. Now, the writer wants a little light. When the Saviour gave commission to his disciples, telling them, "Go, teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit," did those disciples know what he meant for them to do? Did some of the apostles administer Christian baptism by affusion and others by immersion, or did they administer either as the candidate should choose?

3. If affusion was the act required in Christian baptism, would not Paul's reference to baptism as a burial seem foolish to the people? If immersion in water was required in Christian baptism, would not Paul have been understood? If Paul, who doubtless was a fine scholar, well versed in Greek, Hebrew and other languages, understood the meaning of the word, would he not describe it in a way that all would understand?

4. Now, if immersion in water was required, as Paul seems to understand, when and by whose authority was affusion substituted? Who gave authority to change a specific act that Christ asks one to perform? Is it fair to beg the question by saying that God has set his seal of approval by giving affusionists and immersionists His Holy Spirit to each equally alike?

Surely light is wanted that we, the "lay members," may know where we stand.

5. There is yet another question on which the writer seeks light. The Century, and some of its correspondents, have been taking issue with the fathers or leaders in the restoration movement for not admitting to membership the pious unimmersed, or those the Century would say had "affusion baptism" administered to them. They tell us that we are illogical, that we recognize the affusionists as Christians, but will not admit them into our church.

Let us see. In the beginning of the last century the Campbells and others found a divided church. The cause was suffering. Studying the situation, they determined, as far as they could, to unite the people of God. They studied the causes leading to division, coming to the conclusion that the religious world had wandered or strayed away from the simplicity of the Gospel. They determined to go "back to Christ." Through their studies they came to the conclusion that Christian baptism was the immersion of a penitent believer in water, and that only penitent believers were the subjects of baptism.

6. As is well known, those who originated the restoration movement expected to work within denominational lines. Their message for the union of all God's people was not well received, and one by one, or in groups, they were forced out. Banding together as disciples of the Master, they urged their plea for Christian union. They affirmed over and over again that they were not to be considered a denomination, but only some of God's people banded for a certain purpose.

7. Telling the people for what cause they were banding together, they asked all who would agree with them to help in the great work. They told the people they had no creed but Christ, no confession save the belief that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God, and no rule of practice other than the word of God. Believing that Christ and his apostles taught the immersion in water of a penitent believer only was Christian baptism, and that to be valid baptism was to be administered only to penitent believers, infant baptism could not be recognized.

8. Now, if I am right in what was taught by the fathers of this movement, could they, without stultifying themselves, admit to membership the affusionist, even though they acknowledge him as a Christian, one who was trying to walk in the footsteps of the Master, and but blindly walking therein? Believing, as they do, with respect to baptism and its subject, could they do otherwise than they have done?

Chicago. S. J. CLARKE.

[Our correspondent is one of the most respected of our Chicago laymen. We take pleasure in receiving his article and in replying to his inquiries, conceived as they are in so earnest and kindly a temper.

The numbers have been prefixed to certain paragraphs for the sake of showing the connection of our replies.

1. This is perhaps sufficiently answered on the editorial pages in the article, "Concerning Immersion-baptism."

2. The apostles surely understood what Jesus meant. No thought of administering baptism by affusion could have entered their minds.

3. Paul's beautiful association of the outward act of immersion with the historic facts of Christ's death, burial and resurrection and with the convert's death to sin, the burial of the old self and the resurrection to a new life, not only shows that immersion was the common practice but it invests immersion with a new meaning, mystical and spiritual. It Christianizes immersion, one might say. Prior to Paul's time it was a Jewish ceremony taken over into the new religion. Paul's poetic mind transformed it by filling it with distinctive Christian symbolism.

4. Affusion became a substitute for immersion in the third and fourth centuries, as is well known, beginning as "clinic baptism" and gradually extending to general use. We are not sure that we understand what our correspondent means by the last query of this paragraph. We do not see any question to "beg." If his meaning is that God has not set his seal of approval upon affusion, The Christian Century is in perfect accord with him.

5. The Christian Century has not been discussing receiving the "pious unimmersed" or those who "had 'affusion-baptism' administered to them." These are not fair terms in which to describe those persons whose fellowship is under discussion. Those for whose admittance into our local congregations we have been pleading are Christians, members of the Church of Christ.

6 and 7. These paragraphs are an excellent description of the origin and purpose of the Disciples. The "certain purpose" for which they were banded together was to practice Christian union. They asked all who desired Christian union to begin at once to practice it—by renouncing all creeds but Christ, all names but His name, all forms of baptism but the one to which He submitted, all tests of fellowship, whether in respect to church membership or participation in the Lord's Supper, save those which he enforced. This was a far-reaching and radical program. It laid the axe at the root of the tree of sectarianism. It was not to be expected, however, that this principle of unity could be applied clear through at one stroke. And as a matter of fact it was not. In their earnest desire not to seem to be setting up a new denomination, these early Disciples became Baptists, hoping, as Mr. Clarke states, to work out their principles within denominational lines. They maintained an unabsorbed identity within the Baptist fold for twenty years. Finding that their principles could not be practiced happily within the lines of the Baptist denomination they withdrew to the number of perhaps 25,000.

But their principle of unity had in the meantime suffered a sectarian twist by their efforts to adjust themselves to Baptist procedure.

The traditional practice of the Disciples in refusing membership in their churches to Presbyterians, Congregationalists and other members of the Church of Christ who had not been immersed at baptism is a survival from the period when the Disciples were trying to be good Baptists.

With Baptists this sectarian practice was perfectly consistent. They were a sect, are yet a sect, and take no offence in being called such. They assume the right to divide those who think as they think into a denomination apart from the main body of the Church of Christ.

With the Disciples, on the contrary, this sectarian practice was flagrantly inconsistent. By their principles they were not a sect, are striving yet not to be a sect, and are sensitive to being called such. They deny the right of any group of Christians who happen to think alike to divide themselves into a denomination apart from the main body of the Church of Christ. They assert that Christ's principle of unity is so fundamental and compelling that if it is once grasped it will hold together in the one body Christians of the widest diversity of view.

It is every way a matter for regret that the sectarian principle of Baptist church membership was adopted by the Disciples. Whether by means of it a larger number have been gathered into the Disciples "denomination" or not is a disputable point—and it is also a point of small importance. But that the practice of denominational membership has nullified our plea for unity in the church universal and in our own souls as well, is not a disputable point and is a point of immeasurable importance.

8. In view of the program of the "fathers" and these principles we do not see what our

(Continued on page 17)

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXI. Isaiah and Hezekiah

May 21. Text for Special Study, Isa. I.

QUESTIONS.

1. What are the difficulties regarding the reign of Hezekiah?
2. What was the striking contrast between the character of Ahaz and that of Hezekiah?
3. What reforms did Hezekiah institute in Judah?
4. What generous attitude did Hezekiah assume toward the people of northern Israel?
5. What elaborate arrangements did Hezekiah make for the celebration of a great Passover?
6. What were the relations of Judah and Assyria at this time?
7. What led to Hezekiah's revolt against the power of Assyria?
8. Would you regard this action of his as wise?
9. Who was the king of Assyria at this time?
10. What steps did he immediately take to punish Hezekiah?
11. What was Isaiah's counsel during this period?
12. What were the platforms of the two parties in Jerusalem? and to which did Isaiah belong?
13. What statements did Sennacherib make in his own records regarding the command of 701 B. C.?
14. How do these compare with the biblical narratives in II Kings 18-20 and in the Book of Isaiah?
15. What was the ocasion of Isaiah's sermon recorded in chapter16?
16. What are its leading features?
17. What is its teaching regarding religious ceremonies?
18. How do you account for Isaiah's confidence that Jerusalem would not be destroyed?
19. What demands were made by Sennacherib after he had agreed to spare the city?
20. What singular vindication of Isaiah's confidence occurred?

1. THE REIGN OF HEZEKIAH.

The date at which the death of Ahaz occurred and Hezekiah, his son, came to the throne is not known with certainty. In fact the chronology of Hezekiah's reign is one of the perplexing problems of Old Testament study. For our purpose the date 715 B. C., may be accepted as a satisfactory beginning of Hezekiah's rule.

He came to the throne in an unhappy time. His father, Ahaz, had reacted violently against all the prophetic traditions in Judah. The worship of Jehovah had been almost wholly abandoned in its official relation to the state. Idolatry of the most pronounced type had been established by the king. When Ahaz accepted the vassalage under Tiglath-Pileser, of Assyria, he journeyed to Damascus to meet that monarch, and thence sent back to one of his priestly aids the pattern of an altar which he had seen there. This altar was accordingly built and set in the court of the temple where it displaced the older altar of burnt offering. In many other ways Ahaz showed himself a thorough imatator of the heathen nations about him.

By some fortunate chance, of which we do not know, Hezekiah's training seems to have fallen to prophetic hands. He, therefore, came to the throne with something of Isaiah's spirit and perhaps as an actual pupil of the great prophet. He was a man of strong character, nor was he consistently hospitable to the prophet's suggestion. But on the whole his temper was excellent and his desire to support the religion of Jehovah was genuine. Gradually under prophetic direction the symbols of the meathen worship were removed. The temple was cleansed and the shrines of the heathen gods were destroyed from the vicinity of Jerusalem.

In the meantime it must be remembered that the northern kingdom had fallen under the assaults of the Assyrian power. The alliance made by Ahaz with Tiglath-Pileser quickly brought that conqueror to the chastisement of Peah and Rezin. Damascus fell in 732 B. C. Samaria continued for ten years longer, but was destroyed in the seige begun by Shalmanezer IV and brought to a completion in 721 B. C. by Sargon. Many of the inhabitants of Samaria were transported to eastern lands, and immigrants from Assyria were imported to fill their places. This resulted in a mixed population on which the later inhabitants of Judah looked with disfavor and distain.

It is to the credit of Hezekiah and his prophet advisors, the chief of whom was Isaiah, that they felt a certain responsibility for the religious care of this northern and unshepherded people. If the narrative of the Chronicler is to be taken as historically valid, Hezekiah sent invitations to the northern tribes as well as to his own people to come up to Jerusalem for the celebration of a great Passover, which he observed with elaborate rites, lengthening the period of its celebration from seven to fourteen days.

2. THE INVASION OF SENNACHERIB.

During these years the power of Assyria was growing, especially in its westward advances. It must be remembered that the objective of the Assyrian conquerors was not merely the territory of the coast-land, but rather Egypt, the great antagonist on the Nile. The approaches of Assyria toward the Egyptian frontier were regular and persistent. As already noted, Damascus fell in 732 B. C. and ten years later northern Israel lay prostrate under Assyrian subjection. Judah had saved herself apparently by her alliance with the Assyrian, made by Ahaz in 734. B. C. but Isaiah never ceased to believe that this alliance was fraught with constant danger, and that all trouble might have been avoided if Ahaz had been content to remain in his capital and let his two belligerent neighbors, Pekah and Rezin, do their worst. But in the circumstances Hezekiah came to the throne with the inheritance of the Assyrian vassalage. Judah had to pay a heavy tribute annually. There was a strong Egyptian party in Judah which was constantly inciting the court and the people to throw off this yoke, and to trust to the friendship of Egypt in case Assyria should attempt to reassert its power.

Isaiah, the most conspicuous figure in Jerusalem next to the king, consistently advised obedience to the covenant made with the Assyrians. In this conduct of his there was a certain high inconsistency with his first political policy. In the reign of Ahaz he had opposed the Assyrian alliance with all his power, because he foresaw the dangers in which it would involve Judah. But after the alliance was once made, he urged loyalty to it as the best means of averting trouble and of allowing the inner life of Judah to develop. He was, therefore, strongly allied with the pro-Assyrian party in the city, and was just as definitely opposed to the Egyptian party whose counsels he regarded as the height of folly.

This attitude of his is made clear by his prediction of the early fall of Ashdod in 711 B. C. (Isa. 20). In this message he comments caustically upon the uselessness of relying upon Egyptian help. In the same year he denounced with equal severity the folly of King Hezekiah in entering into friendly relations with the representatives of Merodach-Baladan of Babylon, a prince who was attempting to organize an alliance against the Assyrian power (Isa. 39.) Isaiah saw clearly the madness of such efforts to throw off the Assyrian yoke.

In spite, however, of all Isaiah's insistence upon loyalty, caution and distrust of Egyptian promises, Hezekiah accepted the counsel of the volatile and restless spirits in his court. The success of his reign seemed unbounded. Everything had been prosperous hitherto. The favor of God appeared to rest upon his rule. In the pride of his heart he imagined himself capable of defying the strong power of Assyria. He even dreamed of becoming the head of a strong combination of western powers to bid defiance to Assyria, relying upon the assistance of Egypt on the south.

The crisis came in 701 B. C. The refusal of Hezekiah to pay his customary tribute brought the quick response of Assyrian invasion. Sennacherib, who had followed Sargon on the throne of Assyria in 705 B. C., marched rapidly westward and entered Judah by way of Philistine cities which had already fallen into Assyrian hands. It is greatly interesting to read Sennacherib's own account of this invasion. On his cylinders he records the fact that he took forty-six of Hezekiah's cities, carried away 200,150 of Hezekiah's people into captivity, plundered the land of gold, silver and other precious possessions to an almost incredible extent, and shut up Hezekiah the king in his capital, Jerusalem, "like a bird in a cage." There the narrative breaks abruptly off without the customary record of the fall of the capital. The biblical narrative supplies the reason for this in the strange fate that befell the Assyrian army before Jerusalem. (Isa. 36, 37.)

3. THE GREAT ARRAIGNMENT.

The opening chapter of the book of Isaiah is a singularly illuminating commentary upon the condition of Judah at the period of its greatest humiliation. The reason why this chapter was selected as the one with which the prophetic messages of Isaiah were to begin we do not know, but its appropriateness as a picture of national delinquency and chastisement cannot be questioned. One has only to read these graphic verses to see how fierce has been the devastation, and how directly the suffering through which Judah was passing was attributed by the prophet to the religious and moral failures of the people and their leaders.

After the editorial note contained in verse 1, the prophet opens his arraignment of the nation because of its failure to understand the divine will in spite of all the instruction received. The Holy One of Israel, Isaiah's favorite name for God, had given them abundant warning, but they had been indifferent. The result is only too pathetic. Revolt and indifference had brought upon them a pitiable overthrow. The nation had become like a wayfarer, beaten and bruised, until there was no spot without its open wound. "Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire, your land strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate as if overthrown by strangers" (ver. 7). Zion is left like the little structure erected for the watchmen in the midst of a vineyard. Little is the difference between it and the utter overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah of old.

Then with strong denunciation of reliance upon the ordinances and ceremonies of religion the prophet condemned the leaders of Jerusalem, calling them "rulers of Sodom and people of Gomorrah." For the ritual of religion as a substitute for reality, Isaiah had only contempt. To him burnt offerings, processions to the temple, the burning of incense, the observance of the new month and Sabbath, the calling together of public meetings, the feasts of the sacred year, were all unspeakably futile and wearisome. He did not mean that they were of no value. Doubtless they had served a purpose in fixing attention upon certain features of religion. But it was the tendency of the time to make of them substitutes for a vital relation with God. This is always the danger which confronts a spiritual religion. Dependence upon even the most excellent practices comes dangerously near the point at which the religious part is devitalized and formalism and legalism creep in.

The prophet cries indignantly that he cannot put up with a solemn assembly coupled with iniquity of heart. God cares nothing for any gifts which men can bring, nor any prayers which they can offer, unless these are the expression of genuine piety and reverenc. What he really wants is the cleasing of life from selfishness and unsocial conduct. "Wash you," he says, "make you clean. Put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes. Cease to do evil, learn to do well; seek justice, relieved the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow" (ver. 16:17).

A moment's reflection would teach them the fact that sin is not lightly to be washed away. He asks a question, which in our version seems to be a positive statement; in reality it should have precisely the opposite significance. "Think for a moment," he says. "If your sins are as scarlet, shall they become white as snow? If they are red like crimson, can they become as wool? You appear to think so and to treat the whole matter lightly. In reality it is only by sincere obedience that you can gain divine approval. Continuance in your present careless mood means only destruction, and of this destruction I as a phophet of God am warning you."

Then cames a graphic picture of the unholy character of Jerusalem. Corruption and unrighteousness have taken possession of her people. What wonder then that God has brought upon the city its present disaster? Yet these sufferings must not be regarded as the end. They are only a means of cleansing Judah from her defilements. The unrighteous and immoral will be purged away. The signs of idolatry must be totally destroyed. Destruction must precede renovation and revival. The glorious future demands a present of chastisement and suffering. In such words the prophet pictures the present unhappy condition of Jerusalem, surrounded with enemies and paying the penalty of former transgressions. Only by righteousness and reformation of conduct can safety come.

4. ISAIAH AS STATESMAN.

During all this troublous period which saw Judah plunged into such suffering, Isaiah maintained unswerving confidence in the ultimate outcome. His four great theses he gripped with firm tenacity. The nation had sinned, the nation must suffer, a remnant should survive, and the future be glorious. A fixed part of this creed was the escape of Jerusalem from her enemies. Through all the difficulties and disasters of this Assyrian period Isaiah kept his faith in that happy outcome. Even when the chiefs of Sennacherib's invading force were demanding the instant and unconditional surrender of the city, Isaiah preserved his calm faith in the inviolable sanctity and safety of the city of God.

Was it political sagacity, or sheer prophetic insight which enabled him to insist again and again that Jerusalem should not fall? When court and king were overwhelmed with the disaster of the seige, Isaiah alone maintained his confidence in the outcome. He had protested against the Assyrian alliance in the days of Ahaz, and had been disregarded. He had counselled loyalty to the Assyrian compact when once it had been made and had protested against Hezekiah's submission to the Egyptian policy of revolt, and again he had been disregarded. Now, in spite of all, he maintained that Jerusalem should survive and that the present danger would be only a prelude to a lasting and happy prosperity.

His sheer confidence that Zion as the city of God could not fall into the hands of her enemies was triumphantly vindicated in the sequel. It required an audacity almost unthinkable for its maintenance. It became the basis of a doctrine that wrought great evil in later generations, as Jeremiah discovered, precisely as Paul's doctrine of justification by faith seemed to lend itself to an antinomian disregard of morals in the teachings of some rash and half-instructed interpreters of the great apostle's message in the New Testament times. But for the period in which Isaiah lived, it was a courageous and magnificent faith, and in its deeper spiritual meaning it is eternally true.

5. SMITTEN FOES.

Isaiah consistently preached during all this period the fact that the Assyrian was only a rod in the hand of God to chastise the proud and rebellious people of Judah (Isa. 10:5-12:6). Over and over he presented the figure of the overthrow of the invading army as soon as the discipline of Judah had been accomplished (Isa. 14:24-27; 17:12-14, etc.). It must have been an event of stupendous character when these confident forecasts were actually realized. Jerusalem had been invested by Sennacherib, and King Hezekiah to save his capital paid over to the invader an enormous tribute, stripping temple and palace for the purpose. The army was withdrawn and Jerusalem seemed to have escaped.

But rumors of an active alliance with Egypt and the probable coming of an Egyptian force to the north reached the Assyrian at his camp in Lachish, southwest of Jerusalem. Deeming it unwise to leave so strong a city in the path of his retreat should such become necessary, he sent back to Jerusalem a large force demanding the instant surrender and destruction of the city. The terror and dismay which followed are well depicted in Isaiah 33, which seems to reflect this situation. Every pledge had been violated by Sennacherib, but Hezekiah and his people were helpless. Nothing but submission remained.

In such a moment and as a last desperate resort the king called upon the prophet for advice and assistance. With a confidence that seems to us nothing less than madness, and yet when viewed in the light of the eternal purpose the highest proof of Isaiah's penetrating insight and magnificent confidence in God, he asserted that the Assyrian would never lay hands upon Jerusalem; that he would not shoot an arrow into it nor erect a seige mound against it; but that he should depart for his own country under stress of a divine rebuke.

The sequel seems unthinkable, and yet both the biblical narratives and the inscriptions of Sennacherib bear convincing evidence that it was true. Some disaster which the biblical writers called a visitation by an angel of Jehovah swept over the camp of the Assyrians, devastating it as with the plague. Vast numbers perished, and the remnant took up a hasty retreat to the east. Years later Sennacherib himself perished by assassination, and in this fact the Hebrew chroniclers saw a still further proof of the wrath of God upon his impious project.

In this glorious consummation of his public ministry, Isaiah makes his final appearance on the stage of Old Testament history. How long he survived these events we do not know, but his place in the regard of the nation had been established beyond all question. He was the greatest prophet who had thus far arisen as an interpreter of the divine will. It was not strange that his shadow should fall far down the history as almost the equal of that of Moses in national and religious significance.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will deal with "Micah and Social Justice." After that will come "The Messianic Hopes of Early Israel."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The chronology of Hezekiah's reign.
2. The reforms of Hezekiah, and their basis.
3. Relations of Judah and northern Israel after the fal of Samaria.
4. Isaiah as an orator.
5. The political teachings of Isaiah.
6. The effects of the Assyrian invasion on Judah.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic May 21: Growing into a Larger Work. Mk. 4:26-32. (Union Meeting with the Juniors and Intermediates.)

Growth should ever be the watchword of every Christian. Christian character is an achievement rather than a gift and is acquired only after long, patient and persistent effort. The two key words of our subject—growth and work—are the keywords to the Christian life in general as well as to the Christian Endeavorer in particular.

In a joint meeting, such as is contemplated in this lesson, naturally enough the Senior society must assume the major responsibility.

It should be clearly held in mind that the Adult Society is the proper goal for every Junior and Intermediate member, and that as they grow into this they are growing into a larger work. This must be done largely by the members of the Senior Society themselves. The society will not become attractive unless its members are attractive to the younger ones.

Moreover let no member of the Senior Society despise this work with the younger one. No one knows the possibilities wrapped up in a particular boy or girl either for good or for evil. When Abraham Lincoln was called "Long Shanks" by his companions in the pioneer forests of Kentucky because of his unsightly proportions and ill fitting garments no one dreamed of his real greatness or his destined fame. When that colored lad left his little old hut in Virginia with little or no money to make a trip of some five hundred miles, walking much of the distance because he had not friends to pay

(Continued on page 20.)

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

W. H. Kern, the pastor at Cisne, is holding a revival meeting at Jeffersonville.

M. O. Dutcher, who is pastor at Noble is to hold a meeting for his congregation during May.

The benevolent association offering from Denver Church Sunday-school on Easter Sunday amounted to $54.25.

Samuel H. Kuntz is to supply temporarily the pulpit at Lilly, preaching there every two weeks.

Cisne Church gave fifteen dollars on Easter Sunday for the benevolent association. W. H. Kern is pastor.

Dixon Church ,of which S. Elwood Fisher is pastor, received an offering of $19.66 in the Sunday-school on Easter Sunday.

William E. Adams, of First Church, Danville, spoke to the Masonic Fraternity last Sunday, the order attending his church in a body.

At last report, the National Benevolent Association had received from Illinois churches and Sunday-school a total of $1,368 as an Easter offering.

West Frankfort Church made an Easter offering of nearly twenty dollars for the St. Louis Orphanage on Easter Sunday. C. W. Freeman preachers here.

Walter A. Roberts is pastor at Sumner where the church has recently profited in a meeting by Lew D. Hill, which resulted in fifteen additions.

Charles H. Bloom, of New York, has been secured to hold a meeting at Rossville in September, and the congregation is already making plans in preparation for this event.

Bellflower Church is looking forward to a new church building. The ladies have recently set aside several hundred dollars as a starter for this fund. The minister is L. S. Harrington.

The Streator meeting with Vawter and Marty has resulted in one hundred and two additions in less than three weeks, nearly all being adults. The evangelists are assisting C. M. Smithson, the pastor.

The Easter offering at Manchester Church, of which S. R. Aldrich is minister, amounted to $15.50. This offering was for the benevolent association. The church here and at Pearl, to each of which Mr. Aldrich gives one-half time, are both in prosperous condition.

T. L. Cummings has been pastor of the church at Catlin for only two months. In that time the work has shown a decided improvement. The Sunday-school has grown so large as to compel more space for its accommodation. The basement of the church is, therefore, being finished to give the class rooms required.

Nelson G. Trimble, of Gary, Indiana, spoke at Salem in the interest of the Home Missionary offering on "Chicago's Giant Baby." The address was on Gary, the city of phenomenal growth, where Mr. Trimble's church is located. J. H. Brinkerhoff is pastor of the Salem Church, and has just enjoyed with his congregation, a Missionary Institute conducted by W. H. Waggoner.

Vienna congregation, ministered to by J. T. Alsup, invited the other churches of the town to meet with the Disciples on prayer-meeting night when the subject of the meeting was "Christian Union." It proved to be an enjoyable and profitable occasion. The Sunday-school of this church made an offering for benevolence on Easter Sunday, of twenty dollars.

The members of the Married Women's Sunday-school Class of Beardstown served supper at the church recently for their husbands, having one hundred twenty-five persons present. The pastor, G. W. Morton, Professor H. G. Russell and E. H. Kinney, the Sunday-school superintendent, made addresses.

Rufus A. Finnell's meeting at Christopher has assumed proportions beyond the expectation of the most sanguine. In fourteen days there had been one hundred and two additions and, partly as a result of the meeting, the town, ordinarily 'wet,' by a considerable majority at a recent election voted to become 'dry' with nearly two hundred majority. The meeting has stirred the entire community.

Carlinville Church, of which J. W. Porter is pastor, is holding a revival meeting which is to last for three weeks. Neighboring pastors will assist, each one for a week. The first week John R. Golden, of West Side, Springfield, will preach and will be followed by F. W. Burnham, of First Church, who in turn will be followed by C. W. Ross, of Litchfield.

A union meeting was recently held at Flora, where C. W. Marlow preaches, by Danield S. Toy, who was formerly associated with J. Wilbur Chapman, and as a result there have been numerous additions to the church. In recent weeks there have been thirty-two, of whom seventeen were by confession.

First Church, Springfield, let the contract last week for its new building to the McKee Construction Company, a local firm of contractors. The contract price was $79,500, which is for the bare building alone, not including the furnishings. The congregation is happy over the prospect of an early beginning for its new building. Ground will be broken at once.

At Augusta, where E. T. Cornelius ministers, there are promises of extra building equipment. It is expected a wing will be built on the present structure, the basement will be finished and a new steam-heating plant installed. The churches in this region are advocates of athletics. An inter-city church baseball league is organizing, with Camp Point, Clayton, Bowen and Augusta as the principal cities.

Robert A. Sickles, of Illiopolis Church, spoke to a banquet of men at Mount Auburn on the subject, "God's Masterpiece of Creation, or The Manly Man." There were one hundred and fifty men at the banquet, which was provided by the Men's Sunday-school Class, of which H. H. Wagner is teacher. This class has a very large membership, and is only about two months old. It is their purpose to hold a banquet every three months and secure outside talent for an address. The address of Mr. Sickles was enthusiastically received.

S. F. Fannon preaches at Brownstown, where seven thousand dollars has been raised toward a new brick edifice to cost about twelve thousand dollars. The work is prospering in an unusual way in this church. Prayer-meeting attendance numbers about 50 per cent of the membership. On a recent evening almost one hundred were present. Mr. Fannon also preaches at St. Elmo, where there is also a successful work being carried on, and the prayer-meeting here is practically as large as the one at Brownstown. Not long since a debt of thirty-five hundred dollars was liquidated on this church. Both churches are devoted and happy.

A Sunday-school class of young ladies in First Church at Springfield has been solicited by the pastor to assist in effecting added interest in the Sunday evening service, during May. Accordingly, they prepared a neat typewritten supplement for the regular church bulletin which was attached to call attention to the special effort they were making. Whether or not their effort is successful in securing a larger evening congregation, it is at least well that combinations of people like this shall have thrown upon them the responsibility, if only temporarily, in order that they may sense the problem which is constantly carried by the minister. Since our churches have become so large, one of the most disappointing failures is the minister's inability to fix responsibility on the individuals of his church.

News Editorials

Union on Foreign Field Not by Absorption.

Miss Minerva Guthapfel, a Methodist missionary from Korea, spoke at the Woman's National Missionary Jubilee Rally at Springfield. She has been speaking frequently in these rallies over the country and her messages have been listened to with great interest everywhere. She has an intense missionary enthusiasm, and represents what in recent days has come to be observed as a passion for Christian union on the foreign field. The words which she spoke on this subject thrilled every one of her auditors. There was extra earnestness in this part of her message, though she spoke constantly with extreme fervor. The following story was recited by her, being introduced without caution and yet recognizing its possible unpleasantness to her superior officers in the church. A Korean approached her for information. He held his hands behind his back until consent was given for the conversation. On withdrawing his hands, each one contained a small book, one "The Westminster Confession of Faith," and the other "The Methodist Church Discipline." Abruptly he inquired if these were written by the authors of the scripture text. On being advised that this was practically true, he hurled the searching question back. "Why don't they say the same thing?" The missionary was puzzled, but gave a somewhat stammering answer. He continued his embarrassing catechising. "Do we have to believe these to be saved?" The missionary's theological training had been extensive, but the questions were more drastic than she had been prepared to meet. She answered, it was not necessary to believe them to be saved, but to enter the church. The heathen said, "My brother who lives yonder,"—the territory ministered to by the Presbyterian church—"reads this book, and I read this other book." "But," he said, "when we have come into the church we will bring our two books together and build a bonfire and burn them both!" And the missionary expressed no dissatisfaction with his conclusion. Apparently she believed this would be a holy fire. The story reveals the fact that the Methodists on the foreign field are not assuming Christian union will be accomplished, either there or at home, by absorption of all Christians into their denomination. The willingness of this earnest missionary to give up, or burn up, the Methodist's discipline is one of many such evidences that, especially on the foreign field, there is a hopeful inclination to dispense with unessential and divisive elements in the churches.

Secretary's Letter.

W. H. Harding, of Maroa, has closed his splendid work there and is now on a trip into Canada for the purpose of looking over a proposed field of labor. If he does not accept it he will be available in Illinois. We certainly hope he will come back and that some good church here will call him.

T. J. Buck, of Cheneyville, is available for a new location, and he is highly recommended by the church and citizens of Cheneyville.

Soon as the month of May comes we begin to prepare to gather our statistics for Illinois. The blanks will be mailed to every church clerk and preacher in the state, so far as we know them, the last week in May. Our statistical year closes May 31st. For this purpose we need to know all recent changes of clerks and preachers, i. e., since Jan. 1st, and not only the addresses of preachers but where they preach. All such information is welcome, for it saves our postage bill, which is no small item. And when the statistical blank is received kindly fill it out carefully, all the facts called for, and mail it to us at once without delay. Every year we have to mail the blanks out three or four times and then only a little over half the churches respond, and we have a large bill of wasted postage. Promptness would save the society many dollars in this extra expense.

Geo. F. Duffy, of Holdenville, Okla., has located at McLean full time. He reports that the outlook seems favorable for a good work. We wish him abundant success.

The Centennial Church, Bloomington, celebrated their first anniversary of the dedication of the church building May 1st with a church supper. It was largely attended by the neighborhood friends as well as members in the city, and the fellowship was very pleasant. The ladies cleared about $60.

A number of churches have sent in their state offerings this week and many more should do so at once in order to be reported at the district conventions. We are starting on the last quarter of this missionary year and two-thirds of the churches have not helped the state work. Let us make this a record-breaker for the number of churches enlisted. 287 churches sent offerings last year, a gain of 20 over the year before. So far as reported to our office 252 churches have made offerings this missionary year. Can we not reach at least 335 by August 1st? That seems pitifully small for 746 churches. It depends mostly on the preachers.

Get ready for the state convention at Danville, Sept. 4-7, 1911. It is not too soon now to plan to be there and take a large delegation with you. Danville is a good railroad center, both steam and trolley.

W. D. DEWEESE, Office Sec'y Treas.
J. FRED JONES, Field Secretary.
Bloomington, Ill.

Chicago

QUARTERLY ASSEMBLY.

The last quarterly assembly of Chicago Disciples on April 30 at the First Methodist Church was both significant and indicative. The large and representative church delegations, the hearty response to the address of Secretary McCash, and the slogan of "$3,200 for city missions" signify a unity of purpose, as with a deeper consciousness of their mission Chicago Disciples face the task of evangelizing America.

In spite of the inclement weather it was evident when Pres. E. M. Bowman of the C. C. M. S. called the meeting to order that the congregation would be no small one. Every church was represented. Unusually large delegations were present. Jackson Boulevard led with a delegation of nearly one hundred; Metropolitan brought almost as many. The Russian mission was represented by Basil Keusseff and several Russian workers. Churches situated a great distance from the loop, as Irving Park, West End, Austin and Ashland Avenue, brought large representations. It is encouraging to note the increasing interest on the part of the churches in these quarterly assemblies. They arouse group consciousness and the local church then feels the grip and swing of our common city problems.

The music was in charge of the West End Church. In an admirable manner their trained quartet led the singing and furnished extra music numbers.

O. F. Jordan, secretary of the City Missionary Society, spoke of the great need of an increased city mission fund, and sounded a new slogan for our work. Inasmuch as $3,200 is yearly put into our city by the A. C. M. S. and C. W. B. M., it is not only fitting but necessary, urged Mr. Jordan, that Chicago raise a similar amount. Hence the standard of $3,200 for the city offering this year.

C. G. Kindred spoke briefly regarding a monument for the grave of "Father Larrabee." Though this noble man was a servant to the cause here, his grave is unmarked. It is the desire of a number of our Disciple leaders to erect a suitable monument, and on Decoration day to hold short services at the lot in Graceland. The speaker solicited no funds, knowing those interested would be glad to participate in this worthy undertaking by sending him an offering.

The address of the afternoon was delivered by I. N. McCash, secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. It is the belief of the American Society, said the secretary, that a vastly larger sum should be spent for the evangelization of Chicago. For the present, however, a small and wholly inadequate fund is all that can be placed here. The cities, to Mr. McCash, are huge "artificial personalities." By conscience plus prayer can the city problem be solved.

He brought before the assembly the work in the country at large. He spoke of the 45,000,000 unchurched people in our native land. These must be reached before the world can be saved. The Disciples of Christ have a great opportunity. Besides their fast increasing numerical strength, they are strategically located. Situated in the great Middle West section, they should deal effectively at first hand, with the great problems of church life in America.

However, in the planting of our new churches we should use judgment. Mr. McCash sees no need of our people rushing into overchurched towns and villages.

Yet we are indifferent to the needs and pleas of this home society. The speaker compared the church to an apple tree. The Foreign Missionary Society, the C. W. B. M., the church extension society all these come first to the tree and pluck the ripest and best of the fruit, leaving a few small apples in the top of the tree. These the home society by dint of labor and exertion must club out and with the seed of these apples grow more apples trees to supply more fruit for the other various societies. This should not be so. Home missions shuld have equal rights with foreign missions. No army is stronger than its base of supplies. Develop strong churches in America in order that they in turn may give for other activities. Yet Secretary McCash spoke in no bitter spirit. He warmly advocated giving to all our work. "Not less for foreign missions, but more for home missions" was his constant cry.

However our church is beginning to have a conscience upon the subject. More churches are becoming interested and liberal. The colleges too are becoming aroused. In our various institutions are found bands of students who are studying conditions in frontier states. For instance the Wyoming band during college prepare themselves by special research to serve upon graduation in this particular field.

The message of Mr. McCash was well received. Usually map talks and quoted statistics tire an audience. Not so on this occasion. The activity, consecration and enthusiasm of the speaker commanded attention. Using first one map then another, —pointing here and there— now hurling out a bunch of hard facts—now pleading with great tenderness—the speaker was master of the situation. He laid no stress on form. He had a message, not a speech. He came to arouse, not to entertain. His words were hot and burning. They were felt rather than heard; they were words from the mouth of a prophet secretary.

The message will burn away many obstacles. Funds will be forthcoming. In the heart of Chicago Disciples has been planted this message of the duty of American people to the land of their birth.

VAUGHAN DABNEY.

Our Readers' Opinions.

(Continued from page 13)

correspondent can mean by using the phrase "stultifying themselves" in connection with receiving into fellowship those whom Christ has already received into His church. Not only should there be no hesitancy in taking such a step but there should be great rejoicing on the part of the church that such Christians wished to unite with them in renouncing sectarian creeds, sectarian names, and the practice of sectarian forms of baptism.—THE EDITORS.

God or Mammon.

(Continued from page 12)

again to shake his hand and express the hope that he would become their pastor.

Mr. Waller had said that afternoon, that the board of officers would meet immediately after the evening service was dismissed and now that committee was in session and Baxter's fate was to be decided very soon. But that young man experienced not a single misgiving. He felt as certain of the call as he could ever be certain of anything.

In a very little while, Mr. Waller came out of the room where the committee was in session and approached his young admirer with outstretched hand

"You are wanted over here, Brother Wakefield," he said, "and I have the honor to inform you that you have just been called by a unanimous vote to be our pastor."

(To be concluded next week.)

Church Life

—The report of the Unification Committee will be found on another page. It was preceded by a resolution as follows: "that we reaffirm as the sense of this committee that the most feasible means of promoting the unification of our missionary and philanthropic interests in the organization of an annual convention of representatives of our churches." The report will probably be presented to the Portland Convention in July. Meantime it will be read with interest and will become, no doubt, the occasion of some debate in these piping times of peace in the brotherhood.

—The writer of the article, "To Help Save the Boy," on page 22 of last week's issue is awarded the prize for best news item. He will please accept this statement as due notification and indicate at once by postal card which of the following books he prefers:

1. New Ttestament Theology, by Henry C. Sheldon, Macmillan, $1.50 net.
2. The Truth of Christianity, by W. H. Turton, Putman, $1.25 net.
3. The Dilemma of the Modern Christian, by Edward H. Eppens, Sherman, French & Co., $1.20 net.
4. Americans All, by John Merritte Driver, Forbes & Co., $1.50.

Granville Snell is in a meeting at Laclede, Mo.

The congregation at Arkansas City, Kans., are planning for a new church home.

The church at Frankton, Ind., is being remodeled at a cost of $5,000.

Thos. B. Shearer, of Scottdale, Pa., has accepted a call to Hebron, Ohio.

Charles E. McVay is assisting in a successful meeting at Tonkawa, Okla, led by the pastor, James A. Crain.

At the meeting recently concluded at Lyon St. Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., there were 110 additions.

G. A. Hess, for several years pastor at Charles City, Iowa, has accepted the pulpit at Clinton, Iowa.

The congregation at Bloomfield, Ind., is prepairing to erect a new structure, to be completed before the end of the year.

A. P. Johnson, for some time pastor at Chickasha, Okla., has taken up his new work at Cleveland, Ohio.

B. A. Channer, for seven years pastor at Jewell, Kans., has resigned to accept the pastorate at Goodland, Kans.

F. J. Milnes, of Mendota, Ill., has received a call to the pastorate at First Church, Pendleton, Ore.

Ground has been broken for the erection of a new church home for the congregation of Hillsdale Church, Indianapolis, Ind.

The church at Decatur, Ind., J. M. Dawson, minister celebrated home-coming day recently.

F. B. Elmore, for several years pastor at Stuttgart, Ark., has accepted the unanimous call of the church at Chillicothe, Mo.

During the meeting recently held by C. M. Kreidler with his congregation at Elmira, N. Y., forty were received into the church.

Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Denver, Colo., lectured in Central Church, Spokane, Wash., in the interests of the Child's Welfare League.

A large atendance is expected at the annual convention of the Indiana Christian Missionary Society, to be held at Columbus, May 15, 16, 17.

T. J. Golightly, pastor at Caldwell, Idaho, reports that his congregation will unite in a meeting with the Baptists of that place, the two pastors to do the preaching.

The church at Redondo Beach, Calif., which was organized a year ago with twenty members now has fifty-seven and plans for a building are being discussed.

M. L. Buckley, formerly pastor at Collingwod, Ohio, began his work at Fifth Ave. Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., May 7. He takes the place of Homer E. Sala, who resigned some time ago.

A new church was dedicated recently at Clymer, Pa., the address being delivered by E. A. Hibler, of Pitsburgh, Pa. The building was erected at a cost of $15,000. M. Allen Hickley is the pastor.

W. E. Harlow is in a meeting at Laredo, Tex., with D. D. Boyle, the minister there. Mr. Harlow will later hold a meeting at Blandinsville, Ill., dedicating their new $20,000 church there about June 1.

W. C. Crerie has accepted the pastorate at Central Church, Findlay, Ohio, left vacant by the removal of W. W. Winbigler to Sharon, Pa. This congregation will participate in a union meeting to begin May 14.

N. D. Webber closed a meeting at Staunton, Ind., May 29, with fourteen responses to the gospel call. Church awakened, Bible-school increased and arrangements made for cancelling church debt.

C. M. Kreidler, of Elmira, is in a good meeting with the assistance of Mrs. J. E. Powell as soloist. The Elmira Church is pushing to the front under the vigorous leadership of Brother Kreidler.

Owing to the large audiences attending the meeting held at Smithville, Tex., by Richard Martin, services are being held in the opera house. During the first week there were thirty-two additions.

Temple Church, Kansas City, Kans., J. N. Crutcher, pastor, was dedicated April 30. George H. Combs, of Independence Boulevard Church, and Z. T. Sweeney assisted in the services.

A banquet was enjoyed by the men of the church at Paris, Ky., recently, about 450 being in attendance. Among the speakers were Carey E. Morgan, W. E. Ellis, of Cynthiana, Ky. and E. B. Barnes, of Richmond, Ky.

A meeting is in progress at First Church, Sedalia, Mo., led by the pastors, A. W. Kokendoffer and Alfred O. Kuhn. A splendid spirit of enthusiasm is being manifested at all the services, the attendance at the Sunday-school nearly reaching the 500 mark.

James Small, associate minister at Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, Mo., was elected president of the Ministerial Alliance which meets the first Monday of each month at the Y. M. C. A. It has in its membership about two hundred ministers.

J. Newton Chloe, of Greensburg, Kan., has declined a call for another year extended him by the church there. Mr. Chloe has not yet decided where he will locate. He is well recommended by the elders of his church and is to preach the convention sermon at the Eighth District Convention this month.

Easter was a happy day for First Church, Sedalia, Mo. The Sunday-school had an attendance of 505 with an offering of $202 for the National Benevolent Association. The church services were largely attended and the offering reached the sum $1.124.

W. C. Bower, pastor of Wilshire Blvd., Church, Los Angeles, Cal., is preaching a series of sermons on the following subjects: Job, or the Problem of Human Suffering; Psalms, or God and the Soul; Proverbs, or Practical Wisdom of Godly Men: Ecclesiastes, or Life's Greatest Good; the Song of Solomon, or the Love Story of the Bible.

Charles Reign Scoville began a meeting with the two churches at Huntington, W. Va., where C. H. Bass and T. D. Zimmerman are pastors. The meetings are being held in a large tabernacle, which was crowded to its capacity at the first service. At the first invitation 113 were added.

A new church was dedicated at Sheridan Lake, Col., on April 16. The dedicatory services were in charge of J. E. Stebbins, who is now in an evangelistic meeting there. About $200 more than the entire indebtedness was provided for. This is the only organization of Disciples in the county, work having been started here about a year ago.

The work at Davenport, Ia., where S. M. Perkins ministers, is making splendid progress. The Sunday-school now has an average of 337 and a mission school which meets in the down town district had an attendance of 112 recently. During Mr. Perkins' pastorate of four years he has twice been voted an increase of salary, and this year the congregation will pay his expenses to the Portland convention.

Cecil J. Sharpe, of Hammond, Ind., has just closed a meeting with Charles M. Fillmore at Hillside Church, Indianapolis, Ind., with 215 accessions. The Sunday-school has recently increased from 165 to over 400 in attendance. A temporary tabernacle was built before the beginning of the meeting and services will be held here until their new building is erected.

Claire L. Waite, who has been doing evangelistic work in Wisconsin, has been called by the American Society to hold two meetings in South Dakota. At the close of this engagement Mr. Waite will be at liberty to accept a pastorate. He recently closed a four years' pastorate with the First Church at Milwaukee, Wis., during which he organized the Second Church, which is now in a flourishing condition under the pastorate of Mark Wayne Williams.

Seventh Church, Clay Trusty, pastor, Indianapolis, Ind., observed the first week in May as missionary week. Addresses were given by representatives of the Foreign and American Misionary societies on the history and work of these organizations. Mrs. M. E. Harlan, Mrs. Chas. T. Paul, formerly a missionary at Nankin, China, and Alexander Ying Lee, a graduate of Christian College, Nankin, also gave addresses. This church supports Mrs. Paul Wakefield at Wuhu, China.

In the absence of C. J. Sharpe, who was conducting a series of meetings at Indianapolis, his pulpit at Hammond, Ind., was suplied one Sunday by Mrs. Martha Trimble, of Gary, and on another Sunday by C. C. Morrison. Mr. Morrison reports a live church at Hammond. Their house, dedicated last August, is capacious and well-appointed. Large congregations assemble regularly to study the Bible in the morning (a combination service of Sunday-school and worship) and to hear Mr. Sharp preach at night. An eight year pastorate has brought Mr. Sharpe into touch with the whole community. He is everywhere respected. His church people give him the heartiest support. "We miss him badly," said one of the deacons, "he's the boss, you know."

First Church, St. Louis, Mo., is to be made headquarters for the inauguration of a plan of benevolent and Christian helpfulness on a most comprehensive scale, approved by ministers and laymen of the church. The plan embraces the establishing of a night school, including courses in stenography, telegraphy, printing and other branches, together with the social and religious features of a modern settlement. E. F. Harris, pastor of Clifton Heights Church, suggested the plan. He was named as chairman of the committee representing the fourteen churches of the city. Two classes of members are to compose the society, those who are to receive the benefits, and th benevolent, or those who are to aid in sustaining the enterprise. All will contribute to the support of the work and to a fund which will be used in relieving the sick and in providing loans for those temporarily in need. Free clinics are to be provided for the poor and a social committee will provide amusement.

The church at Sumter, S. C., is giving its pastor, M. S. Peckham, a short vacation in May, which he will spend with his father, Prof. G. A. Peckham, of Hiram College. In two years Mr. Peckham has taken only about two weeks' vacation and has worked untiringly, not only for the Sumter Church, but for the cause in South Carolina as a whole, having been reëlected to the office of recording secretary to the state board. At present he is serving as treasurer and recording secretary of the state board. Considering the difficulties of this particular field and the work in this state as a whole, the Sumter work has made great progress in the past two years under Mr. Peckham's leadership. The membership has been doubled and a concrete block church building erected, which was dedicated by I. N. McCash last November, and is one of the best of our brotherhood in the state. Mr. Peckham by his individual efforts raside nearly all the money for this, excepting the Church Extension loan.

Sunday School Day at Portland

The Sunday-school is to have a prominent part in the coming National Convention at Portland. W. C Pearce, adult superintendent of the Internationa Sunday-school Association is to be the chief speaker and will bring helpful messages of cheer and instruction. Sunday-school Day is to Saturday, July 8th.

There will be four or five early morning conferences on the various departments of the work, Elementary, Advanced, Adult, Teacher Training and Missions. Prof. F. E. Billington will lead the conference on Teacher Training and expects to put this fundamental work on a distinctly educational basis. Prof. Billington occupies the Chair of Religious Pedagogy in the Eugene Bible University.

The afternoon session is to be devoted entirely to Sunday-school work and some of the topics that will be discussed are: "The Sunday-school and the Home;" "Higher Ideals in the Teaching Service;" "The Winning of the West;" and "The Sunday-school and Immigration." The 1911 Front Rank Recognition Service will be held during the afternoon.

There will be an adult Bible Class Banquet at 5:30 with plates laid for 1,000 persons.

W. C. Pearce will be the chief speaker at the night session.

On Sunday morning comes the record Sunday-school at 9:30. J. A. Emrich with his committee is looking carefully after all local arrangements for this event.

ROB'T M. HOPKINS.
American Bible School Superintendent.

DR. PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder
is the most efficient and perfect of leavening agents.
MADE FROM PURE CREAM OF TARTAR
No alum, lime or ammonia.

Kansas City, Kansas

We have just closed a month's meeting with Lowell C. McPherson, of New York, as the evangelist. The immediate results were fifty-two accessions, twenty-six being by confession and baptism, and $2,000 raised on uor church building debt. I never was in a meeting where it was so easy to raise money for the evangelist. Mr. McPherson in my estimation is unique as an evangelist. Not a professional nor sensationalist in any degree, wholly unselfish he seeks not to make a reputation but to honor Christ and save sinners. He labors for the welfare of the church and the pastor. Though we had to pass through an exciting city election, and a great Y. M. C. A. campaign for $200,000, yet we closed with a fine interest and two confessions on the last night, that of the reception to new members. —W. S.Lowe.

A New Secretary of Church Extension

For more than a year the Board of Church Extension has been considering the employment of an additional secretary, because it has been a physical impossibility for the corresponding secretary to do the work in the field and the office work. Delinquent loans must be looked after, conventions must be attended and churches, that have no fellowship in the church extension work, must be visited and enlisted. The demands on this fund are increasing with a growing religious body. As the fund grows, the work of caring for it increases. The board believes, therefore, that the brotherhood will approve our action in securing additional help.

Rev. John H. Booth.

The board believes we have secured the right man. When we communicated with Charles S. Medbury, pastor of University Place Church, Des Moines, Ia., Hill M. Bell, president of Drake University, A. M. Haggard, former dean of the Bible College and Sherman Kirk, the present dean, they all recommended Mr. Booth. Our board felt that this was a very fortunate coincident. All of these men speak of Mr. Booth in the most confident language, that he will be able to do the work. He is a most acceptable speaker, having won the highest honors in the State Oratorical Contest when he was in high school at Colorado Springs. Also having won in the Collegate Oratorical Contest when in Drake University in 1905 and 1906, winning in the local, state and inter-state contests. The Inter-state Contest was held at Topeka in the auditorium where the National Convention was held.

Mr. Booth was born in 1880 on a farm near Wichita, Kansas, and lived on a farm in Oklahoma until he was 17 years of age. He entered the College of Liberal Arts at Drake University in 1903, receiving his "B. A." degree in 1907. In 1908 he graduated from the Bible College at Drake. He did student preaching while he was in the Bible College at North River and Dallas Center, Ia. He began preaching at Centerville, Ia., after he graduated, resigning his pastorate there October 1, 1910. The brethren at Centerville advised the Board of Church Extension that Mr. Booth brought up all departments of the church's work, making the church a Living-link under the foreign society and home society, with liberal offerings for every other missionary interest. He also raised nearly $2,000 and paid for church repairs and indebtedness while at Centerville.

Mr. Booth has been in the evangelistic field since last fall, having held six meetings in Iowa, with 228 accessions. Mr. Booth is exceptionally happy in raising money from the platform, which is much of the kind of work he must do in assisting our delinquent churches in the payment of their debts which are past due.

Mr. Booth is a married man with two sweet little girls. Mrs. Booth is a graduate of Conservatory of Music at Highland Park College, Des Moines, and took several years work in Drake University in the College of Liberal Arts and College of the Bible.

Mr. Booth began his work with the Board of Church Extension on the 1st of May and we ask for a cordial Christian reception wherever he goes.

Board of Church Extension.
G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.

News from the Foreign Society

Dr. Macklin of Nankin, China, writes that Mr. King, a Chinese friend, is giving the mission a second isolation cottage and a green house for the industrial work. He is planning to buy a farm and give that. Dr. Macklin is greatly encouraged by these gifts.

James C. Ogden of Batang, Thibet, is very anxious that another family be sent to join the workers there, and he offers to provide the outfit money himself. This amounts to $200. His hope is that another family should sail not later than the first of September.

W. H. Hanna writes that Mr. and Mrs. Donald McCallum are with them at Vigan, and that the students like him very much. He is not able to do much yet except to get the language, but his very presence is a help which cheers his associates because there are not many like-minded people in the Philippine Islands.

Leslie Wolfe writes: "I have just spent five days at Lilio and Rizal in Laguna Province, preaching and teaching. The churches there are prospering. At Rizal twenty-nine were baptized in February and March. The Romanists are very hostile. A young man and young woman who were baptized were driven from their homes and had to find refuge in the homes of the brethren. I will hold a Bible Institute there in May to instruct the new converts. I baptized a man in the Pasig River at Manila recently.

B. L. Kershner, Manila, writes: "We are now drawing near to the close of the school year. Our primary classes closed yesterday. They have been interesting and good. The average attendance was twenty. We taught lessons in English, arithmetic, basket and mat-making and the Bible. I wish we had a teacher to take charge of this work. It offers an excellent opportunity to get into the homes of the people in the district. The class for evangelists will continue another week and be followed by a strong Bible Institute."

The latest word from Secretary Rains was dated Tokyo, April 1. He was then planning to visit Korea and Peking to study the work in both those fields. He has abandoned his original purpose of going to Africa and will return home by way of San Francisco and be at the Portland Convention.

Leslie Wolfe reports fifteen persons baptized at the town of Rizal in Laguna Province, Philippine Islands, in the past few weeks under the ministry of Fernando Manakis. The whole community is being stirred. The chapel at Rizal was dedicated last May, but the congregation has decided to build an addition to it to accommodate the enlarged congregation.

Donald C. McCallum reports that he and Mrs. McCallum are at Vigan, Philippine Islands. They are associated with Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hanna. They spent three weeks at Manila on the way and attended the first Sunday-school convention in the Philippine Islands and the annual convention of the Evangelical Union. In this way they became acquainted with a large number of the American workers in the Islands, and were able to form some idea of the work that is being done.

Dr. Jaggard of Longa, Africa, expected to leave on furlough about the last of April. He will reach his home in Kansas about the middle of June.

STEPHEN J. COREY,
Cincinnati, Ohio. Secretary.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

(Continued from page 15)

his fair no one dreamed of the school which now flourishes at Tuskegee and its President Booker T. Washington, who has an international fame as an educator. To sympathize with and encourage those of the younger societies is to take this untried material and make the most of its latent powers.

Besides, is not this training of the heart the most precious of all? This world is burdened with sorrow and sadness. Disappointment and gloom are the experiences of every heart. Every life has its tragedies. At these times we need sympathy as Jesus sympathized with the sisters when the brother died, with the multitude which wandered like sheep without a shepherd, hungry and far from home.

This heart training will render willingly an unselfish service. Has misfortune befallen us? Has a member of the family sickened and died? Christian hearts not only extend sympathy but with their hands do those things which the bereaved find it impossible to do. Have reverses come and are we left stranded and helpless? Then Christian friends come to our aid and help us to help ourselves. And so they go as angels of mercy among the sick, the distressed, the poor, the unfortunate and the degenerate, rendering deeds of kindness, speaking words of cheer and at the same time keeping for themselves clean hands and pure hearts. This is the larger work into which we all should seek to grow.

Plan for a Convention of Representatives of Churches of Christ

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, There is a widespread feeling among the Disciples of Christ that they need a closer unification of their various missionary, educational and benevolent organizations, a more general fellowship of the Churches of Christ in all co-operative efforts for the extension of the kingdom of God in the world, and their own greater efficiency;

Therefore, we, members of Churches of Christ in convention assembled, reaffirming our steadfast adherence to the independence and autonomy of the local churches and inviting the fellowship of all our sister churches in the accomplishment of these ends, do adopt the following constitution and by-laws:

CONSTITUTION.

NAME.

ARTICLE I. The name of this organization shall be the General Convention of Churches of Christ.

OBJECT.

ARTICLE II. The object of this convention shall be to promote unity, economy and efficiency among all the philanthropic organizations of the Churches of Christ; to secure equitable representation of the churches in an annual convention which shall receive the reports of and be advisory to such philanthropic organizations, thus securing a closer coöperation on great issues pertaining to the kingdom of God.

MEMBERSHIP.

ARTICLE III. This convention shall be composed of members of Churches of Christ as follows:

1. Representatives appointed by Churches of Christ on the following basis: Each church may appoint one representative, and one additional representative for each one hundred members, above the first hundred, provided that no church shall have more than five representatives.

2. Representatives of executive boards of

A Welcome Change

Smoke curling up from the farmhouse chimney as the men are coming in from the fields, gives a pretty suggestion of a good supper and a comfortable home. But it also means a hot, tired woman, working hard over a blazing fire.

Your wife can escape this with a New Perfection Oil Cook-stove.

A New Perfection keeps a kitchen many degrees cooler than any other range, yet it does all a coal or wood range can do. It saves time, labor and fuel. No wood to cut; no coal to carry; no ashes; no soot. With the New Perfection oven it is the best cooking device you can find anywhere.

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners, with long, turquoise blue enameled chimneys. Handsomely finished throughout. The 2- and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without a cabinet top, which is fitted with drop shelves, towel racks, etc.

Dealers everywhere; or write for descriptive circular to the nearest agency of the Standard Oil Company

(Incorporated)

co-operating national and state organizations, each national board to choose three representatives and each state organization two.

OFFICERS.

ARTICLE IV. Sec. 1. The officers of this convention shall be a president, three vice-presidents, a recording secretary, a corresponding secretary and a treasurer. These together with eight other members shall constitute the executive committee. Any member of the Church of Christ in good standing is eligible to office.

Sec. 2. These officers shall serve from the close of the meeting of the convention at which they are elected to the close of the next annual meeting of the convention, and until their successors are elected. The president shall be ineligible to succeed himself.

AMENDMENTS.

ARTICLE V. Amendments to this constitution may be made by a vote of the majority of the members present at any regular session of the convention, provided that notice thereof has been given in writing at the previous annual meeting by the executive committee, or by not less than ten members.

On motion, the folowing resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That your committee also recommends the adoption of the following resolution: Resolved, That in order to provide for the organization of the first annual meeting under the constitution reported by the Committee on the Reconstruction and Unification of our Missionary and Philanthropic interests, a committee of one representative each be appointed by the American Christian Missionary Society, Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Board of Church Extension, Board of Ministerial Relief, The National Benevolent Association, and the State Secretaries' Association, and eight others to be named by the chairman of this meeting, be constituted to call such first annual meeting; to provide for its temporary organization by naming and constituting suitable officers and committees, and to provide ways and means for holding such first meeting and for defraying its expenses.

A. B. Philputt, Ch'rman.	B. A. Abbott.
Mrs. Anna R. Atwater.	Finis Idleman.
Frederick A. Henry.	C. J. Tannar.
W. F. Richardson	I. J. Spencer.
J. H. Mohorter, Sec'y.	W. A. Baldwin.

Dedication of First Church, Fullerton, California.

Sunday, April 23, was the crowning day of five years' work of the Christian church. The new building, thought by many to be too large for the needs of the city, was crowded to the doors and the people joyously contributed almost $12,000. Of this amount $10,500 was for the building itself and at the evening service it was determined to raise the money for a pipe organ. C. C. Chapman announced at the close of the service that an organ costing not less than $2,500 would be installed and Rev. F. M. Dowling uttered the prophecy that three months would see it ready for dedication.

The building is a credit to the city and to the Christian church in Southern California which is probably growing faster in this part of the state than anywhere else in the world, and where, in the last ten years, its percentage of growth has surpassed that of any other religious organization.

The new house covers a ground space of 74 x 115 feet. In appearance the church is very attractive. It is mission in type, and is built of brick veneer up to the window ledge of the first story, above which it is shingled to the gables, which are finished in rough plaster, broken by cross beams of wood.

The interior is equipped with a large auditorium and Sunday-school room, which can be made into one large room by means of folding panel doors. The interior is finished in selected pine, done in the natural wood, with beautifully frescoed walls in light tints. The pews are of dark maple and rest upon an inclined floor to the rostrum. The aisles and floor are carpeted with tapestry to match and along the front of the rostrum runs a metal rail with curtains to correspond with the whole. The combined seating capacity of this room is 700. Adjoining the Sunday-school room are the juvenile room, the kitchen, the pastor's study and the ladies' parlor. The rooms are so arranged that twelve separate rooms can be utilized for Sunday-school use.

Charles C. Chapman.

At the morning service F. M. Dowling preached a masterful sermon from the text, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ" and so swayed the hearts of the people that when the appeal was made for funds to meet the

Bethany Graded Lessons

FOR THE SUMMER QUARTER

EVERYBODY DOES NOT SEEM TO REALIZE that The Bethany Graded Lessons can be begun at any time. The course of study begins with October 1, it is true, at the same time the public school year opens. But if a pupil is compelled to miss a term in the public school it is not considered necessary for him to be kept out a whole year until the new year opens. No more is it necessary for a Sunday-school to wait for a special date to equip itself with the graded lesson courses.

BUT THERE ARE THREE SPECIAL ADVANTAGES in beginning the Bethany Lessons in the Summer quarter—July 1. First, the school is somewhat smaller in the summer time, thus making it easier to adjust both teachers and pupils to the new system. When October comes and the normal attendance is resumed, the new organization will be already established.

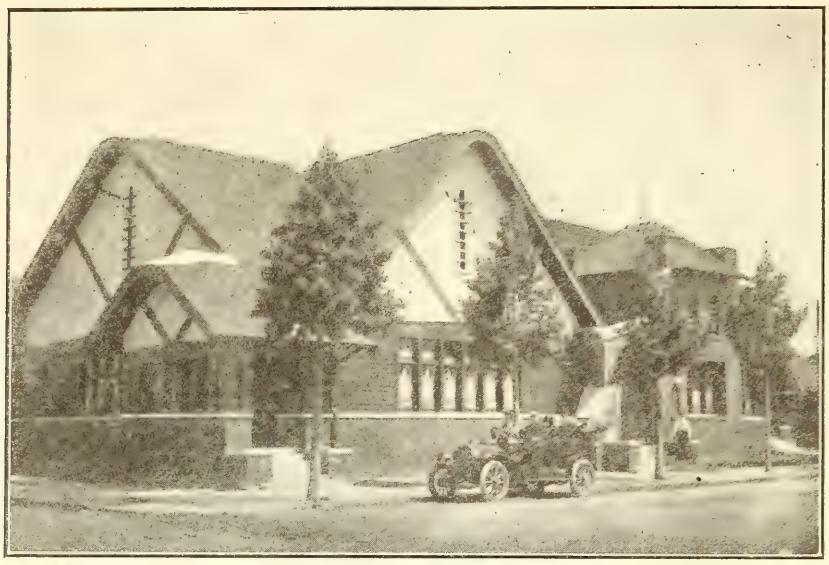
SECOND, THE SUMMER'S LESSONS ARE COMPLETE BY THEMSELVES in all grades. That is, they do not merely continue the Spring's quarter's lessons nor are they just a preparation for the Autumn courses. This makes it just as natural and easy to introduce the Graded Lessons in the Summer time as in the Autumn when the nine-months' course begins.

THIRD, THESE SUMMER LESSONS ARE UNIQUE in the history of Sunday-school curriculum. Many of them treat of the great missionary heroes; others treat of the great religious leaders whose names are closely interwoven with the early history of our American nation. The teachers' texts afford a liberal education in the history of missions and the early events and ideals of our republic. Pupils will find these studies so fascinating that the "Summer slump" in attendance will be more easily overcome than by the continued use of the uniform lessons.

THE BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are far and away the most adequate and fascinating lesson materials ever offered the Sunday-school world. Every lesson writer is an interdenominational authority. No such skill and taste has gone into the preparation of any graded lessons as twelve leading denominations of this country are putting into the Bethany Lessons.

Send today for Prospectuses, Prices and Order Blank.

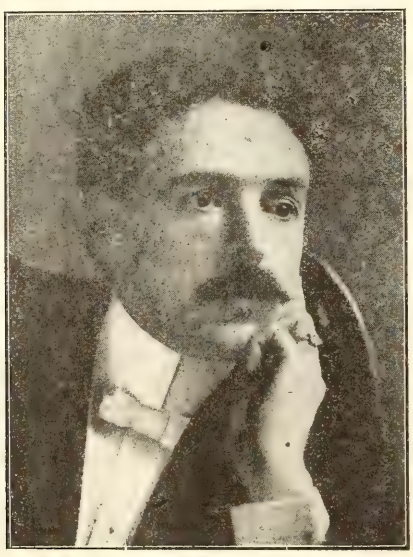
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East 40th Street, Chicago



New Church at Fullerton, Calif.

indebtedness the responses came in showers. It was announced that the benefactions of C. C. Chapman who had duplicated every dollar given for the building would be continued until the close of the services but would not apply to any indebtedness that should be unprovided for.

Large delegations were present from Los Angeles, Santa Ana, Whittier, La Mirada, Anaheim, Olinda, Covina, Orange, and La Habra and many from these delegations seemed to be as eager to give as the people of Fullerton.



Rev. Bruce Brown.

The other churches of the city dismissed their services for afternoon and evening. At the three o'clock service congratulatory addresses were delivered by Rev. J. T. Hopkins of the Presbyterian church, Rev. R. B. Whitside of the Baptist church and Rev. George Graff of the M. E. Church. Rev. W. G. Bower of the Wilshire Boulevard church, Los Angeles, Rev. Paul Wright of Santa Ana and Rev. J. T. Stivers who conducted the series of meetings in which the building enterprise was launched, participated in this service. T. W. Cline of Fullerton presided at the communion table.

At the evening service the house was overflowing at an early hour. Dr. Bruce Brown has charge of the program at this service as in the others. The address was delivered by Mr. Charles C. Chapman on the subject, "The Church in Prophecy, Purpose and Fulfillment." Mr. Chapman has dedicated 28 churches in Southern California and is a past master in the art of handling large assemblages and inspiring people to the practical duties of life. The audience seemed deeply moved by his tribute to the work and influence of Christianity and were in a mood to respond readily when he proposed to add to the victories of the day the purchase of a pipe organ that would be the pride of all the people of the city, in the churches and out of them.

One of the chief attractions of the day were the solos by Mrs. Princess Long and the singing of a chorus of 40 voices.

At the close of the evening service the building was formally dedicated by the pastor with all the people assisting him in the responsive readings from the ritual prepared for the occasion.

Los Angeles Meeting

Some months ago the First churches of Pomona and Los Angeles united in calling President R. H. Crossfield, or Transylvania University, to hold a series of evangelistic services for each of those congregation. A very successful meeting was held in Pomona in the latter part of March. Just at the time of Dr. Crossfield's engagement with the First Church, of Los Angeles, a series of union meetings were planned for several districts in Los Angeles under the direction of the Church Federation of the city. The largest district, composed of nine of the largest downtown churches, asked Doctor Crossfield to do the preaching which he did most acceptably for two weeks. The attend was large and the people were most delighted with his ministrations. This union meeting was followed by a two weeks' meeting with the First Church. Doctor Crossfield's preaching was virile, vital and vigorous, and his sermons were sane and scriptural. He won the hearts of all our people. His spirit was most delightful. He is distinctively a preacher and ought to be in the pulpit of one of our strongest and most important churches; or even more important.

THE DIVINITY SCHOOL OF
The University of Chicago
Summer Quarter, 1911.

First Term begins June 19. Second Term Begins July 27.

COURSES will be offered in the Old Testament by Professors Jewett, Willett, Smith, L. B. Paton, of Hartford Theological Seminary, and G. A. Barton, of Bryn Mawr College; New Testament, by Professors Burton, Votaw, and Goodspeed; Systematic Theology, by Professors Smith and H. A. Youtz, of Auburn Theological Seminary; Church History, by Professors Parker, Moncrief, Gates, and George Cross, of Newton Theological Institution; Practical Theology, by Professors Hoben, Greene, and G. E. Dawson, of the Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy; Ecclesiastical Sociology, by Professor T. J. Riley, of Washington University; Public Speaking, by Professors Blanchard and Nelson; Music, by Mr. Lash. Courses in other departments of the University are open to students in the Divinity School.

Address the Dean for further information.

AN INEXPENSIVE DELICACY.

For many people it is often very hard to think of some inexpensive little delicacy that will add variety to a meal and zest to the appetite. So many things that occur to one seem almost prohibitive in price.

A real delicacy, delightful in taste, healthful yet inexpensive, will be found in the Graham Crackers baked by the National Biscuit Company. They are made from the best of the wheat and have a delicious nut-like flavor far different from old-fashioned Graham bread.

Placed on the table, Graham Crackers will be found welcome by the entire family—welcome as something choice, instead of merely eaten because there.

The National Biscuit Company packs the Graham Crackers in packages which can be recognized by the well-known Iner-Seal Trade-Mark. Every package is moisture- and dust-proof, so all the original crispness, freshness, healthfulness and flavor are retained when the package is opened.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL — Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable — Catalogue Free. AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

BELLS. Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Please mention this paper.)

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

Between
CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY
via the
Chicago & Alton

Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis

For Time Tables and Fares Address
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO

ought to be giving al his energies to evangelistic work for which his culture, experience and training so admirably fit him. I most cordially commend his services to any church or pastor needing a safe, sane and scriptural evangelism. His meetings resulted in more than fifty accessions to our memberships with no explanations or apologies to follow; for Crossfield never says or does a foolish thing. He understands the problems of a city church in the down town districts of our great cities. A. C. SMITHER.

Palmer, Nebraska

On April 7, the writer began a meeting at Palmer, Nebr. The meeting continued for three weeks. During the meeting fifty-three came forward. Forty-four of these were by baptism. Five came from the Baptists, two from the Methodist church, and one from the Episcopalians, and one by commendation. It was a meeting of great spiritual power. The work of preparation had been done perfectly by the pastor, Burton Davies, a Cotner student, who has been preaching for the church for ten months. He nas done a good and lasting work with this church. Arthur Ritchey, another Cotner student, had charge of the song service and was a great help in the meeting. During the last four years he has been pastor of the Bennett Church. He goes to York, Nebr., the first of July, following his graduation. The church at Palmer is much blessed in having a godly eldership. Henry Cox, a charter member of the church, came to Palmer, thirty-nine years ago. He has been letting his light shine for the Master all these years. He ably seconded by Truman Gee, the other elder of the church. The membership is consecrated and devoted and, with added strength, the church wil become a great power in the community. We shall always remember with much joy the privilege of holding this meeting. Our stay in Palmer was made pleasant through the uniform kindness and kind hospitality of the children of God.

Frank Woten has been called to the pastorate of the church. He graduates from Cotner in June and will move to Jalmer after graduation. He is an able young man and will do the church a great work.

WILLIAM OESCHGER.

Oklahoma Christian Mission Society

Enid entertains the state convention this year, the dates being May 31 to June 1 and 2. The convention immediately follows the annual Commencement exercises of Oklahoma Christian University. It is hoped that all the delegates to the state convention will come one or two days early in order that they may attend the Commencement of this great and growing educational institution of the southwest. Either one of these occasions offers great attraction to the visitors and both together present programs which will scarcely be excelled in our national convention in Portland. National speakers are coming: A. McLean, C. C. Smith, G. W. Muckley, P. C. McFarland and probably others.

The sessions of the convention will be held in the university chapel for it is our desire to have all delegates become familiar with the university surroundings, the campus, the buildings and equipments, the student body and the faculty. Following the plan of former conventions the church of Enid will furnish free lodging and breakfast to the delegates. Dinner and supper can be secured in the numerous clubs and boarding houses and in the ladies dormitory at very reasonable prices. Those who expect to attend the convention should send their names and addresses immediately to the undersigned in order that ample arrangements for your entertainment may be made.

Enid, Okla. W. J. WRIGHT.

Yeuell at Hopkinsville

Herbert Yeuell has just concluded his second series of special evangelistic meetings with us. His first meetings were quite remarkable and very successful. His meetings of this spring were even more satisfactory. It is doubtful if as great meetings in essential respects ever before were held by a single church in this town. The newspapers published exclusive daily reports of them; the whole community talked of them and throngs from our own and neighboring towns attended them. One hundred and twelve persons responded to their invitations and presented themselves at the front—the most of them to make their first public confession of Jesus as the Christ. Besides these visible and in a way measurable effects of the meetings is one quite as valuable. I mean the arousal of the church herself to new alertness and devotion.

Mr. Yeuell is a great evangelist, one of the foremost of his time. He has a voice of sweetness and power, a most magnetic personality, a gift of speech at once fluent and forceful, and a fine insight into human nature. But more than these is his capacity for preaching in ways of bewitching freshness the ancient Gospel. He rides no hobbies, exploits no fads, uses no objectionable methods in his invitations. Many of his sermons are constructed of course with primary reference to the hortatory element of them and so they stick closer to the audience than to the text. And yet even these are by no means lacking in the beauty and power of a sound orderliness. Others are at once highly hortatory, being ablaze with the evangelistic fervor and nobly beautiful and strong in their substance and arrangement. The best of his sermons are worthy of a place beside the best sermons of the best preachers I ever heard.

W are most grateful for Mr. Yeuell's work here and wish him all good success in his good work wherever he may go. H. D. SMITH.

Hopkinsville, Ky., April 28, 1911.

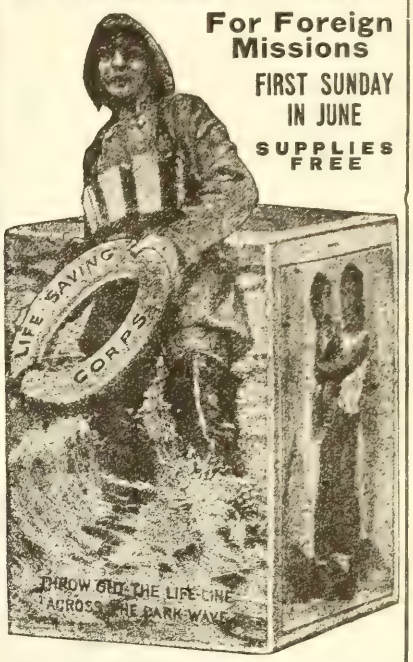
DO N'T FORGET

CHILDREN'S DAY

For Foreign Missions

FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE

SUPPLIES FREE



The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will furnish CHILDREN'S DAY SUPPLIES for the first Sunday in June FREE to those Sunday Schools observing the day in the interests of HEATHEN MISSIONS.

FREE SUPPLIES

1. CRUSADERS FOR CHRIST. The beautiful new Children's Day Exercise by P. H. Duncan. Sixteen pages of song, recitation, and drill. A bundle of sunshine. A high class exercise, yet simple enough for the smallest school.

2. LIFE-SAVER MISSIONARY BOXES. Like the picture above. Automatic, self-locking. They will please. Put your school to work with them.

ORDER AT ONCE. Give local name of Sunday School and average attendance. Write

STEPHEN J. COREY, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin. Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES. HIRAM. O

DRAKE UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL

Credit Courses in Usual College Subjects
Credit Courses in Education and Psychology
Professional Work for Teachers of All Grades
Courses in all Certificate Subjects for Teachers
Courses in Music and Art
Courses for Music and Drawing Teachers and Supervisors

For Announcement, Address DRAKE UNIVERSITY, DES MOINES, IOWA.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

Located at Columbia, close to the University of Missouri, the unrivaled advantages of which are open to all Bible College students. Ministerial and Missionary Training. Faculty of trained specialists. Property and endowment $200,000. Excellent opportunities for self-support. No Tuitions.

For Catalog and full information, address CHARLES M. SHARPE, Dean

Just Out

A New Universal Hymn Book

COMPILED BY HOMER RODEHEAVER AND
B. D. ACKLEY.

Homer Rodeheaver, Musical Director for Billy Sunday, Evangelist.

The Greatest Collection of Gospel Hymns Ever Published

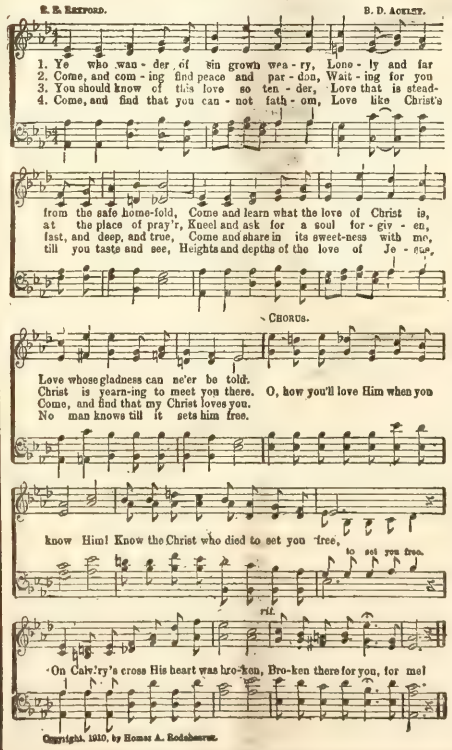
308 Songs Every One A Gem

B. D. Ackley, Composer. Pianist for Billy Sunday.

Here's One of the Popular Ones—— Beautiful Thing— Everyone Likes It. Try It on Your Piano or Organ 307 More Just as Good

How You Will Love Him!

R. E. HEDFORD. B. D. ACKLEY.



1. Ye who wan - der of sin grown wea - ry, Lone - ly and far
2. Come, and com - ing find peace and par - don, Wait - ing for you
3. You should know of this love so ten - der, Love that is stead-
4. Come, and find that you can - not fath - om, Love like Christ's from the safe home-fold, Come and learn what the love of Christ is, at the place of pray'r, Kneel and ask for a soul for - giv - en, fast, and deep, and true, Come and share in its sweet-ness with me, till you taste and see, Heights and depths of the love of Je - sus, CHORUS.
Love whose gladness can ne'er be told.
Christ is yearn-ing to meet you there. O, how you'll love Him when you
Come, and find that my Christ loves you.
No man knows till it sets him free.
know Him! Know the Christ who died to set you free, to set you free.
rit.
On Cal'ry's cross His heart was bro-ken, Bro-ken there for you, for me!

Copyright, 1910, by Homer A. Rodeheaver.

A Book Adapted For Every Service of the Church

A song for every emotion of the soul. Songs that stir and thrill the Christian—songs that melt the heart—constrain the sinner. Songs of joy—hope—comfort—peace—inspiration—exaltation. Songs for every occasion—for any time—any place. Songs for church service—Sunday-school—Young People's Meeting—Infant Class—Prayer Meeting, Camp-meeting—Revival Services. With this book none other is needed. Compiled especially to fit the universal needs of the church. The fruits of years of experience and much money.

Endorsed By Evangelists, Ministers and Laymen

A truly wonderful book—practical—economical. A collection of the greatest gospel songs ever written. Old songs that will never die—new ones that stir the blood. All carefully chosen to cover every requirement of every orthodox church anywhere. Sure to please. Take No. 181—a new, grand song of praise—full of power, majesty and dignity with a great climax. It thrills you as you sing. Then there's 32—"How You Will Love Him"—a song of comfort—beautiful—sweet—simple. So they go. Song after song. All pretty—all singable.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER	1 Book, Manila Binding	$0.20
	1 Book, Cloth, Postpaid	.30
	2 Books, Cloth, Postpaid	.50
	5 Books, Cloth, Postpaid	1.00

CASH, STAMPS, POSTAL OR EXPRESS ORDER.

Send today. Get together of an evening with the chorister. Try over the songs. Then write for prices in quantities. Good singing builds up the right church spirit. This book will help. It's the book for your church. Order today. Address

RODEHEAVER-ACKLEY CO.,
613 Lakeside Bldg. Chicago, Illinois

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. May 18, 1911 Number 20

Chicago's Child Welfare Exhibit

By James S. Kirtley

A Story With a Problem

By Edgar DeWitt Jones

Early Christian Hymns

By Meade E. Dutt

CHICAGO

The Book World

SOCIAL CHRISTIANITY, The Gospel for an Age of Social Strain, by Chas. Reed Zahniser, Ph. D. The author of this book is a busy Pittsburgh pastor whose work has brought him into close contact with the industrial problem of that city and led him to investigate the manners of thought among the working classes. His effort is to show, in a sympathetic manner, what he believes to be the fallacies of socialism as a cure for the ills of the workers and as an answer to the ever inquiring social question. His reasoning is cogent and fair and presents one of the most succinct answers to the claims of socialism that we have seen. It does not spend any energy in abuse or in the customary exercise of tearing down straw men. It recognizes the failings in industrial adjustments, the right of the proletariat to complain and seek a better way, the glaring faults of capitalism, the need for something better; but he thinks socialism presents some fundamental fallacies and would fail as a cure. This review does not permit of an analysis of his reasoning, but commends it unto all socialists and everyone else who is interested in a fair treatment of a burning problem. The final task is laid upon Christianity, but there is no mawkish defense of everything that assumes that guise. (Nashville: Advance Pub. Co., pp. 173. 95 cents.)

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS OF THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS, by Clifton Johnson. In an introductory note Mr. Johnson says of the series of books to which this belongs, "The several volumes in this series have as a rule very little to say of the large towns. Country life is their topic, especially the typical and picturesque. To the traveler, no life is more interesting, and yet there is none with which it is so difficult to get into close and unconventional contact. Ordinarily, we catch only casual glimpses. For this reason I have wandered much on rural byways and lodged most of the time at village hotels or in rustic homes. My trips have taken me to many characteristic and famous regions; but always in both text and pictures I have tried to show actual life and nature and to convey some of the pleasure I experienced in my intimate acquaintance with the people." Mr. Johnson has proved himself a lover not only of nature but of the rustic folk whose ways he understands and appreciates. His tramping tour included North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and Montana, and the wealth of illustrations are from photographs made in many out-of-the-way nooks. The whole volume makes interesting and profitable reading. (New York: The Macmillan Company. Pp. 280, $2.00 net.)

THE ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS AND WHAT THEY DO, by Daniel Gregory Mason. A knowledge of the orchestra and its constituent parts helps the listener to a keener appreciation and a greater measure of enjoyment of the music of this many-voiced instrument which the great masters have employed to utter their sublime harmonies. Mr. Mason has compressed much valuable information into his compact little volume of one hundred pages. The orchestra as a whole and the various sections or choirs receive consideration and a detailed description is given of the appearance of each instrument; its range, the manner in which it is played and the peculiar timbre or quality which distinguishes it from the other instruments. Excerpts from the standard scores are used to show how composers have utilized the different instruments most effectively in solo and in combination with the others where the characteristic tone-color of each is added to the tonal picture. Mr. Mason tells all this in a very interesting way. Excellent illustrations accompany the descriptions. The book begins with several pages devoted to the nature of sound and closes with a chapter on "Scores and Score-Reading." (New York: The H. W. Gray Company. Pp. 104, $1.25.)

HEALTH AND SUGGESTION, The Dietetics of the Mind, by Ernst von Feuchtersleben, translated by Ludwig Lewisohn, M. A. This little volume of 168 pages by a notable Viennese physician has passed through many editions, but appears for the first time now in an English translation. Its German title of "Diatetik der Seele" is a better statement of its contents than that given by its translator. It treats not so particularly of the modern theme of "suggestion" in its relation to health as it does the dietetics of the mind or soul. It is written with a sort of devotional spirit, though in the language of a man of science and is a plea for the unity of one's psychological and bodily self with all that may be implied in the reciprocal relationship that would thus be found to exist between the two. But there is no scientific superstition in it. It is always sane and ever attuned to harmonies of high thinking and plain living. It is philosophy as well as science and is even caught up into the more exalted sphere of the religious in its insistence on the divine unities and their reverent recognition as a cure for many mental distempers and their resultant physical disasters. (New York: B. W. Heubsch. $1.)

THE CHILDREN'S PULPIT, by Edwin Hallock Byington. A certain minister in London buys up every book of children's talks in Paternoster Row. Another discovered that his "old folks" got more blessings from his brief "children's sermon" than from his profounder thesis. Doubtless the appetite for volumes such as this will grow, if they are as appetizing as is Mr. Byington's. His sermonettes have the three graces, variety brevity, and simplicity. From the Bible, the home, the school, nature, somethimes from book or anecdote, he snatches a vivid phrase; fastens it to a spiritual truth; turns the moral over once or twice, appends an appeal which doesn't appal, and stops. He catches the child's psychological moment—children have no longer period of fixation— makes a telling point and quits. "The Finest Medicine in the World," "The Lazy Man's Lion," "Getting Breakfast" are suggestive. "Lenten Lending" is rather a misleading pun on the word Lent. Let children read it—and ask for more. Let teachers learn from it how they may do likewise. (Boston: The Pilgrim Press. 75 cents net.)

MARIE CLAIRE, by Marguerite Andoux. That simplicity is the truest art is demonstrated in this exquisite story of the tenderness and purity of girlhood. Written by a French seamstress past thirty, unknown as a writer, it was awarded the Goncourt prize given each year for the best book of fiction in French. Indeed, there was much rumor that the work was not Mlle. Andoux's own but the suggestion is belied in a reading of the book, for sophistication, though accompanied by genius, could never have produced the naive simplicity of the narrative, which is said to be largely autobiographical. In a word of comment the translator, John N. Raphael says, "The purity of it all makes you wish that you were a cleaner man or woman, and till you rub shoulders with people again, you mean to try hard to be cleaner and better." (New York: Hodder & Stoughton. Pp. 203. $1.20 net.)

BETTER TIMES, by David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the British Exchequer. This volume is made up of speeches delivered by England's great Chancellor during the last seven years but largely during the past two years. Lloyd George is easily the most interesting and forceful of Britain's contemporaneous statesmen. His originality, fearlessness, ability as both minister and parliamentarian and his success in putting through reform measures mark him as one of the commanding characters of the time. His greatest contribution to English legislation is his turning of politics over to constructive social reforms. In this he bids fair to become the creator of an era. England is today the foremost of the nations in its constructive social work through national action. These speeches give Lloyd George's advocacy and defense of his measures and especially those addresses in which he defended the new budgets. He is less sonorous and more electric an orator than Gladstone, but his ability to handle statistics and make them breathing things is scarce less. His wit and sarcasm are delightful. He must be a student of the Hebrew prophets, for few men of modern political life have so embodied their righteous indignation as he in his dealing with the landlords. (New York: Geo. H. Doran Co., pp. 326. $1.)

JOHN MURRAY'S LANDFALL, by Henry Nehemiah Dodge. The story of John Murray's life, simple and unknown to many, rises to the heroic in his ministry of prophetic significance. Excommunicated from the church John Murray fled from England in 1770, broken-hearted, and with only the wish to bury his grief in the wilderness of America. Instead he finds himself as a God-sent preacher by Thomas Potter and his little band of colonists on the Jersey shore. The putting aside of doubt and discouragement and losing self in his ministry through the hardships of travel in colonial days forms the theme of this masterful work of Dr. Dodge, in its exposition of the Fatherhood of God and Brotherhood of Man. Several exquisite lyrics are interpolated in the volume, among them the "Threnody," "The Lilac Bush" and "The Apple Tree." (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Pp. 233. $1.25 net.)

UNITARIAN THOUGHT, by Ephraim Emerton, Professor of Church History in Howard University, is a very able and frank statement of Unitarian belief of the more radical sort. It is hardly just to label much of the good "thought" in the book as "Unitarian," for it is the common property of liberal thinkers in evangelical Christendom. Nor yet is it quite fair to historic unitarianism to impute to it the extreme positions taken by this author—or for example in his treatment of the miracles. Not all Unitarians have held the view that miracles are impossible. This is not a criticism of the intrinsic teaching of the book which is in the main consistent and stimulating. Happily we live in a time when Evangelical churchmen may read a volumne of this sort to their own advantage and enlargement. (New York: The Macmillan Company. Pp. 309. $1.50 net.)

THE HEART OF THE MASTER, by William Burnet Wright, D. D. This book is a study of the events of the passion week of our Lord. It is careful to reconstruct the outward details and progress of events as well as to interpret the inner meaning of the experiences both in the soul of Jesus and the souls of his disciples. The study of Judas is especially illuminating. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co. Pp. 247. $1.25 net.)

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

The Art of Being Well Born

EVERYBODY OUGHT to know something about the new art of eugenics that has entered the field to win recognition and work reform. It is much in its favor that it is based upon the science of genetics. That simplifies things, no little, and gives verisimilitude to its claim of being an art. For every art is built on a science, some arts on several sciences: the art of music on science of sound; the art of painting on the science of color; the art of lense-making on the science of optics. Science is what we know, art what we do; and, under everything we do, is a group of facts or truths or laws that form a science and make the art possible. It is much to the credit of eugenics that it can fall back on genetics. Good for eugenics!

The Science of Creating Good Grandparents.

Let us begin at the beginning, with genetics. Any one can see, at a glance, what it means, even though he has not studied Greek. It is akin to the words "generation," "regeneration," and "genesis," and refers to the matter of origin. It asks how certain native traits, physical, mental, emotional, moral, came about. Given, a child of certain native characteristics, where and how did they come to him? It tries to explain them in a physiological way. The converse inquiry is inevitable. Given, certain characteristics, in the parents, what kind of children must theirs inevitably be? Genetics is the science that studies those questions and tries to discover some laws that are more specific than the general conceptions of heredity. It seeks to tell exactly how heredity works, what cells are engaged, what physicial elements carry the different characteristics.

A rather singular thing is that this form of investigation was begun by a monk, about fifty years ago. Mendel, of Brun, was his name, but he was so much of a monk, he kept even his ideas in the monastery. After he was dead twenty years his writings were found and Mendelism put on its glasses, took its cane in hand and started out to make observations and become a science.

For good reasons, observations have been focused on animals, mainly. But in the human species, several conclusions seem to be reached, that the individual is made up of a lot of characters received from the two parental sources, that the way those characters combine, or do not combine, determines the resultant characteristics of the offspring and that the third generation is where variations usually occur. The descent of abnormalities is under the working of laws. One of the physical characteristics to disclose its law is the eye and its color. The children of parents with blue or grey eyes must have blue or grey eyes, while parents with brown eyes may transmit brown or blue or grey.

Laws or Theories.

The investigations made by the Mendelists may prove of rare value, for further study, but their conclusions, at present, are, in some cases incomplete and, in others incorrect. For example, there is a curious law, called "atavism," which is likely to crash through any other law at any time. While the child may have eyes and mouth like one of his parents, it may have a nose exactly like his great uncle. He may have a memory like one parent, a voice like the other and viciousness like a remote ancestor, who ought to have been shot before he persuaded some worthy girl to marry him. Again, unless the law they claim to have discovered, about eyes, is allowed to have exceptions, it is not a law, but only a general tendency, for six of us were the children of a blue-eyed father and mother, four having blue eyes, two, black. Again, the laws of heredity work in mysterious ways and they seem to be influenced by the laws of divine grace. Take an illustration: A couple of generations ago, a child was born whose father was so nearly insane that many said he should not have been allowed to marry. That boy grew up to manhood and his son is today one of the most successful men in the American pulpit, eloquent and well-balanced, a man who could have been equally eminent as a shrewd man of affairs. Still, there is special field for the science of genetics.

Breeding Good People.

This leads us to the main point. The word "eugenics" is like our proper name, "Eugene," and means well born. Based largely on the results of the study of genetics, the eugenists are asking if it is not possible for society to so apply the laws of heredity as to improve the generations to come. Here comes the art of it. Some one must control and that means society at large. So it has to do with the "agencies under social control that may improve or impair the racial qualities of the future generations, either physicially or mentally." If society knows the laws to follow, it must exercise its authority, to the limit, in controlling the marriages of the future, so as to prevent racial impairment and promote racial improvement.

Can society do so? It is already doing it, within limits. It will not allow the feeble-minded to marry, because they are not capable of making any stable contracts, and are not fit to enter into the marriage state, because such a person cannot enter, with another person, into the formation of that integer which two persons constitute, under the laws of God and man. Moreover, it is not right that the next generation should be demoralized by such parents. The state alone can intervene and enforce its intervention. Not only the feeble minded but the insane are restrained by the state from marrying. This decision of the state is all the more necessary in view of the fact that psychical as well physical character is inherited So far, so good.

But society has some obstinate difficulties in the way of securing that good birth to all of its people. One is that all are tainted and few marriages could be allowed at all. Another is that mental and moral characteristics are paramount to the physical, important as the latter are. Another is environment, which may redeem those ill born and help them to a higher rebirth, while it may redoom those well born and commit them to eternal infamy. But the greatest difficulty before the state is in securing the necessary coöperation of the young in accepting the principles of eugenics. The latter involves the most delicate questions of life and the eugenists, unless they restrain themselves, will lead us into a bestial treatment of the matter of marriage. The moment the candidates for marriage make the subject matter involved in genetics and eugenics a matter of conference, that moment, the animal will take charge and the bestiality of heathen lands will be repeated in our own. One thing more: That particular reaction of one quality on another in the character of a child can never be known. A child may be phenomenally good by gathering up all the good points of an only fairly-good father and mother. A child may be unspeakably perverse by combining all the idiosyncrasies and disagreeable traits of fairly-good parents. No one knows, in advance, what the particular reaction will be.

One Practical Point.

But there is a field for the practice of eugenics, which only the parents can enter, and in the case of a daughter, which the mother must chiefly occupy. The mother can protect her from wrong and degrading ideas. She can also restrain an unfit daughter from marriage, not in the case of feeble-minded and the clearly insane alone but in the case of the neurotic.

This science of eugenics announced by the late Sir Francis Galton, carried on by his successor, Carl Pierson, and exploited by some American writers, with a somewhat inebriated rhetoric, will have value, provided the subject of eugenics with its underlying science of genetics, is practically applied by the experienced alone.

J. S. K.

Social Survey

Skirmish Victory for British Liberals

With victory apparently within their grasp, the Liberals in the British lower house are gaining in strength every day. Recently the bill for the reform of the house of lords passed the committee by an overwhelming majority, 265 to 147, and will be favorably recommended. This measure provides for the abolition of the veto power which the house of lords has exercised over all British legislation. All money bills will become laws without the approval of the lords if passed by the house of commons and signed by the king. Other important legislation may be delayed for a period of three years by the upper house. If rejected in the third consecutive session, the bill will become law if signed by the king. This measure practically would place the British government in the hands of the house of commons. For several days the bill was under fire. It was anticipated that the Laborites might balk at the preamble, and that hundreds of amendments might be proposed, intended to weaken and annul it, and to delay all action, but the opposition largely disappeared. Only a few unimportant amendments were made, and these were mainly in provision for joint sitting or conference of the two houses in case of a disagreement. Even A. J. Balfour, the leader of the opposition, gave his support to the measure. In a speech just before the vote that the bill be presented as amended was taken, he said that he hated one portion of the preamble, but that he liked another part, and for that reason he would give it his support. This was considered the critical moment for the bill, and the enthusiastic victory of the Liberals is taken as an indication that the government will pass the reform measures with ease.

International Politics and Baseball

The United States soon is to be visited by three of the most distinguished citizens of Japan: Prince Fushimi, General Nogi, and Admiral Togo. The latter two, heroes of the late Japanese-Russian war, will be Japan's official representatives at the coronation in England, and on their return they will travel through the United States. Arrangements have been made to visit President Taft, whom they have met before in the Far East. Considerable diplomatic interest attaches to their visit, but there is another imminent event of less note which will be much more potent in cementing the two countries and creating a feeling of mutual trust and friendliness. The baseball team from the University of Waseda, Japan, will make a tour of this country, playing several of the university teams of this country. Two years ago the baseball team from the University of Wisconsin was invited by the authorities of Keo and Waseda universities to visit Japan and play a series of games with the Japanese teams. The invitation was accepted, the Japanese schools guaranteeing a portion of the expenses of the trip. The people of the Island Kingdom were so pleased that last year they invited the University of Chicago baseball players to make a similar trip. The playing of these international series excited wide comment and baseball is said to be likely to become as popular in Japan as in the United States. The American people should further cement friendship by uniting in extending to the young men from Japan as cordial a welcome as the American boys everywhere received in the Orient.

The Growing Favor of World Peace

Peace, universal peace, is probably receiving more attention the world over than any other one subject. Almost every important paper in England and the United States is "filled with it," so enthusiastically has the subject been taken up. Peace societies have sprung up on every hand in these two countries and abolition of war is discussed everywhere from the breakfast table to the pulpit. Of special interest at this time is the third national peace congress, which was opened on May 3, by President Taft, in Baltimore, Md. In his address, President Taft spoke to the assembled congress, but his words were intended for the countries of South and Central America. "One of the difficulties that the United States finds is the natural suspicions that the countries engaged hold of the motives which the United States has in tendering its good offices," he said, referring to Latin-American troubles. "Asservation of good faith helps but little where the suspicion is real, and yet I like to avail myself of an opportunity in such presence as this to assert that there is not in the whole length and breadth of the United States among its people any desire for territorial aggrandizement. Its people as a whole will not permit its government, if it would, to take any steps in respect to foreign peoples looking to a forcible extension of our political power. We have had wars and we know what they are. We know what responsibilities they entail, the burdens and losses and horrors, and we would have none of them. We have a magnificent domain of our own in which we are attempting to work out and show to the world success in popular government, and we need no more territory in which to show this. But we have attained great prosperity and great power. We have become a powerful member of the community of nations in which we live, and there is, therefore, thrust upon us necessarily a care and responsibility for the peace of the world in our neighborhood, and a burden of helping those nations that cannot help themselves, if we may do that peacefully and effectively." In its program the congress has laid special emphasis on the need for national, arbitral settlements under an inviolable, international code. Obviously this would do away with the necessity of the maintenance of great standing armies and navies. Few people realize how great a relief the removal of the possibility of war would be to civilized nations. One can hardly realize the significance of the figures which follow. The actual horrors of war, with its billions of dollars of waste—as in the case of our own Civil War—and with its awful harvest of thousands of men in killed and wounded, are not considered in these figures. Neither do they include the totals of the colonies of France, Germany or England, or the National Guard of the United States. These significant figures cover the cost of maintenance of the navies and standing armies of seven of the principal countries for the last fiscal year and are as follows: Great Britain, $341,818,500; Germany, $314,000,000; Russia, $253,750,000; France, $250,000,000; United States, $214,393,595; Italy, $78,000,000; Japan, $77,000,000; and Austria-Hungary, $60,000,000. These figures represent a total of about $1,588,000,000. To be added to that are the immense sums expended annually as pensions to disabled men and widows. In the United States alone, pensions for the fiscal year 1910 amounted to more than $162,600,000. Again, in five great nations alone, 3,500,000 able-bodied men are kept in idleness for military service. When these figures are read thoughtfully, the significance of the peace movement is apparent. War is crushing down the nations.

Recent Literary Recognition of Missions

The Congregationalist calls attention to the literary recognition achieved by missions of late. Time was when the only periodicals which gave adequate attention to this intensely interesting subject were the more or less technical and often dull missionary magazines and the denominational weeklies. Now the larger denominations provide readable, well-illustrated, popular monthlies, among which Missions, our own most excellent journal, holds high rank. Not only so, but the better monthlies, having no connection with any missionary society, are discovering the inherent interest in the modern missionary propaganda. The Congregationalist says that a first-class monthly could be made from recent magazine contributions: "It would not be difficult now to make an issue of that excellent magazine mainly from articles from high-grade monthlies. For example, the leading article might appropriately be, 'Christianity in China,' by Prof. Edward A. Ross, in the March Century. It would be hard to find a more instructive and appreciative account of the work of Christian missions or the character of the missionaries in that country. Scribner's is printing a series on 'The West in the East from an American Point of View,' by Price Collier, and the third paper on 'Religion and Caste in India' gives a picture of religious and social conditions which ought to stir the purpose of any one who loves his kind to lift that vast aggregation of humanity to higher levels. The author yields only a grudging recognition to the service of Christian missions, but that evident fact adds emphasis to his showing of the need of the service that can break the bonds of superstition, ignorance and lovelessness that hold down India's millions. In the April Atlantic Mr. Herbert W. Horwill describes 'The New Missionary Outlook,' prompted by a study of the nine volumes of reports of the World Missionary Conference. It suggests a whole season's study for missionary concerts by men and women competent to take advance courses in missions. We might easily lengthen the list of magazines which would furnish excellent material for missionary meetings. There is rarely a number of the World's Work which does not contain articles that might be read to an assembly of Christians with spiritual incentive as a result. Not many sermons would be more moving than the reading of Norman Duncan's 'The Regenerate,' in the January Century."

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Episcopal

The Value of Protestantism.

The readers of The Christian Century probably never raise the question of the value of Protestantism. They see no reason to doubt that the revolt against the papacy has been a blessing to the world. In the Episcopal Church the subject is still under discussion. At the church congress held in Washington, D. C. the latter part of April, several addresses were devoted to the subject. The first speaker was the Hon. Joseph Packard of Baltimore. He said:

To the world at large the value of Protestantism has been enormous, though it is hard to measure with exactness. But applying our Lord's test and judging by fruits, can there be the slightest doubt that the Protestant nations have been in the vanguard of progress? When we look to the places where most has been done for the help of men, for the removal of time-worn abuses, for the curtailment of privilege, we shall find that they are the places occupied by the Protestants, and even where they have not themselves occupied the field they have furnished example and inspiration.

The value of Protestantism to the Roman Catholic whenever it is its neighbor has been very great. Clough, in a thoughtful poem, deplores the influences upon the Church of Rome of Loyola. Contrast the effects of this Spanish influence on the church at its mother city with the influence upon it of a Protestant environment. In such an environment it is on a far higher plane in faithfulness to duty, in freedom from abuses, in general effectiveness, than in countries where Protestants are few.

It needs little argument to show the value of Protestantism in our own communion. If it were not of positive value it would be hard to justify our separation from Rome. Since the time of the reformation there has been a segment of its members, varying in size from time to time, who have looked with distrust upon the Protestant movement, and there is no disposition to deny them a place in this comprehensive church. It would be odious to compare the work of one school with the other. But it may be proper to ask what the Anglican Church would have been without its Protestant element, with its strong impulse toward the cultivation of personal piety and the study of God's word and its zeal for missions. We should not like to miss from our roll the names of Keble and Seymour; the names of Arnold and Washburn are no less dear and they represent a larger number, at least among the laity. A recrudescenee of anti-Protestant feeling is not marked by the growth of the church.

This church will never abandon her long-established Protestant position. By the mass of her people the principles of Protestantism are well understood and are valued and so they are "inexpungable." If any find them intolerable we will say, "Depart in peace." But we will keep our ancient heritage in a church. "Protestant against every error of man; Catholic for every truth of God."

Another speaker, Lawson Purdy, Esq., discussed Protestantism as a point of view. It is neither a faith nor a system of theology. Those who would know Protestantism must know its spirit. The speech continues:

The spirit of Protestantism is the spirit of freedom, the recognition of the natural rights of man. When men have been true to this spirit, their work has blessed humanity. When the spirit of freedom was born in Europe, learning revived, art took on new life, trade and commerce broke down national barriers and laid the foundation of peace and good-will among men.

It was the spirit of Protestantism that moved St. Chrysostom and St. Ambrose to urge freedom for slave. It was that spirit that sent the poor priests of Wycliff throughout England preaching the equality of men; that inspired the teaching of John Ball, that gave him a martyr's death and ushered in the golden age for the laborers of England.

It was the spirit of Protestantism that gave to the world the Declaration of Independence—"That all men are created equal," and later the declaration of the French Assembly—"That ignorance, neglect, or contempt of human rights are the sole cause of public misfortunes and corruption of government.

Presbyterian

A Social Confession of Faith.

The Social and Reform Board of the Canadian Presbyterian Church has drawn up a confession of faith that ought to appeal to the non-metaphysical mind. We have been railing at the makers of the old creeds because they have given us philosophy rather than religion. This new confession may be a good deal harder to obey than the older ones, but it is easier to understand. It may be that we prefer the intellectual difficulties to the practical ones. To be saved by acknowledging the truth of a series of propositions may, after all, suit us better than to be saved by doing justly and loving kindness and walking humbly before God. Here is a part of this social confession:

(1) For the acknowledgment of the obligations of wealth. The church declares that the getting of wealth should be in obedience to Christian ideals and that all wealth must be held or administered as a trust from God, for the good of humanity. The church emphasizes the danger, ever imminent to the individual and to society as well, of setting material welfare above religious life. The church protests against undue desire for wealth, untempered pursuit of gain, and the immoderate exaltation of riches.

(2) For the application of Christian principles to the operation of industrial associations, whether of labor or capital.

(3) For a more equitable distribution of wealth. We hold that the distribution of the products of industry ought to be made such that it can be approved by the Christian conscience.

(4) For the abolition of poverty. We realize that some poverty is due to vice, idleness or imprudence; but, on the other hand, we hold that much is due to preventable disease, uncompensated accidents, lack of proper education, unemployment, and other conditions for which society is responsible and which society ought to seek to remove. We believe in the maintenance of a standard of living, so that every person shall have sufficient air, light, food, shelter, comforts and recreations to make the conditions of his life wholesome. We believe that, whenever possible, he should be led to earn these for himself and for those dependent upon him; but that when, through old age, accident, sickness or any other incapacity, the individual or family is unable to become self-supporting, society should make adequate provision for them.

(5) For the protection of childhood.

(6) For such regulation of the conditions of the industrial occupations of women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of themselves, the community and future generations.

(7) For adequate protection of working people from dangerous machinery and objectionable conditions of labor, and from occupational disease; for such ordering of the hours and conditions of labor as to make them compatible with healthy physical, mental and moral life.

(8) For the provision by which the burden imposed by injuries and deaths from industrial accidents shall not rest upon the injured person or his family.

(9) For the release of the worker from work one day in seven.

(10) For the employment of the methods of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes.

Methodist

The Bible in the Public Schools.

There are good people who think religion will cease to be a force in our country if we do not have the Bible read in the public schools. If a candidate for the county superintendency of schools announces that he does not see his way clear to advocate the reading of the Bible in the schools, he will meet with determined opposition from a large number of Protestants. The Central Christian Advocate (Kansas City) thinks we are wasting our time when we try to put upon the teacher in the public schools the task of giving instruction in the Bible. It quotes the statement of an Oberlin professor to the effect that it is the business of the churches to preserve, promulgate and interpret the Bible, and it justifies the professor in these words:

We commend these statements to our people. It is high time that we cut out so much talk about the enormity of banishing the Bible from the common schools and begin to bestir ourselves to make up for the deficiency. As it is, it is like a parent foaming because the municipality does not provide a nurse for her child when it is deathly sick, and then does nothing to nurse the child herself.

In our form of government the expounding of the Bible in the public schools is not to be tolerated. To many the Bible is a sectarian book. To such there is a constitutional right to secure an injunction against such teaching to their children. To the Roman Catholics the King James version is a sectarian book. Very good. Let that pass. What does this imply? This, that those who believe the Bible is the Word of God, and as such must be taught to their children, line upon line and precept upon precept, should themselves see that it is taught—see that they teach it themselves (as mothers must know how), and see that it is taught in the church as it ought to be.

We cannot shift the responsibility of biblical instruction upon the school directors. Pshaw! We know we cannot. God did not make schools first and mothers afterwards: the reason we have to have so many helps is because these modern mothers do not have the time, or do not care to take the time, or are indifferent anyhow, being unnatural and unworthy, to see that their children are brought up in the fear and admonition of the Lord—in His "precepts" and His ways. Because this is so, we hear an uproar occasionally because the Bible is no longer read and expounded in the public schools. Such a complaint is indeed often sincere, doubtless, but in all too many cases it is only the grumbling of laziness, of those who are trying to have their children brought up by proxy, brought up by the foster parent of the state.

Why not bring up the children ourselves? Why not insist that the Church shall do her duty in this particular? Is not the part of the Church in the moral and spiritual education of the child as important, yes, as vital, to the child and the world, as is the part taken by the day school?

We simply cannot farm out motherhood. We can invent no proxy to substitute for the Church of Christ. We try to do it at our peril. There are some things we have still got to do ourselves, and religious education is one of them.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

Unity, Liberty, Charity

In the second chapter of Galatians Paul continues the defense of himself and his gospel. Had he been the reprobate some of his opponents seemed to think he was, he would not have received the endorsement of the leaders at Jerusalem. The right of Titus, a Greek, to be called a Christian was not questioned and there was no demand that the Jewish ordinances be imposed upon him. James, Cephas, and John gave to Paul the right hand of fellowship in recognition of Paul's commission to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. Paul was treated as an equal by the apostles at Jerusalem. They made no attempt to improve the message he was delivering.

The independence of Paul was demonstrated when Cephas came to Antioch. Cephas not only acknowledged that Paul was right in refusing to demand more of his Gentile converts than faith in Jesus Christ and obedience to him, he also by his conduct said that Jewish Christians were no longer under the necessity of abstaining from food forbidden by the ancient regulations. He ate with the Gentiles. But when certain came down from James he drew back and separated himself from his Gentile brethren. Then Paul took a hand in the proceedings. He was willing that Jewish Christians should be free to follow the customs of their fathers, but he sternly opposed conduct that implied the necessity or even the desirability of requiring the Gentiles to obey the law.

Both Jews and Gentiles were justified by faith in Christ, not by works of the law. Law is here "conceived of as a code of statutes for obedience to which men are on grounds of merit and apart from grace accepted by God, for disobedience to which they are condemned." The essential thing was that men should be united to Christ. Law demanded righteousness, but it did not give the power to attain unto that which it demanded. Faith in Christ which united men to him gave them power to become like Christ. Hence Christians were free from law as a means of justification. Those who observed its ceremonies were not allowed to think of themselves as meeting the requirements of God any more acceptably than those who refused to be bound by the law.

The motto, "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity," is attractive, and it seems to decide questions of importance. Its ambiguity appears the moment we inquire what are the essentials. Doubtless the Judaizers had some motto equally pleasing to the ear. They believed in uniting upon the essentials. But they had their own notions of what men had to believe and to do in order to be saved. It would be possible today to pronounce the words, "In essentials, unity," etc., in an assembly composed of Roman Catholics, Protestants, Jews and Mohammedans and win applause, provided there was no indication as to what was intended by unity in essentials. The attempt to define would be a signal for war. The Jew and the Mohammedan would eliminate Jesus. The Catholic would insist upon papal infallibility. There would not be agreement among Protestants. The Unitarian and the Trinitarian stand apart. The doctrine of apostolic succession is dear to the heart of the Anglican; others repudiate it as a relic of paganism. We who believe in immersion could soon settle the question of baptism, but for some reason millions of our fellow Christians refuse to be set right.

We must not ridicule our honored motto. It is a good one. There are things in which we must agree. We may also differ with respect to many opinions and practices and still recognize one another as brethren. Without charity there is no Christianity. But let us not imagine we are different from other men because we have adopted this motto. It is useful because of its ambiguity. Give it exact definition, and it becomes the property of the religious body defining it. As it stands, all the followers of Jesus can use it. And we may hope for the day when there will be a definition that will meet the approval of all who really belong to Christ. That day may come sooner than we expect. Aggressive materialism, the challenge of non-Christian religions, and the social problems of the age are making it more and more difficult for serious men and women to mistake purely personal and local beliefs and customs for essential parts of Christianity. We may with confidence continue to proclaim what we believe to be the basis of union, provided we do our part in the common tasks of the church. Our theories must meet the test of life. [Midweek Service, May 24. Gal. 2: 1-21; Eph. 4: 1-6; Lu. 4: 18, 18; I. Cor. 13: 1-13; II. Cor. 3: 17; Gal. 5: 1, 13; Jas. 1: 25; 2: 12.]

S. J.

Seeing the Best in People

The ancient story concerning the old lady who found something to admire in every one, even going so far as to praise the devil for his activity illustrates a trait of character that is none too common. For every one who sees only the best in humanity a multitude seems blind to everything but the imperfections of their fellowmen. It is hard to be absolutely judicial. We are swayed by prejudices and governed by prepossessions. Some people are too lazy to make moral distinctions, and others fancy that they are making such discriminations when they are only exercising their natural grouchiness.

One of the familiar old saws declares that "it takes all sorts of people to make up the world." No two people are just alike, but all people are alike in being fallible. Some are better than others but not one is perfect. When we happen upon unlovely traits in those about us it is well to realize that others detect equally undesirable characteristics in ourselves. This will not promote self-admiration but it may well make us more charitable in our judgment of others.

It is impossible to avoid estimates of those about us. We can no more refrain from forming a decision as to character than as to the color of the hair or the tint of the skin. Jesus never intended to forbid such estimates. When he says "Judge not," he is warning us against censoriousness and unrighteous judgment. It is much easier to make a mistake as to the real character of an individual than as to his height. The outward man is clearly seen; the inward man may be discovered only after careful study. A single act or consecutive actions may not afford knowledge of the real character. The impressions made upon us should be held tentatively until we have opportunity to know the life in all of its manifestations. A man may appear to us to be avaricious when his real character is not that, or he may seem to be generous and that quality be almost entirely lacking. Or one may be naturally stingy and overcome it, or naturally generous and outgrow it. The character of today is not necessarily that of tomorrow. Under the stress of circumstances a man may speak a word or perform an act that is far from representing him as he is. All of these things teach the necessity of caution in our judgments.

It is especially difficult to judge justly concerning those whom we do not like. Most of us have our likes or dislikes for which we would find it difficult to give an explanation. This one impresses us favorably and that one unfavorably, and we do not know the reason. It is difficult for those for whom we have this instinctive aversion to do anything which seems to us worthy. We are suspicious of actions which in themselves are commendable and our eyes are ever open for weaknesses and faults. This harsh judgment is accentuated in the case of those who have done us an injury. Where one has proved himself our enemy we refuse to credit him with any virtues. This is carried over from the moral to the intellectual realm and we find it difficult to believe that the man who has injured us is in possession of exceptional ability even if the world at large may not agree with our verdict.

No virtue is more difficult of cultivation than that of charitable judgment, and none is more essential to the peace and well-being of the Christian church. Constantly we are coming upon illustrations of the readiness with which professing Christians catch up and publish reports detrimental to the fair fame of their brethren. If the daily press sends out a statement which reflects upon the wisdom or character of a well-known Christian minister it is almost certain that some one who claims to follow Jesus Christ will give added publicity to the newspaper reports. And this is done without any attempt to ascertain the truth or falsity of the statement. The conscience of these scandal-mongers seems quite satisfied when they attach "it is said" to their unverified gossip. The persistence with which so-called Christian men sometimes lend themselves to the dissemination of baseless reports concerning their brethren smacks of malignancy.

Especially should the pastor cultivate the virtue of seeing the best in others. He has a great deal to try his patience. Not infrequently he is grievously disappointed in the spirit shown by this or that member of his church. Some one from whom he has a right to expect hearty and faithful support seems careless of the interests of the church. Another who is thought to be financially able to do large things in benevolence falls far short of the standard which has been set up for him in the thought of the pastor. A third blurts out some word that wounds the pastor's heart. If the pastor cannot patiently hold himself to the search for good qualities in the lives of even the most fractious and unpleasant members of his congregation he will be unable to render the largest service and will make it impossible to minister to his people as he should.

It is hardly necessary even to hint at the importance of charitable judgment among members of the same church. The whole atmosphere is determined just here. Where any considerable number of members give themselves over to criticism of their fellow-members there is strife and discord and weakness. Even one tireless fault-finder will sometimes set a whole church by the ears. Of course there is abundant occasion for criticism in every church. If we are disposed to look only at the faults of those about us we can busy ourselves indefinitely. But how much better it is for our own souls and for those with whom we are associated and for the cause of Christ as a whole if we can school ourselves to ignore, as far as possible, the delinquencies of those about us and turn to a ceaseless quest for the good that may be found in all lives.

An Interesting and Instructive Bit of Contemporaneous History

EDITORIAL IN THE PACIFIC CHRISTIAN.

The city of Santa Cruz, California, has just contributed a comparatively unimportant item to contemporaneous church history which, despite its local character, deserves to be rescued from the waste-basket of forgetfulness and filed away for future reference and meditation.

A few weeks ago an elderly lady of that city died, leaving some $25,000 to various local religious, temperance and benevolent institutions. There was a contest over her will, but this has just been adjudicated by the courts.

Of the ten beneficiaries under the provisions of the will five of them are local churches—Baptist, Catholic, Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian.

The bequests are sufficiently varied and generous to remove from the donor all suspicion of partisan or sectarian bias.

Now it so happens there is at the present, and has been for years, a well-organized Christian church in that city. It has a comfortable house of worship, centrally located and paid for, and is composed of men and women who will compare favorably with church members generally. Our annual state conventions have been held there for well on to a quarter of a century. So that it is impossible for anyone residing in the city to be unaware of the existence of this particular church.

All the more reason why this apparently harmless bit of history should be looked into. Why was the First Christian Church, which is quite as prominent as the others in that city, overlooked in the disposition of this wealth?

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, we are disposed to regard the donor of these gifts as a woman who had the welfare of the community at heart, and one who by the evidence of her last will and testament was above all party spirit.

All of which only intensifies our interest in knowing why one, and only one, leading church was omitted in the distribution of her property.

It may make unpleasant reading, but the truth is, in spite of the splendid, catholic Gospel we have to preach, we have not succeeded in all these years in impressing this city with the fact that we are one whit better, theoretically or practically, than the other churches. Indeed, the logic of this particular incident would seem to imply that in the public estimation we are not so good.

We believe the time has come when we should sit down calmly and dispassionately and take a good, long, square look at this and many similar untoward facts. And lest in the looking we seem to be too personal we may shift the location from Santa Cruz to anyone of a hundred other cities in the West; for this particular incident is significant only because it presents in concrete and approachable form the attitude of a very large number of good people toward us.

Of course, there are many notable exceptions. A great many of the best members of other churches appreciate the splendid contribution we have made to evangelical Christianity; but it is the rule and not the exception which should give us concern in the present instance.

We are unwilling to believe the disposition on the part of many good people to withhold from us what is our just due is in any appreciable measure determined by actual or formal opposition to the doctrinal position we have occupied with honor for a century. So far no man has convicted us of error in this respect, and the challenge is still open to those who are without like offense to come forward and cast the first stone.

With this one reservation we leave it to each individual reader to decide for himself the precise cause or causes responsible for what appears to be studied discrimination against us in certain quarters. For the present we are content to call attention to the fact itself, and point the moral that hangs thereby.

And this is the tale and its moral. As a people we have too largely staked our case on a sound doctrinal position. Many appear to think that such a position ought to sweep us on to victory by its own divine momentum, regardless of any or all personal and ethical impedimenta.

We need to be disillusioned. Our own contemporaneous history is against us. Where one city honors us for our theory a thousand honor us for our practice. Doctrines are indispensable, but their value is always determined by their usefulness in safeguarding and conserving Christian life and practice.

The Minister's Mornings

Just now, Dr. Jowett is the most talked of minister in America if not in the world. His welcome to New York has had in it the spirit and nature of a national event. We are all proud to have this great and good man come to preach the everlasting gospel in the nation's metropolis. We like much to read in detail his welcome and what he said on that occasion. The slightest account of his doing interests a multitude mightily.

It was, therefore, with more than ordinary profit that we happened upon this item, tucked away in the midst of a description of the reception accorded him in Fifth Avenue Church.

"Dr. Jowett took the people into his confidence and asked them to let him have his mornings to himself."

This is as refreshing as it is amazing.

Think of the many sermons Dr. Jowett must already possess after fifteen years' ministry in one place. Maybe as many as fifteen hundred. Or if this estimate is too high, say a thousand. And good sermons at that. Strong sermons every one. Why, the average minister would feel himself a multi-millionaire, sermonically, and straightway would plunge into the galling grind and ravaging round of promiscuous calling, committee meetings, pink teas, dinners and all sorts of pastoral dissipation. But here comes a man with long experience as preacher and pastor who at the beginning of his new work, unabashed and with perfect candor, claims the mornings for himself.

"There is a reason," so reads a phrase in the copy of a much advertised article. Dr. Jowett is a great preacher. "There is a reason." Perhaps, yes surely, here, just here, is the reason.

This mighty man takes time to think, to weigh, to reflect, to study. His messages, like the mercies of God are fresh every morning—at least every Sunday morning.

The minister, every minister, should have his mornings.

Help him to have them, brother, elder, deacon, official or whoever and whatever you are, help your minister to have his mornings to himself.

Your minister may never become a great preacher but he will become a better preacher, however good a one he may be now, if you will help him to have his mornings to himself. E. DeW. J.

—Speaking of the statement given out by the Foreign Society and the Woman's Board to the effect that no change in the practice of our missionaries in the reception of members has been made or will be made without the approval of the executive committees and the brotherhood, the Christian Evangelist says: "Such approval can only come from a change of our interpretation of New Testament teaching." Many readers of The Christian Evangelist would like to know just what passages of the New Testament as at present interpreted stand in the way of a church of Christ giving full and complete fellowship to any member of the Church of Christ who applies with proper credentials.

The Visitor

A visit to Columbia University in the city of New York, and its allied institution, Union Theological Seminary, is always full of interest, particularly to one who is concerned with the problem of higher education among the Disciples of Christ. The group of men and women we have had at these institutions has never been large, yet some very choice teachers and preachers have passed through the courses of these admirable foundations.

Columbia University has taken immense strides during the past few years. Its later buildings are admirable examples of university architecture. Its library is a beautiful structure, and the chapel in which the religious exercises of the student body are held is one of the most artistic and satisfying pieces of architecture in the possession of any university in America.

* * *

It was a great pleasure to meet a company of a dozen or more men and women who form the Disciples' Club of Columbia and Union.. They were present at the Chapel service on Tuesday noon, and on the following day met for a conference of an hour in one of the rooms of the Student's Christian Association Building. Their deep and intelligent interest in the progress of activity and thought among the Disciples was an inspiration. The brotherhood will not be without leaders in its instructional and preaching positions as long as there continue to be groups of eager and prepared Disciples at Yale, Harvard and Columbia, as well as at the University of Chicago. The purposes, ideals, and point of view of all these groups are similar. They are men and women with modern conviction and modern interests. They have the keenest interest in seeing the Disciples of Christ taken seriously in the great religious world which is so ready to receive their message when once they are prepared to deliver it with sincerity and conviction.

* * *

The beautiful Quadrangle of the Union Theological Seminary is a recent contribution to the architecture of New York City and the world of scholarship. It more closely resembles the English type of building than any other American institution. It is built completely around a spacious court, and the four sides are devoted respectively to class rooms, chapel, library and student dormitories, and the residences of members of the faculty. A more complete and charming arrangement of these various accommodations could hardly be imagined. The structure is built in the Tudor style of architecture, and in its completeness of equipment seems to challenge criticism. The service rendered by the Union Theological Seminary to the cause of American religious scholarship has been notable, and never has it been prepared to do a more admirable piece of work than at the present time under the leadership of President Francis Brown and the choice men on the faculty.

It is perhaps inevitable that the University of Chicago should attract a larger number of Disciples than any other institution. Its location is closer to the heart of our brotherhood, and its equipment renders it capable of affording at least equal opportunities and advantages for graduate divinity study with those offered by any foundation in either America or Europe. In addition, the organization of the Disciples' Divinity House gives opportunities for instruction of university grade in themes related to the history, literature and purposes of the Disciples, such as cannot be organized elsewhere. Beyond this the opportunities for preaching in the churches and missions in and near the city of Chicago provide means of support for many of those at work in the institution. These facts combine to give the group of graduate students representing the Disciples a certain advantage enjoyed by our men nowhere else. Yet it is always a satisfaction, and chiefly to those interested in the Disciples' Divinity House, to know that at other institutions of learning we have groups of men and women preparing themselves for similar work, and thus taking advantage of a variety of instructional opportunities such as no one institution can provide.

* * *

On Tuesday evening, April 25, occurred the annual banquet of the Disciples Missionary Union of New York City. It was held at the Hotel St. Denis, and about 250 Disciples sat down. All of our churches in and near the metropolis were represented, especially the First Church on Eighty-first Street, of which Mr. Fisher is the pastor, and the one on One Hundred and Eighteenth Street of which Dr. Craig is the minister. It was a pleasure to meet again so many of the New York Disciples, and to know that our co-operative work in that city is progressing so satisfactorily.

The theme of the evening was Christian Union, and it was particularly fortunate that several members of the Disciples' Commission on Christian Unity were present, including President Peter Ainslie of Baltimore, Secretary F. W. Burnham of Springfield, Ill., and Dr. Garrison of St. Louis. The guest of honor was Dr. Manning, rector of Trinity Parish, New York, one of the largest and most important parishes in the Protestant Episcopal Church. Dr. Manning is the chairman of the Episcopal Commission on Christian Union, and represents in full measure that earnest sentiment in favor of church unification which has been prominently featured in the utterances of the Episcopal Church for a generation. It is hardly overstepping the mark to say that sincere and urgent as have been the testimonies of the Disciples regarding this great theme, the Episcopal Church has been even more assiduous in its efforts to emphasize the need of oneness in the church.

* * *

Dr. Craig acted as toastmaster in his usual happy manner. He spoke of the Episcopal Church as the representative of the best traditions of our English-speaking race. It was the old home back to which the younger children, far-wandering in western and less cultured regions, delighted to come and find such welcome as the older church was offering to others in these days. Dr. Manning delivered a telling and comprehensive address upon the theme. He pointed out the fact that unity was not to be won by compromises of principles, but rather by such frank exchange of views as would lead to mutual understanding. He then outlined somewhat the reasons for the organization of the Episcopal Commission on Christian Union, and rejoiced that the other denominations, notably the Disciples and Congregationalists, were responding to the call in a similar spirit.

Peter Ainslie spoke of the apostolic church and its ideals, and outlined the familiar yet ever significant interpretation of Christian unity to which the Disciples have given their sanction for the century of their history. With rare tact and precision he made clear the problem as it presents itself to our own brotherhood, and prophesied that in the conferences that were yet to be held, and especially in the world's conference that is now planning, there would be closer approaches to the unity for which the Disciples had insistently pleaded.

Dr. Willett, of Chicago, Dr. Garrison and Mr. Burnham also took part in the program, and the meeting closed with the feeling on the part of all that it had been a splendid demonstration of the spirit of unity, and that the good feeling manifested was a fair augury of things to come.

* * *

One feature which was pointed out by the speakers must not be lost to sight. The cultivation of the spirit of fraternity by all such gatherings is admirable. Yet it must not be forgotten that so long as any denomination holds a fixed and unalterable opinion regarding any element of the Christian confession not shared by its sister churches, to that extent it presents a problem of exceptional difficulty in dealing with the perplexing theme of Christian unity.

Perhaps this fact was never better illustrated than in the New York banquet. Dr. Manning represents a church which is definitely and sincerely committed to the platform of Christian unity, yet it holds as consistently to the principle of authority in connection with church orders, and insists that the united church must accept its doctrine of the apostolic succession. This view is shared by none of of the free churches, and appears to be an insuperable obstacle in the pathway of unity. To be sure, the Episcopal Church amiably and persuasively says: "You all believe that there are varieties of ministry in the church. You all hold to the sanction of ministers as leaders in the churches of Christ. Why not concede then our view, which we derive conscientiously and authoritatively from the Holy Scriptures, that the ministry gains its validity in direct succession from the apostles? Our consciences will not allow us to waive this important feature of historic Christianity." The response of the other churches, including the Disciples, is that they do not so read the Scriptures, nor have they been willing, up to the present time, to concede, even in the interest of Christian unity, the point urged by the Episcopalians in behalf of church orders.

On the other hand, there are many among the Disciples who hold an apparently rigid and unalterable conviction regarding immersion. They share with all the Christian bodies, including the Episcopalians, the belief that baptism is a valid and essential practice of the church in the admission of members. On this point there is no question raised in any of the evangelical churches. But these Disciples add to this particular conviction of their own, which they share with their Baptist brethren, regarding the form and meaning of baptism—a conviction which has dominated the practice of the whole Disciples' body during its entire history. They say to their Christian brethren of the various sects, "You are prepared to concede that the primitive baptism was immersion, but you do not hold with us that the question is a vital one at the present time. Will you not, however, for the sake of Christian unity, waive your conviction as to the subordinate nature of the particular act which constitutes baptism, and submit to immersion?" The response of the other churches thus far has been that they are unwilling to make the form of baptism a test of fellowship among Christians, and that to do so would involve a conscientious conviction as important as that which Baptists and many Disciples hold on the opposite side of the question.

It is thus seen that the principle of authority either of church orders, creeds, organizations or ordinances still vitally affects the problem of unity. If the Episcopalians can propose a method short of insistence upon their particular dogma, they will be able to absolve themselves from the appearance of inconsistency in connection with the advocacy of Christian union. If the Disciples can see their way clear to a solution of the problem of Baptism which shall satisfy their consciences, and at the same time not present an insuperable barrier to the very union for which they have pleaded, a great and desirable object will have been gained. The value of such conferences as that held in New York city lies in the fact that it compels groups of people like the Episcopalians and Disciples, both of whom still retain some remnants of the old legalism of authority, to face the problem frankly and in a brotherly spirit, and to make such progress as is possible toward a solution.

The Child Welfare Exhibit in Chicago

Exposition Throbbing With Human Interest and Attracting Thousands

BY JAMES S. KIRTLEY.

THE CHILDREN of Chicago and the surrounding communities, with their parents, friends, teachers and rulers, are having a lively time these two passing weeks, ending May 25. The Child Welfare Exhibit is open. There will be a week more of it after these lines reach the homes of their readers. None of the people involved will ever be the same afterward, for the exhibit is doing three things that will change the days for all who have gotten into it. It is revealing the children under the influence of the environment in which they live and of the agencies used for their betterment. That is one thing, and it is being done in a complete and vivid way. Then the exhibit sets forth the defects of such environment and agencies, as they are shown in in the results and in a scientific study of child problems. Finally, it tries to point out the most helpful things by means of models, demonstrations, conferences, directed by leaders and lectures given by experts.

The Grown Folks Behind the Little Folks.

Either one of these tasks is a big one, but it is made easier for Chicago by the fact that New York gave a similar exposition in Training Baseball and Track Athletes of the Future.

January and February. It required 300 experts three years to prepare the New York exhibit. That saved Chicago about three years, for it fell heir to the material, methods and some of the workers of the eastern city. It also saved a great deal of money. But Chicago is rich in the possession of some most public-pirited people, who, in this case, are mostly women, at the head of them being Mrs. Cyrus H. McCormick, Jr. Mrs. McCormick agreed to pay the expense of bringing on the New York material, and, when it amounted to $50,000 instead of $30,000 as at first estimated, she cheerfully stood by her promise.

With her are associated some of the foremost women of the city, women like Mrs. Henrotin, Mrs. Emmons Blaine, Miss Jane Addams, Miss Mary McDowell, Miss S. P. Breckinridge, Mrs. Harold McCormick, Mrs. Ella Flagg Young and a good many more. Leading men, too, are coöperating.

The method of making the exhibit is not noticeably complex and it is extremely vivid. It is founded upon photography and charts and legends and models and demonstrations. All one needs is to go right into the huge building and fall into the hands of one of the "explainers," who will impart wisdom with celerity and complete illumination. Let the visitor just turn to the left, on entering, and follow around and he gets into the great departments, as follows: Clubs, Homes, Schools, Libraries and Museums, Work and Wages, Recreation, Streets, Health and Laws, and Welfare Organizations. One can go any afternoon between two and four, and any evening, including Sunday. It will cost nothing, unless one happens to go on Tuesday or Friday, and then it will require 25 cents, which will be well spent.

Checking Babies and Seeing Things.

If one takes a baby, "check" him and trained nurses will take far bettter care of him than the parents could possibly do, while the father and mother see the sights and attend the conferences and lectures. All that one sees will fall into one of the general classes already noted. There is twice as much floor space as there was at the New York exhibit, and the day can be spent and one can come back the next day to finish his study, though a hasty glance through the whole building will give a good working idea. Then spots of special interest may be visited again.

About the first thing the visitor sees, going to the left, is the boys' exhibit. All that the clubs and other organizations are doing for boys, as such, is set forth in large placards and excellent pictures, and some living pictures in the form of boys playing in spots devoted to them. All the work done for boys by the Y. M. C. A. and the Scouts and Big Brothers and other church and philanthropic agencies is placed before the eye, emphatically and convincingly. The work for girls is exhibited in the same way. Both boys and girls will do some clever and characteristic work.

The home exhibit will be most attractive, and yet almost all the exhibits are home exhibits. In the specific home department there are object lessons in cleanliness. The most suitable kind of clothing for the different conditions of life and a classification of food are shown, so that the most ignorant may learn to choose from the groups of meats, fruits and vegetables those which are good for bone, for muscle, and so on. A model living-room gives a valuable suggestion, and a model kitchen ought to prove one of the most useful object lessons of the whole show.

In the department of civics a vast amount of well-digested data is given about work and wages, laws and their enforcement by juvenile courts, recreation in parks, playgrounds, bathing beaches, theaters and streets. Thirty-two thousand children attend the theaters each day in Chicago, mostly picture shows, which are declared to be well censored. The libraries, art galleries and museums tell their stories in artistic fashion.

The Public Schools.

It is somewhat difficult to say which exhibits are most complete, which most incomplete, or which deals with the most important interests of children. One cannot but be gratified with the careful exhibit of the city schools and especially with what they are doing. Mrs. Young, the superintendent, gave her personal attention to this particular showing. There are three features of the school work that are apt to surprise the uninformed—those that concern health, vocational and philanthropic work. There are two schools for the crippled with nurses in charge. Each school has its physician, and children whose parents are unable to secure for them the best service may have it without expense. Over 30,000 school children in Chicago have defective eyes. The school children are organized into little aid societies to help the needy children and their homes.

The city health department has an elaborate exhibit. A statement in big type tells the disease conditions and dangers of the city, the wrongs of childhood in the home, the tests of milk and other foods. It gives special demonstrations to mothers in ventilation and hygiene. A dental clinic is held. Information is given about mouth and throat diseases. Hospitals have provided model rooms, such as diet kitchens and sleeping rooms.

All the forms of philanthropy carried on in the city by churches, Sunday-schools, and all other agencies are pictured to the eye vividly and informingly. The exhibit of the Sunday-schools is creditable as a setting forth of what is being done, though the amount of work done is not as gratifying as one would like to see.

This is only a cursory view of the leading characteristics in this great exhibit. Something must be said about its dramatic, conference and lecture features. Each day, children from the schools, the philanthropic and social agencies and the churches give exhibitions in singing, instrumental music, folk-dancing, playing, athletics, and several kinds of class drills. Hospitals are doing actual clinical work, in addition to taking care of those who become sick or crippled while in attendance. At the moment of opening, a child was hurt, and furnished the first activity of the evening to the health department.

Lights as Well as Shadows of Child Life.

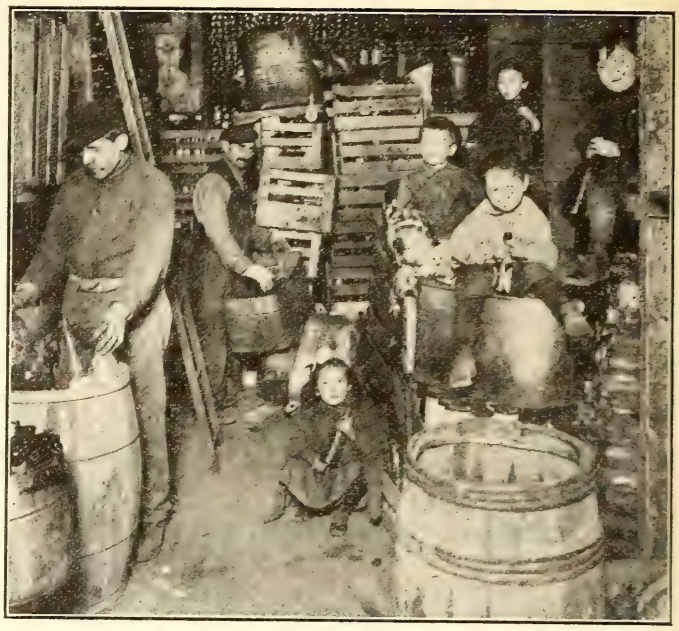
Let no one imagine that the exhibit is emphasizing only the sad and seamy side of child life in the city—though some of the exhibits are depressing enough—or that there is too great complacency over what has been done. One boy, at the Jones school, works ten hours a day while carrying on his studies. In the fifth grade of that same school, twenty-six out of the thirty-eight pupils work for the support of their homes. The dark side is depressing, but the bright side is encouraging. The percentage of truancy is growing smaller and, with vocational and social training, improvement is already noticeable.

The conferences and lectures are covering, in a systematic way, all the vital questions concerning childhood. Foremost students, workers and speakers of Chicago and the whole country are heard every day, in the assembly room. Among these are Booker Washington, Jane Addams, Bishop Anderson, Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, Dean Shailer Mathews and Dr. J. Timothy Stone.

This is the second exhibit, but it is not likely to be the last: It is aimed in the right direction. It is needed. The material, now accumulated, ought not to go to the scrap heap. It will not. In New York there was an attendance of 250,000 people, while in Chicago it will more than double that number. People are coming from all the surrounding cities. There is an irresistible charm in such an exposition, also contagion.

The exhibit is the objectification of a group consciousness that has grown up. Singular about that group consciousness power of ours! Years ago we became acutely and painfully conscious of the "young men" group, and the Y. M. C. A. was born. Then there came a consciousness of the women group, and women's activities became as varied and beautiful as spring flowers. Then we became aware of the young people, as such, and their societies arose. Next came young women, with the Y. W. C. A. as one result. Next we felt the presence of the boy, and we got to doing all sorts of things for boys. After that we found we had men on hand and forthwith started the Men and Missions and the Men and Religion movement. But before that we became conscious of the mother group and that led almost to a religious cult. Now we have the child group consciousness revived, and here is one of the fruits of it: The children are coming to the front by getting behind some important activities.

A Mother's Lesson in Cooking in Order to Save the Baby.



Where City Children Are Prepared for the Cemetery.

But there are still three neglected groups—the girl group, the father group, the grandpa and grandma group. Next!

Chicago.

Doctoring to Sick Minds

"A fine, healthy boy, fourteen years old, was brought by a grade teacher in March, 1896, to Dr. Lightner Witmer at the University of Pennsylvania for advice concerning his chronic bad spelling. The teacher assumed that psychology should be able to find the cause of the failing and advise ways for removing it. From that time the psychological clinic has continued its work.

"The boy was three years behind his proper school grade because of his excessively poor reading and spelling," writes Mr. Arthur Holmes, of the University of Pennsylvania, in The Survey, "though, in other respects he was normal. He read 'was' as 'saw,' 'weather,' as 'water.' His uncertainty of single letters led Doctor Witmer to look for some defect of vision. The suspicion was confirmed by holding several fingers before the boy's face. At a little distance he was unable to distinguish the number with certainty. He then said that words frequently doubled under his pen. An oculist found that though each eye alone saw normally, the power to fix the two upon a single point was lacking. Glasses were fitted and special teaching given for a few months. From this time on he did not fail of promotion once.

"The psychological clinic is best described by comparison with the medical clinic. Both are to help the patient as speedily as is consistent with the best results in permanent health. Both must face conditions and not theories. Their diagnosis, therefore, must be as concise and precise as practical demands and actual conditions permit. Decisive action is often of the first importance. In the medical clinic, mental health may be imperiled because of an already too long delay to take proper measures. Delicate and extensive laboratory tests are out of the question except in special cases."

In these days of intense activity, when the prizes in sight are more numerous and more attractive than ever before, when everything that awakens ambition and incites endeavor is at its brightest, when the fever of the age finds expression in its amusements and recreations and nothing is worth while that is not exciting, unless there is a deliberate consecration of thought, time, and leisure to the maintenance and reinforcement of the religious, it will surely decay and perish. Religion does not consist entirely in doing something. Sometimes we must stand still in reverent attention to see God work. It is they that wait on the Lord that renew their strength, that run and are not weary. Repose, quiet, seclusion are essential to spiritual vigor. Undisturbed Sundays were never more needed than now when we seem about wholly to lose them. Even the worship of God in the sanctuary is often so full of bustle, parade, and performance that its sweet ministeries are lost. Have we not forgotten that God once said, "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and confidence shall be your strength?"—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

God or Mammon

The Story of a Young Minister Who Was Led Into the City and Tempted

BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

This charming story by Mr. Jones is more than entertaining; it searches out one of the most vital problems of conscience which the preacher of today confronts. The story began in last week's issue and is concluded in this its second installment. Any reader who may have passed it by last week should go back and read the story from the beginning. The editors will be pleased to receive the opinions of both laymen and ministers on the course chosen by Rev. Baxter Wakefield. Did he do right? Is the plot paralleled in real life? What obligations inhere in the pastoral relation which could justly inhibit Wakefield from accepting the call to "Calvary"?—The Editors.

Escorted by Congressman Alanson Waller, the pastor-elect made his appearance before the official board, and that body of alert and prosperous-looking business men greeted him enthusiastically. Baxter made a short speech, thanking them for the honor and stating he would give them his decision in a few days.

Back then to the Waller home, and now here he was lying in bed resting his weary body. Baxter went over the events of the day at least half a dozen times. Just when he fell asleep he never knew, for, as he had thought the events of the day over on coming to bed, he now fell to dreaming them. Only he dreamed them a bit differently. Again he seemed to be in "Calvary's" pulpit. The sea of faces was upturned to him. He was preaching with wonderful effect. Suddenly from the midst of the audience, a man stood up, gesticulated wildly, and spoke out. He seemed to be challenging a statement the preacher had just made. Baxter could feel the blood leave his face and his legs trembled violently. "What could it mean? Who is the man?" Surely, he had seen that face before. Baxter leaned out over the desk and gazed intently at the man. Ah, yes, he knew him. "Why, it is Rossman, Professor Rossman. What could —" but just then Baxter awoke to find it broad daylight. Someone was knocking on his door. It was his host and he was saying:

"Wake up! Breakfast is nearly ready, Brother Wakefield."

An hour later, bag in hand, the parting guest said good bye to the ladies of the house who had so hospitably entertained him, and the automobile, this time with its owner as driver, started cityward.

As they sped swiftly along the streets Mr. Waller apologized to Baxter for his inability to show him still further attention.

"I had fully expected," he explained, "to show you through our South Main Street plant, but a called meeting this morning of the directors of a bank in which I have interests makes it quite impossible. However," he added, smiling on his companion, "I think I shall have other opportunities to show you through our plant. At any rate I hope so."

"I shall be glad to see it," answered Baxter with undisguised pleasure glowing in his face. Never had he been so drawn to any other man (except Rossman) as he was to this captain of industry. His charm was irresistible. He was magnetic. Baxter had asked to be left at the Gibson House and in what seemed to him an incredibly short time Mr. Waller brought their car to a stop in front of that hotel.

"Here we are," he announced briskly, as he sprang out and assisted Baxter with his bag. "And now I must say good bye. I am glad you visited us. Our people were pleased with you. We want you for our pastor."

"I shall let you know my decision shortly," replied Baxter, "and I think I may promise that it will be favorable."

Mr. Waller shook heartily the young minister's hand, stepped quickly into his car and in another moment was speeding round a nearby corner.

Baxter left his bag in the check room at the Gibson, after which he wired Mattie the action of Calvary's official board. Then with buoyant spirits he set out for Clayton's office in the Mercantile building.

At a quarter past twelve the Rev. Baxter Wakefield and Jefferson Clayton, attorney-at-law, were seated in the dining room of the Unity Club with a very excellent dinner before them. Old times at McMullen afforded them a lively topic for conversation and they recalled many an escapade over which they laughed heartily. They discussed also the growth of their fraternity, speculated on the whereabouts of certain "frat" brothers and were well into their dessert before they got down to the present and more personal matters. It was Clayton who changed the subject: "Well, old man," he said, "I suppose, of course, you are coming here. I should think a fellow would feel pretty good after receiving such a call as you got yesterday, eh, 'Bax'?"

"Well, it is quite an honor and I appreciate it very much," the other assented, with becoming modesty.

"Of course, you are going to accept it?"

"Yes, that is,—I think I shall; still, I don't really know. And that reminds me, Jeff, I want to ask you a question or two about Alanson Waller. Are you acquainted with him?"

"Not personally, but I know of him. Everybody does in this burg who reads the papers. He's in Congress and one of the city's big men. Fine entertainer, isn't he?"

"I should say he is, Jeff. I suppose Congressman Waller is very much beloved by the people generally?"

"Oh, he's regarded as a public benefactor. Gives away several thousand a year for sweet charity's sake."

"But, Jeff, what I want especially to know is this: how does he rank as an employer? Is he liberal with his men? And what do you know of his record in Congress? I am in earnest, Jeff, I want to learn all I can about him. Personally, I never was so drawn to a man in all my life as I have been to Mr. Waller. What do you know of his business principles?"

"Oh, he pays his debts," laughed Jeff.

"Jeff, I'm not in for fun now. A great deal may depend on the answers to the questions I am putting to you. Does Mr. Waller rank up as one of the best business men of Cincinnati? I mean is he just and generous in dealing with his men? Are his business principles sound ethically?"

"About as sound as any in his class, I guess; but, since you have put it to me straight, 'Bax,' I'll answer you the same way, and I'll tell you all I know, too. Mr. Waller doesn't stand in very good favor with labor. For one thing his plant is not equipped with safety appliances as required by law. I positively know this through a client I had about a year ago who worked for the Waller Co. and had his hand badly cut by a circular saw that was without a safety shield. He left them and went to a competitor of theirs out back on the hills somewhere. Poor fellow! he never will be able to use that hand any more. Then, of course, Waller is a monopolist of a certain kind. In Congress he votes with the "interests" always, I guess. It hasn't been six months since he, along with seven other distinguished citizens, was indicted by the grand jury for violating the Employer's Liability law; but then, don't worry, he'll never go to jail."

Baxter's face wore an expression of actual pain. "Really, Jeff, is it so bad as all this?"

"Not so bad after all. It is the way of most men nowadays I guess."

"But it isn't right; you know how Rossman used to point out this great 'cancer' as he termed it, eating at the vitals of our social body."

"Rossman? Oh, you mean the 'Prof' in sociology? Well, he is a crank. Pardon me, 'Bax', I forgot your liking for him; perhaps I'd better say an enthusiast. He certainly was that."

"He is that now," broke in Baxter, "so far as his views on an issue of this kind are concerned; I can only think of him as 'the same yesterday, today and forever.'"

"Rossman!" repeated Clayton thoughtfully, his eyes gazing off into space for a second or two. "Rossman! 'Bax,' I saw an item about that 'Prof' just the other day; why, I believe it was in yesterday's Enquirer, though I'm not certain. He is going to leave McMullen's or has left, I forget which."

"Is that so?" enquired Baxter, the expression on his face one of surprise and interest. "Strange I didn't hear of it. You see I correspond occasionally with Rossman," he explained. "Jeff' do you recall where he is going? What college or university?"

"No I can't, sorry to say. The truth is I wasn't very much interested in the item and just skipped through it. I guess I'd never thought of it again if you nadn't mentioned the fellow's name," Clayton confessed. "But coming back now to the matter we were discussing, old man, you aren't going to turn this proposition down simply because of the information you've got from me? Your man Waller, I repeat it, is a public benefactor. He does lots of good and I think he must be a model of personal habits from all I hear. 'Bax', you have to take people as you find them and then seek to make them better. Feeling as you do, it strikes me you ought to take the pastorate of 'Calvary,' if for no other reason, just to convert the Honorable Alanson Waller to your way of thinking."

Wakefield shook his head. "No," he exclaimed, "that wouldn't be practical in this case at all. I wish it were."

"As far as the indictment I spoke of is concerned, I think it was made largely on a technicality. He may have to pay a fine, but it will stop at that," reassured Clayton. Wakefield's face was actually haggard as he turned it squarely to that of his friend and began to speak very slowly as if every word hurt him.

"Jeff, I'm glad I got to see you and I thank you for what you've told me. They are the very things I had need to know. To discover them now is to disappoint me, but nothing as compared with what would have followed by finding them out later. Yes, I admire Rossman. I admire him yet and his teaching on this very particular thing we were discussing has become a part of my very being. He awakened my conscience and it has never slumbered since, on this matter at least, thank God! Now, I tell you, Jeff,—and I mean it every word—I wouldn't accept the pastorate of 'Calvary' Church as long as Congressman Waller is the leading light in it for $10,000 a year—no, not for any inducement that could be offered."

Clayton looked at him in unveiled astonishment. To let pass such an opportunity for such a reason appeared to him little short of ridiculous, and he admonished bluntly but not unkindly: "Bax', don't be a fool. Who knows, maybe you'll never have such an opportunity again. Certainly not for several years to come."

Baxter glanced at his watch, observing as he did so,—"I have only three quarters of an hour to catch my train, and I have a little shopping to do in the meantime."

They parted at the corner of Fifth and Vine Sts., and Clayton, as he turned away, called back: "Old man, if you turn this down, I'll never forgive you."

Baxter went directly to the Gibson House writing room where he sat down at a table and wrote this note:

"Cincinnati, May 8, 1907.

Dear Mr. Waller:—Permit me to thank you again for your generous hospitality and many kindnesses. This has been a visit I shall never forget. Everybody was so good to me and I fell quite in love with 'Old Calvary.' But I must write you now, what I feel you are not quite prepared to receive, at any rate, not so soon. I feel myself unable, under any consideration, to accept the call so cordially and unanimously extended me yesterday. Please consider this decision as final.

My kindest regards to your wife and daughters.

Most fraternally yours,
Baxter Wakefield.

Hon. Alanson Waller."

Addressing the envelope to Mr. Waller at his place of business, he sealed and stamped it and was on the point of dropping it in a letter box when he suddenly checked himself, put the letter in his pocket and sat down again.

"After all," he mused, "maybe I'm hasty in writing this today. Not that I'll change my mind, but it would be more courteous if I waited a few days before informing Mr. Waller that I'm not coming. Besides it's only fair to Mattie to talk it over with her first."

The time was short and having decided not to mail the letter now Baxter made haste to get his baggage from the check-room. Then he visited one of the large stores where he made some purchases for Mattie that for the time, quite got his mind off the painful topics of the afternoon. At 2:15 he was on his way to the station, carrying his head high and feeling quite strong and self-reliant.

At the entrance to the depot he passed a news stand and instantly there flashed through his mind Jeff's reference to the item about Rossman. He stopped and asked the news dealer if he had a copy of Sunday s "Enquirer" left. The dealer after a short search beneath the counter found a copy which Baxter bought and tucking it under his arm he purchased his ticket and boarded the train.

Seated in the parlor car and homeward bound, Baxter lost no time in hunting for the news item that Jeff had spoken about. Nor was he long in finding it. On the second page and in the third column a familiar name at the top of a paragraph caught his eyes and held them. Very deliberately he read the paragraph through.

"MCMULLEN TO LOSE PROF. ROSSMAN.
Noted Teacher to Leave Seminary, Where he Was Considered a Fixture.
Goes to Stafford University.

Louisville, Ky., May 7. The resignation of Dr. Harmon Rossman, for ten years Professor of Sociology in McMullen's Theological Seminary, of Chicago, was made public today. Dr. Rossman offered his resignation several weeks ago to the trustees of the seminary and it was accepted but not announced at that time. Dr. Rossman resigned to accept the head of the Sociological department at Stafford University, this city, where he will receive an increase of $3,000 per annum in salary, besides a year's leave of absence to be spent abroad for the purpose of research and study. The securing of Dr. Rossman by Stafford University is said to be the first of several such steps to be taken in the near future that will result in bringing to this institution a faculty of distinguished and brilliant scholars.

"John B. Stafford, the multi-millionaire Tobacco Trust magnate, who endowed the institution which bears his name, with a million dollars, is expected soon to supplement his original gift with another million."

Baxter laid the paper on his knees. A colored porter was just passing through the car. The young minister reached out and touched his arm. "Wait a minute, porter," he exclaimed. "What is our next stop?"

"Lawrenceburg, Indiana, suh."

"Could you mail a letter there for me?"

"Sure, suh, there's a letter box on the station platform, suh."

Baxter handed him the letter which less than an hour before he had written under such great stress, and slipping a quarter into the big brown palm he said rather soberly: "Don't you forget it, now."

" 'Deed I won't, captain. This lettah'll sure go all right," and the negro grinned broadly as he pocketed the coin, and disappeared into the next car, carrying Congressman Alanson Waller's letter in his hand.

The newspaper slid from Baxter's knees to the floor but he did not pick it up. Instead he looked out of the open window at the passing scenes of suburban life; the well-kept lawns set off with flower beds of white, yellow and scarlet; the beautiful homes with wide porches where ladies dressed in white sat reading. Occasionally he caught a glimpse of less favored spots where the houses were small and mean, where scores of grimy children played noisily in grassless yards; then, turning his head, he saw through the windows across the aisle the broad and majestic Ohio and watched with a moment's interest a tow boat worrying a fleet of empty barges up stream. Beyond were the lofty Kentucky hills lovely in dark green foliage and on these his eyes rested until the train bore away from the river and began to bisect the fertile valley of the Miami.

As the green hills and the river faded from his view, Baxter suddenly lost interest in the landscape. He took from an inner coat pocket a thin leather book larger than the ordinary cardcase and from this he brought to light a photograph which he placed face downward on his right knee. Carefully replacing the leather book in his coat he picked up the picture, and threw it quickly out of the window.

"Mattie won't have any further occasion for jealously, I guess," he said.

THE END.

The two first-class battleships authorized by the last session of congress will be about equal in strength to the battleships Texas and New York, now in process of construction, and which will be the most powerful ships in the navy. According to tentative plans, the two additional vessels, yet unnamed, will have 10 14-inch guns arranged in four turrets. Two of the turrets will contain two guns each, while the other two turrets will be armed with three guns each. The displacement of the new ships will be 27,500 tons each. These vessels will be the first in the navy to have three guns in a turret.

Monday Moods

Eugene Field in compliance with the request of an admirer once wrote for publication a catalogue of his special likings. Under the caption of "What I Like Best to Do" he wrote: "Read in bed." I confess to a fondness for the same sort of pastime. I like much to read sitting up in bed. Mind you, I say sitting up, not lying down. The latter is a very bad habit. The former is not.

Directly over my bed there is a gas burner that gives me the best of reading light, making book or magazine page beautifully clear and legible. There is a book rack close by, upon whose shelves lie volumes within easy reach as I recline, bolstered up luxuriously by a couple of pillows. Thus equipped I turn, affectionately, many a storied page.

Of late for this reading abed I have been enjoying the diaries of Samuel Pepys and John Evelyn. These volumes make exceedingly good reading for an odd hour of pleasure and profit. One can begin anywhere and leave off at any place. They are chatty, witty and decidedly entertaining. Pepys was a good deal of a gossip and the fact that he did not write his diary for publication affords excuse, perhaps, for some items that he records. He was a great church goer, though not especially religious. Then, too, he was something of a sermon taster. Here is one of his "Lord's day" entries taken at random:

"To church myself and wife where the dunce Merton of St. Martins, Westminster, did make a very good sermon, beyond my expectation."

Here follow two others:

(Lord's Day) "To church where a dull doctor, a stranger, made a dull sermon."

(Lord's day.) "To church where Mr. Mills made an unnecessary sermon upon original sin, neither understood by himself nor the people."

John Evelyn was a contemporary and friend of Samuel Pepys. Both were men of mark, and stood high in the estimate of the king and his court. But Evelyn was a much more sedate and religious character than Pepys. Evelyn's diary records the thoughts and doings of a most gracious gentleman and a humble follower of the lowly Galilean. The following extract is but one of many similar showing the man's intensely religious nature.

"Went to London on purpose to hear that excellent preacher, Dr. Jeremy Taylor, on Matt. xiv: 17 showing what were the conditions of obtaining eternal life; also concerning abatements for unavoidable infirmities, how cast on the accounts of the cross. On the 31st I made a visit to Dr. Jeremy Taylor to confer with him about some spiritual matters using him thence-forward as my ghostly father. I beseech God Almighty to make me ever mindful of, and thankful for his heavenly assistance."

I recommend these two diaries (I have them each in two volumnes, Everyman's edition) to all who enjoy literature of this kind as supreme examples of the diarist's art. The entertainingness of these books is the lesser feature, for as one reads their bright pages he gets a far insight into the English court life of the middle seventeenth century that is as valuable as it is fascinating.

My closing paragraph is the last entry in the first volume of Evelyn—a thanksgiving for deliverance from the awful plague that stalked through London's street in 1665. "Now blessed be God for his extraordinary mercies and preservation of me this year, when thousands and ten thousands perished and were swept away on each side of me, there dying in our parish this year 406 of the pestilence."

I may have something further to say of these diaries at another time.

E. DeW. J.

The Fraternal Spirit of Thomas Campbell

Disclosed in Newly Discovered Records in Ireland

BY ERRETT GATES.

The series of articles by Dr. Gates, dealing with the early days of the Campbells, father and son, in Ireland and Scotland, has been one of the most interesting and valuable features of The Christian Century during the past year. The author, a professor in the Disciples Divinity House of the University of Chicago and also a member of the faculty of the Divinity School, has been spending the year in Scotland and Germany, studying especially the history of the Reformation in those two countries. He will be returning home in two weeks and will be welcomed by an especially arranged Disciples' Ministers' Meeting on Monday, June 4, at the Hyde Park Church, close to the University. At 10:30 a. m. Dr. Gates will speak. Luncheon will be served in the University Commons, and a session will be held at 2 o'clock with other speakers. Ministers round and about Chicago are invited to spend the day in company with Chicago pastors, and such church people as choose to come will be cordially welcome.—THE EDITORS.

One of the most important discoveries which it was my good fortune to make concerning Thomas Campbell, while I was in Ireland, was as to his participation in the organization and work of the "Evangelical Society of Ulster." It came through my correspondence with the Rev. W. T. Latimer, of Eglish, Ireland, who has written a history of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland, and, as I have reported before, was of inestimable service to me in my quest for literature.

He referred me to a sermon on "The Great Necessity of Itinerant Preaching" "delivered in the new meeting-house in Armagh, at the formation of the Evangelical Society of Ulster, on Wednesday, 10th of October, 1798," by George Hamilton, printed "with a short introductory memorial respecting the establishment and first attempt of that society." Not the sermon, but the "Introductory Memorial," contains the material that gave me a thrill of joy when I read it over.

Events Leading to the Sermon.

The events which led up to the occasion on which this sermon was preached were as follows: "A few ministers and lay-brethren (of various denominations) being assembled at Armagh, on a sacramental occasion," this question was made the subject of a sermon by George Hamilton: "Is there anything practicable by us, in order to our more extensive usefulness, in spreading the glorious Gospel?" "After prayer, and much serious conversation on the subject, it was judged proper to call a meeting, to be held in Armagh, on the 10th of October, next; and that in the meantime, a circular letter be prepared, in order to be addressed to evangelical ministers, and private Christians of every denomination, requesting their attendance." This preliminary meeting was held Aug. 20, 1798, and the circular letter sent out to "Christians of every denomination," follows and bears the same date.

Stimulus of Movement.

The stimulus to this movement came, as the letter acknowledges, from England and Scotland. Whitfield and the Wesleys, a little earlier in England, and Rowland Hill, their successor in the work of widespread popular evangelism, and the Haldanes in Scotland, had set the example. The letter begins: "Sir: Your attendance is requested at a meeting to be held in Armagh, on Wednesday the 10th of October next, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon; to take into consideration the low state of Religion in this country, and to assist by your presence and counsel in forming a society for the purpose of having the Gospel preached in those Towns and Villages which are destitute of it." "These important objects have occupied the attention of the Lovers of Christ—in America—in England—in Scotland—and other parts of Europe."

Thomas Campbell at the time this letter was sent out lived at Hamilton's Bawn, and was pastor of the Seceder church at Ahorey, about ten miles from Armagh. He received one of these letters. "At length the day appointed arrived; and although there happened a great fall of rain, still a considerable number of people with about thirteen ministers of four different denominations had the pleasure of assembling on the occasion. The public worship was conducted in the following manner. The Rev. George Maunsel, Rector of Dumcree, began with the reading of 1st chap. of Haggai; and then gave out the latter part of the 90th Psalm. The Revd. Thos. Campbell, pastor of the Anti-burgher Congregation of Ahorey, then prayed; after which . . . the following discourse was delivered."

Professor Errett Gates.

A Society Formed.

The narrative goes on to say that the assembly was then dismissed by prayer, and called to order for a business meeting. Mr. Hamilton read a sketch of a plan "previously digested." "A committee of 5 persons was then appointed, who having retired to the Vestry, made some little alterations on the plan proposed, expressed their approbation, and returned it to the examination of the meeting." The "plan" or constitution of this society called for "a committee, chosen annually, consisting of five ministers and seven laymen," to transact its business. Thomas Campbell was one of the five ministerial members of this first committee, and his name appears in the list of 115 subscribers to the support of the society, as follows: "Rev. Mr. Campbell, Hamiltonsbawn. 11 shillings, 4 half-pence."

Before seeing the constitution of this society, my eagerness to read it was sharpened by a statement in a letter from the Rev. Mr. Latimer. We made an author's exchange of histories, and after reading the plan of the Christian Association of Washington he wrote me as follows:

"The more I reflect on the matter, the more I am convinced that the first foundation stone of the church of the Disciples was laid at the meeting in Armagh on Monday, Aug. 20, 1789, and the second on the 10th of October, 1798, when the 'Evangelical Society of Ulster' was formed."

Two Unity Societies Compared.

Mr. Latimer doubtless had in mind the resemblance of the "Evangelical Society of Ulster" to the "Christian Association of Washington." And, indeed, the resemblance is not superficial. The constitutions of the two societies should be read together. Here are the most relevant articles of the Ulster Society for such a comparison:

"1. This Society shall be called the Evangelical Society of Ulster.

"2. The object is, to make the Gospel known in those towns and other places where it may be judged necessary; by introducing the preaching of the Word, setting up prayer-meetings, distributing Bibles and Evangelical tracts among the poor.

"3. That a Committee shall be chosen annually, etc.

"4. A Treasurer and Secretary, etc.

"5. The Committee shall correspond with Evangelical ministers, and request them to preach in adjacent villages, as they have opportunity; and the expenses incurred by such occasional labors shall be defrayed by direction of the Committee. (Thomas Campbell was a member of this committee.)

"6. In all meetings of this Society, Love shall be the prevailing principle; and all controversies whether political or religious, carefully avoided.

"7. Every missionary to report his work.

"8. Directions as to Members' dues.

"9. The Missionary Societies, formed in Great Britain, and elsewhere, justly merit the warmest acknowledgments of this Society; and we desire heartily to coöperate with them, in their unparalleled exertions, to make the Gospel of Christ known throughout the world. (T. Campbell here subscribed to the principle of foreign mission work through societies.)

"10. As soon as the funds will admit, the Society will employ one or more Itinerant Preachers, who shall be duly qualified for the work.

"11. A general meeting of society annually, etc.

"12. It is the wish of this Society, to unite with approved Evangelical Ministers, and private Christians, respectable in their moral conduct, and of every denomination."

Unity a Realized Fact.

Those familiar with the Declaration and Address will miss from this constitution one or two ideas fundamental to the former: the appeal for union among Christians, and to the teaching and example of the New Testament. But Christian unity was a realized fact in the membership of the Ulster Society, as it was also in the Christian Association. These seem to me to be the chief points of resemblance between these societies:

1. Their membership was interdenominational.
2. Their object was the preaching of the Gospel, distribution of Christian literature among the people and the support of a pure, evangelical ministry to accomplish these ends.
3. In very general outline a resemblance in the organization of the societies.
4. The appeal to brotherly love and Christian fraternity.
5. The freedom of the societies from any ecclesiastical alliances or subordinations.

Campbell's Training School.

The significant fact in all this is, however, that Thomas Campbell took an active part in this union movement. Here began with him the exercise of that large, sweet Christian fraternity which was the direct cause of his break with the Seceder Presbyterians in America, and the indirect cause of the beginning of the Disciples of Christ as a distinct movement in American Christianity. Let it be proclaimed that, until there shall not remain the shadow of a doubt, it was breadth not narrowness, the spirit of all-inclusive fraternity, in the soul of Thomas Campbell, that gave them being. He was in Washington, Pa., what he was in Ahorey, in the Christian Association, what he was in the Evangelical Society. He intended the fellowship of all Christians, on the sole condition of the manifestation of Christian character and love alone as the "cement" of the union. Such were the conditions of fellowship in the Ulster Society, and such also in the Washington Association. The Evangelical Society of Ulster evidently did not fail of influence on Thomas Campbell; it was his training school. Here he began to touch hands with all other Christians in beneficent service, and learned to ignore denominational boundaries.

A Further Quotation.

At the risk of unduly lengthening this report, I cannot forbear a further quotation from the introduction to this pamphlet, which has all the marks of a quotation from Thomas Campbell's Declaration and Address. It will be seen how fully saturated the atmosphere of the Evangelical Society was with the circle of ideas pervading the Christian Association of Washington:

"When we view the very candid and explicit manner in which the designs of our society have been detailed in their address, published some time past, we are indeed surprised to hear that any man should consider it as inimical to the outward distinctions which prevail among us. Surely such a deduction must result from too superficial an attention to the address now mentioned. Have we not there solemnly disclaimed all intention of interfering directly or indirectly with the internal arrangements, or distinguishing peculiarities of any Christian denomination?" "What, we would ask, are the sibboleths and shibboleths of sects and parties, compared with the extensive spread of the Gospel?" "We seek not our own, but the things of Christ; and if he be exalted, let forms crumble back into their original chaos, and distinctions among Christians be obliterated and forgotten."

"But it has been asked, 'How can you associate with persons of other denominations, in a consistency with your solemn vows and engagements'? We reply: As for ourselves, we are not conscious of being under any solemn vows or engagements that should preclude us from doing the Lord's work in conjunction with his faithful and approven servants of other denominations. And we add: if there are any such anti-scriptural vows, or engagements amongst us, we refuse to recognize their obligation. Our ideas on this subject coincide with those of a truly great man, yet living, whose sentiments on this occasion, we are happy to quote, 'If a party exists in the religious world, so constituted, that its members can not consistently unite in doing good with any but those of their own communion, that party is certainly Anti-Christian; for the disciples of Christ have but one Master, and all are brethren."

Many of the foregoing phrases could be paralleled from the Declaration and Address, in idea if not in word. As far as the Disciples had an existence in the Christian Association of Washington, the assertion of Rev. Mr. Latimer that the "foundation stone of the church of Disciples was laid" "when the Evangelical Society was formed" seems borne out in these quotations.

The pamphlet which contains these materials concerning the Ulster Society and Thomas Campbell is very rare and long out of print. I know of only two copies: one in the library of Queens University, Belfast, and one in the library of Lough Fea, County Monaghan, Ireland. I obtained a type-written copy from the one in Belfast.

HER SILVER ANNIVERSARY

BY SUSAN HUBBARD MARTIN.

The day she had been married twenty-five years, she looked across at her husband. It was at dinner and the table was set with her usual care. There was a glass of late nasturtiums in the center of the table, and the cloth, though coarse, was white and spotless. At each of the two plates was a black-handled knife and fork and pewter spoon. Opposite her sat her husband, Ephraim Vaile.

"It is twenty-five years today since we were married, Ephraim," she announced, handing him his coffee.

He looked up from his plate.

His eyes under his beetling brows were a trifle more severe than usual.

"It's long enough," he answered grumblingly.

Abby Vaile's sensitive face flushed.

"Yes, twenty-five years is some time," she replied gently.

There was a silence.

Then she stirred a little in her chair.

"Seems as if," she went on more timidly still, "seems as if, on my silver anniversary, I might have a silver spoon. I haven't one piece of silver, Ephraim. If I could just have one spoon—"

She hesitated.

"Things don't taste as good out of a common one," she concluded lamely.

"A silver spoon!" cried Ephraim Vaile contemptously. "What does it matter what kind of a spoon you have so you have something to put on it. We always have enough to eat."

"I think," he added somewhat pompously, "that for twenty-five years I've done my part pretty well. Youv'e never gone hungry yet."

"Not for temporal things, perhaps," replied his wife quietly.

"Temporal things, what other kind of things are there?" he demanded. "They're all the things I know about or anybody else for that matter. You've always been one to have your head in the clouds, Abby," he went on with increased severity. "Common articles never were quite good enough for you. I'm not troubling my head over silver spoons."

He rose from his chair.

"I'll be in the south lot all afternoon," he said. "If anyone comes you'll know where to reach me."

He went out heavily.

Abby followed him.

"Aren't you going to kiss me on my anniversary, Ephraim?" she asked humbly.

He looked at her about to say something harsh but his better nature restrained him. For once, he had no retort ready. He actually kissed her.

Abby went back to the table—sat down, leaning her face on her hands. And this was her anniversary. Her silver one. And she had not received even that long, coveted silver spoon.

Well, Ephraim was just as he was. She would have to give it up. After twenty-five years it was too late to expect anything of him. But today, somehow, things looked darker than usual. Middle age was passing, soon she would be old and perhaps there would never be that silver spoon after all. She sighed heavily, then rising, she began to clear away the dinner things. As she did so, she heard wheels approaching. She looked out.

"Why, it's the postman," she cried brightening a little. "Wouldn't it be nice now if I could just get a letter on my anniversary. Perhaps some one will remember after all. If I'd had any children, they would have thought of it," she whispered, "but—"

She sighed again.

There had never been any small, rosy faces in the old farm house. Abby Vaile's arms had always been empty.

She hurried out to the gate.

"How are you, Mrs. Vaile," cried the genial man of the rural free delivery. "Nice day for October, isn't it? But then October always is a nice month."

Abby smiled.

She looked almost girlish in her gray gingham gown. Her smooth hair was brushed back into a luxuriant knot behind. There was a soft color in her cheeks.

"I think so, too," she answered.

"I was married in October," she added shyly.

"Were you now," answered the good man.

"Yes, and its twenty-five years ago today."

"You don't say so. Silver anniversary—eh? Well, you have my best wishes for twenty-five years more. There ain't everybody so pleasant and cheerful spoken as you are. I've a letter, ma'am, for you and a package. Wouldn't be surprised if it was a present."

Abby smiled.

"I would. I've nobody belonging to me but a sister and I haven't seen her in over twenty years. She lives in New York City."

"Well, here they are," and over the wagon-wheel he handed to her a letter and a long, slender package.

"Thank you, so much."

She hurried with them into the house. She opened the letter first, glancing at the signature.

"It is from Lucy," she cried wonderingly, and then she read it.

"My dear Abby," it ran:

"It is borne in upon me that your silver anniversary comes the 20th of this month, and to show you that I have neither forgotten you nor the day, I am sending you a little gift for the occasion—a silver knife and fork and spoon. They are solid and are the very best I could get in New York City. You will find on each one your monogram, A. T. V., for Abby Temple Vaile—bless her, my dear sister. I trust you will forgive me my long periods of silence, but I have resolved lately never to let so long a space of time intervene between our letters again. We are the only two left, and we ought to keep in touch with each other better. My kindest regards to your husband and much love to yourself.

Dearest Abby, we were girls together. I do hope the years have been kind, and that you are comfortable and happy. My daughter, Alice, the only one I have, is with me at present, and she sends a silver spoon on her own account. Hers is marked with only one letter, "V," so you will readily know it. She joins with me in love to you.

Now Abby, dear sister, let us hear from you soon. Your affectionate sister,

Lucy Temple Abbott."

The tears were running unheeded down Abby Vaile's cheeks.

To think that Lucy had remembered her—and Lucy's daughter, whom she had never seen. Her hands trembled as she untied the stout fastenings on the slender box. She looked at the white tissue paper with which the box seemed filled, then she lifted out very reverently, the first article. It proved to be a delicate silver fork, beautifully engraved as Lucy had said. There was her monogram, "A. T. V." The next package revealed a knife of like pattern as beautiful as the fork. Then the last, two exquisite spoons. The very things she had been longing for.

She laid them out on the coarse cloth, and then somehow, the common, white dishes were forgotten, the limitations and deprivations of her life faded quite away—the hard work and the drudgery and all the ordinary things with which her life was hedged, all had vanished. She was smiling softly at the shining silver that lay before her. That aesthetic part of her that had been starved for twenty-five years had something now. Something to feast on every day. Dear, dear Lucy and Lucy's daughter. To think even she remembered her.

She forgot all about the unwashed dishes. For one lovely hour she entered into a new world. An hour peopled with beautiful things and lovely happenings.

All at once, she remembered. With flushed cheeks she picked up the beautiful shining silver and laid it against her cheek.

"How I love you," she whispered.

Then she smiled.

"Ephraim can have a silver spoon, too, even if he doesn't care for it. But he will, I know he will, when he sees this."

She smiled again.

"I can have the minister to dinner now," she said.

Hymns of the Early Church

Beginnings of Christian Praise in Eastern and Western Churches

BY MEADE E. DUTT.

When the ancient Greeks composed a lyric poem which was sung or recited in honor of a god, hero or famous man, they called it a "hymn." Such hymns were recited on joyful, mournful or solemn occasions.

Why do Christians sing hymns? It is the lyric expression of a devout and grateful soul. This custom is, however, much older than Christianity. The earliest literary records of the Indo-Germanic race contain a book of hymns, 1022 in number. The date of this Rig-Veda is assigned as 1500-500 B. C. Deep religious feeling has always expressed itself in some form of song. Christianity grew up under the influence of both Greek and Jewish civilization both of which peoples are noted for their poetry. It is to be expected, therefore, that both left their mark upon the hymnody of the church. As the church grew through her period of "adolescence" and came to have more time to formulate a liturgy and a ritual, it is but natural that she should adopt hymns from classic sources and it is to be expected she would create a lyric literature peculiarly her own.

The Hymnody of the Apostolic Age.

It is to be expected that the young church composed largely of Jews would adopt the Hebrew psalms so far as possible and this they evidently did. What the hymn Jesus and his disciples sang after the supper, or what the hymns Paul and Silas sang in the Philippian dungeon, we have no means of knowing. We know Paul commended the singing of psalms and hymns and spiritual songs as helpful to the development of Christian character.

As the Greeks were a music loving people and used hymns so extensively in their heathen worship, we can easily understand how Christian worship with its spiritual songs and odes would fit into their religious life. Probably some of the more spiritual lyrics of the heathen faith were rewritten and filled with the Christian spirit and sung in the Grecian churches. With the love of hymn and melody the Greek had, it is not to be supposed he would be long without them in his worship, especially after his favorite apostle had given his consent and approval.

There are in Paul's epistles several passages which are supposed to be extracts from original hymns of the apostolic age.

Eph. 5: 14.

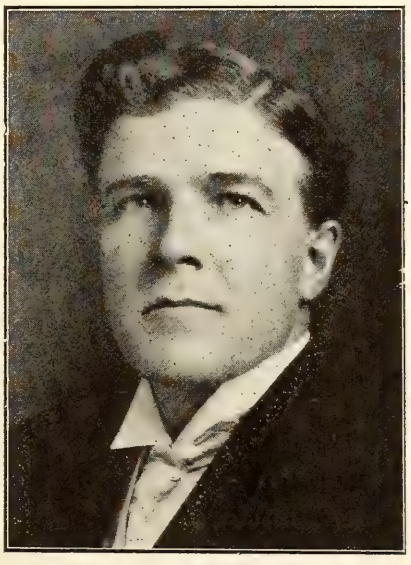
Awake thou that sleepest,
Arise from the dead
And Christ shall shine upon thee.

I Tim. 3:16.

He who was manifested in the flesh,
Justified in the spirit,
Seen of angels,
Preached among the nations,
Believed on in the world,
Received up into glory.

The thanksgiving prayer of Acts four seems to be a blending of a hymn with Psalm two.

Oh, Lord, thou didst make the heaven,
And the earth and the sea,
And all that in them is:
Who by the Holy Spirit



Rev. Meade E. Dutt.

By the mouth of our father David didst say:
"Why do the Gentiles rage
And the peoples imagine vain things?"
The kings of the earth set themselves in array
And the rulers were gathered together
Against the Lord and his annointed.

This was either recited or sung by the whole company for "they lifted up their voice to God with one accord and said," etc.

There is an ancient hymn that was sung in the early church at the lighting of the evening lamps. It has passed down through the centuries to our own time and is still used in the daily service of the Greek church. It was originally written in Greek by some unknown author and is believed to have been used in the church as early as A. D. 50. The Apostle John may have joined many times in singing it. Of it Wm. H. Parker in his "Psalmody of the Church" says: "It is undoubtedly the oldest metrical hymn extant." The translation reads:

Hail, Jesus Christ, hail gladdening light
Of the Immortal Father's glory bright!
Blessed of all saints beneath the sky
And of the heavenly company.

Now, while the sun is setting,
Now while the light grows dim
To the Father, Son and Spirit
We raise our evening hymn.

Worthy thou while time shall dure
To be hymned by voices pure,
Son of God, of life the Giver
Thee the world shall praise forever.

There is another hymn of this period written by Titus Flavius Clement. One verse of Dr. Dexter's translation reads:

Shepherd of tender youth
Guiding love and truth
Through devious way,
Christ our triumphal king,
We come thy name to sing,
And here our children bring
To shout thy praise.

As the Christian faith spread among the Gentile races it is but natural that they should adopt the lyric poetry already there or that the new church would create a lyric literature having Christianity for its inspiration. They probably did both. The national temperament of the people had much to do with the kind of hymnody they produced. The freedom and enthusiasm of the west produced hymns of that character while the hymns of the east were naturally dreamy and mystical. Neither do we expect the German to produce a type of literature like the Italian. Some will be heavy and often sluggish, others will be bright and imaginative. Some churches might use an adaptation of the Hebrew Psalms if they served the purpose, but they would be likely, very soon, to construct a hymn after their own ideas of praise. As the church spread east and west it came in contact with two types of civilization and two types of thought. The whole religious nature of the Oriental

(Continued on page 23.)

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXII. Micah and Social Justice

May 28. Text for Special Study, Micah 3.

QUESTIONS.

1. Why is it that so little is known of most of the Old Testament prophets?
2. Is there any reference to Micah outside the book that bears his name?
3. What would seem to have been the esteem in which he was held?
4. Was Micah a city man or a farmer?
5. How does he contrast in this regard with Isaiah?
6. Where did he live?
7. What was the character of the region in which his home lay?
8. In what problems of the time was Micah chiefly interested?
9. What was the character of the social problem in the country districts in Micah's time?
10. What sins did he denounce in the conduct of his countrymen?
11. What threatening events did Micah discover upon the political horizon?
12. In what regard did he hold the popular preachers or prophets of his time?
13. What sins did he charge against them and other leaders?
14. Did the people prefer the preaching of a man like Micah or that of the ordinary type?
15. What event did Micah foresee beyond the scope of Isaiah's messages?
16. What sequel did he believe the future Babylonian capitivity would have?
19. What difference is noticed in the tone of the last two chapters of the book?
18. What is the greatest utterance in the book of Micah and what contribution does it make to the spirit of religion?

1. THE PROPHET MICAH.

It is our misfortune as students of the prophetic activities of ancient Israel that so little is recorded regarding these great moral leaders of the nation. The books which contain their messages to the people give only the scantiest notes of a biographical nature. We are almost entirely dependent for our knowledge of the greater number of these men upon the allusions made in their sermons to current events. They were by no means concerned to record the story of their own lives. To interpret the will of God to the nation was their supreme task. They cared nothing for the reputation or the honors of literary work, nor even of popular leadership. In consequence, their lives have to be constructed as far as possible out of the scanty materials afforded by the books which bear their names, with an occasional assisting reference in the prophetic records of Samuel or Kings.

This is the case with Micah whose message to Judah forms our present study. Although he was a contemporary of Isaiah, neither prophet refers to the other, unless we suppose that the quotation found in Isaiah 2: 2-4 and in Micah 4: 1-3 is taken by one of them from the utterances of the other. More probably, however, it is quoted by both from some earlier oracle. However, there is an interesting reference to Micah in the utterances of the Prophet Jeremiah a century later. When that prophet's life was threatened in the reign of Jehoiakim, some of the elders of Israel cited the precedent of Micah, or Micaiah as he is there called, who had prophesied in the days of Hezekiah that Zion should be plowed as a field and Jerusalem should become heaps. The fact that Hezekiah did not resent these words of the prophet Micah seemed to them a sufficient reason for similar tolerance toward Jeremiah (Jer. 26: 16-19).

While Isaiah was a man of the city, as all his allusions and figures of speech proclaim, Micah belonged in the country. His home was in Moreshethgath, a village on the slopes southwest of Jerusalem. As its name implies, his village was not far from the ancient Philistine city of Gath, which by this time had become a possession of Judah. Past the town there ran several of the main roads leading to the Philistine plain and to Egypt. Micah may well have had opportunity to see the expeditions passing in the raids of the neighboring tribes upon Judah, and even the larger expeditions from Egypt and Assyria as they made their way past the place. To a considerable extent Micah shows acquaintance with the world politics of his day. He knew of the downfall of Samaria, and believed that Jerusalem was only postponing her time of destruction for a few years.

2. THE SINS OF JUDAH.

Isaiah, the statesman and prophet of Jerusalem, was deeply interested in the political movement of his time, as they bore upon the position of Judah among the nations. He was sensitive to the sins of the different classes in the capital, and held them up to condemnation. But the attitude of Micah was somewhat different. He lived not in the capital, but in a small town in the provinces. He was a man of the people, perhaps a farmer like Amos. At any rate he felt keenly the oppressions under which the men of his own class groaned. The social system of the age seemed to place an irresponsible power in the hands of the landowners and wealthier men. These heads of the nation, the owners of large tracts of land, propably lived in the larger cities. From the labor of their tenants and dependents they drew the rich incomes which maintained the proud and luxurious establishments of the capital.

The result was a system of oppression and injustice that ground the people of the lower classes to the last degree. They were stripped of their possessions until it seemed that even their very flesh was torn from their bones. The rich practiced cruel devices to add to their holdings, and gave no thought to the welfare of their dependents (2: 1-3). If men of insight protested against such conditions, they only awakened resentment on the part of those they rebuked. Micah felt the sting of this unhappy condition. He insisted that his words would do good to those who were upright in heart but who could expect the message of a fearless and discerning prophet would be welcome to men so unjust and heartless? The only preachers acceptable to such a generation would be such as spoke smooth and condoning words to the sinners of Judah (2: 6-11).

3. MICAH'S MESSAGE OF WARNING. (Micah 3)

Chapter three of this book is perhaps as good an example of Micah's preaching as is afforded in their brief collection of his oracles. He addresses himself to the leaders of the nation, denouncing their cruelty and injustice toward their weaker brethren. Their conduct reminds him of those who with cannibal instincts boil and devour the flesh of their fellowmen (3: 1-3). How can such a people as this expect divine protection in the hour of their approaching peril? He has not watched the movement of events without knowing that Assyria is soon to reckon with the nation. That reckoning will be the proof that God can use even a heathen nation as an instrument for the chastisement of his own unrepentant people.

Then he turns to the denunciation of the popular preachers who are interested only in their own profit. They have no vision nor insight. Such men can afford no guidance to the people who depend upon them. They are the false prophets who are preaching the commonplaces of religion in terms adjusted to an earlier age. They are not willing to pay the price of a present message from God. In contrast with them Micah declares his own competence, as dowered with the spirit of Jehovah and prepared to speak to the people the message that it ought to hear.

The crimes of the selfish priests and pro-

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

phets of the day make a somber catalogue. The rulers of the nation pervert justice and disdain honesty. They are building up Jerusalem, but only with mortar mixed with blood. The judges accept bribes and the priests and prophets are intent only on money rewards. Yet such men profess their messages from God and to depend upon him. They deceive the people into confidence that rests only upon false assurances. Then the prophet closes the address with that ringing statement of approaching judgment upon Jerusalem which was quoted in the presence of Jeremiah years afterward, "Therefore, shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest" (3:12).

4. FUTURE DISASTERS AND BLESSINGS.

Although Isaiah was the greater prophet of the two and wielded a vaster influence over the nation, yet Micah seems to have discerned more definitely the future career of the nation. Isaiah had insisted that Jerusalem should be protected of God and should escape the devastating hand of the Assyrian. Micah looks beyond the present time to fresh dangers in another generation, and predicts, with urgent description of the days to come, the time when Babylon shall receive into captivity the remnant of the people of Judah (4: 10). This was a sweep of vision that Isaiah never approached.

But Micah lookes even further into the future than the time of the Babylonian capitivity. He sees the rise of a Messianic king who, like his predecessors of the royal family of David, shall emerge from Bethlehem and shall lead his people back to prosperity and peace. Then the old contention with Assyria shall be settled forever in Judah's favor, and the era of peace to follow shall realize all the hopes of the greatest optimists of the nation (5: 2-15).

5. CLOSING WORDS.

The last two chapters of the book have a very different tone from the earlier portion, and many have found in this fact the proof that they belong to a later period and another hand. It is possible that they reflect the dark age of Manassah, the son of Hezekiah. Their dominant tone is one of depression, and the writer seems to feel that the only solution of the present difficulty is in waiting for the manifestation of God in a happier day to come.

But in this latter and more somber section there is a passage which is one of the gems of all prophetic utterance. It compresses the essentials of religion into almost their narrowest compass, and approaches nearest of all Old Testament statements to the great declaration of our Lord that religion consists in the love of God and of man. The prophet is undertaking to answer the question which has been so often asked through all the generations, "How may one approach God? With what offerings must one be provided to find acceptance with the Highest? Shall he bring burnt offerings or sacrificial victims? Does the Lord require multitudes of animals for the altar, or store of oil for the sanctuary? Is even a costlier price demanded, the life of one's child as a sacrifice, the fruit of the body for the sin of the soul?" The answer is clear and convincing. It is the answer of a spiritual religion to one of formality. It is the response of prophetic insight to ritualistic obedience. "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

Section xxiii will deal with the "Messianic Hopes of Early Israel." Then will come "The Moral Leaders of the Dark Age."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY AND REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The likeness and contrasts of Micah and Isaiah.
2. The country problems of Micah's age.
3. Parallels to Judah's condition in the history of England and continental lands.
4. The use of prediction by Micah.
5. The Messianic hope in the book of Micah.
6. The literary features of Micah.

LITERATURE.

Wade, "Old Testament History;" Smith, "Old Testament History:" Addis, "Hebrew Religion;" Kirkpatrick, "The Doctrine of the Prophets," pp. 205-235; George Adam Smith, "The Book of the Twelve Prophets," vol. 1; Willett, "Prophets of Israel," chap. viii; Cornill, "The Prophets of Israel," 69, 70. Articles on Micah in the encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic May 28: A Missionary Journey Around the World. Missions in Japan and Korea. Acts 17: 1-14.

Two generations ago Japan was closed to Western influences. She was controlled by a feudal government in which the rights of the common people were greatly restricted and the exclusion of foreigners and foreign influences was her confirmed policy. But in 1868 Japan underwent a revolution which resulted in making the emperor the actual, as well as the nominal head of the government. Three years later the feudal lords surrendered their power voluntarily and at the instance of a Christian missionary, an embassy was sent to Western lands to make observations and to bring back a report. This tour led to the adoption of Western ideas which in turn led to the proclamation of a constitutional government in 1889. Since then Japan has been a diligent and apt student of all the world which in turn has resulted in almost incredible strides of progress. To day she leads the Orient. "Japan leads the Orient, but whither," was the message of the Japanese Christian Student Movement to the Student Volunteer Convention in Nashville in 1906. It is even more true now. Her ships of commerce ply upon the high seas of the world. Her voice is heard with dominating influence in the political councils of the far East. In industrial development and commercial enterprise she sets the pace for her oriental neighbors and "what Japan has succeeded in doing today, the others will do tomorrow."

In Korea, changes are equally swift. In 1883 is the date of the first treaty with any western nation which permitted a foreigner to live in peace in the hermit nation. Even up to 1907, when Japan practically assumed complete control, the government was exceedingly unprogressive. "Today Korea is vibrating with the spirit of the modern world." Railroads have been built, mines opened up, and her educational system revived and modernized.

Japan is ready to hear and consider the gospel message. The war with Russia has made her even more responsive than before, to its appeal. The old social orders are breaking up and earlier foundations are giving way. She feels the need of a new moral and spiritual basis of life. Christianity is looked upon with favor; it is accepted by many, and looked upon by others as the source of supply for the felt need. Moreover, missionaries have access to the whole of the islands now. It would be hard to conceive of a broader and more strategic opportunity. There is but one question for all Christian believers and disciples, Christian Endeavorers included. Will we embrace it and assume our full share of the responsibility it brings? This means the giving of our thought, our money, and in some cases our lives for the sake of the kingdom of God.

Korea is even more promising of immediate results. They are already turning to Christianity by the hundreds and even thousands. A year or two ago a campaign was inaugurated of a million souls for Christ in Korea. Seven hundred workers met in Seoul. They were paired off in three hundred fifty and teams and since the union of Japan and Korea that watchword has been changed to "The whole land for Jesus." The need here also is for men and women. Says Dr. Moffett, "We are pressed on every side by young men and women who want us to teach them. Could you better invest your life than in one of these countries?"

Nogi as a Boy Student

The boy of small means who, determined to get an education "by hook or by crook," grasps every opportunity to turn an honest penny to that end, is very like every other boy bent on the same thing, regardless of nationality. One of these ambitious youngsters was the now General Nogi, of Japan.

"My father," he says, "could not give me the education other boys in the clan were receiving. I had to stay at home. But one day I said to myself: 'Come what may I must learn while I am young. Life without some sort of achievement is not worth the living.'

"So I pleaded with my father and at last prevailed upon him to send me to a dormitory known as the Shudoba, from which I was able to attend the clan school.

"My days at the dormitory were days of hardship. It was under the control of the clan government and sheltered about sixty boys, all under eighteen years of age, for in those days a boy was supposed to reach manhood at eighteen, and what 'man' would live in a dormitory?

"Things have much changed since that time. In those days the boys brought their own unhulled rice to the dormitory and pounded it for themselves in the mortar provided for their use; there was not a shop in the place where you could buy hulled rice. The boys, too, had to cook their own rice for themselves and to collect their own fuel from the neighboring woods.

"There was also a stable attached to the dormitory and it was the duty of the boys to groom the horses. As the poorest lad in the dormitory a great deal of this work fell upon my shoulders. I pounded rice for the others, I went into the woods to gather fuel, I cooked the meals and I groomed the horses.

"There were no curry-combs or clippers in those days. I had to singe the horses' coats with improvised torches made of dry twigs and to chop the straw for their bran mash as well as I could, and all this, for want of labor-saving contrivances, entailed much expenditure of time and trouble.

"In addition to all this manual labor I had the usual school lessons to attend. Never very strong, I found my double task a severe strain on my powers of endurance, and I began at times to doubt whether I should be able to go through with the task I had set myself. But I never allowed myself to lose heart."

More Iron in Our Blood

It is gratifying that the President has refused to pardon either Morse or Walsh. The cost of convicting both these men has been enormous. Both wrecked the fortunes of innocent people. This namby-pamby notion that we must not punish anybody for crime is one of the causes of the rapid increase of crime in the country. We need more iron in our blood, more Old Testament idea of justice and punishment for sin.—Journal and Messenger.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

M. O. Dutcher, pastor at Sheldon has resigned and will accept the work at Noble.

At Assumption there were fourteen additions to the church during April, under the ministry of W. W. Weedon.

Work on the new building addition at Gibson City has been initiated and will be pushed rapidly to completion.

J. W. Porter, pastor of Carlinville Church, April 23d, made the principal address in the celebration of the ninety-second anniversary of the Odd Fellows' Fraternity.

O. C. Bolman, pastor at Pekin, is assisting B. H. Cleaver in a meeting at Lewistown. The first two weeks of the meeting were in charge of the pastor.

Robert E. Henry has been invited to remain in the pastorate at Niantic with an increased salary. The church here is one of the strongest in the state among the smaller towns.

The Fourth Church, of Danville, Ill., will be dedicated June 18 by Dr. I. N. McCash. Mr. Scoville was to have been the dedicator, but he could not arrange to meet the date and Dr. McCash has been secured.

Rantoul congregation is enjoying an unusual degree of prosperity under the leadership of E. D. Murch. His good offices to the church were recently recognized by an increase of salary.

J. I. O'Neal became pastor at Oblong the first of January, since which time there have been thirteen additions. Mr. O'Neal also preaches at Hardinsville where there have been twenty-five additions, twenty-three of whom were conversions.

The revival meeting at Streator resulted in one hundred and twenty-one additions, a greatly enlarged Sunday-school, and great enthusiasm in the congregation. The pastor, C. M. Smithson, was assisted by C. R. L. Vawter and his singer, Mr. Marty.

The churches of Arcola are to take a religious census of the community. Four visitors are to be appointed from each church, and the census will be finished in one day. W. T. McConnell and the Church of Disciples will co-operate in the movement.

The congregation at Colfax is happy and prosperous under the ministry of George R. Southgate. The Easter offering from the Sunday-school amounted to sixty dollars. There have been a number of additions to the congregation in recent months.

Bridgeport congregation departed from its old church edifice April 23. On this day there were seven additions, four of whom were by baptism. The congregation is now building a splendid new structure to replace the one just vacated. The pastor is George W. Schroeder.

Evangelists Sword and Kay have been compelled to postpone, indefinitely, the meeting to be held at Donovan, on account of the very serious illness of Mr. Sword's wife. The congregation has been looking forward to a meeting for some time, and is awaiting the arrival of the evangelists.

Illiopolis Church, ministered to by Robert A. Sickles, is in a prosperous condition. On a recent Sunday evening there were twelve additions, all but two of whom were by confession. The middle of June the church will observe a home-coming celebration, at which J. H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, will be the chief speaker.

Augusta Church is arranging to enlarge its present building and finish the basement. This is one of the results of the revival meeting recently closed, and which was held by Evangelists Sword and Kay. Edwin T. Cornelius is the pastor and has succeeded in infusing new hope and enterprise in the congregation.

Last week Edgar DeWitt Jones shared the speaking with Hon. Clarence Darrow, of Chicago, at a mass meeting in Bloomington's coliseum, in the interests of a new park and pleasure ground the city is trying to secure. And that was a truly "religious" thing for the popular Bloomington pastor to be engaged in.

A. W. Conner, of Indiana, conducted a campaign for boys at Paris. The movement was co-operated in by all the churches and ministers of the city, and enlisted the leading citizens of the community on behalf of the boy's welfare. Very gratifying reports of the campaign are made. It is said that at some of the meetings nearly five hundred boys were present.

The church at Harristown is manifesting a fraternal spirit toward the Congregational church, whose building was recently destroyed by fire. The two churches co-operated in Easter services, the congregational pastor preaching in the morning. At the laying of the corner stone for the new Congregational church, J. H. Wright, of the Church of the Disciples, will make an address.

R. F. Thrapp, pastor at Jacksonville, has prepared a lecture, "A Trip to Europe," which he illustrates with one hundred stereopticon views. The lecture is to be presented in Mr. Thrapp's home church under the auspices of the Pulpit Circle. Jacksonville Church recently listently listened to a Professor Gray, of Eureka College, on "How We Got Our Bible," which is spoken of with highest commendation and appreciation.

First Church, Danville, is giving missions a place of importance. The pastor, W. E. Adams, is encouraging weekly contributions to this cause, and nearly half of the congregation has responded to the appeal. Even with only a part of the congregation co-operating, it is reported that the offerings are already in advance of previous years, and the pastor is able to preach a vigorous sermon on missions without the unpleasant suspicion of his auditors that he is making a plea for a special offering, which is to follow immediately. Under these conditions it may be assumed the pastor's sermon will be a more spiritual sermon and that the congregation will be able to interpret it in a spirit sermon with the old type of offering.

Recently it was announced in the columns of The Christian Century that an appeal was being made by the state board for funds to continue the services of a young man and woman in the State University at Champaign for religious work on behalf of the Disciple students attending that institution. It was also pointed out that the small sum being solicited was entirely inadequate to accomplish a work of the proportions demanded by the strategic and compelling situation. It is announced now that Congressman William B. McKinley, of Champaign, has donated thirty thousand dollars for the erection of a Presbyterian church for the students of that denomination in the university. The Presbyterians have been employing a student pastor at a salary of three thousand dollars for some time, and this additional gift indicates the alertness of this denomination and its sensing of the need in such a field as that afforded by a great state university.

First Church, Springfield, recently witnessed a concrete demonstration of the approaching consummation of its new building enterprise. The congregation has been talking and planning for a new edifice for several years. After the initial details were eliminated, an architect chosen, and plans tentatively adopted, it was discovered that the architect had allowed the congregation to plan far beyond its means, which necessitated a modification of the original drawings. This caused a delay of about two-thirds of a year, but as announced last week the plans were finally completed and the contract let. On May 8th ground was broken with some degree of formality, the honor of casting the first spade of dirt being accorded to Mrs. Caroline Beers Kane, the oldest disciple member in the city in length of service and membership in the congregation. Mrs. Kane has been a member of the congregation since 1841, having worshiped in the three buildings possessed by the church. While her health is not sufficiently strong to enable her to worship frequently in the public service, it is hoped and expected by a large company of her friends that her strength will endure to permit her to enjoy the fellowship and pleasure in the new edifice just begun. A. J. Kane, Mrs. Kane's husband of sainted memory, was one of the earliest pastors of this congregation.

News Editorials

A Small But Efficient Sunday-school.

The little church at Oakwood, Ill., has a small but very efficient Sunday-school. The superintendent is Mrs. C. C. Young, a woman of rare ability for the place. After years of patient, persistent and enthusiastic devotion to her ideals, she is now triumphing gloriously.

Bigness for the Sunday-school seems to be ing the air. A very good thing, if more essential qualities are not sacrificed. The Oakwood school has no large classes, but it has some fine teaching. The enthusiasm of the session is always for the lesson and not its own size.

Not long since the writer was in a large school where the classes spent only fifteen minutes on the lesson and enthusiasm for bigness swept everything else out of sight. The closing exercises aroused tremendous enthusiasm over the attendance and the collection, but the lesson was not so much as mentioned. The Oakwood school gets wrought-up over the lesson. It is a graded school.

The Preacher and His Ideal.

C. H. Scriven is the enterprising minister of Villa Grove Church. He felt the need for a church bulletin, but the congregation, like very many of our churches, was unable to afford the money to pay for wnat appeared to be non-essential. The pastor had a conscience against filling a page of the leaflet with advertisements which would furnish the requisite amount of money. He did not want to preach the gospel on Sunday to a people who were perusing their bulletins and having their attention diverted by announcements of bargain sales in calicoes, or extended dissertations on patent medicine cure-alls. Consequently, the pastor purchased a small printing outfit, by means of which he has become not only the editor, but the compositor as well, of a neat bulletin of which he and his congregation can both be proud. This incident affords an excuse for mentioning a prevalent mistake, if nothing worse, of some preachers. The same is true also of laymen, but the point is made now on the preacher in particular. He accepts an inferior thing because he thinks the better, which he wants, is impossible. His own nature demands a higher grade of music, but he feels the congregation will not sing this kind of music if announced, so he continually selects songs which are most inferior in sentiment and pure trash in music, while all the time the children of his church and Sunday-school are being taught to love real music and are singing the classics in the public schools. Or he knows the revival to be held by a certain evangelist will be productive of questionable results, and there are other evangelists whom he prefers because no question can arise as to the spiritual quality and validity of the work they will accomplish; but, there is clamor for a great meeting and many additions, whether the congregation is ready to receive them or not, and without question about the method by which they will be brought in. So he yields his ideal with practically no remonstrance and accepts the inferior as if this were in accord with his own best judgment. Or he wants a new building or a debt raised, and the quickest way to achieve the result is by way of a big meeting, so he secures the evangelist, reputed to be the best head counter, and creates an interest in a new building or debt raising by ostensibly saving men from sin. A new edifice or a debt-raising is worth while if done in a legitimate way. But using evangelism for this end is prostituting a great enterprise of God for a local and temporary result. Ministers making this mistake have realized their ambition for a new edifice and then come to wish for a new congregation to occupy it. It is better to have an inferior building and a substantial religious congregation than an inferior congregation and a good building. It is not hard in these days when a "practical" success counts for so much to a minister's reputation for him to be possessed of a consuming passion to "build a new church," and forget his only business is to construct character in his congregation. And the wonder is not that the preacher occasionally makes this unfortunate mistake; it is to be marvelled at that it is not the rule instead of the exception. Or his Sunday-school is not in the list of great schools frequently mentioned in the papers, so he schedules a contest and booms it, and like many a true soul, after the 'boom' is over and the day of judgment has arrived, he confesses the price paid for success in the serious departure from high standards of teaching was far too great. He sought a superficial and temporary success and he got it, and with it the loss of an exalted ideal of spiritual discipline and culture, which, above every other thing, should have been surrendered last. Or he argues to himself, the congregation is satisfied with an ordinary sermon and appreciates the pulpit ministration, which is the product of no reading and slight study. Instead of working hard, therefore, as an industrious student, he provides the sermons which gain praise from the superficial, and soon finds himself disinclined to study and incapable of application to scholarly pursuits. Sermonizing becomes irksome, he repeats his old sermons and drifts from church to church, maintaining a pastorate for only a year or two in each place. In addition to making himself an inferior man, the work which he accomplishes in every church leaves the church no farther advanced than when he took it. The minister is the man who stands for ideals. The church and community never suffer from a strict adherence to ideals. Failure and disappointment are the products of efforts not in line with the ideal. The best is always possible to the man with faith in God. Accepting the inferior with complacence is infidelity.

Chicago

O. J. Grainger, of India, addressed the regular ministers' meeting, May 8, at Memorial Church. He spoke on the question of unity on the mission fields.

At the Hutchinson Hall Cafe on May 15, Chicago ministers met with the Business Men's Association. The fellowship and program proved helpful.

Judging from the announcement in various church calendars, Chicago Disciples in special church services paid tribute to the honor of Motherhood on Mothers' Day, May 14.

State Sunday-school Superintendent De-Pew spent Sunday, May 7, in Chicago. Sunday morning he spoke at West End Church and at Douglas Park Church in the evening. Mr. De Pew called attention to the teaching function of the church in an enthusiastic way. He reports progress in the Sunday-school work in Illinois.

F. B. Meyer, D. D., of London and W. H. Griffith-Thomas, D. D., late principal of Wyclie College, Oxford, will address a series of noon meetings in the Garrick Theatre, June 5-9. These meetings are in connection with a conference on summer work in the churches and in the open air, the sessions of which are held at the Moody Church. The public is invited.

Memorial Church, H. L. Willett pastor, reported the ending of its fiscal year, May 1, with all bills paid and some funds in its treasury. There have been sixty additions to its membership the past two months. The work of E. LeRoy Dakin, associate minister, is heartily commended by Dr. Willett and the church. Splendid congregations are the rule especially on Sunday mornings. Dr. Willett has spoken on successive Monday mornings recently to the Baptist, Congregational and Methodist ministers' meetings: to the first named on "The Ideals of the Disciples of Christ," and to the others on "The Report of the Chicago Vice Commission," of which he was an active member.

Dr. Ames, of the Hyde Park Church, is preaching a series of sermons on "The Religion of My Friends" with such themes as "The Mystic," "The Business Man," "The Scientist," etc. In each sermon he has in mind an actual person whose religious life the sermon interprets. Hyde Park Church has been having an interesting revival continuing for six Sundays. During that period the membership has put forth special efforts to increase the regular Sunday morning congregations. As a result, the attendance has hung close to the 300 mark each Sunday, entirely filling the auditorium and lecture room. Many persons have been made aware of the ideals of the church who will no doubt cast in their lot with it. Several baptsms are already reported. Congregation and pastor have been reassured concerning the accessbility of the community, and energetic efforts will be put forth to finance a new and adequate church building.

After a six year pastorate at Charleston, Ill., George W. Brown has accepted the call of Austin Church, Chicago, to become its pastor. He succeeds George A. Campbell who recently moved to Hannibal, Mo. Mr. Brown will find a united and loyal congregation at Austin, though much smaller numerically than his charge in Charleston. The official board of the latter church sent a communication to the Austin Church commending Mr. Brown and expressing their regret at losing him from their midst. The letter recites the facts that during the six years of his pastorate he has endeared himself to church and community, that the membership of the church has more than doubled under his leadership, that his popularity in the community is shown by the fact that he is called into more homes to officiate at weddings or funerals than any other pastor in the city, and concludes with the statement that Mr. Brown is "the most beloved man that ever filled a pulpit in this city and his leaving here creates a vacancy that will be hard to fill." The new pastor is a Yale man. He begins his labors in Chicago, Sept. 1.

Eureka College

The Student Volunteer Band of Eureka College has fifteen members this year. The great work of the year in many ways was the entertaining of the Student Missionary Conference of central Illinois in December. At this were representaties from most of the colleges and universities of central Illinois, about forty in number. There was a splendid attendance, considering the fact that it was the first conference of the kind ever held in the state. The Band has held nine missionary rallies this year: Dana, Secor, Fairbury, El Paso, Washington, Lynnville, Concord, Kilbourn and Cooksville. In these rallies use was made of stereopticon slides, curios and the literature from the F. C. M. S., the Student Volunteer movement and the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Usually four students are sent on these rallies. At one rally recently the Volunteers spoke in all the churches in twn at the morning service, held a men's meeting and a woman'e meeting in the afternoon, and union Christian Endeavor and church services at night. An attempt is made to present the needs of the field and something of the urgency and crisis just now in the work, both in the near and far East. Our ability to meet these needs and the question of an adequate home base is also presented.

A new system of Band study has been taken up and the best devotional and missionary articles and speeches are reported in the meetings. The one member who graduated last year has done successful work in the Southern Christian Institute this year. One Volunteer is a member of the 1911 class.

H. H. Peters.

J. M. Rhodes, pastor at Barry, has announced to his congregation that he will retire from his charge at the end of the year.

Danville First Church, W. E. Adams, pastor, reports five added since last report and best congregations in a year. Mr. Adams has introduced a ten-minute sermon for children in the Sunday-school which he finds very profitable.

Church Life

—Encouraging reports from the May offering are being received by the American Society in Cincinnati. Jacksonville, Fla., sends $100; Woodbine, Ia., $200; Hutchinson, Kan., $302; Minneapolis—Portland Ave. Church—$300. John G. Slater, pastor at Minneapolis, in reporting the offering, says: "I am very glad indeed to have been able to take this advanced step. This year will be the best from a missionary standpoint in the history of this church. But I guess the great majority of our active churches can say the same. These days a church that does not make this year of grace better from a missionary standpoint than any that have gone before is out of harmony with the spirit of the age. It is a contagion and everything in the way of a live church must catch it. I hope the May offering this year will be the best we have ever taken."

* * *

J. M. Lowe of Des Moines, Iowa, has an open date for a meeting in August.

Frank L. Bowen, city evangelist, is holding a series of meetings at South Park Tabernacle, Kansas City, Mo.

I. N. McCash spoke on May 7 at Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, Mo., on "American Missions."

There have been ten additions at regular services during the past month at Arkansas City, Kan., where Thomas H. Popplewell ministers.

Robert N. Simpson, pastor of Central Church, New Albany, Ind., reports that they have raised the money for a Living Link in the foreign society.

T. R. Bayless of Atchison, Kan., has accepted the pastorate of Third Church, Lincoln, Neb.

The Brotherhood of First Church, Indianapolis, Ind., was addressed by William Grant Smith and Garry L. Cook at a recent banquet.

During the meeting held at Fourth Church, Indianapolis, Ind., under the leadership of William Vernon Nelson, there were ninety-three accessions.

W. A. Tate, of Bloomingdale, Mich., will deliver the baccalaureate sermon in connection with the commencement exercises of the Bloomingdale High School.

R. W. Abberley and J. Ross Miller have closed their meeting with C. M. Keene, pastor at Owosso, Mich. There were twenty-one additions.

W. H. Sexton is in a meeting with D. J. E. Thomas at Hugo, Okla., with Glenn Allen assisting in the singing. There were nine additions the first day.

P. E. Roll, pastor at Vincennes, Ind., reports large audiences at all services, and the consequent need of larger quarters. The Sunday-school has an attendance of 150.

During the first eight days of invitation there were 333 additions at Charles Reign Scoville's meeting at Huntington, W. Va. The tabernacle in which the meetings are being held is being taxed to its capacity.

A church has been organized at Vincennes, Iowa, as the result of meetings held by R. W. Lilley, pastor at Keokuk, Iowa, and E. M. Carr. Ralph Siegel will take the work there.

Geo. L. Snively assisted J. F. Ghormley in the dedication of Central Church, Portland, Ore., May 7. The amount asked for was $15,000 and $16,400 was readily given.

Albert Gulledge has concluded a three weeks' meeting at New Straitsville, Ohio. This congregation has secured Mr. Gulledge for half-time services.

The work at Dallas, Ore., is prospering under the ministry of Leon Myers. The Sunday-school is continually increasing, having an attendance of 272 on a recent Sunday.

C. L. Organ is in a meeting at Silverton, Ore., which is developing a good interest in this field which is at present without a pastor.

Chas. T. Radford is in a meeting with his congregation at Long Beach, Calif. Mrs. Princess Long is assisting him in the singing.

H. H. Ambrose has taken up the work at Okemah, Okla., and new life is felt in all the work of the church. The Sunday-school now has an average attendance of 116.

L. E. Lakin has concluded a meeting at Everett, Wash., where O. H. King ministers. There have been thirty added to the membership of this church since Jan. 1.

Extensive improvements will be made soon on Hyde Park Church, Austin, Tex., which double its seating and Sunday-school accommodations. J. T. Craig is pastor of this congregation.

Michigan State Convention will be held this year at Traverse City, June 5-8. Lodging and breakfast will be served free. Those expecting to attend should communicate with J. A. Canby, Traverse, City, Mich.

O. E. Hamilton and A. E. Buss have closed a successful meeting with C. C. Peck at Bucklin, Kan. This was the best meeting in the history of the Bucklin Church, there beinng fifty-seven accessions.

The church at Fostoria, Ohio, J. N. Johnston, minister, is planning to enlarge their building, owing to the growth of the work. The Sunday-school now has an enrollment of 224.

C. E. Wagner has begun his third year as pastor of South Side Church, Hannibal, Mo. During his pastorate nearly two hundred have ben added to the membership. The Sunday-school now has an attendance of over four hundred.

Joseph D. Armistead, pastor at Walla Walla, Wash., reports thirty-four additions at regular services since the first of the year. W. C. Pearce, of the Men and Religion Forward Movement, recently gave several addresses at this church.

Charles E. McVay, of Hardy, Neb., who is leading the singing in a meeting with James Crain, pastor at Tonkawa, Okla., reports large crowds attending and twenty-four additions during the first week. Mr. McVay has some open dates for summer meetings.

A farewell reception was given recently at New Castle, Ind., for L. C. Howe, who has accepted the pastorate at Noblesville, Ind. The reception was signalized by burning the last note on the church debt. This has been completely liquidated during Mr. Howe's pastorate.

The annual convention of the sixth district of Missouri was held at Paris, May 8-10. The opening sermon was preached by George A. Campbell of Hannibal. Others on the program were Frank Waller Allen, of Paris, president of the district board, and S. Boyd White of Moberly, Mo.

L. N. D. Wells, pastor of Park Avenue Church, East Orange, N. J., addressed the County Endeavor rally on May 8, about one thousand enthusiastic Endeavorers being present. Mr. Wells has recently been appointed to the lecture staff of the New York public schools.

Dr. Price's CREAM
Baking Powder
MAKES HOME BAKING EASY
Young housekeepers find in its use the beginning of success in cookery.
Price Baking Powder Co.
CHICAGO.

M. F. Horn, who took up the work at Aberdeen, Wash., April 1, reports a united church and splendid fellowship, there having been seven added during the first month. The Sunday-school has greatly increased its attendance, and the prospects are excellent for a good work in this field.

The church at Philipsburg, Pa., has tendered a unanimous call to H. S. McClintock of Vanderbilt, Pa., which he has accepted. Mr. McClintock's pastorate of one year at Vanderbilt has been very successful. During that time the Sunday-school has doubled its attendance, adult classes have been organized and every department is prospering.

John H. Tate, pastor at Sayre, Pa., has concluded a three weeks' meeting with home forces which resulted in thirty-three accessions. Chas. H. Bloom, at one time pastor of this congregation, assisted in the singing at several services. The Sunday-school has an attendance of over two hundred and the building has become inadequate to accommodate the increasing attendance. Plans for a new church are being discussed.

The church at Minerva, Ohio, has set apart May 18 as Wage Earners' Day, when each wage earner of the church is asked to put their day's wage into the church's treasury and it is expected in that way all indebtedness will be done away with. E. N. Duty, the minister there, has been preaching to crowded houses each Sunday evening on "Civic Righteousness," "Social Purity" and other themes vital to the community at the present time.

We have the following good report from F. F. Walters, pastor of First Church, Independence, Mo.: "Sunday morning I called for two thousand dollars for general missions and in a few minutes $1,731 was given, largely in cash. Other money came in at the evening service and the small balance will soon be in, making our budget complete. This is a great victory for a church with 600 resident members. We are all very happy in such service."

Lowell C. McPherson has been called to become New England evangelist. His labors will begin in New England the first of September. Mr. McPherson is a strong pastor-evangelist. Twelve years ago while located in Buffalo he held a successful meeting in Worcester, Mass. Last February he held a successful meeting at Danbury, Conn. Two years ago he was one of the speakers at the New England convention. The people of New England have learned to love him and have for some years been planning to call him as evangelist. It is fully anticipated that his deep spiritual life and Christian work will tell upon this eastern field where Disciples of Christ are little known.

Miss Orah Haight, of Bilaspaur, India, left there on furlough, May 9.

Central Church, Indianapolis, Ind., recently celebrated A. B. Philputt's pastorate of thirteen years with that congregation.

A. P. Gray, formerly pastor of Grandview Avenue Church, Portsmouth, Ohio, has resigned to accept a pastorate in Tennessee.

The Ohio Christian Missionary Society will hold its annual convention May 23-25 at Portsmouth, Ohio.

The church at Marshalltown, Iowa, is rejoicing over the gift of $4,000 from one of its members.

J. D. Scott, of Elizabethtown, Ky., has accepted the pastorate of the First Church, Evansville, Ind., succeeding Wm. E. Sweeney.

Miner Lee Bates, president of Hiram College, gave an address at the Third Church, New Castle, Pa., on a recent Sunday.

Duncan McFarlane, for three years pastor at Humboldt, Kan., took up the work at Holton, Kan. on May 1.

J. A. Longston, for ten years pastor at First Church, Independence, Kan., has resigned his work there.

The 42nd annual convention of the West Virginia churches will be held at Fairmont, May 24-28.

A. R. Adams, pastor of First Church, Saginaw, Mich., has tendered his resignation on account of ill-health, the same to take effect June 1.

The congregation at Liscomb, Iowa, will build a new church during the summer at a cost of $10,000 or $12,000. T. F. Paris is pastor of this church.

Extensive improvements will be made on the Central Church, Lebanon, Ind., in the near future. L. E. Brown is pastor of this congregation.

R. L. McHatton, pastor at Oakland, Calif., is in his seventh meeting with the church at Willows, Calif., where his son, C. G. McHatton, ministers.

Miss Olive Griffith, on the mission field at Damoh, India, has arrived at her former home in Pawnee City, Neb., on furlough. Miss Griffith is the Living Link of the First Church, Lincoln, Neb.

On his way home from a southern trip, Claris Yeuell, of Paulding, Ohio, will preach at Lyerly, Ga., on May 19, and at Morehead, Ky., May 22, while en route to the Ohio State Convention at Portsmouth, May 23-25.

The cornerstone of North Side Church, Omaha, Neb., was laid on May 7, the pastor, H. J. Kirchstein, being assisted in the ceremonies by W. A. Baldwin, secretary of the Nebraska Missionary Society. When finished, the auditorium of the building will have a seating capacity of 600. The entire basement will be used as a social center, having a gymnasium, shower baths, library and recreation rooms. This church started as a mission of First Church and was organized independently in 1892.

In speaking of Federated Church Brotherhood Movement, H. E. Van Horn, of Capital Hill Church, Des Moines, Iowa, said in a recent sermon, "This movement is a step forward toward the time when all church members will join forces against evil, regardless of creed. I am glad to see the approach of the day when professing Christians will present a solid force against the forces of wickedness. Christian men and women can accomplish things when they refuse to allow differences in belief to prevent them from working for the essentials and practical things in this world."

ZU ZU
5¢
GINGER SNAPS
Rain! Rain!! Rain!!! All in vain!
If you lack snap and want ginger, use the old established countersign
ZU ZU
to the grocerman
No one ever heard of a ZU ZU that wasn't good
No! Never !!
5¢
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

DRAKE UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL

Credit Courses in Usual College Subjects
Credit Courses in Education and Psychology
Professional Work for Teachers of All Grades
Courses in all Certificate Subjects for Teachers
Courses in Music and Art
Courses for Music and Drawing Teachers and Supervisors

For Announcement, Address DRAKE UNIVERSITY, DES MOINES, IOWA.

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

Located at Columbia, close to the University of Missouri, the unrivaled advantages of which are open to all Bible College students. Ministerial and Missionary Training. Faculty of trained specialists. Property and endowment $200,000. Excellent opportunities for self-support. No Tuitions.

For Catalog and full information, address CHARLES M. SHARPE, Dean

Oklahoma convention occurs at Enid, May 31-June 2. A strong program is announced.

Missouri state convention will be held at Cape Girardeau, June 5-8. Secretary Donaldson urges the churches to send their pastors and pay their expenses.

First Church, Centralia, Mo., was dedicated May 7, by Z. T. Sweeney of Columbus, Ind. The building is a handsome one of brick and was erected at a cost of $30,000.

Alfred Johnson, of Cleveland, Ohio, has been called to the pastorate of Hillman St. Church, Youngstown, Ohio., and will assume his pastoral duties June 1. Mr. Johnson came to Cleveland from London, Eng.

Guy W. Sarvis spoke of his trip across Africa to the University and Central churches of Des Moines, Iowa, recently and for First Church, St. Paul. Mr. Sarvis is preparing to sail for China in July.

William B. Hendershot, the evangelistic pastor at Martinsville, Va., has secured a large warehouse for the meeting to be conducted by Herbert Yeuell, commencing May 28. Mr. Yeuell will be chief speaker at the county meeting to be held at Medina, Ohio, week of August 20. A strong effort is being made to secure him for a number of meetings in Canada in the near future.

T. W. Grafton, pastor of Jackson Ave. Church, and George P. Taubman, of Hyde Park Church, Kansas City, Mo., each gave good reports of their first year's work in Kansas City. At Jackson Ave. Church, the monthly average of the Sunday-school attendance had increased from 463 to 846, and 126 had been added to the congregation, bringing the total up to 900. A boys' city with 200 members had also been established. At Hyde Park Church, 200 had been added to the membership during the year, and the church is practically free from debt. The Bible class of the Sunday-school recently subscribed $500 toward building an addition for a men's class room.

Hiram College

Hiram College has discontinued its preparatory department. The move is in accord with that of the leading educational institutions of the country at present, because of the rapidly developing standards of scholarships in high schools.

The faculty and student body are much elated over the success of Hiram's representative, Lawrence W. Bridge, a senior, who won first place in the Ohio Intercollegiate Peace Oratorical contest, held at Otterbein University, in Westerville, Ohio, Friday, April 28. Mr. Bridge is one of Hiram's most promising students, and is quite deserving of the numerous congratulations now being extended him. The subject of the winning oration was "The Evolution of World Peace." The following colleges and universities were represented: Hiram, Reserve, Wooster, Mt. Union, Otterbein, Ohio State, Ohio U., Defiance, Cincinnati U., Denison, St. Johns and Antioch.

W. R. Walker, of the class '96, minister of the Kilbuck, O., Christian Church, spent several days in Hiram recently and talked to the ministerial students on the "Opportunities and Methods of Work in Village and Rural Communities." Mr. Walker has a practical vision of the work, which makes his counsel of special worth to the young preacher.

George A. Bellamy, '96, founder and director of the Hiram House, a social settlement enterprise of Cleveland, which enjoys a national reputation, delivered an excellent address to a joint meeting of the Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A. organizations, recently. He spoke on the work of uplifting the youth of the city and demonstrated to a certainty the inadequacy of the courts and present methods of society to solve the problem.

Notes From the Foreign Society

A good friend of the society, who is now visiting in Europe, sends $5,000 on the annuity plan.

The Forest Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., becomes a Living Link, and will support the pastor, H. A. Baker, who expects to start for Batang, on the Tibetan border, next January. This is a heroic undertaking for that small congregation. They give up their pastor, to whom they are affectionately attached, pay his salary while he toils in far away Tibet. Mr. Baker graduated from Hiram College last year and has done a splendid work in Buffalo.

"The World in Boston" is a great foreign missionary exhibition. The average attendance for the first 12 days has been 12,000 a day. The receipts for the first week were $25,000. This great exposition will be held in Cincinnati in March, 1912, and later in Chicago. Fifteen thousand stewards from the Protestant churches of Boston participate in relays in the exposition and missionary pageant held in connection with it. In the pageant there are eleven hundred singers.

The churches lost a little in receipts during April in comparison with last year. We must make a great gain for May to compensate for it. We trust the offerings not yet sent in will be remitted without delay. A great advance must be made to reach the aim for this year.

The Student Volunteer Band of Hiram College, together with some of the smaller churches reached in deputation work, has become a Living Link. This is certainly heroic work. They wish to support one of their own graduates on the field.

East End, Pittsburg, Pa., reports that the Foreign Missionary offering will probably reach $1,600 this year. J. R. Ewers is the pastor. STEPHEN J. COREY, Sec.

Bethany Graded Lessons
FOR THE SUMMER QUARTER

EVERYBODY DOES NOT SEEM TO REALIZE that The Bethany Graded Lessons can be begun at any time. The course of study begins with October 1, it is true, at the same time the public school year opens. But if a pupil is compelled to miss a term in the public school it is not considered necessary for him to be kept out a whole year until the new year opens. No more is it necessary for a Sunday-school to wait for a special date to equip itself with the graded lesson courses.

BUT THERE ARE THREE SPECIAL ADVANTAGES in beginning the Bethany Lessons in the Summer quarter—July 1. First, the school is somewhat smaller in the summer time, thus making it easier to adjust both teachers and pupils to the new system. When October comes and the normal attendance is resumed, the new organization will be already established.

SECOND, THE SUMMER'S LESSONS ARE COMPLETE BY THEMSELVES in all grades. That is, they do not merely continue the Spring's quarter's lessons nor are they just a preparation for the Autumn courses. This makes it just as natural and easy to introduce the Graded Lessons in the Summer time as in the Autumn when the nine-months' course begins.

THIRD, THESE SUMMER LESSONS ARE UNIQUE in the history of Sunday-school curriculum. Many of them treat of the great missionary heroes; others treat of the great religious leaders whose names are closely interwoven with the early history of our American nation. The teachers' texts afford a liberal education in the history of missions and the early events and ideals of our republic. Pupils will find these studies so fascinating that the "Summer slump" in attendance will be more easily overcome than by the continued use of the uniform lessons.

THE BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are far and away the most adequate and fascinating lesson materials ever offered the Sunday-school world. Every lesson writer is an interdenominational authority. No such skill and taste has gone into the preparation of any graded lessons as twelve leading denominations of this country are putting into the Bethany Lessons.

Send today for Prospectuses, Prices and Order Blank.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East 40th Street, Chicago

Hymns of the Early Church

(Continued from page 15.)

moves in a different manner from the Occidental and his hymns will be characteristic.

The Hymnody of the Eastern Church.

The practice of singing hymns antiphonally appears to have been established in the Bithyrian churches at the beginning of the second century. There is a tradition that Ignatius, who suffered martyrdom about 107 A. D., was led by a vision or dream of angels singing hymns in that manner to the Holy Trinity, to introduce antiphonal singing into the church of Antioch from which it quickly spread into other churches.

Early writers give considerable evidence of the use of hymns in the second century. One Caius refers to "all the psalms and odes written by faithful brethren from the beginning" as "hymning Christ the Word of God as God." Tertullian gives a description of the "Agapae" and says that after the washing of hands and bringing in lights, each man was invited to come forward and sing to God's praise something either taken from the Scriptures or of his own composition. In the third century Origen says (in his treatise against Celsus): "We glorify in hymns God and His only begotten Son; as also the sun, the moon and the stars and all the host of heaven. All these in one divine chorus, with the just among men, glorify in hymns, God who is over all, and his only begotten Son." So highly were these compositions esteemed in the Syrian churches that the council which deposed Paul of Samasota from the See of Antioch in the time of Aurelian, justified that act on the ground (among others) that he had prohibited the use of hymns of this kind by uninspired writers addressed to Christ.

Hymnody and Church Controversies.

After the conversion of Constantine the progress of hymnody became closely allied with the church controversies. An example of this was in Constantinople growing out of the Arian controversy. "Early in the fourth century Athanasius had rebuked not only the doctrine of Arius, but also the right character of certain hymns by which he endeavored to make his doctrine popular. In 398 A. D. when John Chrysostom was raised to the Metropolitan See, the Arians who were still numerous in Constantinople had no places of worship in the city, but were in the habit of coming into the city at sunset on Saturdays and Sundays and on the principal feast days. Here they congregated in the porticoes and other places of public resort. They would sing the night through with antiphonal songs with closing strains or refrains expressive of Arian doctrine often accompanied by taunts and insults to the orthodox. Chrysostom feared this might draw some of the simpler people to the Arian side. Accordingly he organized in opposition to it a system of nightly processional hymn singing with silver crosses, wax lights and other circumstances of ceremonial pomp. As might be expected this was followed by blood shed and violence on both sides. Some personal injury was done to the chief eunuch of the empress, who seems to have officiated as conductor or director of the church musicians. This led to the suppression by imperial edict of all public Arian singing, while in the church the practice of nocturnal singing on certain solemn occasions, thus first introduced, remained an established institution."

There was a period during the sixth and seventh centuries when the hymns were of a dramatic order. They may have been written to take the place of the heathen theatricals. These hymns seem to have been something after the order of the old miracle or mystery plays only were sung instead of recited. Romanus has an epiphany hymn in twenty-five long strophes in which there is first an account of the nativity and its accompanying wonders, then a dialogue between the wise men, the Virgin Mother and Joseph. The Magi arrive and are admitted, describe the moral and religious conditions of Persia and the east, together with the cause and adventures of their journey and then offer their gifts. The Virgin intercedes for them with her son, instructs them in some parts of Jewish history, and ends with a prayer for the salvation of the world.

The controversies of the eighth and succeeding centuries developed a school of hymn writers known as the "melodists." Their greatest hymn writers were Theodore and Joseph of the Monastery of the Studium and Cosmas and John of St. Saba. The hymn, "Christian, Dost Thou See Them?" is from Andrew of Crete. It with others has been adopted and is used by the churches of the present century.

INITIATIVE VERSUS IMITATIVE.

These two words, while looking and sounding very much alike, are radically different in meaning.

"Initiative" brings to mind originality, resourcefulness, creative ability and leadership, with the power to act and accomplish things by reason of one's own resources.

"Imitative" makes us think of the old saying, "Imitation is the sincerest flattery," which immediately suggests an acknowledgement of superiority and the desire on the part of the imitator to reap some of the benefits accruing to the originator. "Imitative" therefore suggests incompetence, lack of resources and ability, and willingness (not to say anxiety) to delude and deceive, to mislead and misrepresent.

The "Blymyer" bell for churches, schools, etc., made only by THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY COMPANY, of Cincinnati, Ohio, has a host of imitators, some going so far as to imitate in their pleas for patronage the well-known advertisement of the "Blymyer" people.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

J. M. LOWE, GENERAL EVANGELIST.—Church Dedications, Special Addresses. Permanent address, 1350 25th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

BELLS.

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

(Please mention this paper.)

A MAGAZINE of LAUGHTER

THE FUNNIEST OF ALL THE FUNNY MAGAZINES

Brimful of wholesome wit and humor. Join the campaign for One Million subscribers by sending 25 CENTS in Coin for One Year or five (5) separate subscriptions for $1.00. Foreign sub'ns, 25 cents extra.

THOMPSON'S MAGAZINE, Dept. DH, 328 Federal St., Chicago

DON'T FORGET

CHILDREN'S DAY

For Foreign Missions

FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE

SUPPLIES FREE

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will furnish CHILDREN'S DAY SUPPLIES for the first Sunday in June FREE to those Sunday Schools observing the day in the interests of HEATHEN MISSIONS.

FREE SUPPLIES

1. CRUSADERS FOR CHRIST. The beautiful new Children's Day Exercise by P. H. Duncan. Sixteen pages of song, recitation, and drill. A bundle of sunshine. A high class exercise, yet simple enough for the smallest school.

2. LIFE-SAVER MISSIONARY BOXES. Like the picture above. Automatic, self-locking. They will please. Put your school to work with them.

ORDER AT ONCE. Give local name of Sunday School and average attendance. Write

STEPHEN J. COREY, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

Between

CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY

via the

Chicago & Alton

Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis

For Time Tables and Fares Address:
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

Chicago Christian Church

SPECIAL TRAIN

Convention at

PORTLAND, ORE., JULY 4 to 11, 1911

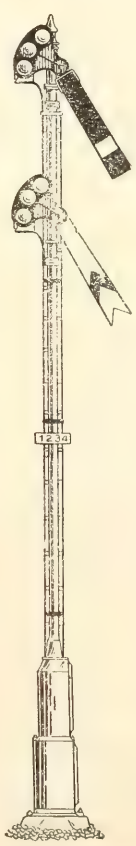
Arrangements are now being made for the benefit of all members, their friends and families, to go to our Convention, leaving from Chicago the evening of June 27th, via C. & N. W., Union Pacific, D. & R. G., O. S. L., and O-W. R. & N. Co., passing through Omaha, Denver, Colorado Springs, Royal Gorge, Salt Lake City, Pocatello, Huntington and along the Columbia River, arriving at Portland the morning of July 4th.

This will be an exceptionally well-planned trip for both sight seeing and pleasure, and with stop-overs enroute to visit a number of different interesting points. Round trip fare from Chicago, $62.50.

Complete itinerary now being printed. For details of rates, and all information, address,

O. F. Jordan,
Pastor Evanston Christian Church,
822 Washington St., Evanston, Ill.

You will have the opportunity of seeing the progressive Western America, full of interest to the tourist. Travel over 90-pound rails and Sherman gravel roadbed, free from jolts, jars, and dust, via



UNION PACIFIC

Standard Road of the West

New and Direct Route to Yellowstone National Park

ELECTRIC BLOCK SIGNALS
EXCELLENT DINING CARS

Tickets good returning via San Francisco, Los Angeles at slightly higher rate.

For literature and information relative to fares, routes, etc., call

W. G. NEIMYER, General Agent,

73 W. Jackson Blvd. CHICAGO, ILL.

Bible College Library
Mar12?

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. June 1, 1911 Number 22

The Call of Christ

By Guy Walter Sarvis

Hymns of the Dark Ages

By Meade E. Dutt

Monday Moods

By Edgar DeWitt Jones

Immersion-baptism and Church Membership

Editorial

CHICAGO

VALUE TO A MINISTER OF A THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE OF THE BIBLE

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON

It is assumed that the minister has a thorough knowledge of the Bible. Where has he obtained it? Not in the ordinary Christian home; for the time given to home Bible study would not give any one much knowledge of its scope and meaning. Not in the public schools, from which, for the most part, it is excluded altogether. Not in the Sunday-school, for our children in the Sunday-school have very meager knowledge of the Bible, even after several years of study. Not in college, for students graduate from college supposedly familiar with all other literature, ancient and modern, but really almost as ignorant of the classics as of the Bible. Not in the theological seminary, where neither the extended lectures on introduction nor the minute analysis taught in exegesis give a student a knowledge of the whole Bible.

Only One Way.

There is no way in which a minister can learn the Bible but to study it. It is not enough to skim it for texts, nor yet that it should be explored for archeological or doctrinal purposes. It must be read and learned. Every one will accuse me of slandering my brethren in the ministry (that is, every one but the ministers), if I accuse them of not knowing their Bible as well as they ought.

A minister should know his Bible well enough to quote it. Some years ago I heard a minister who had returned from Hawaii in a very interesting lecture on the volcanoes of the Pacific islands. He told of the greatest of the craters, and how he visited it by night. His description led up to a dramatic close concerning the depth of the great sea of fire into which he looked. He said that the height of the volcano did not impress him as the depth; and now, as he looked back upon it, this was the most vivid abiding impression.

All this description was to find its close in a verse of Scripture which, he said, had burned itself into his soul that night as he stood on the mountain top, on the sea-girt isle, and looked down into that vast and lurid chasm; and that verse was,—

A Gap.

Just there occurred a gap. He had been delivering his lecture ostensibly from manuscript, but had done it so often that he knew the description by heart, and delivered it with vigor and liberty until he came to the closing words. After telling us how that verse had burned itself into his soul, he had to find the place in his manuscript and read the verse,—

"In his hand are the deep places of the earth;
The strength of the hills is his also."

Now, the man whose soul had been set on flame by such a verse ought in the course of thirty or forty recitations of a lecture to have committed eighteen words to memory. Indeed he ought to have known that verse and several hundreds of other verses before he ever saw the volcano.

It is a poor excuse to say, "You know I have no verbal memory. I never can quote anything." A minister can cultivate a verbal memory for Scripture. He can commit passages to memory if he is willing to make the effort.

How To Do It.

This is the way to do it: Read the passage aloud, and repeat it aloud. No, I hear you say that it is just as well to read it to yourself and repeat it inaudibly. It is not half as good, and if you do not know it you will be glad to learn the method. You can learn faster when you pronounce the words aloud, very much faster. Try it and see. Your success will depend chiefly on the importance you attach to the accomplishment of the task you set for yourself.

It is important that a minister know by heart considerable extracts from various books of the Bible. For instance, at a funeral you are placed at the head of the coffin in a room where you cannot see to read. What a comfort if you know in their entirety the passages appropriate for the ordinary funeral. How many times need you read the fifteenth chapter of I Corinthians without learning it? Is it a hard thing to expect that you can repeat the most of John 14, and Psalm 90, and the opening verses of Revelation 21 and 22?

And when you are called upon to teach a Bible class where the good old saints with open Bibles on their knees fire proof texts at you, is it not a comfort to be able to say, "Yes, but don't you remember that the verse before says so and so?" or, "Have you forgotten that Paul, in writing to the Galatians, adds to that thought this one?"

Not Difficult.

It is far less difficult to do this than many people suppose. A minister ought to be able to recognize a verse when he hears it, almost any verse that is likely to be used in familiar argument, to tell whether it is quoted correctly, and to call to mind instantly such other verses as naturally belong with it. This knowledge will not come from critical study nor by hunting for proof texts, nor yet by skimming the Book for mottoes with which to preface sermons. It comes from diligent study and daily familiarity. There is no knowledge that begins to be as fruitful for the minister as knowledge of his Bible.

Hit or Miss.

How much of the Bible, the whole Bible, will the ordinary congregation learn in a year from the hit-or-miss pulpit reading of the day? How short is the radius of the tread-mill in which the shallow pulpiteer trudges his little round? How long before he is again having the 23rd Psalm and the 53rd of Isaiah and the 14th of John, and getting nothing more out of them than before; having chosen them, indeed, for no good reason save that they were supposed to be good, and he had nothing in mind bearing more directly on the theme?

That which is good for a minister is good for a layman. There is no book so good in all the world for any Christian to know. It is good for discipline of the mind and for elevation of spirit. It is good for the beauty of its form and the variety and helpfulness of its teaching. It is good in joy, and indispensible in sorrow. Let us all try to know our Bible a little better.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

J. M. LOWE, GENERAL EVANGELIST.—Church Dedications, Special Addresses. Permanent address, 1350 25th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. E. S. BELL, Hillsboro, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Please mention this paper.)

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

Between
CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY
via the
Chicago & Alton

Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis
For Time Tables and Fares Address:
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO

Special Fountain Pen offer to Christian Century Readers for 3 months, to convince You of its Merits. Terry's "Kantleek" Fountain Pen, fitted with 14 Karat Gold Nib. Sells for $2.50. :-: To You $1.25.

(Patent Applied For)

Terry's Presto Self Fill Fountain Pen (the $5.00 kind) to you for $2.50. This Pen fills and cleans itself in a second. No Rubber Sacks to Rot—no mechanism to get out of order; does not leak or blot. Wonderfully simple—simply wonderful. Such is our confidence in the great value of our Pens over all others—bar none, that we agree to return your money, if the Pen proves unsatisfactory; we make you the Sole Judge.

JOHN TERRY CO., (Manufacturers) 313-315 Broadway, New York.
(Able representatives wanted.)

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT. . . . . EDITORS

A Modern Man of the Old School

Readers of The Christian Century are not, as a whole, familiar with the work of one whose labors among us are ended, but whose life story is an essential element of the history of the Disciples in the southwest. So recently has it been that I heard his voice that it is impossible yet to realize that Addison Clark, founder of Texas Christian (formerly Add-Ran) University and twenty-six years its president, has finished his earthly course.

To those who knew him not, these words convey no adequate conception of our loss in Texas. Born in the Lone Star state in 1842, he spent his life within her borders. Yet while little known in other sections of the land, this was the most unprovincial of men. So unique a character is worthy of a wider notice than a passing mention of his services.

An Old-Fashioned Man.

He was an old-fashioned man. As a boy of nineteen he entered the Confederate army, where he resolutely courted service and danger and avoided all possible honors, though they came to him in spite of his native modesty. Here he developed a strength, not to say sternness, of character which always thereafter marked him. If duty seemed to call in a given direction, straight to it he went; and friendship, fortune, favors, entreaty, opposition could not swerve him a hair's breadth from the chosen pathway. Right was right, and it ended the chapter.

As another evidence of his almost military precision was his gospel of punctuality. Whatever was worth doing at all was worth doing at the moment scheduled. An appointment for 10:00 o'clock was not properly filled at 10:15 nor yet at 10:01. Absence from duty he could excuse; tardiness in doing it he could hardly condone.

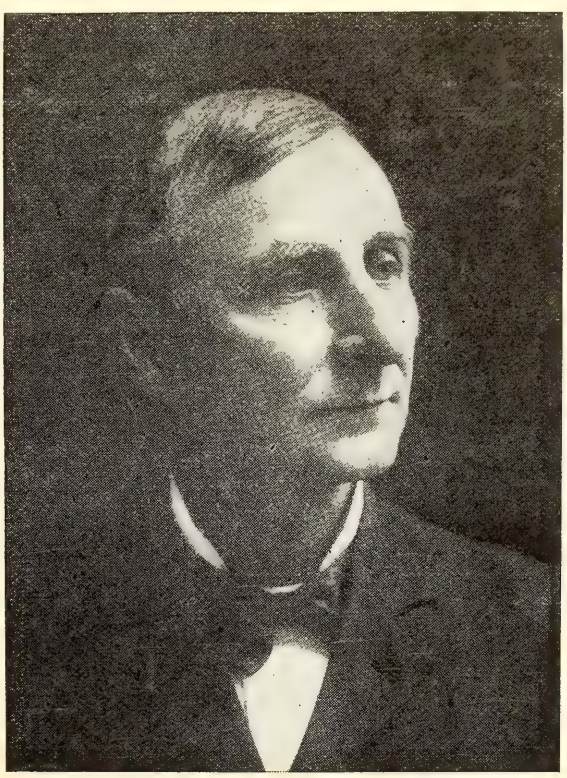
Close to Students' Hearts.

Yet here was no martinet. No man ever lived closer to his students' hearts or understood them better. So many of the Clark family had been connected with the school that students distinguished its various members by their given names. And how many a tender counsel of "Mr. Addison's" has made a teacher feel the dignity of his work and the greatness of his subject, or has put new hope in life into some faltering boy or discouraged girl!

In large measure our great leader had Wm. Rainey Harper's power to inspire the men and women who worked with him in school or church, and those who studied under him. And how young he was, walking twenty miles into the woods for a frolic with his "boys," or watching with zest a football game or the college "nine" battling for its honors! And what wonder that throughout all Texas the hundreds who have walked with him in those paths of pleasure are led today in the ways of human service by the very memory of him, as no other has ever been able to lead them.

Far-Reaching Personal Influence.

So fine was his personal influence over us and so sacred his ministry, that to cite one instance, when one of his former pupils had graduated at Annapolis and had been assigned to duty on the Oregon, before he could find it in his heart to go out on his world voyage the young man came all the way back to Texas and to the quiet vale of Thorp Spring, that he might be baptized by "Mr. Addison" as a dedication of his life's career to God even above country. This was the power of him whom we in Texas have honored with our love as we have no other.



The Late Addison Clark Courtesy The Christian Courier

Old and New Commingled.

There was in him as teacher and president a fine commingling of the old and the new. He had himself no university career as student. Just after the war, he entered a private college conducted by "Uncle Charley" Carlton, first at Kentuckytown and later at Bonham, Texas. The course was decidedly eclectic and Addison Clark chose it all and was unsatisfied. He pursued alone studies which were beyond his teachers' range. He maintained that habit of careful research and thought, so far as facilities would permit, throughout life. He had an old-fashioned contempt for academic titles, as such, though he laid great stress on every student's rigid performance of work required for a given degree. After the school passed under church control he was given the honorary degree of LL. D. This, of course, he permitted to be used on proper occasion in reference to himself. But after he had resigned as president and entered the pastorate, the writer once addressed a letter to him as "Dr. Addison Clark." The response came signed plain Addison Clark underscored. From this source he never received any more letters as "Dr.!"

High Standard of Honesty.

This was characteristic of his whole feeling about education. Nothing ought to be for display or seem to be more than it was. When Add-Ran College was transferred to the brotherhood it was rechartered as "Add-Ran University." This was over his protest, for he felt that the term "college," well deserved, was a stronger title than "university," without a university's equipment. And his standards were high. So thoroughly did he realize what a great school ought to be that he unconsciously translated its significance into his own work. I have been told by men who had studied under him that when they went to the great universities and took work in the department of philosophy they found themselves being led out along lines of conception, research and method with which they had been familiar under Addison Clark. No man was ever more thoroughly a man of his own day than was he.

His Progressive Mind.

And this was just as manifest in his religious life. Coming into the church in 1854, a barefoot boy of twelve, he began with the conceptions prevalent at that time. Missionary societies, etc., were wrong, and an organ in church was as the sin of witchcraft. The writer who most informed the content of his later thinking was Lyman Abbott. On the afternoon before he died Mr. Clark called on the group about his bedside to notice Abbott's article on "The New Bible," had us read it to him and discussed it with us with understanding and interest. He greatly admired Herbert L. Willett, and The Christian Century was to him as ozone for the soul. When a younger writer in our ranks had affirmed that the principles of the "Declaration and address" demanded that the Disciples accord full fellowship to those who come among us from other folds regardless of the question of their immersion, it was Addison Clark who first insisted through our state journal that the paper be discussed with fairness if at all, taking care at the same time to express his own indorsement of its position. Thus was he ever ready to weigh the newest thought among us and thus was he ever chivalric to defend the truth as he conceived it, however many might oppose. He grew younger with every passing year.

His Passing.

On the morning of May 13, 1911, he passed away after a long struggle with what had been supposed to be cancer of the liver. On Sunday morning the 14th, services were held at the Granbury (Texas) church, J. C. Mason, state mission secretary, officiating. The body was interred in the village cemetery at Thorp Spring, where, from the leafy hillside we looked away to the former university building where his voice had echoed so often in Auld Lang Syne. The "boys" and "girls" he loved and led are sore distressed without him and can only pray, "May the maister and his scholars meet some mornin' where the skule never skails, in the kingdom o' oor Father."

EDWIN C. BOYNTON.

Social Survey

Racing Jockeys and Religion

Christian people of England have gone further afield than those in America in the organization of missionary societies for classes and callings. Here almost every attempt in the direction named is met with the cry of over-organization. A "Racing Stables Mission" carries on religious work among the hundreds of English lads at Newmarket, Goodwood and other English racetracks, and the almost as many English boys who migrate to the great French training centre at Chantilly. Jockeys in England and France run into numbers quite unknown in America. At Newmarket there is a Bible class attended by one hundred jockeys each Sunday. At Chantilly what amounts to parental care is exercised by the mission mothers over the English boys always there. Thirty thousand dollars a year is given by English Christian people to work among these jockeys, and by them.

A Two-edged Supreme Court Decision

The recent deliverance of the United States Supreme Court in ordering the dissolution of the Standard Oil trust did not create the sensation that was expected after such as weeping decision of the highest legal tribunal in the land. The fragrance of that rose for most people is almost lost in the cruelty of the thorn which it at first obscured. By this decision words were introduced effecting the force of the anti-trust law which are almost identical with those which many business men have long been trying to have inserted by legislation. The oil trust must be dissolved, and may again combine but not unreasonably. In the decision, combines which may restrain trade are justified unless they unreasonably restrain trade. That means that no conviction can be secured under the Sherman anti-trust law until it is proved that a combination is unduly restraining trade, when to draw a clear line between what is and what is not an undue restraint is often manifestly an impossibility. This decision presents an inviting appearance to those engaged in the profession of law, but it is not especially alluring to the ear of the general public. Already there is a strong movement at Washington for the strengthening of the Sherman law by amendment.

Work of the Illinois Legislature

After a session which was watched throughout the country with deep interest because of its connection with the Lorimer case, the Illinois State Legislature adjourned at Springfield on the morning of May 20. Its action on the Lorimer case is not decisive, because of the limitations of the committee of investigation, and because of the adverse decision of Judge Petit who overruled the state senate's subpœna of a vital witness. On the evidence presented it declared by a vote of nearly four to one, that the election of Mr. Lorimer was brought about by bribery, and this decision renders a federal reinvestigation of the case almost certain by a recommendation to that effect to the United States Senate. The state senate also instructed the senior senator, Mr. Cullom, to present the matter and all evidence to the United States Senate. In the immense number of bills presented a number of exceptionally important measures were enacted. Among these the following are significant: A state-wide civil-service law, extending the present law to apply to nearly all state departments and state institutions; a teachers' optional pension law, in cities of 25,000 or over, on the lines of Chicago teachers' pension law; the extension of the woman's ten-hour labor law; a law compelling better protection, by employers, of employés who work with tools or materials detrimental to health; workman's optional compensation law based upon the recent New York decision, to cover all classes of employment; employers' liability law, eliminating the "fellow-servant" doctrine as a defense; a coal-mine law, thoroughly revising legislation for protection of employés; adult probation law, a parole system for minor crimes, providing paroled persons shall not leave the state without permission of the state, and shall make monthly reports of conduct; liquor laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicants within two-thirds of a mile of a soldiers' home, and the use of intoxicants upon any railway train except on regular dining and buffet cars; a roads law establishing the office of county superintendent of roads and re-drafting all roads and bridge statutes and providing a graduated tax on motor vehicles, proportionate distribution of license fees, limiting the speed for motor vehicles to twenty-five miles an hour, and prohibiting heavily loaded wagons from using gravel and macadam roads when rendered soft by wet weather. Of interest to Chicagoans particularly is the provision of the new $10,000,000 Field Museum in Jackson Park. Another law which, if enforced, will be of wide benefit to the people of the state, prohibits publication of the details of murders and other crimes.

The International Peace Treaty

President Taft is making good his implied promises to foreign nations. England and France quickly took advantage of his overtures and urged him to draw up an arbitral agreement, such as this country will be willing to enter into, for their consideration. Meanwhile the permanent peace agitation has spread among the people. Almost alone, Germany views it unfavorably. In spite of repeated protests of the interested nations that this is merely a peace treaty and is in no wise an alliance, Germany is fearful of it. Many of her fears may now be dispelled, even though she regards with suspicion every word of the text, for a draft of the proposals of the United States have been made public. President Taft gave Secretary of State Knox instructions to draw up a tentative agreement. Its provisions embody the essentials necessary as a basis for permanent peace between two nations. By it, arbitration would be made a final resort in all international disputes of the principals. If the two countries cannot agree through diplomatic interchange, the questions will be submitted to a commission of inquiry. Agreement to arbitrate is to be left in the hands of the United States Senate as at present. In presenting the agreement, Secretary Knox submitted the following statement: "The department has completed a draft of a general arbitration treaty, which has been approved by the president and will be submitted to the French and British ambassadors. This draft represents what this government believes to be a sound basis for negotiations for the extension of the scope of its arbitration treaties. The general features of the draft are these: It expands the scope of our existing general arbitration agreements by eliminating the exceptions contained in existing ones of questions of vital interest and national honor. It is proposed that all differences that are internationally justiciable shall be submitted to The Hague tribunal, unless by special agreement some other tribunal is created or selected. It provides that differences which either country thinks are not internationally justiciable shall be referred to a commission of inquiry with power to make recommendations for their settlement, this commission to be made up of representatives of the two governments who are members of The Hague court. Before arbitration is resorted to, even in cases where both countries agree that the difference is one susceptible of arbitral decision, the commission of inquiry shall investigate the difference with a view of recommending a settlement that will preclude the necessity of arbitration."

How a Tramp Helped Baptists

A tramp, born in England and walking through South China, worrying and robbing people, unwittingly helped missionaries under the Baptist Foreign Society of the United States to gain the good will of Chinese officials recently. One night the head of the Baptist mission at Chaoyang, the Rev. A. F. Groesbeck, was called out of bed late by police officials. Reaching the yamen he found there the English tramp, whom the police said had entered houses, beat people and demanded money. Unless suppressed there was likely to be a riot, and Chinese riots are never over particular as to which foreigner they attack. Mr. Groesbeck helped to dispose of the Englishman by seeing him out of the city after keeping him in custody until daylight. The Baptist mission was about to open a school for boys. In appreciation of what the missionary had done with the tramp, the Chaoyang officials, from highest to lowest, came in state, and the highest of all, the magistrate, read an address in which he praised the school and the missionaries. To the feast which followed, as everything in China must have a feast follow it, came the officials as if to a royal function, viz., on foot. The new school was in fine shape and the Chinese students were smart in dedication clothes. Growing out of the tramp's visit to Chaoyang came the endorsement of the school, and from the endorsement has come a prosperity through local support which the school in former days never dreamed of. The school is part of the work, among much else, of the Baptists of the United States.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Baptist

Religion and Politics.

The Nonconformists of England have a most refreshing way of speaking their minds on political and economic questions. They have learned that crooked politics and bad economic conditions are enemies of true religion. At the spring meeting of the English Baptist Union Principal W. Edwards said:

"The Housing Question and that of the Land are at bottom a great religious question. This is the crying economic evil of our day. If it was a pressing matter in the days of Isaiah and Micah, certainly it is in our own day, and in our over-crowded country. God made the land, not for the pride, luxury and enrichment of the few, but for the support and the well-being of the many. But to our own day we have the old feudal system in full force with all its privileges and emoluments, but stripped of all its obligations. What has been the right of the community has passed into a cruel monopoly. In consequence we have the present fearful and perilous condition of things.

"In England more than 150 millions of acres are held by 18,000 proprietors; in Scotland 171 persons hold over eleven millions; 30 own two-thirds of the land, and 1,700 over nine-tenths of the whole country, whereas one owner possesses over 1,300,000 acres. In Ireland less than 2,000 (until very lately) owned two-thirds of the soil, while millions of poor people worked out their lives to replenish the coffers of absentee landlords; whilst in the darkest period of their lives 200,000 were evicted and cast out in the depths of winter, the country depopulated, and all done in the sacred name of property!

"France has 5,500,000 proprietors with over fifteen acres each, while in this country out of a population of 45,000,000 only 300,000 possess more than one acre of land. A few landlords own more than half the acreage of our country, and often it lies waste for parks, pleasure grounds, for deer walks and pheasant rearing, while the common people are huddled together in slums, a seething mass of miserable humanity. Here, in London, 100,000 are added to the population every year. Here half a million have to eat, sleep, wash (if they do), dress, cook, live, and die in one-room dwellings; and yet such is the hunger for houses that these small single rooms are rented often as high as fifty pounds a year, and there are 3,000 of these rooms in each of which eight live, 9,000 in which seven live, etc. In London a third of the population are below the line of the "very poor," and ninety per cent of the producers of wealth throughout the land have no home they can call their own beyond the end of the week."

United Presbyterian

"Tight-Wad Saints."

The editor of Wallace's Farmer was a preacher before he became a farmer. The readers of his paper get no uncertain word on religious topics from Henry Wallace, LL.D. He writes on the Sunday-school lesson every week and he makes a plea for godly living whenever the opportunity is offered. He also writes for the papers of his own denomination, the United Presbyterian. The "tight-wad" saints, of whom he writes in a recent number of the United Presbyterian are, he says, really good people, but they are narrow. They pay $250 for a horse where they used to pay $100. They give the school-teacher $50 a month instead of $30 as they did a few years ago. But they have not thought it worth while to pay a better salary to the man who baptizes their babies, visits them in sickness and trouble, marries their sons and their daughters, and who will say the last words over all that is mortal. They have been forced out of the rut on the material side by the necessities of business; "nothing less than a strike among the preachers or a famine for the word of God will pry some of them out on the spiritual side." These good people are not ashamed when the average contribution of the congregation to the real work of the Lord is less than one-half the quota. A part of the article follows:

They will go to any necessary expense to reap their own harvests when fully ripe; but are willing that fields ripe for the harvest go ungathered in foreign lands. They do not mean any harm by this. They are simply behind the times on the spiritual side. They think in dimes or nickles with the Godward side of their heads and in dollars with the other side. If the spiritual tight-wads among the farmers would only gather conscientiously the eggs that their hens lay on the Sabbath, mark them with their name and date of laying; so that the buyer would have convincing proof that they are absolutely fresh, and sell them in the nearest town or city, the ordinary hens on the farm would pay the full quota for the average number of communicants in the family, and the treasurers of the boards would shout "Hallelujah, Amen."

Perhaps the church is to blame for the development and breeding of tight-wads. We take up a collection on every possible occasion, and get into the habit of putting in dimes or nickels to "save our face," without any real conscience or heart in the matter; and the child thus trained grows into the habit of thinking that the work of the Lord at home and abroad is merely a nickel and dime business, and not the serious work which the Saviour laid upon us: to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," promising to be with us. We are creatures of habit, and possibly this tight-wad habit was acquired in childhood.

N. B.—The above is not intended as "milk for babes," nor yet as "meat for strong men," but as a tonic and stimulant, or if you prefer to call it so, an alterative. If it should prove an irritant, it will verify the old proverb: "When saints wake up, they usually wake up cross."

Methodist

The Jubilee of Bishop Hendricks.

The silver jubilee of the consecration of Bishop Eugene R. Hendrix to his episcopal office was celebrated Thursday, May 18. Tributes were sent by President Taft, W. J. Bryan, Archbishop Glennon of St. Louis, and Principal George Adam Smith of Aberdeen University. The Central Christian Advocate (Kansas City) offers this tribute:

Bishop Hendrix is the most cosmopolitan of men. He was educated at old Wesleyan, our university at Middletown, Conn., where he graduated at twenty; he was a Missouri pastor for eight years; he took his theological course at Union (Presbyterian), and after eight years as pastor was elected president of Central College and eight years after was called to the episcopacy. His official episcopal residence has always been Kansas City. His official labors have taken him to China, Japan, Mexico, Brazil and Korea, of which mission he was the founder. The natural climax of his wide service came when in Philadelphia in 1908 he was elected the first president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, a body composed of official representatives of thirty-two denominations and 40,000,000 members. If there is any such title lying around we should be constrained to say that Dr. Hendrix is the archbishop of American Protestantism.

Dr. Hendrix is a prolific author and lecturer, and is a first citizen of his native state, the Republic and Protestantism.

Speaking of his position in the Federal Council, Bishop Hendrix said with some gratification to a reporter last Saturday:

"You see, they are all my churches. As president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America, I am the nominal head of 100,000 ministers and of nine-tenths of all the Protestants of America.

"My election to that position two years ago marked not only the greatest event in my career, but was the sign of the greatest event in the Christian world of America of my days. It was the formal recognition of the churches that, although separated in polity, there is so little doctrinal difference between them that they naturally work together in that respect.

"As to the Methodist Church, I hope to live to see both sections united in every detail. A committee is working on the subject now. Owing, however, to the many questions of property involved, the work will have to be done very slowly."

Presbyterian

The Wall Street Journal on the Prayer Meeting.

Some of us are so busy that we have no time for anything that is worth while. We chase the dollar and when we get it, we are too tired to make good use of it. We all need times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Here comes a journal that is not counted among the religious organs of the country and tells us that we need to pray, to go to prayer-meeting. The Wall Street Journal says, as quoted by the Presbyterian Advance.

What America needs more than railway extension and western irrigation, and a lower tariff, and a bigger wheat crop, and a merchant marine, and a new navy, is a revival of piety, the kind mother and father used to have—piety that counted it good business to stop for daily family prayers before breakfast, right in the middle of the harvest; that quit work a half hour earlier on Thursday night so as to get the chores done and go to prayer-meeting; that borrowed money to pay the preacher's salary and prayed fervently in secret for the salvation of the rich man who looked with scorn on such unbusiness-like behavior. That's what we need now to clear this country of the filth of graft and of greed, petty and big; of worship of fine houses and big lands and high office and grand social functions. What is this thing which we are worshiping but a vain repetition of what decayed nations fell down and worshiped just before their light went out? Read the history of Rome in decay and you'll find luxury there that could lay a big dollar over our little doughnut that looks so large to us. Great wealth never made a nation substantial nor honorable. There is nothing on earth that looks good that is so dangerous for a man or a nation to handle as quick, easy, big money. If you do resist its deadly influence the chances are that it will get your son. It takes greater and finer heroism to dare to be poor in America than to charge an earthworks in Manchuria.

The power to lead men is a commission to lead them to the highest.

You will never be much of a force with men until you have much faith in them.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

The Works of the Flesh and the Fruit of the Spirit

"For ye, brethren, were called for freedom; only use not your freedom for an occasion to the flesh; but through love be servants one to another." Paul's doctrine of salvation by faith and of freedom were easily misunderstood. "If we are saved by faith," reasoned some, "we need not bother our minds about the requirements of the law. If we are free, we may give the reins to impulse. Let us therefore cast away all restraint." Of course men who reasoned in this fashion were men who were looking for pleasure and not for salvation. They had no sense of obligation and they knew nothings of the joys of self-control and generous feeling. For them freedom meant that passion and appetite were to have the right of way. For Paul it meant that faith, hope and love should have full command of the life.

It is easy to understand the apostle's tests of a man's faith. He sets a high value on the homely virtues, those which support the institutions of the family, state and church, and give significance to the individual. The absurd "experiences" which used to be required in some quarters would never have been received as evidences of conversion if the testimony of Paul had been followed. One man asked to be admitted to the church and gave as his qualification for membership his experience in seeing the devil. On being asked how the devil looked, he replied, "He was about the size of a yearling. When I saw him I could not pray, and so I came home. But I went back the next day to the same place, and he was gone. Then I was happy, for I knew that the Lord had saved me out of his hands." The absurdity of requiring any but spiritual tests of those whom we are willing to treat as Christians is becoming more and more manifest. And we shall find that Paul, instead of being interested solely in theological hair-splitting, is first and always a practical man. His technical terms belong to the situation he had to meet rather than to his Christian teaching. His supreme aim was to persuade men to live as brothers and to honor God as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The gross immoralities condemned by Paul are today condemned as a matter of form by many who secretly practice them or who have no burning zeal against them. To the apostle it was unthinkable that a disciple of Christ could be immoral. A new moral life came with the new relation of God. In this new life there was no tolerance of uncleanness. There was likewise abhorrence of enmity, jealousy, and strife. The duty of every disciple was to serve. Dissension and faction were inconsistent with the fundamental professions of discipleship. They betokened minds intent upon gaining their own ends and indifferent to Christian fellowship and efficiency. The creed of Paul was the creed of all heroes—that it is life to work, to fight evil, to live with and for others. A recent writer on the divorce question calls for an application of this creed. He says: "The trouble is not that we have a 'hard lot' but that we have a 'soft creed.' We need a better, nobler, stronger—if you will 'harder'—theory and philosophy of life. The divorce evil grows out of soft and erroneous views about life, about success and happiness. We need new conceptions about the true ends of life." It was Bishop Brooks who told us to pray, not that our tasks might be brought down to the level of our ability, but that our ability might be raised to the level of our proper tasks. Seeking ease and pleasure, we become so stupid and weak that we lose the joy of doing what is worth while. By strict attention to our duty, we make hard tasks easy.

The fruit of the spirit is not ripened in a day. It is found wherever men call upon the name of the Lord. But who is long suffering until he has labored many days for the redemption of a community from drunkenness, licentiousness, from political corruption, and low educational ideals? Self-control is won by hard fighting. Meekness does not descend from heaven and take possession of the soul mysteriously. It is acquired. In the church, therefore, we ought to have these virtues in all stages of development. There ought to be the veterans of the cross who illustrate what can be achieved through faith in Christ. Then there ought to be those whose great achievements are before them. We judge these latter by their aims. We must demand of the critics of our faith that they consider neither the church nor any of its members as finished products but as in the process of growth. Are we coming into possession of the virtues of Christianity and are we growing fast enough? These are the proper questions to face. [Midweek Service, June 7. Gal. 5:16-26; Matt. 3:10; 7:16-20; Lu. 8:14, 15; Jno. 15:2-5, 16; Rom. 7:5; Col. 1:10.] S. J.

The Issue

"—unbaptized heathen enrolled by denominational missionaries."—The Christian Standard, May 20.

"Christians, members of the one and only Church of Christ, baptized members of the Church of Christ."—The Christian Century.

If the reader of these quotations will read them again and again, noting how in each case the editor carefully and deliberately chose every word and weighted it with its fullest meaning, these quotations will say so much to that reader that this will prove to be the longest editorial he has read in this paper in many a day.

But lest any person of dull imagination should not be able to discover an interpreting clue we append the following from a caustic critic of The Christian Century writing in The Christian Union, (Des Moines):

The Christian Century says Christ has received into his church Congregationalists, Methodists and Presbyterians as well as Baptists; and therefore we ought to receive them without requiring them to be reinitiated or rebaptized. The Century doesn't tell where it got its information that Christ has received these people into his church. It may be fake news, like some other reports we run onto once in a while. It may have originated in the editor's brain, and passed over the counter as the very latest from Christ. The logic is all right. If Christ has received them into his church they are in it, as much as we are, and we should fellowship them as members.

Men, Religion and Social Service

That leaders in social service in all parts of the country look with great hope to the Men and Religion Forward Movement as a socializing influence in the church is evidenced by a message addressed to the Social Service Committee of this movement. The message is signed by sixteen well-known names, among them Dr. Edward Devine of New York, Owen Lovejoy, Graham Taylor, Charles Stelzle, Homer Folks and Jane Addams. These leaders welcome the Men's Forward Movement because of the prominence given to social service in its proposed campaign. In this respect the men have rightly interpreted social service as distinctly religious and have helped to make it plain "that it is just as important for men to get right with men as that they 'get right with God.'" In return they bespeak for the movement "the endorsement of all social workers who may hitherto have been indifferent to the church, because they have felt that the church has not been concerned about the burdens which have been crushing those unfortunate members of society to whose interest they devote their lives. "We value this movement," they say, "because it gives all the workers in the social field an opportunity to come face to face with one another and with the workers in the church. We believe that out of the conferences and discussions and mass-meetings will come a greater appreciation of the needs of our common humanity: that the working-man and the employer of labor will see each other's problems with clearer vision: that the practical service in attempting together to meet the pressing social questions of the day will make us understand that while we may not agree in non-essentials, nevertheless we have in common the desire to share the purpose of Jesus and to help bring in the Kingdom of God

We recommend that at the very outset of this campaign the social service committees of the various cities call conferences of the local social workers, for the purpose of becoming familiar with what is already being done in their cities by these specialists in the field of social service, and for the further purpose of acquainting these workers with the proposed campaign of the Men and Religion Forward Movement and enlisting them heartily in it." The possibilities of church extension in this direction are great, and the benefits of it might well prove mutual.

An Ineffective Correction

The following letter was addressed to The Christian Evangelist and appeared in the issue of that paper, dated May 25, with the editor's comments which are here reprinted in full:

A CORRECTION.

In current issues of certain Disciple papers there are appearing criticisms of recent editorials in the Christian Century, some of which impute to us a position which our words could not have conveyed in any candid reading of them. I have written to the editors of several of these papers, pointing out the injustice of their representations. In no case has my correction been effective. It has neither been published, nor has it been heeded by editors or contributors. I did not expect to overtake the Christian-Evangelist in the same fault. But in your issue of May 4 an editorial says, referring to the Christian Century:

"Our contemporary, however, settles the question in advance by assuming that such a conference would result in the discontinuance of baptism as a condition of church membership, just as circumcision was discontinued as a condition of fellowship according to the terms of the Jerusalem conference."

(1) This statement is wholly unwarranted and wrong. Neither in our editorial to which yours refers, nor in any other utterance of the Christian Century has it been argued or assumed that baptism would be or should be discontinued as a condition of church membership. I do not mean to impose upon you here an argument of the point of which your editorial treats, but I do believe I will not be disappointed in my confidence that however other papers may refuse to correct an error so serious as this, the Christian Evangelist will not.

(2) As regards baptism, the Christian Century does not advocate receiving unbaptized persons into the church.

It does not hold the pedo-baptist view that "baptism comes in the room of circumcision." Such words have no intelligible meaning to me.

(3) Moreover, the Christian Century holds as firmly as does the Christian-Evangelist that in obeying the commission of Christ to preach the gospel to every creature it is our duty to administer baptism to them only by an act of immersion in water in the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

(4) Whatever differences there may be between us—and it is my earnest hope that all our differences may be talked over in utmost frankness and the fairest Christian spirit—there is no difference between us as to the practice of Christian baptism.

I do not think it is asking too much to request that you publish this letter and I assure you of my sincere appreciation of your kindness in case you do.

Very truly yours, CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.

THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST'S COMMENTS.

We take pleasure in giving space to the foregoing correction of Brother Morrison, one of the editors of the Christian Century, in reference to certain statements in a recent issue of our paper. We beg leave to add, however, a few words in our own defense, for we never knowingly misrepresent anyone. That is a fixed policy and principle of the Christian-Evangelist. We believe the careless or intentional misrepresentation of others is one of the most grievous sins of modern journalism.

1. Concerning the statement which our brother says "is wholly unwarranted and wrong," we submit that the whole tenor of the article to which our editorial refers seems to imply that just as circumcision was not imposed by the Jerusalem conference on Gentiles, so New Testament baptism [immersion] should not be imposed as a condition of fellowship upon those who believe in, and practice sprinkling or affusion. This, in our judgment, would mean "the discontinuance of baptism as a condition of church membership," for while baptism in its original form might still be practiced, it could not be called a condition of church membership. The only way in which our brother can justify his correction and his characterization of our statement as "wholly unwarranted and wrong," is by allowing baptism to stand for either sprinkling or immersion, and that, either of a believer or an infant—a use of the word which he well understands is not recognized among us as good scholarship or good theology. Of course, we did not mean to say that the Christian Century was in favor of discontinuing everything which passes under the name of baptism.

2. As an illustration of why the Christian Century is misunderstood, note the following sentence: "As regards baptism, the Christian Century does not advocate receiving unbaptized persons into the church." Now, the unsophisticated among us would take that to mean that the Century would insist on baptising all those who apply for membership who had not received what its editors and the rest of us believe to be New Testament baptism, that is to say, immersion, as the act of a penitent believer. But such is not his meaning. What he means is that he would insist on persons having either been sprinkled or poured, or immersed, in infancy or on coming to the years of accountability. Just on what grounds he would exclude Quakers, who reject water baptism entirely, we do not know.

We acquitted the Christian Century of holding the view that baptism comes "in the room of circumcision," and so that is not a correction of our statement.

3. Another illustration of the fine art of so stating one's position as to be misunderstood, is the paragraph which we have marked (3). Here the average reader would suppose that the editor of the Christian Century holds precisely with the Christian-Evangelist and the rest of us, that the (a) immersion in water of a penitent believer in the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, is the only baptism which Disciples can recognize consistently as fulfilling the New Testament requirements for church membership. But not so. What he really means is that while (b) the editor himself could practice no other baptism than that mentioned, he would recognize as valid, and have our churches recognize as valid, for the purpose of church membership, any other form of baptism, whether received by a believer or an unconscious infant. Is it strange that our brother is often misunderstood?

(c) We understand Brother Morrison's position exactly, we think. It is not new. It is the precise position on baptism taken by the people whom we have known as the "Christian Connection," but who prefer to be designated as "The Christian Church," which is as old, or older, than our own movement. We can respect the position, and we can respect those who sincerely hold it; but we do not believe it is a position that will stand the test of the New Testament rule or of practical experience. It is certainly not the historic position of the religious movement which our contemporary claims to represent.

4. We most heartily reciprocate our brother's hope "that our differences may be talked over in utmost frankness and the fairest Christian spirit." But such "frankness," we are bound to say, would compel us to dissent from the statement that "there is no difference between us as to the practice of Christian baptism." "The practice of Christian baptism" involves not only the baptism administered by any church, but the baptism recognized by it, as a condition of entrance into its membership.

We hope the Christian Century will take as much pleasure in publishing its correction with our comments, in its own pages, as we have in giving them to our readers.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY'S REJOINDER.

The above editorial comes to hand at the very moment of preparing this issue of The Christian Century for the press, and in pursuance of Dr. Garrison's request we hasten to republish it in our columns.

There are in the above comments such clear signs that the editor of The Christian Evangelist still misconceives The Christian Century's utterances that it may be well to point them out. We follow The Christian Evangelist's paragraph numbers.

1. In another place will be found a discussion of the question of the Conference at Jerusalem on the circumcision question as affording a parallel to the present controversy on church membership.

2. The "unsophisticated" would be perfectly correct in their understanding of the meaning of the statement that "as regards baptism, The Christian Century does not advocate receiving unbaptized persons into the church." The Christian Century would not for a moment "insist on persons having either been sprinkled or poured or immersed, etc." A church practicing Christian union would not raise the question concerning the form by which such persons were inducted into Christ's church. It would raise this question: Are such persons members of the Church of Christ? If they are members of the church, neither The Christian Evangelist nor The Christian Century, nor any man, nor any congregation of men have the right to deny them the fullest Christian fellowship. Such persons do not "apply for membership." They are already members of the church, just as truly members of the church, and their congregations whose credentials they present are just as truly churches of Christ, as is the congregation of Disciples which hesitates to extend them fellowship. They do not "apply for membership" in the church, we repeat, they apply for fellowship in a local congregation of Christians.

A congregation of Disciples, striving to practice Christian union, can do nothing less in all consistency and conscience than extend its complete and hearty fellowship to such Christians. We are not responsible for the manner by which they came into the church. Absolutely the only thing we can do in their case is to recognize that they are in and act accordingly. Christ has received them. Who are we that we should reject them?

But we are responsible for the manner in which persons who apply to us for membership in the church of Christ are admitted. We have convictions which we cannot compromise. Whatever our reasons may be—whether as dogmatists, we hold that Christ expressly commanded immersion; or as proprietists, that apostolic use and our Lord's example give to immersion a peculiar propriety; or as prudentialists, that immersion is the only form upon which divided sentiment can agree and is therefore demanded by the exigencies of Christian union—whether one of these or all of them be our underlying conception we do, as a matter of fact, have convictions on the subject of baptism which may not be stultified by an act of the church in which we as members participate.

In performing those human offices which regularly belong to the admission of members into the Church of Christ, and for which we are responsible, The Christian Century holds with the Disciples of Christ that all divisive and irregular practices should be avoided and baptism administered by immersion only.

We accept the compliment to the lucidity of our words implied in the contrast the editor makes between the "unsophisticated" reader and himself. Manifestly the "unsophisticated" would understand the meaning of this paragraph better than the sophisticated editor has done.

3. (a). "—immersion . . . is the only baptism which Disciples can recognize consistently as fulfilling the New Testament requirements for church-membership." The Christian Evangelist charges that The Christian Century disagrees with it on this point. That is for our contemporary to say, of course. But we would like to know if The Christian Evangelist means what it says. The Christian Century observes that millions are fulfilling the essential requirements for church membership without being immersed. They are members of the Church of Christ, just as truly members as are those who have been immersed. They are not just "our religious neighbors," or "our brethren of the denominations," or "the pious unimmersed"—they are Christians, members of the Church of Christ and they have not been immersed. We understand that the Disciples gladly recognize these persons as members of the Church of Christ. How they became members of the Church of Christ without fulfilling the New Testament requirements for membership we cannot conceive.

Does the Christian Evangelist disagree with us here?

(b) "—the editor himself could practice no other baptism." This point has not been made by The Christian Century at all. The church itself can practice no other than immersion-baptism if it strives to practice Christian union—this is the point. It is not a question of the editor's or a given minister's views on baptism, it is a question of the church's loyalty to Christ's ideal of Christian union.

(c) Enough has been said to show that The Christian Evangelist does not "understand Brother Morrison's position exactly" or, at least, if it does understand it, it is plain that the essential points of this position have not been touched by the editor's discussion. That the "Christian Connection" view should be identified in the editor's mind with the view he is criticising bears out the former alternative.

4. The Christian Evangelist dissents from our statement that there is no difference between the two papers in the practice of Christian baptism. The practice of Christian baptism, it says, involves not only the baptism administered by the church, but the baptism recognized by it as a condition of entrance into its membership. There is no disagreement between us as to the administration of baptism. Let us see if there really is any disagreement as to the recognition of baptism.

The Christian Evangelist already recognizes that Presbyterians, for example, are members of the Church of Christ (we cannot bring ourselves to assume otherwise until plainly informed to the contrary by our contemporary). They became members of the Church of Christ by baptism—we, at least, know of no other way of becoming members of the Church of Christ.

In recognizing the Christian church membership of Presbyterians, does not the Christian Evangelist agree with the Christian Century in recognizing the validity of the baptism by which they became members of the body of Christ—albeit not approving (and in this agreeing with the Christian Century also) of the particular ceremony by which their baptism was solemnized?

If the Christian Evangelist regards all who have not been immersed as unbaptized, by what right can it regard Presbyterian churches as churches of Christ and Presbyterian people as members of the Church of Christ. But if the Christian Evangelist regards Presbyterian churches as churches of Christ and their members as members of the Church of Christ, does it not thereby recognize the validity of the baptism by which its membership is constituted—no matter what reservations it may be compelled to make concerning particular forms and practices?

The Christian Century still insists that there is no difference between itself and the Christian Evangelist in the practice of Christian baptism, both in respect to its administration and what our contemporary calls its "recognition"—unless the Christian Evangelist refuses to "recognize" the Presbyterians as members of the Church of Christ.

And if it does, we would almost despair of our plea for Christian union.

—Students of the New Testament will find in The Biblical World for May (University of Chicago Press) a complete bibliography of this field. The entire number of the magazine is devoted to a list of books dealing with all defects of New Testament study—History, Geography, Life of Jesus, The Synoptic Problem, Miracles, Erchatology—to name no more—together with all works treating of the each New Testament book separately. The bibliography is prepared by Professor C. W. Votaw and contains for each section his assessment of the books listed. Ministers who are not already subscribers of this excellent periodical would do well to order a copy of this issue which would prove an invaluable guide in their study.

Apostolic Precedents

The Christian-Evangelist of May 4 comments upon the use which the Christian Century made of its expressed hope that those who are now laboring to secure Christian unity and find themselves in disagreement over certain matters of organization, ordinance and creed might approach the subject in the same Christian spirit in which the leaders in the early church faced the problem of circumcision with reference to the Gentiles. The Christian Century approved of this sentiment and advised the application of the principle. The Christian-Evangelist, however, while finding satisfaction in the commendation pronounced upon its suggestion, becomes uneasy when the principle is really applied to the modern situation.

It will be recalled that the great majority of the Jerusalem church believed implicitly in the permanence of the law of circumcision and of sacrifice, and insisted that it must be observed by all who would enter the church, Jews and Gentiles alike. That law had the sanction, as they believed, of divine utterance and long-established usage. To abandon it in favor of a broader view seemed like a desertion of divine precepts.

Yet Paul and Barnabas saw clearly that the principle could not be applied under the new conditions of Gentile conversion, and they organized a movement to secure from the Jerusalem church its consent to the waiving of this requirement in the case of those who from among the Gentiles turned to the Lord. Not one of these apostolic leaders wished to abandon anything which seemed to him essential as a means of grace for the development of Christian character. They did not even propose to abandon their personal use of the ordinances of the Jewish law, for most of them remained consistent and conforming Jews, as well as enthusiastic Christians. Their consciences would not permit them to forsake the practices of their fathers on the subject of circumcision and sacrifice. Yet in facing the admission of Gentiles into the church they saw with perfect clearness that the imposition of their own conscientious scruples upon a type of disciples wholly unaccustomed to such practices was an act for which there was no warrant in the broader interpretation of the Christian life.

The Christian Century has insisted that this situation of the early church is a striking parallel to the present problem regarding baptism in its relation to Christian unity, and it wishes to remind the Christian-Evangelist and all other commentators upon the situation that there can be no value in clouding the issue by misstatements of fact. For example, when the Christian-Evangelist says, "Our contemporary settles the question in advance by assuming that such a conference would result in the discontinuance of baptism as a condition of church membership," it is resorting to the very device which it condemns in the following paragraph when it says: "This difference was settled . . . not by a misrepresentation of the practice of one party by the other." The Christian Century has never advocated the discontinuance of baptism as a condition of church membership, nor would such an advocacy find the slightest recognition among the denominations whose union in the larger church of Christ is sought. Does the Christian-Evangelist know of any evangelical Christian bodies who do not insist upon baptism as a condition of church membership? The Christian Century does not, nor is it aware that anybody is making the slightest effort to eliminate baptism from the list of essentials to membership in the Church of Christ.

More than this, the Christian Century not only insists upon the validity and permanence of baptism in the church universal but it also affirms with emphasis that in the practice of Baptists and Disciples there is no likelihood that any substitution of another practice for immersion will prevail. We do not know of any Baptists or Disciples who are advocating the use of affusion in place of immersion in either of these bodies. We believe that there will be a very considerable section of the church that will maintain consistently the practice of immersion, in spite of the fact that the great majority of Christians throughout the world will likely be content with affusion for some time to come.

With this matter made clear, and in the hope that no further effort to obscure the precise nature of this inquiry will be made, we turn to the interesting inquiry into the nature of the apostolic precedent quoted by our contemporary. Circumcision and sacrifice were practices of remote antiquity among the Jewish people. They did not originate with the Hebrews, but they were a part of the religious practice inherited from the past. They received the sanction of lawgivers and priests from the first, and became a fixed and unalterable element in the worship of God. Gradually their sanctity increased until in the days of Jesus they constituted the chief tests of orthodoxy in the Jewish community.

Yet this eminence of position accorded to circumcision and sacrifice was never accepted by the great prophets of Israel as valid. They affirmed consistently that Jehovah did not care for external rites but only for sincerity, justice and reverence. Some of the prophets like Jeremiah and Hosea went so far as to affirm that God never commanded these acts of ritual, and that they were only substitutes for spiritual religion. Yet circumcision and sacrifice were recognized as possessing a certain value, and though they were often subjected to mordant criticism by the moral leaders of Israel, they persisted as the most outstanding features of the national faith.

However, when the question regarding the admission of Gentiles arose, it was seen at once that a new issue had been raised. The Gentiles were totally unfamiliar with the particular forms of religious practice. They had their own customs of worship. They were not interested in form or ceremony, but only in following the leadership of Jesus in the attainment of character and the accomplishment of the ends of the kingdom of God. They understood this to be the essence of the new faith. For them to have concerned themselves with the validity of religious customs that have become dear to Jewish Christians would have been to turn aside from first to second things. Paul and the other leaders of the Christian community recognized this fact, and secured for these Gentile converts those liberties of conscience which were threatened by the conservatives, who with equally good conscience were determined to preserve the practices to which they were accustomed.

Precisely similar is the situation in the Christian Church at the present time. A large and conscientious section of the Church believes not only in baptism as an essential element in the Christian system, but in immersion as the proper and apostolic method of its administration. The first conviction it shares with the universal evangelical church, the second it holds in fellowship with the churches of the Baptist type. No one questions the validity of immersion, few would question its apostolic employment. But a great company amounting to a large majority of the evangelical church is convinced that the method of administering baptism is of subordinate importance, and ought not to be made a test of fellowship in the effort now being put forth to unite the different bodies of believers into more effectual fellowship.

No one is asking that the practice of immersion be discontinued. Among Disciples it will not be discontinued, nor will any other practice be substituted. But the question once more arises as it arose in the Jerusalem church, Is this conscientious conviction of a minority of the church to be made a test of brotherhood among Christ's people, whose standing in the faith is attested by facts and virtues far more convincing than any act of ritual can ever be? In other words, are we to accept the principle that only those who have been immersed are worthy of recognition in the fullest and frankest sense as brethren in the church, or are we to accept the precedent of the apostles and leaders of the early church that the test of Christian standing is not ritual or ordinances but life in Christ?

The real test of a Christian life is loyalty to the mind and spirit of Jesus. Those who believe that Jesus made immersion a test of church membership will of course continue to insist upon an exclusive form of fellowship. To such the plea of Christian unity means only unity among those who accept the obligation of immersion.

To the great majority of Christians, however, this question becomes increasingly a subordinate one. In a spiritual religion matters of form can have only a secondary place.

Let it be clearly understood once again that the issue is not that of the acceptance of baptism as an essential element in church membership. We repeat that we know of no church among evangelical Christians that admits to its membership without baptism. Further than this, we insist that for Disciples and Baptists immersion will continue to be the only practice of baptism. The question is a larger one, Shall immersion be made a test of recognition among those who have become the followers of Jesus by all the sanctions of faith and fellowship? Shall the conscience of those who hold the immersionist view be erected into a standard for the guidance of those who do not share such conscientious convictions, and shall the conscience of those who are as fully convinced of the broader view and have as much of conscience on the side of liberty as their conservative brethren have on the side of adherence to a form of initiation, be the measure of loyalty to Christ?

If the Christian-Evangelist were proposing afresh a platform of Christian unity, as the fathers of this reformation proposed it a century ago, would it include immersion as a requirement of all who desire to unite with our churches from other Christian bodies?

Monday Moods

I spoke the other night from the same platform with the Hon. Clarence Darrow of Chicago. The occasion was a mass-meeting in behalf of a new park system for our city. Mr. Darrow and I championed the movement which was defeated three to one—but that is "another story."

I had heard Mr. Darrow before, but this time I was given opportunity to study him. He is unique. He is a free lance absolutely. Two years ago the liquor forces brought Mr. Darrow to our city to speak against local option. He did so, but in the doing he scored the saloons so scorchingly and so frequently that it was an open question whether he really aided the liquor forces. The tragedy of it was that they didn't need much help but won easily. It was our side that needed help and we lost—more easily.

Mr. Darrow is radical, no doubt of that. He doesn't believe in jails or penitentiaries. He doesn't believe men can ever be made good by law. He says that if a man refrains from evil simply because he is afraid to do evil his goodness is only apparent, that it is not real but fictional.

Mr. Darrow is nothing if not iconoclastic. In his speech the other night he said: "The older I grow the saner I become and therefore the more pessimistic. An optimist is an insane person." Nevertheless further along in his speech he said that he believed things were growing some better and to illustrate he cited the success of union labor in obtaining shorter hours for the toiler of the world, as well as the safeguarding of the life of the laborer. He spoke pungently, epigrammatically and with perfect ease. I sat studying him thus, at close range—the stalwart figure, the broad Atlantean shoulders, slightly stooped, the dark, straight hair, worn long, parted low on the side with one defiant lock falling far down over his forehead, the strong, deep-lined face, the stern mouth and the strong, out-standing chin. Certainly he is a platform power of an uncommon type. Sarcasm he uses mercilessly and time-honored customs are slitted into ribbons by his rapier thrusts. In repartee he is very apt. For instance, I had said (referring to the charge that the farmer vote could always be counted against improvements), "I do not believe that the farmer has a monopoly on selfishness." Alluding to this, Darrow said: "No, not a monopoly, but if you farmers around here are like the farmers I know, they hold the controlling stock."

Naturally on many things Mr. Darrow and I do not think alike. I should imagine, though I have no definite proof, that Mr. Darrow has precious little regard for organized Christianity. I should suppose him Ingersollian in some of his views and yet I have no doubt but that such a man and such a message as he delivers contributes to the on-march of the general good. The only way that some minds are goaded into thinking is by statements that challenge and cross-hackle. A reading of the speeches of Wendell Phillips in the early part of his career as agitator will show him fully as inflammatory in utterance against human slavery as Clarence Darrow is today against industrial bondage. Here and there, now and then, and all the time, somewhere there must be voices in the wilderness, loud, clamorous, insistent, strident voices. Darrow is such a voice. I confess to a liking to hear a man, once in a while, of the Darrow type, a man who is unfettered, who says precisely what he thinks, who both startles and shocks me and so keeps me from settling in some nice, smoothly-oiled groove.

"When you come up to Chicago, I want you to come out and see me," said Mr. Darrow, as we shook hands after the speaking. "Come out to my home and we'll talk it all over."

"Talk it all over!" How excellent a method. How many bitter, blinding and bloody religious battles might have been averted if only the leaders of the divisions had got together to "talk it all over!"

"Talk it all over" with Clarence Darrow! Indeed I should like to and maybe sometime I will. E. DeW. J.

Turn back over the meadows of your childhood days and forget not that you were content to dream on the mossy banks of the mirror stream, and feel the glow of the last rays of the crimson sun as it sank into its bed of indigo blue. You were content to dream in the twilight; not asking what power binds that part of the day to the starry night, but praying that God may see you safely through the morrow and grant you peace.—Lillian Sincere Ahrens.

The Call of the Christ

A Missionary's Interpretation of the Master's Appeal

BY GUY WALTER SARVIS

In severing his connection with the Hyde Park Church, Chicago, as its Assistant Pastor, to become with Mrs. Sarvis the "Living-links" of that congregation on the Foreign field, Mr. Sarvis preached on a Sunday in March a sermon interpreting the conception and motive of his missionary life. He fitted his discourse into a series of sermons then being preached by the pastor, Dr. Ames, on "The Symbolic Christ," the thesis of which was that the outstanding facts of Jesus' life symbolize and interpret the spiritual experience in the individual soul of the Christian. The fineness of Mr. Sarvis' insight both into the records of Christ's life and the inner side of human experience discloses his extraordinary fitness for the teaching of Sociology in the University of Nankin, to which the Foreign Mission Society has appointed him.— THE EDITORS.

I think it was Emerson who said, "I am a part of everyone whom I have met." We cannot know a noble life without being ourselves ennobled. In childhood we hear stories of Washington and Lincoln, and they come to stand as types of bravery and truth, and in our meaner and weaker moments they make us ashamed and lead us to higher things. But it is not the bare historical facts about these men which give them their power with us. It is the fact that they come to symbolize for us those fine and noble traits of character which we desire in ourselves. So it is with the Christ. As we come to know and love him, more and more he comes to symbolize that ideal self which we aspire to be. And I want to insist that these symbolic persons are the most real persons in the world. This is true even of our most intimate friends and relatives. The mother whom we love in childhood and honor in old age is not the person she herself was conscious of, a person with the same idle and base and frivolous impulse which you and I find in our own souls. She is the embodiment of virtue and love and kindness, a being quite apart from the common humanity which crosses our path day after day. Our lives, then, are moulded and controlled by the great symbolic persons who come into them and call them like living voices from the base and unworthy to good and noble things.

Christ's Call Most Potent.

But for us Christians the call of Christ is far more potent than the summons of any other great ideal person who enters into our lives. Men of all creeds and philosophies yield to his winsomeness and acknowledge his beauty. It is, then, to the call of the Christ that we shall listen this morning.

One morning after the baptism of Jesus, John was standing talking with two of his disciples as Jesus passed by. John pointed him out and exclaimed: "There is the Lamb of God!" The two disciples heard him say this, and followed Jesus. But Jesus turned round, and saw them following. "What are you looking for?" he asked. "Rabbi," they answered, "where are you staying" "Come, and you shall see," he replied.

The Call of the Open Way.

The call of the Christ is to me essentially the call to the open way. Whatever has been the case in historic Christianity or whatever may be the case in certain quarters today, it seems to me that the invitation of Jesus to come and see is quite characteristic of the whole spirit of his life. His very first invitation to men is an invitation to investigate, and in this respect he is thoroughly modern. The whole method of modern science is the experimental method, and our philosophy is more and more the pragmatic philosophy, the philosophy which asks not. Is it logical? Is it old? Is it authoriative? but, What does it do? Jesus said in another place, "By their fruits shall ye know them," and when people refused to believe on him because he was not what their traditions had led them to expect he would be, he urged them to believe on account of the works which he did. And so it seems to me the ideal church is a church in which this spirit of freedom and openness exists. It is a church which is willing that everyone in its fellowship should see for himself, and it is a church which as a whole is always ready to receive new light. In the same way, the ideal Christian is an individual who is always willing to see new truth and is likewise willing that others should be both ahead of him and behind him in this search for truth. And this call of the Christ to the open way is not an easy call to heed. There are few things in this world more difficult to attain than tolerance coupled with earnestness. No one of us may escape the double danger of believing nothing earnestly on the one hand and believing something so earnestly that we have no patience with those who differ from us on the other.

Guy Walter Sarvis.

Jesus Always Drawing People.

But this first call of the Master is but the beginning of acquaintance with him. There is another call which troubled souls have heard with comfort in all the ages since Jesus walked up and down among the hills of Galilee and took little children in his arms and blessed them. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." One of the most striking things about Jesus was He was always getting people to come to him. We never find that he told people to come into the church or into any other organization. But once, so far as I remember did He urge them to go to the Bible. I had a friend who a few weeks ago lost all means of support for his sick wife, his little boy, and himself. We had an opportunity to show our friendship in some concrete fashion, and the wife writing to us and telling her gratitude spoke of some things the Christian people who should have been their friends had done. One expressive phrase was, "We have been offered religious tracts to read!" What a mockery of the real spirit of the Christ! Who can imagine him in the presence of human suffering and trouble saying to an unfortunate one, "Go and read the Bible and trust in the promises of God?" His invitation was ever a call to personal comradeship, and to a comradeship in which there was more than words; for we all know of the works of kindness which He did.

The Companionship of Christ.

And I doubt whether there is anything more holy or sacred in this world than that relationship which exists between two human beings when one is in trouble and the other has that divine gift which enables him to be a real comforter. And I believe Christ means most to those of us who are able thus to find in him a companion who sits, as it were, by our very sides and gives us confidence to live from day to day. I sometimes think that in our complex life when we take so much thought for self-culture and self-protection and self-development that we lose some of the finest things in life which come only to those spirits who have little of this world's goods and who are cast almost bare upon its scant charity. And I do not think we need to be fanatics to have this sense of companionship with the Christ. He is the symbol not only of our better selves, but of the better world-self. Believing in him, we believe that somehow this throbbing planet, with all its stains and imperfections and inhumanities, is a good world, and we are able somehow to go out and face it and call it a comrade, because he faced it and was crucified by it and yet loved it and yearned over it as a mother yearns over a wayward son.

All Must Bear Burdens.

"Take my yoke upon you," he says, "and learn of me, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." None of us escape from burden-bearing in this world. The art of life consists in bearing its burdens most faithfully and most easily. Jesus says that He has found a way to make every task in life an easy one. He calls us to look upon every task as a contribution to eternity, to regard all business as our Father's business: and as the child finds delight in pleasing the parent, so we shall find joy in doing the will of God. And we do not need to interpret God in any narrow or anthropomorphic sense. In some fashion, if we are religious at all, we must believe that God is at the center of things and that our lives are not without significant relation to him. Believing thus, we are able to take a large view of life and to escape the pettiness of the cramped souls who live as those whom Browning describes when he says, "They have their beetles to collect." Jesus calls us, then, to lives of vision and faith, and he asserts that in such lives we shall find our yokes easy and our burdens light.

One day Jesus was walking beside the Sea of Galilee and he saw two fishermen casting their net into the sea. "Come and follow me," said Jesus, "and I will make you fishers of men, and they straightway left the boat and their father and followed him." The call of the Christ is more than a call to some practical course of action. In this respect the Christian religion is in marked contrast with some of the Oriental religions. Prof. Burton tells the story of an incident which occurred during his recent tour in the Orient which illustrates this point. He had been delivering an address before a body of Hindu students on "Why I Am Content to Be a Christian." One of the reasons he gave was that Christianity was both practical and devotional; it taught both faith and works. At the close of the address a young man arose and asked permission to speak. On being granted such permission he proceeded to argue that Prof. Burton's statement could not be true because faith and works were mutually exclusive, for in the nature of the case activity of any sort interfered with meditation and contemplation, which are the essence of faith. Jesus' conception of the religious person as one who mingled freely with his fellowmen and lived a normal life but one free from the sin and sordidness of the world, was quite impossible for this young Brahmin. Too often the attitude of the Christian toward his religion has been that of the young Brahmin. He has felt that business and religion must be separated, and in such cases religion is too often crowded out. But it is surely a misconception of the religion of Jesus to hold that he taught a divorce between religion and business. In his prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John he says, "I do not ask Thee to take them out of the world, but to keep them from evil. They do not belong to the world, even as I do not belong to the world. Consecrate them by the truth; thy message is truth. Just as Thou hast sent I send them as my messengers to the world." There is nothing in the life and teachings of Jesus to suggest that He would have approved of the ascetic ideals which came to prevail in the church in a later day and which, like the divorce of business and religion in modern times, amount to a confession of cowardice or failure in the attempt to live out religion under normal human conditions. The synthesis between life and ideals is one of the greatest of the achievements of Jesus.

A Call to Serve Others.

But while these two fishermen were to continue to catch fish, their chief occupation in the future was to be fishers of men. Jesus' call to them was a call to a readjustment of emphasis in the valuation of the activities of life. Heretofore, said Jesus in effect, you have given all your attention to catching fish in order to live; I call you to a work in which your chief purpose shall be to make others live. Such is the call which comes to every business man today. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own life?" The old translation had the word "soul" where the later rendering has "life." Doubtless Jesus had in mind physical life, but it is quite in accord with the spirit of his teaching to put a larger interpretation upon the term. What is life? Is it eating and breathing? Is it accumulating knowledge or piling up goods? Is it success? Surely it is none of these, for all these may come to shrunken and sordid souls. What is life? Is it not fullness of human sympathy and human experience? Is it not a quick and delicate response to every human impulse within us and to every mood of those about us? And any man who is thus sensitive to the human world in which he lives will not fail to be a fisher of men. He will be eager to make this world the best possible place for others and for himself. He will therefore use every wile to win men from the low and base to the noble and worthy things of life. As he moves up and down the streets of the city he, like his Master, looking on the multitudes will be moved with compassion because they are scattered as sheep without a shepherd. And if he really hears the call of the Christ, the shepherd impulse in his heart will take concrete form and he, like the Christ, will minister to the multitudes.

The Call to the Cross.

As the time of the crucifixion drew near, Jesus saw the increasing enmity of the leaders of his nation and the increasing defection of the populace who had followed him for the sake of the loaves and fishes. He perceived the inevitableness of his death if He continued to pursue the course he had hitherto followed. For the chief priests and the scribes and the pharisees and the sadducees did not care for the open path nor for human brotherhood nor for the abundant life which finds the affairs of every day the affairs of God. They saw perfectly clearly that the triumph of Jesus meant their own defeat, and since they were strongest, it was inevitable that they should kill Jesus, as they had killed the prophets before him. As Jesus was talking of these matters one day, "Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall never be unto thee." Then Jesus administered that historic rebuke to Peter, and turning to the group of disciples, now reduced to twelve, he said: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." This, too, is the call of the Christ—the call to the cross. I am no ascetic. I have no time for one who spends himself in self-inflicted torture of mind or body. Perhaps no misconception of the Christian religion is more serious than that which sees in it a mere penance for some sin or fault which perhaps could not be escaped. And yet I believe that the call to the cross is a necessary part of our human life. But this call is not confined to those who strive to follow the Christ. To every human being comes sooner or later the test of suffering. In fact, suffering is a normal part of life, both human and animal. If one looks at the whole of human life about him, he may easily conclude that the pain is more than the pleasure.

Mrs. Guy Walter Sarvis.

Not Escape But Endurance.

So the problem of life comes to be not so much how we shall escape suffering as how we shall endure it. The cross must needs come into every life, but whether the cross be a shadow or a light will depend upon our attitude toward it. Jesus coupled cross-bearing with self-denial. The word self-denial has come to have an unwelcome sound in our ears because it has been associated with irrational and needless sacrifice of the goods of life. Nothing can be further from Jesus' point of view. He always chose the best things of life, although we count him the supreme example of self-denial. True self-denial consists simply in choosing the ultimate instead of the immediate, the best instead of the good. So it was when Jesus chose the way of the cross. He might have weakly yielded to the pressure of his enemies or his friends who sought to silence him, but such a course would have brought to him a greater cross than that involved in the physical crucifixion—the cross of a sensitive soul in torment because of its own cowardice and weakness. And because Jesus chose the cross, the instrument of his humilation was transformed into the means of his exaltation, for through all the centuries this death of Jesus on the cross has appealed to the emotion of the world and has won a devotion to the ideals which were dearer than life to him in a measure which would not otherwise have been possible. For him the cross was transformed from a shadow into a bright and glorious light. And so we might go through history and select those from every nation who have counted suffering and death as mere pittances when weighed against the higher concerns to which they had devoted their lives. We should think of Socrates drinking the hemlock, of the Spartans at Thermopylae, of Martin Luther before the Diet or Worms, of John Brown, and of the thousands of those we call heroes, and we should know that the cross may become a glorified thing.

Glory in Misfortune.

But after all, most of the suffering in this world is in quiet and obscure lives that are never known outside their little circles of friends. Can there be glory in the sick bed, in hunger, in nakedness, in poverty? Every one of us will recall instances where such suffering has been a benediction to all who saw it. I remember an old woman whose fingers were bent with rheumatism and whose body was racked with a constant cough. She lived alone on the eight dollars a month she drew as pension money from the government and what little she could earn by knitting and at the same time gave two dollars a month to the church. She was one of the happiest individuals I ever knew. She was happy because she practiced self-denial. She literally forgot herself in her interest in others. She had taken up her cross, but she had done more—she had followed Him.

Cross Bearing in the City.

There is a special need for cross-bearing in such a life as we live here in Chicago, especially on the part of the well-to-do community represented by this section of the city. It is not that sort of suffering which brings glory nor is it the acute suffering of disease or great sorrow. It is the annoyance and labor involved in living up to the highest ideals of citizenship and neighborliness. The great danger of the city is that we shall become separated from the people with whom we are normally connected and shall become selfish and careless of the rights of the community. The city is so large and we are so insignificant! It is not worth while for us to bother ourselves about such things as voting or participating in the various movements for the betterment of the city! Such arguments are specious, but they are false "No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself," and the highest type of heroism in a peaceful society is that heroism which devotes itself to the common good in a faithful but unobstrusive way. Prof. James has written an essay on "The Moral Equivalent for War." It is comparatively easy to be brave and to endure suffering when the bands are playing and the flags are flying, but what we need in our city today is men and women who will fight in behalf of civic

(Continued on page 19)

Early Christian Praise

The Hymnody of the Western Church Before the Reformation

BY MEADE E. DUTT

The introduction of Greek hymnody into the Western church is due to two great lights in the Latin church—Hilary of Poitiers and Ambrose of Milan. Hilary was banished from his See in Poitiers in 356 A. D. and was absent from it four years. This time was spent in Asia Minor taking part at one time in one of the councils of the Eastern church. He had an opportunity to become thoroughly acquainted with the Greek music of that day. He wrote a "Book of Hymns" to which Jerome refers. Isadore, Archbishop of Seville, who presided at the 4th council of Toledo, speaks of Hilary as the first Latin hymn writer.

Mr. D. J. Donahue, in a volume entitled "Early Christian Hymns," gives six of Hilary's hymns. I give the first and last verse of one entitled, "A Hymn for the Penitent."

I am not worthy, Lord, mine eyes
To turn unto thy starry skies;
But bound in sin, with moans and sighs,
I beg thee, hear me.

Power, love, and glory be to thee
O high and holy Trinity;
Be ours the bliss thy face to see
In light supernal.

One peculiarity of most of these hymns, if not all of them, is that the last verse is a doxology. This continues on into the middle ages—in fact it has not been entirely abandoned by the churches of the present.

Sung in Private First.

It seems that hymns of this character began to be sung in private by the people before they were taken up and sung by the church with ecclesiastical sanction. Jerome says that in his day those who went into the fields might hear the "plowman at his hallelujahs, the mower at his hymns and the vine dresser singing David's psalms."

Of the part taken by Ambrose not long after Hilary's death, in bringing the use of hymns into the church of Milan, we have a contemporary account from his convert Augustine. Be this as it may, it began to Valentinian, favored the Arians and desired to remove Ambrose from his See. The "devout people," of whom Augustine's mother, Monica, was one combined to protest him and kept guard in the church. "Then it was first appointed," says Augustine, "that after the manner of the Eastern churches, hymns and songs should be sung lest the people grow weary and faint through sorrow; which custom has ever since been retained and has been followed by almost all other congregations in other parts of the world." He speaks of himself as moved to tears by these "hymns and canticles;"—"The voices flowed into my ears; the truth distilled into my heart; I overflowed with devout affections and was happy."

Mr. Donahue gives thirty-two hymns credited to Ambrose. The number however is probably much less.

The Church's Most Sublime Hymn.

The composition of the Te Deum has been ascribed to Ambrose. It is said that he wrote it after the conversion of his pupil, Augustine. Be this as it may, it began to be used about that time. It is the most sublime unmetrical hymn the church has ever produced. I give it in full.

We praise thee oh God,
We acknowledge thee to be the Lord;
All the earth doth worship thee, the Father everlasting.
To thee the angels cry aloud,
The heavens and all the powers there in.
To thee Cherubim and Seraphim continually cry
Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabbaoth.
Heaven and earth are full of the majesty of thy glory;
The glorious company of the Apostles praise thee,
The goodly fellowship of the Prophets praise thee,
The noble army of martyrs praise thee,
The holy church throughout all the world doth acknowledge thee
The Father of the Infinite majesty;
Thine adorable true and only Son,
Also the Holy Ghost, the Comforter,
Thou art the king of glory, Oh Christ,
Thou art the Everlasting Son of the Father.
When thou tookest upon thee to deliver man
Thou didst humble thyself to be born of a Virgin,
When thou didst overcome the sharpness of Death
Thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers.
Thou sittest at the right hand in the glory of the Father,
We believe that thou shalt come to be our Judge;
We therefore pray thee help thy servants
Whom thou hast redeemed with thy precious blood,
Make them to be numbered with thy saints in glory everlasting.
O Lord, save thy people and bless thy heritage;
Govern them and lift them up forever.
Day by day we magnify thee;
And we worship thy name ever, world without end,
Vouchsafe, oh Lord, to keep us this day without sin;
Oh Lord, have mercy upon us.
Oh Lord, let thy mercy be upon us
As our trust is in thee;
Oh Lord, in thee have I trusted:
Let me not be confounded.

It is not to be assumed that the hymnody introduced by Ambrose was from the first used according to the precise order and method of the later western ritual. This was probably the work of Benedict upon the constitution of the Benedictine Order about 530 A. D. He appointed the Ambrosian hymn to be sung regularly in his office for the canonical hours. Hence probably originated the practice of the Italian churches, and others who have followed their example, to sing certain hymns at "Vespers," "Lauds," and "Nocturns" on different ecclesiastical seasons and festivals. The hymns thus used were afterwards collected into "Breviaries," in which the hymns "proper" for the "week," and for the "season," continued for many centuries, with few exceptions, to be derived from the earliest epoch of Latin poetry—reckoning that epoch as extending from Hilary and Ambrose to the close of the Pontificate of Gregory the Great.

Gregorian Music.

The Ambrosian music was more popular and congregational than its successor, the Gregorian, which then came into use and afterwards prevailed. The music of Gregory was after the style of the liturgical chant which has become customary in the Roman Catholic churches. The hymns of Ambrose have been described as "short and complete in themselves;" "easy and at the same time elevated in their expression and hythm;" "terse and masculine in thought and language;" "simple, pure and not technical in their rendering of the great facts and doctrines of Christianity."

Prudentius, (348 A. D.) was a layman, a native of Saragossa and it was in the Spanish ritual that his hymns were most largely used.

Fortunatus, the Italian poet (530 A. D.), was the friend of Gregory, and the favorite of Rodegunda, Queen of the Franks. In style he was graceful and often vigorous. Following are the first and last verses of his Vesper Hymn to the Virgin.

Hail, star of Ocean
Hail, our golden door
Mother of the mighty
Virgin ever more.

Praise to God the Father
And the Saviour be
With the Holy Spirit
Reigning One in three.

The invention of "sequences" by Notker who died 912 A. D. may be regarded as the beginning of the later mediæval Latin hymnody. The following is an example of a "sequence."

Come let us sing out the song of praise
Swelling thanks to our Eternal Lord.
—Alleluia.

In the song of which the above is part there are fifteen pairs of lines with the "Alleluiah" after each pair. In structure the "Sequence" was unmetrical and irregular.

Bernard's Contribution.

The name of Bernard of Clairvaux (1091) stands out as the father, in Latin Hymnody, of that warm and passionate form of devotion which has been popular with many devout persons throughout Christendom. The following are two verses from one of his hymns bearing the titel: "Hymn to the Saviour."

Oh tender Jesus let me feel
Thy love with ever flowing zeal,
And by thy presence bring to me
The power thy glorious truths to see.

I follow where thy steps have trod
And kiss with tears the sacred sod:
That in thy love my soul shall live,
That grace and favor thou mayst give.

Many hymns in various languages have been founded upon Bernard's "Jesus, the very thought of thee," "Jesus, thou joy of loving hearts," and "Oh, Jesus, King most wonderful"—three portions of one poem nearly two hundred lines long. All three of these songs are found in most modern hymn books and are used constantly by the church.

Hymnody's Highest Point in Dark Ages.

Several other hymns of importance were produced about this time notably "The Day of Wrath" and "Jerusalem, the Golden." It seems that the hymnody of the church reached its highest point during the middle ages. The succeeding centuries have produced some good hymns set by those Middle Age writers.

In her introduction to a little volume bearing the title: "Great Hymns of the Middle Ages," Eveline Warner Brainard says: "True Mystics were the poets of the Middle Ages. . . . In these monks and priests were combined such splendor of vision and such childlike simplicity of imagination as belong only to those whom the world unseen is a visible world, the life unseen the real life."

Our Readers' Opinions

Baxter Wakefield—The Hero of "God and Mammon"

What some readers think of the course chos en by the preacher whom Edgar De Witt Jones' story led into the city where he was tempted. See The Christian Century for May 11 and May 18.

CONTRASTS WITH DAN MATTHEWS.

To me, the course chosen by Baxter Wakefield in the story "God and Mammon" by Edgar DeWitt Jones, was highly satisfactory.

It is refreshing to note the resistance of so peculiar a temptation by the ministry. But at this time it is doubly so. The church is being criticized today for her seeming inactivity in social work. And, it is argued, the blame lies largely with the ministers. The wealthy autocrats of the pew hold the whip hand, and the preacher, either through indifference or fear, does not emphasize the social teachings of Jesus. And furthermore, the ministry is so anxious to obtain the large and influential city pastorates, that they care not to investigate the moral fibre of their membership. To these writers and thinkers, the message of Mr. Jones is a rebuke. Here is one man at least—and I believe to Mr. Jones Baxter Wakefield is a type—who is not so anxious to accept a call to a city church as to countenance oppression and greed on the part of his prospective membership. He preferred to remain where he could preach fully the gospel of the kingdom.

Nothing is so heartening as victory over temptation. Such a success makes for wholesome thinking and creates optimism. How much more encouraging the message of Mr. Jones in "God and Mammon" than that of Harold Bell Wright in his book "The Calling of Dan Matthews." Baxter Wakefield was put to a different though just as severe a test as was Dan Matthews. The former fought and won and was the stronger preacher of the word because of the conflict. The latter succumbed to the influence of the "Ally" and left the ministry for secular pursuits.

The message of Mr. Jones is timely. The Disciples are daily growing in wealth and prominence. It is to the Baxter Wakefields of our ministry that we must look, to keep our brotherhood free from the corrupting influence of those who wax rich at the expense of the poor. VAUGHAN DABNEY.

Chicago.

BAXTER A COWARD; HIS WIFE A SENTIMENTALIST.

Baxter certainly did the wise thing for him as he lacked almost every essential quality that would make for success in such a church as "Old Calvary." In the first place he lacked the judicial mind that would be necessary for a large work. He jumped at conclusions. He took the testimony of his old college friend, Jefferson Clayton, without confirming the truthfulness of his story at all. Within thirty minutes he wrote the letter to Waller, and then showed fickleness by not mailing it right away, simply because it would be "more courteous" to wait a few days. Then upon the slim evidence of a flimsy "newspaper report" he mailed the letter before he could get to the station in person, and then threw the picture of his lifelong friend out of the car window without even waiting to confirm the newspaper report by amiable and just correspondence. He would slap his best friend in the face upon the flimsiest evidence possible. Therefore, he would better stay in some small place, and not deal with men of large affairs. If he had possessed the judicial mind he would have remained over a day and consulted with the men themselves who worked for Mr. Waller, and gotten evidence also from good Christian men, instead of a professional lawyer, who forsook the ministry after one year.

Again Baxter was a coward. Prof. Rossman had instilled into the young man's life valuable convictions, but he lacked backbone. He had no courage to give those convictions to the world. Waller was his opportunity. Perhaps Clayton told him the truth about Waller, but Baxter had a chance to practice upon a fine subject and watch him develop under his teaching and admonition. Perhaps he would have failed, but it seems that Baxter was made of the stuff that would rather preach where his convictions were not needed. He was an hireling who would rather "sit and sing himself away to everlasting bliss" than to go out and give the needy world the benefit of his training.

Then Baxter's wife was too much of a sentimentalist to be of much help to him in a large work. If he had won the love of Waller and had developed his admiration for him, Baxter's wife would have knocked every plan to revolutionize his friend's life, by her petty jealousy. She was an incapable wife for a modern pastor. She should have married a farmer. S. M. PERKINS.

Davenport, Ia.

A TRUMPET-TONGUED PROPHET.

In Wakefield we have an example of the student practicing the professor's preachments. But in the concluding master strokes of the story Professor Rossman is forgotten as one seeks communion with the splendid spirit of Wakefield. Happy the day when the pulpits of the land shall be occupied by men of the Wakefield type, and then instead of muzzled puppets we will have trumpet-tongued prophets.

E. L. MITCHELL.

New Holland, Ohio.

Editors' Opinion Wanted

What is your opinion of the sentiment expressed in the enclosed clipping?

Aberdeen, Miss. LOUIS H. STINE.

The clipping is as follows:

"Jesus never prayed for union but for unity. He did not then pray that all His professed followers should be one, but that those who believed on Him through the word of the apostles should be one."

Our opinion is that the author of it could not himself state clearly what it means.—THE EDITORS.

A Time of Testing

I verily believe that under God this is a time of testing for our people. It is a time when we are being called upon to decide as to whether or not we are going to follow philosophy and expediency and condone the nullification of one of God's ordinances, thereby making the mistake of all ages and all sinners. God told Cain to offer an animal sacrifice in order to typify the final offering of Christ. He said, "Will not a vegetable sacrifice do as well?" God told the Jews to practice certain laws and ordinances and they said, these are too narrow and sectarian; we wont do it. God through Christ told his church to baptize converts. Many of us are saying today and have been saying through the ages, this is inexpedient; we won't do it; we will use some miserable human substitute in order to convert the world and promote Christian union. Others say we will practice baptism ourselves but in order to foster and practice Christian union we will formally receive into full fellowship those who have not been baptized. Not one of the great reformers of the past but what believed in baptism but they were willing to see it superseded on the principle of expediency.

May God help us to realize that if man's philosophy and expedients are more potent to unite the church and convert the world than God's law, then men are wiser than God.

I can, however, see no reason why baptized believers cannot co-operate with unbaptized believers in an informal way in every good work when they can do so without recognizing something as baptism which is no baptism.

The law of the Lord is perfect and will convert the world and unite the church if we will only follow it.

Since circumcision at the time was not a binding ordinance on any one, the compromise of the Jerusalem conference does not warrant a compromise on the question of baptism.

Chicago. H. MILES.

A Little Nonsense

Research Work in Physiology.

Sometimes childish lack of comprehension accounts for odd sayings. A story now going the rounds deals with the little boy and girl whose mother had left them to care for a sick grandparent, while they failed to understand just what the doctor's suggested treatment meant. The family butcher reports Dorothy's puzzled appeal for his aid:

"Is that you, Mr. Wilson? Well, this is Dorothy B——. Mother's out, and we want to know if you can tell Willie an'me how to find grandpa's liver? The doctor says we're to put a hot flannel on it, and we don't know where in the world it is!"

Wanted It For Good.

A brisk little urchin entered a store with the request:

"Please, sir, mamma wants a tape-line."

"How long does she want it?" was the clerk's natural query.

"I don't know, sir, " was the lad's equally natural answer, "but I think she wants to keep it."

The Ladies' Aid

The old church bell had long been cracked;
Its call was but a groan;
It seemed to sound a funeral knell
With every broken tone.
"We need a bell," the brethren said,
"But taxes must be paid;
We have no money we can spare—
Just ask the Ladies' Aid."

The shingles on the roof were old;
The rain came down in rills;
The brethren slowly shook their heads
And spoke of "monthly bills."
The chairman of the board arose,
And said, "I am afraid
That we shall have to lay the case
Before the Ladies' Aid."

The carpet had been patched and patched
Till quite beyond repair,
And through the aisles and on the steps
The boards showed hard and bare.
"It is too bad!" the brethren said:
"An effort must be made
To raise an interest on the part
Of members of the Aid."

The preacher's stipend was behind;
The poor man blushed to meet
The grocer and the butcher as
They passed them on the street;
But nobly spoke the brethren then;
"Pastor, you shall be paid!
We'll call upon the treasurer
Of our good Ladies' Aid."—Ex.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXIV. The Messianic Hopes of the Early Prophets

June 11. Text for Special Study, Micah 5:2-5.

QUESTIONS.

1. What two classes of prophets preached in the early period of Hebrew history? Name those in each group.
2. Did those prophets who did write books preach anything in the nature of a messianic hope?
3. In which of the two companies did Amos, Hosea, Isaiah and Micah live respectively?
4. Did Hosea have any national expectations that were connected with the rise of a particular messianic person?
6. In what did the national hopes of this prophet consist?
7. What quality of God's nature did Hosea strongly emphasize?
8. Were Hosea's hopes for Israel realized?
9. If not, what bearing has this fact on the correctness of the prophetic forecasts?
10. What events formed the background of Isaiah's preaching?
11. To what extent were Isaiah's messianic hopes colored by the political situation of his time?
12. Is the Immanuel child prophecy of chapter 7 to be regarded as in any sense messianic?
13. What facts gave significance to Isaiah's prediction of a coming king in chapter 9?
14. In what sense can these words be regarded as truly messianic?
15. What did Isaiah affirm regarding the world peace that was to arrive?
16. In what regard did Micah have clearer vision of the future than Isaiah?
17. What is the significance of his Bethlehem prophecy in chapter 5?
18. Does it relate specifically to the birth of Jesus?
19. How was it regarded by the elders and scribes of Jesus' day and by the early Christian church?
20. Is there a distinct person in the minds of any of these early prophets of Israel as the embodiment of the messianic hopes?
21. In what would you say the messianic hope of early Israel really consists?

1. THE EARLY WRITING PROPHETS.

As we have seen in our studies hitherto, the early prophets of Israel are to be divided into two classes: those of whom we know only through the accounts given of their work in later writings, and those who have left to us books which bear their names. Of the former the most representative are Moses, Samuel, Nathan, Abijah, Elijah and Elisha. That these prophets believed in the future of the nation and had in a certain sense a messianic hope to preach cannot be doubted. Indications of such a view were pointed out in the last study. Yet nothing very definite survives of their teaching, and therefore it is only possible to emphasize the fact that national hopes of greatness were entertained by all the moral leaders of Israel, without specific belief in any particular person who was to realize them.

The writing prophets of the early period were Amos, Hosea, Isaiah and Micah. The particular messages they left on record have been studied already in this series. It is with the messianic hopes expressed by them that we have now to deal. Amos and Hosea, as will be recalled, announced their messages in the northern cities of Bethal and Samaria. Isaiah lived in Jerusalem a little later, and his contemporary, Micah, was a citizen of a town in southwestern Palestine. It was natural for these prophets to give expression to their hopes and fears regarding the future of the nation, and though they lived in different sections of the land their ideals were much alike.

2. THE MESSIANIC HOPES OF HOSEA.

If one were to identify the messianic hopes with the expectation that an individual was to arise in the future for the spiritual deliverance of the world, it would be impossible to affirm that Hosea ever had any such expectation. His utterances are wholly concerned with northern Israel as a state in great destruction. The most he could expect, considering the folly of Israel's rulers and the worldliness of her people, was such a transformation of the nation by repentance and obedience as should claim once more the divine assurance of pardon and prosperity. Hosea expresses the most emphatic condemnation of Israel, mingled with the most pathetic appeals to repentance and reform. The hope he cherishes is that God may turn from the fierceness of his anger when the nation shows its repentant spirit. The best illustration is shown in chapter 11: 8, 9, which pictures Jehovah's quenchless love for the unworthy people. In this fact alone is there hope for the future? There is no personal deliverer in sight, but the nation may at least trust in the love of God to work out its salvation.

Again in chapter 2: 19-23 there is a graphic description of the lover-like concern of Jehovah for the people in spite of their unfaithfulness and their pursuit of other gods. The prophet looks forward to a day when fruitfulness shall return to the land, which had almost ceased to yield its harvests because of the unfaithfulness of its people. This in itself is a pledge of good, a kind of messianic hope, though wholly national and with any dependence upon a personal leader.

Finally, the entire 14th chapter of Hosea is a beautiful picture of the restoration of Israel to the favor of God. It is a colloquy between the prophet, the nation and God. It is taken for granted that all unfaithfulness and backsliding are forever past, and that Israel by the help of God may be trusted to work out a future of sincerity and happiness. How little these hopes were realized is shown by the fact that soon after they were uttered the city of Samaria fell under the blows of the Assyrian power, and Israel became a thing of the past leaving all national hopes and messianic expectations as the inheritance of Judah, the surviving section of the Hebrew people.

3. ISAIAH'S MESSIANIC HOPES.

The one political situation which formed the background of Isaiah's ministry was the gradual approach of Assyria toward Palestine with its constant menace of pillage and destruction. Isaiah predicted the downfall of Damascus and saw it accomplished. He foretold the overthrow of Samaria and witnessed its fulfilment. He insisted that Jerusalem should suffer but should be saved by a wonderful deliverance. It was not strange, therefore, that he should identify whatever national hopes he cherished with the deliverance of his people from the oppressive hand of the great eastern conqueror. He announced to the trembling Ahaz in 734 B. C. that his two northern neighbors who were threatening him with invasion would both be destroyed by Assyria within a few years.

In making this clear the prophet used that very striking figure of speech regarding the child Immanuel (Isa. 7: 10-17). A young woman should conceive and bear a son, and in the stress of the times call his name Immanuel, "God help us." By the time such a child should reach years of discretion the whole country would be in the hands of the Assyrian king. To many this would sound like a prediction of the virgin birth of Jesus, yet even superficial examination shows that its meaning was local and for the time. It was only in the very general sense in which all Old Testament words were held by the early Christian community to be applicable to Jesus that they had any New Testament value.

A much more definite prediction of a messianic helper and deliverer is to be found in Isaiah 9: 2-7, dating from about the same time. Tiglath-Pileser, the Assyrian king, was at that moment ravaging the northern sections of Palestine. All Jerusalem was in a panic, fearing his descent southward to the destruction of the capital. Isaiah in the midst of this time of gloom looks forward to the day when the Assyrian shall be driven back and the nation delivered. This happy event he associates with the birth of a marvelous child, whose names and dignities show him to be a member of the Davidic dynasty and the equal of Tiglath-Pileser in all save the love of strife, "for he is to be the Prince of Peace."

That Isaiah actually looked for the coming of such a delivering king there is little doubt. He could conceive of no future crisis in the nation's history greater than that through which they were passing. That the words he uses apply in any save the most remote sense to the coming of Jesus cannot for a moment be imagined. For the deliverance needed was imminent. No far-off rise of a royal warrior would suffice. Such a king as Isaiah pictured never arose in Judah. The dynasty of David perished in defeat and gloom. But the prophet's expectation of a glorious future as the result of fidelity to the national purpose did not miscarry, for Israel, though humbled and distressed, was still to afford the means of world deliverance and in the modern Christian sense of the word these remarkable descriptions of an expected but never arriving king of Israel were fulfilled in spiritual significance in the world-wide ministry of Jesus.

Similar are the hopes of Isaiah for a future of peace and righteousness. It was a theme which the prophet's mind dwelt continually. When the terror of Assyrian invasion had passed away a time of glory and divine companionship would ensue. The best illustrations of this higher form of the messianic hope are seen in Isa. 4: 2-6 and 11: 1-9. To be sure the prophet does not know when this time will arrive, nor what king will fulfil these ideals. But undoubtedly it was to be a ruler of the royal line of David, a "shoot out of the stock of Jesse," on whom the spirit of Jehovah should rest in power. If such a hope was never realized in the literal experiences of Judah, it served at least to keep alive the expectations of that better part whom Isaiah called "the remnant," the survivors of the days of chastisement and trouble. Ideally these words are always coming true, not in the terms in which the prophet anticipated, but in the truer measure of a world-wide realization of the ideals of the kingdom of heaven.

4. MICAH'S MESSIANIC HOPE.

This contemporary of Isaiah saw with clearness the coming fate of his people. He had seen too many of the plundering expeditions of Assyria not to know what they portended for Judah. Yet he was confident that there was hope ahead, and even though he saw further into the future than Isaiah and marked the certainity of that national disaster against which the patriotism of Isaiah seemed to protest triumphantly, yet Micah insisted that even that catastrophe would not be the undoing of Israel's career. There was to be a future of deliverance and blessing.

The most graphic of Micah's pictures of national survival is found in chapter 5: 2-5. It was the great text quoted by the Jews throughout their history to prove that the Messiah was to come from Bethlehem. It was less, however, the prediction that the particular place was significant as the birthplace of Judah's future king, than it was the confident assertion that this king when he came to arise from the old Davidic stock, whose place of origin was the little town of Bethlehem. Whenever he came it would be from that historic place, for his origins were from of old, even from the days of the ancient kings of Judah. Here the messianic hope of Isaiah is given definiteness and precision, Judah's enemies are to be swept away by the might of the coming king.

These words, which constitute the central theme of this lesson, will bear more than a passing study. They make clear the fact that through this period of prophetic work in which Israel was almost constantly in peril of her life there remained the unshaken hopes of the moral leaders of the nation that God's purpose could not be defeated by any play of worldly political forces, and that the ideals announced by the prophets for the realization of the divine will among men were destined to be realized.

The value of this beautiful prophecy does not lie in any reference to Bethlehem. That was a mere incident emphasizing the confident belief that Judah's delivering king would be of the royal stock. It is not a mere prediction of the birth of Jesus in a particular town. It is the confident affirmation that the plans of God through Israel cannot be miscarried.

Another splendid oracle that occurs in Micah 4: 1-5 has already received comment as a word used both by Isaiah and Micah, and perhaps quoted by both from an earlier source. It emphasizes in admirable manner the centrality of Zion as the desirable place of all the nations, attracting men from afar to the shrine where the only true God may be worshiped. As the result of such concourse at the mountain of Jehovah's holiness war must cease and the nations dwell together in confidence and fraternity.

5 THE MESSIANIC IDEALS OF THE EARLY PROPHETS.

The student of messianic prophecy will look in vain through these records for personal specific references to Jesus. The fault and disaster of too much of the study of prophecy, so-called, has been its concentration of attention upon such expression in the Old Testament as could by any compulsion be made to bear significance for the personal experience of Jesus. To be sure there were precedents for this effort. The New Testament church, conscious of the fact that Jesus was the servant of God in some sense as Israel had been in the past, did not hesitate to apply to him any and all words of the Old Testament that would in even the most remote manner fit into the fabric of his life. But the New Testament church did not make the mistake of supposing that these words were uttered originally regarding Jesus. They only claimed that they were "fulfilled" in him, that is, that they came to a new birth and were filled out with a new meaning in the circle of his sacrificial life. Thus interpreted, no damage was done to the stately and urgent messages of prophets and psalmists. But to make chance words of the Old Testament "predictions" of the events in the life of Christ, when manifestly the writers had no thought of anything but local and national events, is to offer an affront to the whole fabric of prophecy as it takes form in the pages of the Old Testament.

The real messianic prophecy is, as we have seen, a gradual unfolding of the purpose of God through a national history. It was a clear vision that somewhere in the future the hopes and ideals of the nation would be realized in a time of peace and righteousness in the world. When political perils surrounded Israel it was natural that the messianic hope should take the form of expectancy that a royal deliverer would arise. But this was by no means a persistent feature of the hope. It was of course the most gratifying of all the elements in that hope as the Jews of Jesus' day conceived it, and therein lay the reason for their inability to understand its loftier meanings. They caught only a fragment of the vision, and looked for a king who should realize their hopes for deliverance, even as Israel craved a hero in the olden time. But higher by far than this crass political expectation lay the true levels of the messianic hope, and those levels it must be our purpose to reach in the unfolding of these studies.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will deal with the prophets of the dark age of Manasseh. Then will follow, "Nahum and the Fall of Nineveh," and "Habakkuk and the Rise of Babylon."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The content of the messianic hope in early Israel.
2. The teachings of Amos and the lack of the messianic element.
3. Hosea's expectations for the future of Israel.
4. The child prophecies in Isaiah.
5. The messianic hope and universal peace.
6. Was the messianic hope of the early prophets personal?

LITERATURE.

Goodspeed: "Israel's Messianic Hope," pp. 21-75. Briggs: "Messianic Prophecy," pp. 1-152. Orelli: "Old Testament Prophecy," pp. 1-50. W. R. Smith: "Prophets of Israel," Lecture 1. G. A. Smith: "Book of the Twelve Prophets," Vol. 1. pp. 1- 29.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Why I Love Christ. I Det. 1:3-25 (Honorary Members Meeting) Topic, June 11.

Our regard for Christ might very well grow out of what he is and what he does. By what he is we do not mean what theologians and philosophers say he is and have labored so earnestly to prove, but what he is as we are able to see him advise and act in the various situations in which he found himself. His love as it found exercise in his concern and care for others, his teaching of the woman at the well, his feeding of the purposeless, multitude, many of whom were faint and far from home, his dropping of a tear for those whose dear ones had died, his opening of the ears of the deaf, his making the blind to see and the lame to walk, his rebuke to the religious elite of his day—the elders, the scribes, the priest and also to his disciples when they were contending as to which one should be counted chief in the new kingdom; and his unfailing loyalty to his ideal of righteousness, whether he was struggling with the problem alone in the garden, or faced it in the designing questioners of the lawyers, or in the judgment hall of Pilate, or the scoffing furious mob on Calvary—these all exhibit a spirit of love and sympathy, of loyalty and justice such as the world has failed to see before or since. This he was, and it challenges the admiration of any who has a sense of the eternal values of our human life.

Moreover this he saw to be the need of the race and conceived it to be the means of salvation. Herein lies his Saviourhood. Hence he called the kingdom of God, a kingdom of righteousness. What Jesus does then is to call his disciples to just such a life, into just such a kingdom. The tremendous significance of this appears when we stop to realize that we are in a world in which disease, suffering, and inherited misfortune; dishonesty, cowardice, and selfishness, leave untold horror in their wake. Genuine discipleship lies in our willingness to make the spirit of his life incarnate in our own. That is, the spirit of rugged honesty and heroic loyalty which enabled Him to be true to what he knew was right when it was to his immediate disadvantage to do so, must be characteristic of our lives. That is to say, this ideal of life instead of being a set of Sunday manners must be made the actual rules of our conduct in every-day affairs. What would happen if every man who is a member of a Christian church and engaged in business, or industry, or law, or politics, would be strictly honest, that is, honest as he would say Christ was honest in his daily business transactions with his fellow men? It is perhaps not too much to say that the code of business ethics which prevail in the country would be revolutionized. For it is probably true that a majority of the business men of the land are at least nominal members of some one of the Christian churches.

Again the unselfishness of Jesus must find us ever ready and willing to promote these principles among mankind. To this end we must be willing, yes, eager, to spend and be spent. In this cause not only was Jesus willing to die, but Stephen also gave up his life, Peter and John spread it at the peril of their lives and Paul "died daily" for the same great end. Through the Christian centuries the martyrs were willing witnesses to the same great truth and the missionaries today are living examples of it. And to this same truth can every honorary member of the Christian Endeavor Society who is a worthy disciple of Jesus testify.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

Denver Church made an offering for Home Missions of nearly twenty-five dollars.

Jesse Story, who has been preaching at Mulberry Grove, has resigned his pastorate.

Saybrook Church, where C. C. Wisher is minister, will have an evangelistic meeting in the fall conducted by Herbert Yeuell.

Glad to note that Ernest H. Reed has been prevailed upon by the church and community to remain at Washington another year.

W. H. Kerns, of Cisne, conducted a short meeting at Jeffersonville, resulting in six additions.

J. E. Pritchett accepted a call from the Metropolis Church, and began his work there the last Sunday in May. He was pastor at Carterville.

M. O. Dutcher held a week's meeting with excellent attendance and eight additions, at Noble. Mr. Dutcher is pastor of this church, having begun his pastorate only recently.

Litchfield Church made an offering of more than twenty-five dollars to the American Christian Missionary Society the first Sunday in May.

Major Griffith, who resides at Decatur and ministers to the church at Argenta, held a week's meeting with his congregation during May, with good congregations and spiritual profit.

The church at Bellflower recently enjoyed two addresses by Miss Luceba E. Miner of Eureka College, and made an offering to that institution amounting to $238. L. S. Harrington is the minister.

Oakwood Church has voted to remodel and enlarge its building on account of demands for better equipment for its growing Sunday-school. There will be spent not less than $2,500 in this improvement.

At DeLand, George W. Wise began his pastorate the first Sunday in May. Both pastor and congregation are sanguine regarding the prospects for this work. Mr. Wise was formerly pastor at Du Quoin.

H. J. Hostetler, who recently removed from Virden to Newman, celebrated "moving-in-day" in his new church, and received fifteen members into the congregation. The pastorate here starts out in a very promising way.

The splendid new church at Antioch, near Rossville, was dedicated May 21 by J. Fred Jones, of Stanford. The building is one of the best and most beautiful to be found in possession of any country congregation in the state, and cost $14,000.

E. U. Smith, pastor at Sandoval, has been busy recently preaching extra sermons. Besides the memorial address on May 30, he preached to the Odd Fellows in their anniversary service, and delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the high school graduates.

O. C. Bolman's assistance in the meeting at Lewiston for about two weeks resulted in thirteen additions. The pastor, B. H. Cleaver, and entire congregation speak in highest praise of Mr. Bolman as a Christian gentleman and preacher.

Ipava Church, where C. R. Gains is minister, made an offering the first Sunday in May to the Home Missionary Society of twenty dollars. This church will hold a revival meeting in the fall conducted by a pastor of some other city.

Centennial Church, Bloomington, of which Milo Atkinson is pastor, received an offering of $48.50 for Home Missions, with other gifts yet to be made. This church is but one year old, but is fast taking a place in the life of the city under the ministry of Mr. Atkinson.

Evangelist George P. Bramel closed a revival meeting at Johnston City. The meeting lasted three weeks and resulted in seventeen additions. The congregation has no pastor and the meeting was begun without preparations. The results are considered unusually good on that account.

G. W. Morton, pastor of Beardstown Church, has been doing some missionary work in the country. He recently called on about twenty-five families and found not a single one of them attended church services. He is now preaching on Sunday afternoon in that community to good congregations, and is contemplating the organization of a Sunday-school.

After a month's Sunday evening services under the auspices of the young ladies of the First Church, Springfield, the men of the congregation voted to become responsible for the evening services during the month of June. During May, with the ladies in charge, the congregations were much improved and considerable extra interest was created.

Litchfield Church coöperated with other churches of the city in a campaign of one week's duration on behalf of boys and their friends. A. W. Connor, of Indianapolis, was present and in charge of the program. The work done by Mr. Connor is praised by all the ministers, and there is unusual interest in the boy's welfare as a result of the campaign.

The First District Convention will be held at Lanark, June 14 to 16. Each church in the district is entitled to send one delegate for each fifty members or fraction thereof, one each from the Sunday-school, the Christian Endeavor Society and the C. W. B. M Entertainment will be provided for all in attendance. It is requested that those who anticipate atending shall notify the pastor, J. E. Cresmer, at Lanark.

President A. C. Gray, of Eureka, has delivered his stereopticon lecture, "How We Got Our Bible" several times recently. Large crowds have listened to him with profit, and the stereoptico nviews have been especially helpful in enforcing the truth of the lecture. Christian Century some time ago as a men's Two of the places in which he was received with special favor were at the union meetings in Peoria and Minonk. He also had a fine audience at Jacksonville.

Fourth Church, Danville, referred to in The Christian Century some time ago as a men's church, is nearing the completion of its new edifice. Dedication day has been set for June 18, and Dr. I. N. McCash, of Cincinnati, will be in charge of the services. There are fine evidence of prosperity in the Sunday-school and other departments of the church. H. D. Williams has been the pastor for several months.

State secretary, J. Fred Jones, dedicated the remodled church at Minier. Several thousand dollars were expended in improving the building and adapting it to modern needs. About $3,500 was raised on dedication day. Several visiting preachers were present from surrounding cities, the ministers and congregations of other churches of the town added their support and financial aid to the occasion. The minister is L. Hadaway.

R. E. Hieronymus delivered a lecture at the Christian Church in Eureka, under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A. He spoke on his trip from Edinburgh to Athens and used a stereopticon, for which slides were made from photographs taken by himself and party on their trip. Mr. Hieronymus has, for more than a year, been in the employ of the state, doing work of an educational nature. For several months his duties have kept him busy at the state house in Springfield in connection with the legislature, where he has succeeded splendidly in representing the cause of education before that body.

At the forthcoming State Convention of the Disciples of Christ, to be held in Danville the first part of September, Eureka College will have a full day of the program. They have the entire forenoon of September 7. The program is being arranged now, and it is proposed to make it one of the most interesting and helpful sessions of the convention. It is encouraging to our educational workers to feel, that the conventions in Illinois are glad to give them a place without the appeals that formerly had to be made for recognition for this work. This recognition will grow just in proportion as the people come to realize the place of education in our movement.

Sixth District Convention

The annual convention of the sixth district will be held at Champaign, Ill., June 20-21. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free to all delegates. Dinner and supper will be furnished at reasonable rates. Those expecting to attend should notify S. E. Fisher.

The following is the program:

Tuesday Morning.—C. W. B. M. Session; Praise and Thanksgiving, led by Miss Lillie Bowyer, Bement; Words of Welcome, Mrs. Kauffman, Champaign; Special Music, F. B. Thomas, Mattoon; Dist. Sec. Report, Mrs. H. E. Monser, Champaign; Sermon, S. S. Jones, Danville; Prayer, Bro. Clark, Ludlow.

Tuesday Afternoon.—Praise Service, Mrs. R. H. Robertson, Shelbyville; Special Instrumental Music, Mrs. Vinnie Johnson, Champaign; Reports made by the Presidents; Address, "The Outlook", Miss Thompson; Address, "The Children's Hour", Mrs. Frank Miller, Rantoul; Volunteers talk on junior work.

Tuesday Evening.—Prayer, Miss Ida Strope, Oreana; Song, Mrs. Joel Davis, St. Joseph, Illinois; Quartette, Girls' Circle of Champaign; Address, Basil S. Keusseff, Chicago; Conference.

Wednesday Morning.—Devotional, Chas. Scrivens, Villa Grove; Appointment of Committees; General Topic, Our District Work; The Value of the Conference, F. B. Thomas, Mattoon; The District Evangelist, R. H. Robertson, Shelbyville; Enlisting the Churches, Robt. E. Henry, Niantic; Convention Sermon, Andrew Scott, Danville.

Wednesday Afternoon.—Devotional, Geo. W. Wise, Deland; Recruiting Our Ministry, N. S. Haynes, Decatur; Discussion; The University of Illinois and Our Relation to It, W. A. McKnight, Sec'y Y. M. C. A. of the U. of I.; Our First Year's Work under Direction of the I. C. M. S., Miss Mildred Seyster; The Illinois Church and the State University Problem, S. H. Zendt, Bloomington; Round Table Discussion; Our State Bible School Work, Clarence L. Depew, State Supt.

Wednesday Evening.—Devotional, A. A. Burr, Moweaqua; President's Address, E. M. Smith, Decatur; The Country Church as I See It, J. Fred Jones.

News Editorials

A Live Church Bulletin.

C. H. Scriven, minister at Villa Grove, makes room in his bulletin for a page devoted to social service information. The page is headed "The Son of Man." Such items as "A Modern Hero"—Dr. Grenfell, "Bolenge," "The Blame of Fire," dealing with the Triangle factory fire, "Dynamite and Labor," recounting briefly the arrest of two officers of the "structural workers," and other related subjects are observed in several recent issues. In one of these issues a very succinct and pointed report of a concrete effort to realize the union of two churches is given. It is headed "Union Again." Many a writer would have told the story with the use of many pages of manuscript, but none could have told it more completely than has the writer in the bulletin in a half dozen lines. He has left out nothing, and yet but little is mentioned. The whole picture is as clear as if it covered pages. The story follows:

"They held a joint meeting. They admitted the best interests of the Kingdom and their town demanded a closer union. They prayed for union. They got together and discussed their differences. The union is not.

This is the recent story of two Illinois churches. If our differences are not enough to keep us out of heaven, why discuss them at such a time? It is to be hoped the day is dawning when we will discuss our big 'samenesses' instead of our little differences.

And that brings up the question, do any of us possess anything peculiar to ourselves alone that is worth perpetuating at the expense of a divided church?"

Secretary's Letter.

The Beardstown work is doing nicely, and this mission promises much for the future. The minister, G. W. Morton, will deliver the Memorial Day address for the old soldiers.

Harry M. Barnett is in a meeting at Lowe's Chapel, in Vermilion County, E. E. Hartley, minister. Things are booming; 365 at Bible school, and there is a prospect of extensive remodeling of the building.

F. A. Sword is billed for a tabernacle meeting at Potomac in July. E. M. Norton, of Danville, is the minister. He also preaches for the Mt. Olivet Church, near Paxton.

Ernest H. Reed has yielded to the strong desires of the church and community to remain with the church at Washington. He has done a splendid work there, and the church was very unwilling to give him up.

B. W. Tate, of Pontiac, has a three weeks' vacation in August, and he wishes to use it in helping some weak church in a revival effort. Brother Tate is a strong man and ought to be used in this way.

The church at Paxton has called William G. McColley, of Normal, to become their pastor, and he begins at once. He will move after school is out, about the middle of June. Brother McColley is one of our very best men and Paxton is fortunate in securing him.

John A. Jackson, of Sheldon, writes us that he will close his work there about June 18, and expects to leave the state. That field will want a good man at once. Write Bro. Jackson about it.

I. G. Williams, of Vandalia, has moved to Allendale and preaches there half time, and fourth time each for the Adam's Corner and Barney's Prairie churches, all in Wabash County.

The church at Shirley, F. L. Starbuck, minister, will celebrate the anniversary of the dedication of their building May 28 with a fine program and roll call. The speakers of the day will be Mrs. Carrie F. Zeller, H. H. Peters, J. Fred Jones and Prof. Silas Jones. Prof. Ernest Higdon will have charge of the music. It promises to be a great day for Shirley.

Congratulations to Bro. Charles W. Dear, of Ft. Collins, Colo., who has recently been called to the work of state superintendent on evangelism and Bible schools of Colorado. He was formerly of this state, and we are always glad to see our boys come to the front. G. B. Van Arsdall, formerly pastor at Peoria, is chairman of the Colorado state board.

C. Lee Stauffer, of Dallas City, has time for a three or four weeks' meeting. Secure him. Charles Reign Scoville will dedicate their new church after the Portland Convention.

M. W. Yocom, of Taylorville, has time for a short meeting for the offerings. Write him.

C. H. Hands, of Flanagan, will supply the pulpit at Chambersburg May 18.

J. Fred Jones, Field-Sec.
W. D. Dewesse, Office Sec.-Treas.
Bloomington, Ill.

Chicago

By Vaughan Dabney.

The last two regular Disciple ministers' meetings have been held in connection with union minister's meetings. On May 22 the place of meeting was the Coliseum, and a study of the Child Welfare Exhibit was made. On May 29 the union ministers' meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium to discuss the report of the vice commission.

The Chicago Y. M. C. A. hopes to have erected in the coming year a $500,000 hotel. This building, with a capacity for over 1,000 lodgers, is to be erected for the specific purpose of providing moral surroundings and sanitary conditions in which the young men coming to our city for work may be properly cared for. The price of lodging is to be 25 cents and 50 cents. Already $100,000 has been promised. Julius Rosenwald, at a recent anniversary banquet of the association, pledged $50,000 for the erection of a hotel with such a specific mission. Since then, N. W. Harris, of the Harris Trust & Saving Bank, has made a similar offer of $50,000. If such an undertaking meets with success, as no doubt it will, it will be a splendid exemplification of the teachings of Jesus.

Chicago Disciples are accustomed to deplore the transciency of their ministers in this city. It is not in the spirit of finding comfort in our misery that we note the departure of leaders in the pulpit of other churches also. On the contrary some of these men who are going out of Chicago life leave a sense of loss in the ranks of Disciples as well as in their own denominations, Rev. Austen K. de Blois leaves the First Baptist Church for the First Baptist Church of Boston. For more than eight years Dr. De Blois has carried on a splendid ministry in this city. The Moody Church will be deprived of the leadership of Rev. A. C. Dixon who preached his farewell sermon May 28. Dr. Dixon has accepted a call to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, which the great Spurgeon made famous. Another Baptist pastor, Rev. John A. Earl, leaves the Belden Avenue Church to become president of Des Moines College in Iowa.

The Presbyterians lose Dr. Joseph A. Vance, who leaves to take charge of the First Presbyterian Church at Detroit. Dr. Vance, for twelve years, was the efficient leader of the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church.

And now it is announced that Rev. W. P. Merrill, for many years pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian Church has been called to Brick Church on Fifth Avenue, New York City. An incident in connection with his call which the newspapers are featuring is that he is to receive $12,000 per year and a house.

The Disciples, then, are not the only religious body that suffers with a migratory ministry.

Rev. George H. Brown, of Charleston, Ill., who has accepted the call of Austin Church, Chicago. His new pastorate will begin September 1.

Professor Edward Amherst Ott is to deliver his lecture "The Haunted House" at Monroe St. Church, Friday evening, June 2. Mr. Ott was formerly pastor of this church and is held in highest regard by the members. No doubt Chicago Disciples and other congregations will take this occasion to hear this lecture.

The Chicago Ministers' welcome to Dr. Errett Gates upon his return from a year's stay in Europe will be signalized by two sessions of their association to be held Monday, June 5, at the Hyde Park Church near the University. At 10:30 Dr. Gates will speak. Luncheon will be served at Hutchinson Commons. At 2 o'clock Dr. Gates will speak again and his address will be followed by a mind table discussion of "Present Tendencies Among the Disciples of Christ." Ministers from outside Chicago are heartily invited to spend the day. And our Chicago church people—men and women—will be cordially welcomed at either or both sessions.

JUST PROVOCATION.

Patience—"How did you rip the sleeves of your new dress, dear?"

Patrice—"Raising my hands suddenly."

"But you shouldn't raise your hands suddenly when you have on such a tight-fitting gown."

"Well, I guess you wouldn't stop to think of your gown if somebody at a function whispered in your ear that the rat in your hair was showing."—Yonkers Statesman.

Church Life

—Secretary Corey sends word that more requests for Children's Day exercises have been received by the Foreign Missionary Society than ever before, and that the prospect is good for the greatest offering in the society's history.

There have been thirty additions in the meeting at Silverton, Ore., led by C. L. Organ.

Evangelists Olson and Moss have concluded their meeting at Clarkston, Wash. There were 246 additions.

J. Walter Reynolds, formerly of Lyons, Kan., has taken up his new work at Macon, Ga.

S. C. Cliffe, pastor at Girard, Ohio, preached to the Knights of Pythias at that place at a recent Sunday evening service.

J. F. Oathout, pastor at Center Point, Ia., will deliver the baccalaureate sermon for the high school at that place.

I. N. McCash gave a lecture in the interests of home missions at Mound City, Mo., recently.

George T. Meeker, secretary of the Northern California Missionary Society, is in a tent meeting at Coalinga, Calif.

C. F. Stevens of Spokane, Wash., will assist J. F. Rice, pastor at Rosalia, Wash., at the dedication of the latter's church, June 1st.

The annual convention of Minnesota churches will be held this year at Austin, Minn., June 12-14. A strong program has been arranged.

The work at Arnett, Okla., is prospering, both the Sunday-school and church membership having increased gradually, so that the present equipment has been outgrown.

P. C. Macfarlane was the principal speaker at a banquet given by the Men's Brotherhood of Princeton, Mo., where H. C. Gresham ministers.

The congregation at Beloit, Wis., will observe Memorial Day by the erection of a church edifice which it is hoped will be completed in one day.

Work is being rushed on the new church at Kingman, Kan. When completed the building and equipment will represent an expenditure of about $20,000.

The district convention of the churches of the Sacramento Valley held their annual meeting at College City, Calif., May 23-24. W. A. McCausland is pastor there.

W. F. Richardson, pastor of First Church, Kansas City, Mo., delivered the address before the graduating class of Ladies' College, Liberty, Mo.

A dozen young men and women who are to sail shortly for the foreign field spoke in Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., on May 28 on "Why I am Going to the Foreign Field."

Evangelists Violett and Haley have concluded a successful meeting at Palestine, Tex., with L. D. Anderson, the minister there. There were 105 additions, seventy-two being baptisms.

The church at Brownsburg, Ind., enjoyed a ten days' fellowship service recently when the pastor, L. H. Graham, was assisted by five neighboring ministers. Mr. Graham reports his congregation united and happy and with an aroused spiritual vision as a result of this meeting.

During the past month there have been seventeen additions at Central Church, Spokane, Wash. C. F. Stevens is minister of this church.

C. E. Wells, pastor at Gravity, Ia., has accepted the unanimous call of the church at New London, Ia., and will begin work there June 4.

R. W. Lilley, pastor of First Church, Keokuk, Iowa, has been elected to the position of fraternal delegate to the Keokuk Trades and Labor Assembly by the churches of the city.

The new building at Hoisington, Kan., will be dedicated June 11th. O. J. Marks and George L. Snively will assist the pastor, H. A. Pearce, in this service, and will continue in a meeting there.

The Sunday-school at Steubenville, Ohio, continues to grow. On a recent Sunday the attendance was 504, with a collection of $14.49. It is hoped that an enrollment of 600 may be reached.

The beautiful new edifice recently erected by the congregation of the Central Church, Lima, Ohio, was formally dedicated on Sunday, May 21st. Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ohio, assisted at the dedicatory services.

I. J. Spencer and J. E. Sturgis have concluded a fruitful meeting with J. J. Castlebery at Mayfield, Ky. There were sixty-one additions, and the whole church is greatly strengthened and uplifted spiritually.

The Dean Avenue pulpit, Spokane, Wash., left vacant by the removal of Bruce Brown to Fullerton, Calif., has been filled by A. F. Sanderson of the Eugene Bible University, Eugene, Oregon. Mr. Sanderson was formerly from Houston, Texas.

Leslie Wolfe, missionary in the Philippines, writes that the work is progressing at Sisiman and expresses his appreciation of a Mr. Leman, foreman of the Atlantic Gulf and Pacific Company for substantial help in building their chapel at that place.

Andrew P. Johnson, who recently went from Chickasha, Okla, to accept the pastorate at Dunham Church, Cleveland, Ohio, reports large and enthusiastic audiences at each service. There were ten confessions on Sunday, May 21st, and the Sunday-school is showing a good increase in attendance.

T. W. Grafton of Kansas City, Mo., who is giving special time to work among boys there, gave an address on "Boys" at Memorial Church, Rock Island, Ill., recently. Mr. Grafton, who was a former pastor of this church, has organized a "boy town" in Kansas City, composed of 200 members.

Albert Buxton, former pastor of the Central Church, Pueblo, Colo., who was injured in a fall last January, has not yet been able to do any work. He will reappear in the pulpit in the baccalaureate sermon for the High School in Pueblo; this comes as a special recognition, for he gave the baccalaureate last year, making two successive recognitions, although no pastor now in Pueblo has ever given this address.

D. B. Titus, for more than four years pastor at Rupert, Idaho, has resigned there. At the beginning of his pastorate there, there were but twenty-five members. This number has increased to 165, with a $4,500 church and $2,000 parsonage, and a splendid working congregation. L. G. Parker of Altoona, Ia., who has just dedicated a $13,000 building there, will take the work at Rupert, July 1. Mr. Titus is now in a meeting at Bliss, Idaho, where he has organized a church with twenty members.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Waters, of Pomona, California, have made a gift of $15,000 to the endowment of Transylvania University. It is understood that the university will add a like amount to this and establish a Waters Professorship, $30,000 being required for this purpose. Friends of Transylvania are very hopeful that the entire $200,000 in new endowment will be raised in the near future. Already the curators have subscribed the full amount of the $40,000 debt, and $130,000 has been secured on the endowment. However, all that has been pledged thus far is given on the condition that all indebtedness against the university be paid, and that a total of $200,000 be added to the present endowment. There is much satisfaction on account of the decision of President R. H. Crossfield to remain with the institution.

The following is the report of Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Ohio, for the year ending in April, 1911, W. F. Rothenburger, pastor. The treasurer's books for the year, including all the departments, show the following expenditures: General expenses, $9,361.61; Foreign Missions, $938.96; American Missions, $583.06; Ohio Missions, $341.31; Church Extension, $187.50; Miscellaneous—missions, education and benevolences—$1,183.15; Total, with $198.90 balance, $12,802.49. There have been 100 additions to the membership during the year, about two-thirds of which were by baptism. The work among men and boys has been vigorously forwarded, and the brotherhood has sent one of the young men of the church to college. The policy of the church has been shaped to meet the needs of a changing community, and the social service rendered has kept the plant open almost every night of the week. The assistant, W. E. Alderman, will be in charge of the work during the pastor's absence in Europe.

J. F. Finley has announced his resignation of the ministry of the Central Church at Pueblo, Colo., the middle of June. He was called last November to take temporary charge during the recuperation of J. E. Lynn. When the latter resigned April 1st, Mr. Finley was asked to continue; he now leaves to begin work at Boulder, Colo., the seat of the State University. In his official report for six months, we notice 1,150 calls; he is a tireless worker; the additions have been about 60. He has not neglected the missionary interests, and the offerings in that period were about $100. This does not include the May offering for Home Missions, which was $75. He has now been in the state over five years; was at Ft. Collins for over four years, which is an unusually long pastorate in Colorado. The state is glad to know that it can keep him. A. L. Ward of Boulder succeeds Mr. Finley in the ministry of the Central Church. His call was unanimous, and the church is expecting the same high-grade of work that he has done in Boulder, and Boston, and Indianapolis. He is big of brain and heart, scholarly and gracious.

Concerning the advisability of advertising religious services which has been discussed considerably of late, Henry W. Hunter, pastor at Higginsville, Mo., gives the following experience:

"Does advertising pay? A useless question to ask of the business man. But how about it in the religious world? We have an organized class of young men, by name, The Baraca Class. This class has an enrollment of ninety young men and an average attendance of seventy. How is it done? First we use the newspapers. Sometimes we buy a space and put in a display advertisement or again we may run a number of short catchy sentences in the "local" page. Originality is used in all of this work and the people of the town look with eagerness for it. Sometimes we place in the windows of the stores cards calling attention to the class and its sessions, inviting the reader to come and visit us, and of al the fellows that have come to our class we have never lost a single one. A half hour before the class convenes on Sunday mornings we send out a few scouts asking them to go to the barber shops and lunch rooms and hotels inviting all that they come across to come to the class and enjoy the sessions with us. Often a dozen come from one place and they always thank us for having asked them to come. The lessons are taught by the pastor of the church and are sociological in their content, which form of teaching the young men like. Of course the class has its own officers' class rooms, and holds many socials. It also has a splendid athletic department."

The new Maryland Park Church, Washington, D. C., was dedicated on May 21. The dedicatory service was conducted by George A. Miller, pastor of Ninth St. Church, and Earl Wilfley, pastor of Vermont Ave. Church, assisted by William S. Smith and William G. Oram. This church was organized a year ago by Jared Hayden, the present minister, and now with a building with a capacity of 200 and a treasury free from debt an active campaign for membership will be begun.

The Northwestern Texas camp meeting will be held at Crowell, July 28-Aug. 13. This is an annual affair. Last year the meeting was at Truscott. E. C. Tuckerman, of Chicago, will lead the song service. W. A. Haynes, who held the meeting last year, has been called again for this year. This is always a great meeting. People come for hundreds of miles for an outing and spiritual feast. It is one of the most successful means of educating the people in the ways of true life that can be found anywhere. For information write J. E. Chase, Benjamin, Texas.

At a recent banquet given to the officers of First Church, Davenport, Ia., the parsonage trustees gave the cheering report that the parsonage debt had been liquidated. When S. M. Perkins, the present pastor, came to this field four years ago, $3,000 remained unpaid on the parsonage. Without any especial effort, but by cheerful and liberal giving more than the required amount has been raised. This now leaves the church free from all indebtedness and opens the way for larger work. The Sunday-school is prospering and is recognized as one of the most efficient in that part of the country. Five teachers have just received diplomas in the union training class taught by Mr. Perkins.

The Call of the Christ

(Continued from page 11.)

righteousness and common duty with the same ardor and devotion as that of the soldier in the battle line. In such devotion to the common good we are following in the footsteps of Jesus when he chose the cross because he loved his people.

Call to Fellowship and Service.

But there is yet a further call than any of these. It is the call of the Christ to a human fellowship and service as wide as the human race. His parting injunction to the little band of disciples who had gathered about him was; "Go ye and make disciples of all nations." This is the last and greatest call of the Christ. It is not a call to proselytize; it is a call to make known to men the abundant life. It is the call to recognize the application of the principles of Jesus to the whole human race. It is a call to universal democracy and catholic internationalism. It is a call to discard artificial prejudices and barriers and to work together for the good of all mankind. It is a call to vastness and vision in our thought of the world and the purposes of God. It is a call which the great souls of all the ages have heard either faintly or fully, but it is also a summons which comparatively few in each generation have been able to obey. To many a man the call of the Christ is a call to purity of personal life, and this is good, but it is not enough; to others his call is to faithfulness in the discharge of the duties of the home, but such persons worship only a narrow Christ; to yet others his call is a summons to loyalty to the highest interests of the community, the city, the state, or the nation—and there are few of us who hear his call to be faithful to our duties toward this larger group—but even so, we have not yet seen the vision of Christ. Not until we are able to see that there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, but that the whole world is one in its right to share the joys and burdens, the privileges and duties of life, have we really heard the call of the Christ, but there are few indeed who have heard this last and greatest call. Wise practical men smile at those who take such ideas seriously. They call them visionaries. We may plead guilty of such a character, and for one, I am proud to be called a visionary. The prophet of old said that where there is no vision the people perish. I said in the beginning that the symbolic Christ was the real Christ. I say at the end that this world owes more to visions than to physical sight. Visions have been the springs of action throughout the world's history.

'Twas but a vision which one certain night
Appeared to Paul, while he in Troas lay
In earnest prayer, that God would give him light
To which new province he should make his way.
'Twas but a vision, but no human act,
No royal mandate, no ingenious thought
Has been more fruitful than this night's impact
On Paul's keen mind and the transition which it wrought.

'Twas but a vision, but it changed the fate
Of ancient Greece and its philosophy;
The roadways of imperial Rome were made
By it a conduit for the spread of liberty;
The temples of the gods from that hour came to nought
And in their place the cross rose to the skies.
Who (but one God-inspired) could in that day have thought
How wide a realm should from Paul's vision rise?"

Great Visionaries.

And as the vision of Paul transformed the ancient western world, so the vision of William Carey and David Livingstone and Robert Morrison and a thousand others is transforming the modern eastern world. The Christ-vision and the Christ-call are urging human hearts today as they urged the apostles and martyrs of old to deeds worthy of our faith and fellowship. The call through the centuries and the call in our own hearts is a call to a great faith and to great deeds which shall overcome the world.

That mystic book which is the last in our New Testament and which is so marvelous for its imagery and its symbolism comprehends the calls of the Christ in these gracious words; "And the spirit and the bride say come; and he that heareth, let him say come; and he that is athirst, let him come: he that will, let him take of the water of life freely." I would that we could for a moment put aside our literalisms and our criticisms and live in this great invitation of the symbolic Christ. I would that we could know today that he is the real Christ. I would that we would close our eyes and our ears to the sounds which arise from the clash and clamor of this world's battles. And I wish that quietly and reverently we might bow at the feet of the Christ and hear him say to us, "He that is athirst, let him come: he that will, let him take of the water of life freely." Then should we have strength and courage to go out into the world this week and to hear its voices calling to us and know that through the voices of the high and holy things of this life, through the call to human fellowship and ministry, through the call to devotion and self-denial, through the call to faith and vision comes the call of the Christ.

Bloomington Bible Chair

Walter S. Rounds has begun his work as university pastor on the Bible Chair foundation at the University of Indiana. Approximately two hundred and fifty of the Spring term students in the university, or one in six of the total enrollment, are from Christian church homes. They are, or ought to be, among the leaders of our churches in Indiana in years to come. They are choice young people. At present Mr. Rounds has a student class, meeting Sunday mornings at 9:30 o'clock, and studying certain social problems in the light of the gospel of Jesus, and a mission study class, meeting Tuesday evenings at 6:30. The enrollment of the former is 65, of the latter 18. Both are growing. There have also been several opportunities to present the claims of religion at the fraternity houses.

Rev. Walter S. Rounds.

As Mr. Rounds views the situation this early in his work the methods of approach that will be used to meet the opportunity are as follows:

1. Definite religious instruction in the class room, for which it is expected that the university will give credit.

2. The attachment of students to the church, and the use of the Sunday-school, of the Christian Endeavor Society, of missions in Bloomington, of general social conditions in Bloomington and of churches in the county as a laboratory in which ideals of service can be actualized and made real. It is hoped to organize a circuit of young men who will go out among weak churches to preach and sing.

3. Social gatherings for the purpose of mutual acquaintance and understanding.

4. The organization among the students of a Bible Chair guild, for the purpose of carrying out more effectively the many activities that will be undertaken. The church at Bloomington has given the use of a ten-room house for the university pastor's residence and for Bible Chair purposes. In course of time a thoroughly equipped Bible Chair Hall will be erected.

The Book of the People

If it be objected that the Bible cannot be understood without the interpretation of inspired men, let the messages of the papyri and the ostraca so recently discovered give the answer. From these we learn that the

New Testament is written in the language of the common people. There is little from Matthew to Jude that is not within the range of the understanding of the day laborer. The rightful place for the New Testament is in the cabins and cottages of the poor. The seats of learning and culture have little right to it; from the poor it came, and with the poor it belongs.

Great scholars among us have written weighty books upon the learned sources and profound philosophies of the New Testament. John's Gospel was an exquisite work of art, and could not have been written by a fisherman. Mark was a classic, terse and precise in its language. Romans was a profound doctrinal treatise worthy to be ranked with Plato's Republic; and so on throughout the other books. This display of learning will have to be revised. John's Gospel is written in the language of the poor; even the esoteric language of the prologue is the simple language of the fisherman. Mark is the Gospel for children, and the omission of the stories of the nativity is now understood. The treatise of the Romans is now an ordinary letter written in the language of the common people upon the profoundest theme that ever engaged the minds of men. This and a thousand other things the papyri have disclosed. The Bible belongs to the people. Give it to them; let them interpret its message, let them bring forth its wonderful truth.

Both Ambassador Bryce and Professor Phelps, at the great tercentenary celebration of the King James version, in Carnegie Hall, made bold to say that no man of letters ever attained to eminent standing in his profession who had not drunk deeply at this fountain of pure English in that noble translation. If this be so—and against such eminent authority I have no word to say—if this be so, then, may we not question the wisdom of the removal of that English version of the Bible from the curriculum of the primary schools where English is taught. If it can be proved, or even hypothetically demonstrated, that no man has risen to front rank in the world of letters, who has not drunk deeply at the fountains of old English in this translation, then is there not room for a severe arraignment of the education boards of this country? The sectarian argument could very easily be settled. We want to be as broad as the world, and have no desire to fix fences. But why should our children be deprived of the finest model in the world besides the gentle and wholesome influences of the most elevating stories and sentiments within the lids of any book?—Dr. N. D. Hillis.

Council on Christian Union

The Council on Christian Union, which was organized at the National Convention of the Disciples of Christ in Topeka, Kansas, last October, has been busy at its purpose as it well could be, considering that the commission is composed of brethren who are already burdened with many responsibilities and correspondence has had to be done at the expense of the individual members of the commission.

With the desire to do larger and more efficient service, the commission sent out a letter to every minister among the Disciples of Christ and to as many other active workers as names could be secured, asking for their co-operation in becoming members of the Council and securing other members and subscribers to the Christian Union Quarterly, which we will now send out in a few days. We have gotten a number of responses, but not as many as should come from a people whose only excuse as a separate body is to labor for the union of the divided church and I am taking this liberty to remind those who have received a letter from us as well as those whose names we have not gotten in order to send them letters, that this is a call to go on record in the interests of Christian Union.

New opportunities have come to us in the last few years because of the growing sentiment among all communions on this vital theme and if our forebears contended so faithfully for this courteous consideration that Christian Union is now receiving at the hands of most Christians, it behooves us in fidelity to them as well as to our Lord Jesus Christ to push more earnestly than ever this call to the heart of Christendom and seek such friendly council as opportunity affords.

Our first publication—Christian Union Library—will contain the address of Brother A. C. Smither on "The New Testament Church," which was delivered recently at the congress on Christian Union at Los Angeles and which was published in our papers. It is without question a worthy presentation of the great theme. Along with it will appear the address of Bishop Johnson, of the Episcopal Church and Dr. Walker, of the Presbyterian Church, both dealing with Christian Union.

To Enter Evangelistic Field

A very valuable man in the person of Joseph Gaylor of Springfield, Missouri, has entered the general evangelistic field. Bro. Gaylor has had large experience in this work, and is well equipped to do the work of an evangelist in any field to which he may be called. For nearly twelve years he has served in this capacity, and during that time has preached for the best churches in Southern Missouri and Tennessee. I have known him intimately for the past five years, and have had opportunity to know of and observe his work. It is of the most substantial kind. There is no clap-trap in his methods; he wins by preaching the gospel in love; he builds up both in numbers and spirituality.

Any pastor who desires to engage an evangelist who will strengthen his work in every way can do no better than to secure Bro. Gaylor for a meeting. He will have with him one or more singers and personal workers who are thoroughly consecrated. He has begun to make up his schedule for the summer and fall. Address him at 408 W. Chase Street, Springfield, Mo.

Rev. Joseph Gaylor.

Springfield, Mo. F. L. MOFFETT.

Bethany College

The contract for the Oglebay Hall of Agriculture and Science at Bethany College has just been signed. This building is to cost $60,000, and is to be thoroughly modern, containing laboratories, class rooms, and administrative offices. This new building is to be Tudor Gothic architecture, in harmony with the main college building. A very famous window in Oxford College is to be reproduced in this building. It is believed that this will be the best college building in West Virginia. Mr. E. W. Oglebay, who has produced for the college the Alexander Campbell farm at a cost of $25,000, is donating this new building.

In addition to this new building, Mr. Oglebay proposes to equip the farm with dairy barn, registered horses and cattle, and the latest improved farming implements. It is proposed to make this a demonstrating farm to be used in connection with the Department of Agriculture, which is to be opened with the beginning of the next session in September.

For the teaching of horticulture and to give students an opportunity to help themselves through college there will be built at once a modern greenhouse for the growing of vegetables and flowers. This will cover about an acre of ground, and is also a gift from Mr. Oglebay.

Prof. William Hill, Director of the Agricultural Guild of the University of Chicago, is to be Dean of the School of Agriculture, and Farm Director. Prof. Hill is one of the best known and ablest instructors in agriculture in the country. Securing his services guarantees success of the Agricultural Department and of the farm operations from the beginning. Mr. Oglebay has also agreed to pay the salary of Prof. Hill for the next five years.

The trustees of the college have engaged an additional professor for the Agricultural Department, and also a thoroughly competent instructor to inaugurate a department of Domestic Science. These three new professors will be ready for work at the opening of the next session.

It is expected that at the Annual Commencement, June 8, announcement will be made of the election of a professor to fill the Bible chair endowed by Hon. Thomas W. Phillips, of New Castle, Pa. When a suitable man has been secured for this, the college will have four additional professors.

Mr. Oglebay's total gifts to the college during the past year aggregate at least $120,000.

The splendid new Cochran Hall, a dormitory for young men, is rapidly nearing completion. This new building will be ready to receive students at the opening of the

Sixty Years the Standard
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
A Cream of Tartar Powder
Made from Grapes
NO ALUM

fall term. This building is constructed of white brick, fireproof construction, green tile roof, and is four stories high. It will cost, completed, about $35,000, and will add in a most substantial way to the equipment of the college. Hon. M. M. Cochran, of Uniontown, is paying for the construction of this building, and it is to be a memorial to his son, Percy B. Cochran.

Work was begun a week ago on the construction of a central heating plant. This plant is to cost $11,000, and Hon. M. M. Cochran is contributing the necessary funds.

The college chapel has just been enlarged by the removing of a partition between it and the museum. The chapel is being refrescoed, reseated with opera chairs, and a handsome new pipe organ is being installed.

A large force of men is at work upon the college grounds, continuing the improvements begun a year ago. It is confidently believed that with the completion of these improvements, Bethany will have one of the handsomest college campuses in the country.

The old Brush Run Church, the first church builded by the Disciples one hundred years ago, has been purchased and will be moved during the summer to Bethany, and rebuilt near the Alexander Campbell home. The money to purchase this building and to remove it to Bethany and rebuild it has been contributed by the New York Alumni Association. This was done at a dinner given President Cramblet by Bethany's friends in New York on April 17.

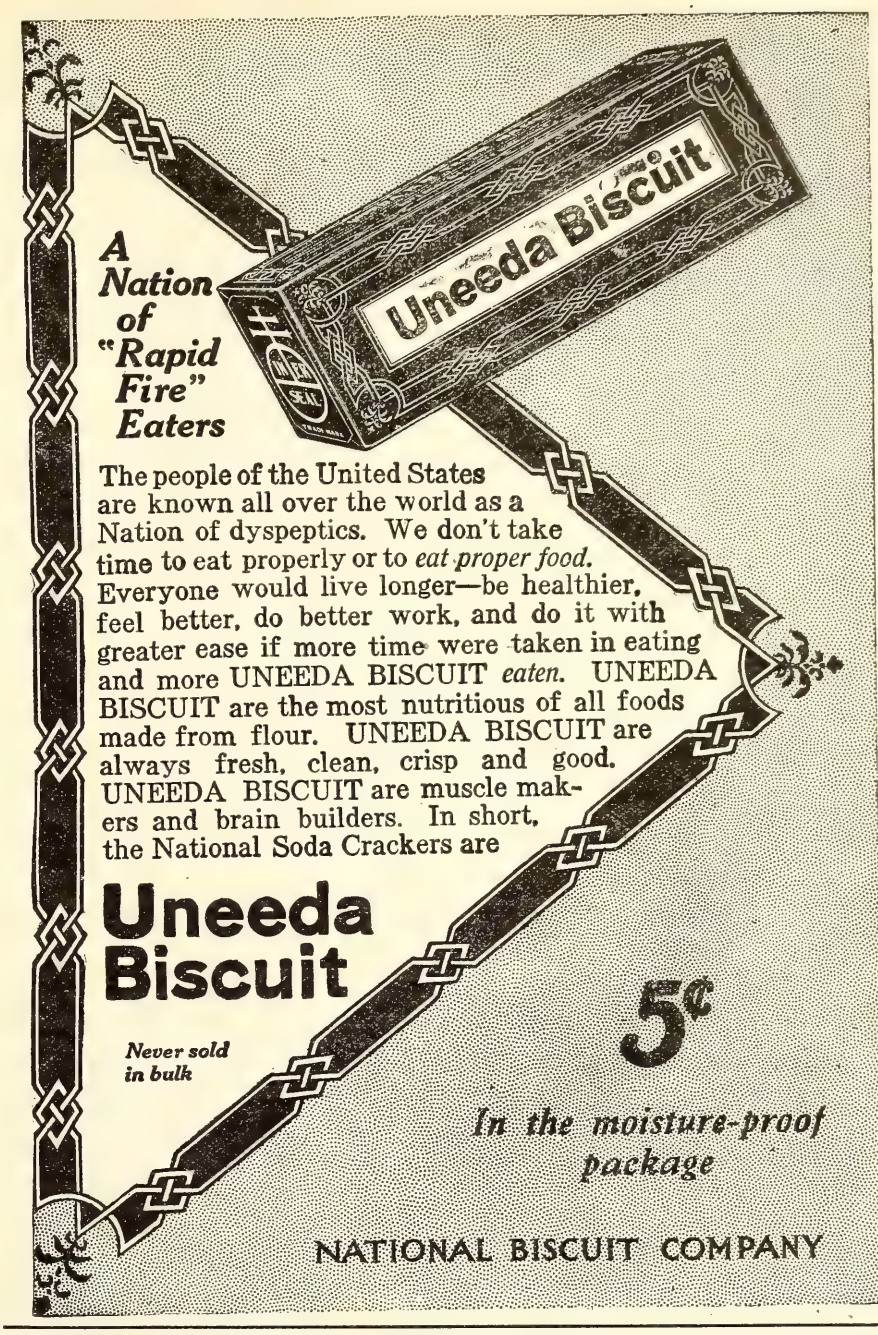
In addition to all these gifts and additions to the college and its equipment, there are some other developments that are sure to come, which will mean still more for the permanent endowment and equipment of Bethany. T. E. CRAMBLET, President.

Christian Endeavor Day for Christian Union

To Be Observed by All Endeavor Societies Among the Disciples of Christ, Sunday, July 30.

The National Board of Christian Endeavor has prepared a program bearing on the history and plea of the Disciples of Christ in reference to the question of Christian Union, and requests all the societies to order copies of the program and use the same in the regular Endeavor Prayer-meeting of Sunday, July 30. The committee which had the making of this program in charge spared neither time nor expense in order to give the societies a meeting of great educational and inspirational value. It is adopted to societies of all sizes and is so arranged that it can be given without spending a great deal of time in preparation.

The program is in booklet form, and besides the matter to be used in connection with the meeting, it contains the Endeavor topics from July 1 to Jan 1, 1912. There is an excellent cut of Old Cane Ridge Church, where the movement in behalf of Christian Union was launched. The program sets forth the position of the Disciples of Christian reference to Christian Union; the increasing tendency in this direction; the part Christian Endeavor has taken in fostering this spirit. The hymns to be used are printed in the booklet, both words and music. There are short addresses on some of our great pioneer preachers like Barton W. Stone, Alexander Campbell and Walter Scott. Many of the watchwords of our movement are given. One interesting feature of the program is a "Sword Drill" participated in by members of the society. The exercise has been prepared by C. G. Kindred, pastor of the Englewood Church, Chicago, and Cecil J. Sharp of Hammond, Ind. Endeavor societies are requested to order as many copies of the program as may be necessary. They will be sent free of all cost by addressing



Uneeda Biscuit
A Nation of "Rapid Fire" Eaters
The people of the United States are known all over the world as a Nation of dyspeptics. We don't take time to eat properly or to eat proper food. Everyone would live longer—be healthier, feel better, do better work, and do it with greater ease if more time were taken in eating and more UNEEDA BISCUIT eaten. UNEEDA BISCUIT are the most nutritious of all foods made from flour. UNEEDA BISCUIT are always fresh, clean, crisp and good. UNEEDA BISCUIT are muscle makers and brain builders. In short, the National Soda Crackers are
Uneeda Biscuit
Never sold in bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

DRAKE UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL

Credit Courses in Usual College Subjects
Credit Courses in Education and Psychology
Professional Work for Teachers of All Grades
Courses in all Certificate Subjects for Teachers
Courses in Music and Art
Courses for Music and Drawing Teachers and Supervisors

For Announcement, Address DRAKE UNIVERSITY, DES MOINES, IOWA.

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

A BIBLICAL and THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of high grade located at COLUMBIA adjacent to the UNIVERSITY of MISSOURI

University Credit Courses—Ministerial and Missionary Training Courses. Departments:—Biblical and Systematic Theology, Sociay Service and Missions, Old Testament and New Testament. Next Term Begins Sept. 18, 1911.

For Catalog and Information address Charles M. Sharpe, Dean.

the undersigned. The National Board of Christian Endeavor requests that an offering be taken at the close of the meeting for the suppport of its work in promoting Christian Endeavor among the Disciples. It would be a good thing for the societies and churches if our ministers would give over the Sunday evening church service to the young people. The program is worthy a large hearing. It will do good. Order copies of the program at once.

CLAUDE E. HILL, National Superintendent.
Valparaiso, Ind.

Notes From the Foreign Society

The Living Links are still coming in. The church at Pleasantville, Iowa, gives $600 and takes up the support of Miss Nina Palmer who goes to Nankin, China, next fall to teach in the girls' school. L. Hulser is pastor of this church and is to be congratulated on the splendid advance step of his congregation. E. W. Allen and Miss Palmer visited the congregation and aided materially in the new move.

The Student Volunteer Band of Hiram together with graduates of Hiram who have been detained from going to the field become a Living Link and take up the support of their own worker on the field.

Dr. Dye is on his way home from Africa and will probably arrive about the last of June. His unexpected return and the coming of Dr. Jaggard on his furlough, leaves our Congo mission without a doctor. The society has looked far and near for a medical man for this great work It seems sad that there is no man ready and willing to go where there is such great need and wonderful possibilities of service.

The outlook for Children's Day is the best the society has ever had. It looks as though at least four thousand Sunday-schools would observe the day. No doubt the offering will be beyond $100,000. In many places where no offering comes from the churches, the Sunday-school sends its gifts regularly. By adding this number to the contributing churches we find that about six thousand different congregations have sent offerings to the foreign society in the last two years.

The foreign society has just received $5,000 on the annuity plan from a good brother who is at present traveling in Europe.

News comes that there is still great famine suffering in China. The recent excessive rains have again ruined the crops in large areas of the famine district. The suffering is indescribable. The foreign society has been sending on many gifts for this relief work.

No work of the society is looked after more carefully than the selection of missionary candidates for the foreign field. Every year the colleges are visited and conferences held with these young people. As opportunity affords, they are also visited personally. Their teachers and pastors are corresponded with and as much as possible learned of their lives and work. If a candidate seems fitted he is asked to fill out a card on which he answers many important questions. Finally the person is asked to appear before the executive committee in Cincinnati for examination. The thirteen men on the executive committee go over the case carefully and the medical examiners carefully look into the physical condition of the person under consideration. If all is satisfactory the candidate is appointed to the field and goes out as a missionary. The work is of great importance and the calling is for life work. The committee spares no pains to make the proper selection for this great work. A congregation, as such, never in any way appoints or selects a candidate for the field.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Secretary.
Cincinnati, O.

Living-Link Week

At the Christian Church, Canton, Mo., May 23-30.

Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Grainger, of Jubbulpore, C. P., India, were with us during the week beginning Tuesday, May 23. Mr. and Mrs. Grainger have been in India as missionaries for the past ten years. They are now home on furlough and will return to India in the autumn.

Mrs. Maude Grainger is the Living Link of Canton Christian Church and Christian University. These missionaries greatly informed and inspired the church by their messages. The following program was carried out:

Wednesday 9:30 a. m.—Chapel Talk, Mrs. Grainger; Wednesday 7:30 p. m.—Reception for Mrs. Grainger at the church. Thursday 3:00 p. m.—C. W. B. M. Session, at the home of Mrs. E. W. Cason; Address—Work Among India's Women, Mrs. Grainger. Sunday 11:00 a. m.—Address, Mrs. Grainger; 3:00 p. m.—Juniors' Session, The Children of India, Mrs. Grainger; 7:30 p. m.—Address, Mr. O. J. Grainger. Monday 7:30 p. m. Address, Mr. Grainger; Farewell reception for Mr. and Mrs. Grainger and their daughters.

HERBERT M. GARN, Chairman Missionary Committee.

For Efficient Religious Instruction

Ray O. Miller, pastor of Fresno (Calif.) Church is leading a movement for the efficient religious instruction of public school children in his city. The plan involves the dismissal of school one afternoon a week—say, Wednesday afternoon—the pupils may go to the various churches designated in each case by the child's parents where they will receive religious instruction according to the point of view of the particular church. This plan was proposed some years ago at a convention of the Religious Education Association and has been taken up by the city superintendent of Berkeley, Calif. The plan is urged as a means of solving the sensitive question of "sectarian" teaching in a public institution. "The strong point of the plan," says Mr. Miller, "is that it appeals to all. There is no discrimination. In one city where a letter was sent out every religious organization was heartily in favor of the plan. It is also suited to large cities and small. The smaller the better, and perhaps presenting no great difficulties except in very large cities where the churches would not be near enough. Certainly in cities up to 100,000 it would present no mechanical impossibilities.

"It would supply the need felt by most educators of today—the basis of moral life—as it is not given in the schools. It would take us back to the sound principle of the Hebrews and Greeks with far better religious and psychological data upon which to proceed. It would treble the efficiency of all religious organizations in the limited field in which they work and it would no doubt increase the field of the church's work to an extent not now dreamed of. If with an hour a week with a non-compulsory drawing power the church can do what she has, what would be the effect if she had a half day with paid teachers and the discipline of the regular day school?"

The only two cities which have taken this matter up are Berkeley and Fresno. Superintendent Bunker expects to have the plan in working order this fall. Mr. Miller heads the committee of the Fresno Ministerial Association in investigating the matter for Fresno. It is hoped that these two cities will conduct the plan with such success that the movement will spread all over the state.

Bethany Park Assembly

Preliminary announcement of the program of the Bethany Park Assembly is before us. Beginning on July 31 with "Preacher's Week" the speakers for the week are W. J. Lhamon who will lecture twice each day carrying through a series on "The Character of Christ" and one on "Comparative Religions." C. C. Morrison will give the eleven o'clock lectures for the week on the subject "The Personnel of Religion," successive studies of The Prophet, The Priest, The Missionary, The Convert, and The Saint. Walter S. Rounds will give a series of five afternoon lectures on "The Work of the Ministry." W. H. Book will preach at the evening sessions.

Special Christian Endeavor sessions will be held during this week under the guidance of National Superintendent Claude E. Hill and Indiana State Superintendent E. H. Clifford.

During the ten days beginning Aug. 9, the Second Annual Summer School of Methodists for Sunday-school and Missionary Workers will be held. Garry L. Cook, State Sunday-school Superintendent of Indiana

EUREKA COLLEGE

A CO-EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION OF HIGHER LEARNING

COLLEGIATE COURSES

Classical A. B.
Science B. S.
History and Economics A. B.
Ministerial A. B.

OTHER COURSES

Preparatory
Commercial
Music: Vocal and Instrumental Manual Training
Public Speaking
Art

For further information address
Eureka, Illinois President, Eureka College

is the Dean of this school. The Instructors are an attractive group, including, Mrs. Frank Wells, R. P. Shepherd, Prof. W. F. Smith, Miss Florence Miller, Prof. W. B. Taylor, Miss Hazel A. Lewis, Prof. Charles T. Paul, Robert M. Simpson, E. W. Thornton, W. A. Brown, Robert M. Hopkins, Walter E. Frazee, Clarence L. Depew.

An International Summer School certificate will be granted to all doing required work. Minimum work required for graduation, 30 hours. Notes on lectures, in shape to hand in, will be required as the examination. Peter Ainslie will deliver the graduating address on Friday evening, August 18.

Bethany Park is located twenty miles southwest of Indianapolis on the Indianapolis & Vincennes division of the Pennsylvania Lines, and on the Indianapolis & Martinsville division of the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern Traction Lines. Those who find it impossible to go to Portland will do well to go to Bethany Park.

A Tour in Texas

Texas is the largest state in the union. This statement means very little until it has been verified by actual experience within this vast empire, for it is possible to travel twenty-four hours in a straight line on a limited train, and then discover that half the state has not been crossed. Texas stands fifth in population among the states according to the late census, and in possibilities in every way there is no state to be ranked above her. Our people are exceeded only by the Baptists, Methodists and Catholics in number, while in wealth and influence we are the equal of any people.

At the invitation of the State Sunday-school superintendent, Edward Owers, the American superintendent spent two weeks in holding a series of parliaments in important centers, immediately preceding the state convention. E. W. Thornton of the Standard Publishing Co., rendered valuable aid in all the meetings. Visits were made to McKinney, Corsicana, Waco, Galveston, Port Arthur, Beaumont, San Antonio, Austin, Belton, Waxahachie, Dallas and the State Convention at Fort Worth. Each parliment had representations present from four to a dozen other schools as the entire tour had been well advertised. The fellowship was delightful and we trust many new acquaintances formed are to ripen into lasting friendship.

Two aims were before us in all the trip. Front rank work constituted the burden of our talks with special emphasis on the new graded work and missionary standards. The report at the State Convention showed fifty-seven schools in line with twenty-three ready for their pennants. Every school touched in the tour with possibly one or two exceptions either handed in its application blank for the certificate, qualified on some additional points, or definitely promised to get busy at once.

Texas with this tour closed her first years' work with a man giving full time to the Sunday-school service. A part of our attention therefore was necessarily given to rounding out the report for the year, especially along financial lines. The liberality of the schools and friends was in many ways remarkable, and the final report for Fort Worth was, "all bills paid including those for May, and a balance in the treasury."

Mr. Owers was unanimously elected for anothers year's work and a special offering to send him to San Francisco and Portland was made a token of appreciation for what he had done. A strong Sunday-school Committee was appointed to assist him in organizing the work permanently. The appointment of district superintendents and the apportionment of the schools will be chief factors in accomplishing this.

Texas schools can do great things. The reports for the year showed from the schools for benevolence $2,700; for Foreign Missions $1,862; for State Work about $1,600 and for American Missions $274. While this last offering represents twice the amount given last year, the schools promised to give American missions a larger place in their program in the future.

The State Convention will no doubt be reported elsewhere, but it should be noted here that it was in every way a great success. Texas Christian University was the chief attraction and the laying of the cornerstone of the new building on Tuesday with the liberal offering made that night constituted the center of interest. The Sunday-school sessions comprised an early hour's conference on three mornings and also the last afternoon and night. The awarding of the Front Rank Pennants was the occasion of much enthusiasm especially when it was announced that Texas received the first pennants and therefore held more than any other state. Even Mr. Owers felt an unusual thrill when the National Front Rank Banner was presented to him, and the vote was hearty that Texas stay in the lead until September 30 and keep the banner. Kentucky, Illinois, Kansas and some other states however must be heard from on this proposition.

It was a great trip in Texas and we believe will be productive of much good along all lines in the years to come. Texas bids fair to have one of our best state Sunday-school organizations to help her solve the mighty problems in the evangelization of her rapidly growing population.

We spent one day in Shreveport, La., visiting the Front Rank schools which Claude L. Jones and A. C. Lea have built up here. The new building will greatly aid them in the magnificent work they are doing.

ROBT. M. HOPKINS.
American Sunday-school Superintendent.

Bethany Graded Lessons
FOR THE SUMMER QUARTER

EVERYBODY DOES NOT SEEM TO REALIZE that The Bethany Graded Lessons can be begun at any time. The course of study begins with October 1, it is true, at the same time the public school year opens. But if a pupil is compelled to miss a term in the public school it is not considered necessary for him to be kept out a whole year until the new year opens. No more is it necessary for a Sunday-school to wait for a special date to equip itself with the graded lesson courses.

BUT THERE ARE THREE SPECIAL ADVANTAGES in beginning the Bethany Lessons in the Summer quarter—July 1. First, the school is somewhat smaller in the summer time, thus making it easier to adjust both teachers and pupils to the new system. When October comes and the normal attendance is resumed, the new organization will be already established.

SECOND, THE SUMMER'S LESSONS ARE COMPLETE BY THEMSELVES in all grades. That is, they do not merely continue the Spring's quarter's lessons nor are they just a preparation for the Autumn courses. This makes it just as natural and easy to introduce the Graded Lessons in the Summer time as in the Autumn when the nine-months' course begins.

THIRD, THESE SUMMER LESSONS ARE UNIQUE in the history of Sunday-school curriculum. Many of them treat of the great missionary heroes; others treat of the great religious leaders whose names are closely interwoven with the early history of our American nation. The teachers' texts afford a liberal education in the history of missions and the early events and ideals of our republic. Pupils will find these studies so fascinating that the "Summer slump" in attendance will be more easily overcome than by the continued use of the uniform lessons.

THE BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are far and away the most adequate and fascinating lesson materials ever offered the Sunday-school world. Every lesson writer is an interdenominational authority. No such skill and taste has gone into the preparation of any graded lessons as twelve leading denominations of this country are putting into the Bethany Lessons.

Send today for Prospectuses, Prices and Order Blank.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East 40th Street, Chicago

Chicago Christian Church

SPECIAL TRAIN

Convention at

PORTLAND, ORE., JULY 4 to 11, 1911

Arrangements are now being made for the benefit of all members, their friends and families, to go to our Convention, leaving from Chicago the evening of June 27th, via C. & N. W., Union Pacific, D. & R. G., O. S. L., and O-W. R. & N. Co., passing through Omaha, Denver, Colorado Springs, Royal Gorge, Salt Lake City, Pocatello, Huntington and along the Columbia River, arriving at Portland the morning of July 4th.

This will be an exceptionally well-planned trip for both sight seeing and pleasure, and with stop-overs enroute to visit a number of different interesting points. Round trip fare from Chicago, $62.50.

Complete itinerary now being printed. For details of rates, and all information, address,

O. F. Jordan,
Pastor Evanston Christian Church,
822 Washington St., Evanston, Ill.

Be Sure to Plan Your Trip

via

UNION PACIFIC

Standard Road of the West
New and direct line to Yellowstone Park
Choice of routes returning through San Franciscoo and Los Angeles with slight additional cost

ELECTRIC BLOCK SIGNALS
EXCELLENT DINING CARS

For literature and information relative to the Pacific Northwest, call on or address,

W. G. NEIMYER, General Agent,

73 W. Jackson Blvd. CHICAGO, ILL.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. June 8, 1911 Number 23

JAMES SMALL
THE SOCIAL GOSPEL.

GEORGE A. CAMPBELL
CHURCH STIMULANTS.

EDGAR DE WITT JONES
"AND ENOCH WALKED WITH GOD."

THE VISITOR
"THE WORLD IN BOSTON."

PAUL WAKEFIELD
THE STORY OF DR. COCHRAN'S HEROISM.

J. R. PERKINS
SAN FRANCISCO LETTER

EDITORIALS
AN UNESCAPABLE ISSUE.
A REGRETTABLE INCIDENT
DOES THE FOREIGN SOCIETY DESERVE THE BROTHERHOOD'S LOYALTY?

CHICAGO

Chicago Christian Church

SPECIAL TRAIN

Convention at

PORTLAND, ORE., JULY 4 to 11, 1911

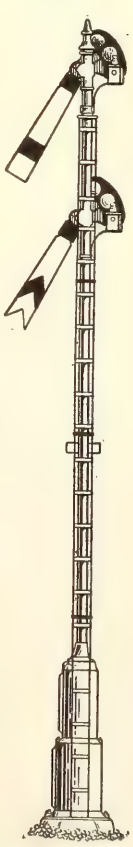
Arrangements are now being made for the benefit of all members, their friends and families, to go to our Convention, leaving from Chicago the evening of June 27th, via C. & N. W., Union Pacific, D. & R. G., O. S. L., and O-W. R. & N. Co., passing through Omaha, Denver, Colorado Springs, Royal Gorge, Salt Lake City, Pocatello, Huntington and along the Columbia River, arriving at Portland the morning of July 4th.

This will be an exceptionally well-planned trip for both sight seeing and pleasure, and with stop-overs enroute to visit a number of different interesting points. Round trip fare from Chicago, $62.50.

Complete itinerary now being printed. For details of rates, and all information, address,

O. F. Jordan,
Pastor Evanston Christian Church,
822 Washington St., Evanston, Ill.

You will have the opportunity of seeing the progressive Western America, full of interest to the tourist. Travel over 90-pound rails and Sherman gravel roadbed, free from jolts, jars, and dust, via



UNION PACIFIC

Standard Road of the West

New and direct line to Yellowstone Park

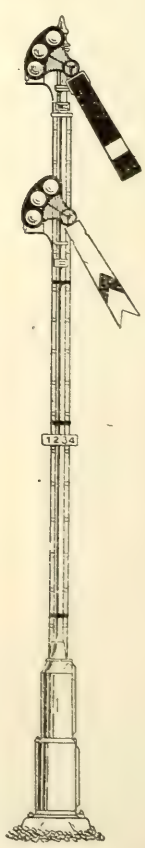
ELECTRIC BLOCK SIGNALS
EXCELLENT DINING CARS

Tickets good returning via San Francisco, Los Angeles at slightly higher rate.

For literature and information relative to fares, routes, etc., call on or address,

W. G. NEIMYER, General Agent,

73 W. Jackson Blvd. CHICAGO, ILL.



The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT. . . . . EDITORS

A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out

It is manifest that a powerful attempt is being made by the Christian Standard to disintegrate the organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and thereby not only to sacrifice the priceless interests inherent in and dependent upon that organization but to break down the whole principle of organization in our brotherhood.

For more than ten years an almost constant campaign of hostility to our organized interests has been kept up by the Standard. Previous to 1905 its attitude had been one of studied sullenness.

Its open campaign against our missionary enterprises running through 1905 and 1906, beginning with its disingenuous opposition to the Foreign society's receiving gifts of money from John D. Rockefeller, has been all but incessant ever since.

The agitation and shame of that controversy are lurid yet in the remembrance of the brotherhood. Its disclosure of the commercialism of The Standard and the utter unfitness of its owner, Russell Errett, for any such degree of religious dictatorship as he arrogates to himself, was a disillusionment inexpressibly sad.

* * *

Later while the hosts were organizing to march in triumph to Pittsburg to celebrate the centennial, this self-appointed dictator called a halt in the procession until certain comrades were thrown out of the ranks.

The story of that unseemly exhibition of disunity in the very moment that we were calling the attention of the world to our platform of Christian unity is too fresh in the minds of all readers of The Christian Century to need recital here.

We do not refer to it because of its theological significance. Theological ideas are merely pawns by which the Christian Standard organizes and exploits its own interests. In our centennial year it created a theological tension for the purpose of striking a blow at the missionary societies whose representative committee had made up the Pittsburg program.

The abject ineffectiveness of The Standard's attempt to dictate the program, and the triumphant over-leaping of all records of missionary collections by the Foreign Society in the face of the suspicion and panic created by The Standard, gave to all friends of progress and order an immense reassurance.

We shall not stop here to more than mention The Standard's opposition to every movement looking in the direction of a democratic organization of our national conventions. The sickening disgrace which its agents brought upon the Topeka convention last year by inciting a mob spirit to defeat even a consideration of the crucially important report of the Unification Committee gave a character to that convention which its often epoch-making sessions did not deserve.

And now The Standard has renewed its attack on the Foreign Society. This time its sinister purpose is so evident that the most guileless cannot mistake it. The cumulative disclosure of its inner design through these years makes its present position perfectly unambiguous.

Its cultivation of certain independent missions, often magnifying an obscure and ineffectual work into undue proportions in the eyes of its readers to make the independent work seem a formidable rival of the brotherhood's organized enterprises, reveals its deep-seated animus.

* * *

In recent weeks it has taken up the case of Guy W. Sarvis, a missionary appointed by the Foreign Society and chosen by the Hyde Park church, Chicago, as a "Living-link." It affects to see in his appointment a confirmation of its earlier insinuations that the Foreign Society was aiding and abetting the sentiment among the missionaries for the fellowship of unimmersed Christians.

The Hyde Park church does, indeed, provide membership in its congregation for such persons, though it receives only immersed believers into the church. The Standard's attack on the Society for its appointment of Mr. Sarvis was based on the pure assumption that as the "Living-link" of the Hyde Park church, he was "ready, trained and coached,"—to use The Standard's own bald phrasing—by Dr. Ames, the pastor, for the express business of putting into practice the Hyde Park plan in China!

The absurdity of this assumption is apparent when it is regarded in the light of three facts:

First, the fact that Mr. Sarvis is going to China not to conduct a church but to teach Sociology in the University of Nankin. There is small chance that he would have opportunity to practice such views even if he held them.

Secondly, the fact that Mr. Sarvis has been busy in the pursuit of his own specialty—social science—while in the University of Chicago and the Hyde Park church, and has not only given little attention to, but, like most such workers, has taken the minimum of interest in, problems of ecclesiastical procedure.

And, thirdly, the fact that in the Hyde Park church there is only the most infrequent allusion to the practice of receiving members into the congregation. The church and minister have gotten beyond the stage of discussion of the plan. They are working at the big vital problems of the gospel—as their pre-eminence in missionary giving would indicate—and their membership procedure is as quietly taken for granted as is the observance of the Lord's Supper.

* * *

The statement issued last week by the Executive Committee of the Foreign Society and found on another page of The Christian Century is corroborated by these facts.

That such a statement should have been regarded as necessary to save the Children's Day offering from the damage which The Standard's attack was evidently timed to accomplish only emphasizes the gravity and peril of the present situation.

It is not important to add anything to the self-interpreting statement of the Foreign Society, including the clear utterances of Mr. Sarvis. The Christian Century holds no brief for the Hyde Park plan, as our readers know, and we regret that Mr. Sarvis has not reached the position where he frankly champions the present duty of the Disciples of Christ to practice Christian union with all Christians. We are disposed to interpret his statement as indicating not mature thought but lack of consideration of the subject.

But Mr. Sarvis is not the subject of this editorial. The Foreign Society is its subject. We have at hand the testimony of missionaries to the effect that the practice of unity in the foreign fields would have been much farther along today had it not been for the inhibitive attitude of this Society. Missionaries have feared to tell the Society the full strength and inwardness of the situation.

In one instance where the problem was frankly laid bare and the sentiments of the missionaries disclosed, the official's surprise was indescribable and equalled only by his expressions of opposition.

We refer to this only to show that the situation on the foreign field has not been artificially cultivated by the society—its development has been inhibited by the society.

The union sentiment on the foreign field has its root, as every body who reads missionary literature today knows, in the rise of the ideal of an indigenous native church in which the distinctions of occidental denominations shall be unknown.

* * *

The Christian Century does not wish to put itself in the position of making a virtue of the Society's inhibitive influence in this movement for union. We do not praise the society. We do not apologize for it. We criticise it for not having positively encouraged our missionaries to lead all others in the joyful practice of union.

But we are not concerned in this article with our differences or agreements either with the Foreign Society or with Mr. Sarvis.

It is a moral iniquity to which we would direct the attention of our readers: the iniquity of the Christian Standard's vicious purpose to embarrass the Foreign Society, to deplete its treasury, to spread suspicion among the churches whose instrument it is, to inject virulent passion into the discussion of an issue which demands the utmost of reverence and tolerance and love.

This is the moral iniquity of the Christian Standard. It makes it necessary that every Disciple of Christ shall register his loyalty to our missionaries in foreign lands, to the Society that has with such brilliant and blessed success written the fairest chapters of our entire history as a people and to the men of God to whom the direction of this great work has been committed.

It is indeed a time for every loyal soul to speak.

Social Survey

—The Christian Century congratulates The Christian Evangelist on its acquisition of Alva W. Taylor as the writer of a department of Social Service similar to this page. All the good things it says in introducing Mr. Taylor to its readers are true. His is a rich mind which has developed along the lines of concrete problems of human welfare. We take much satisfaction in having "discovered" Mr. Taylor as a writer singularly well fitted to interpret the social movements of the day to the mind of the church. His work on The Christian Century for two and a half years, done without compensation, has been a feature of which readers and editors have many times spoken their appreciation. Some day this paper will be in a position properly to reward those who render it such service and to keep them on its staff.

The Languid Session in Washington

Legislative action in congress has not made great progress on questions with which the people are most familar. The Canadian Reciprocity bill was sent to the upper house some time ago, and has not received much attention by the senate as yet. Its fate is problematical. Both the party for and that against it claim a probable victory. Whichever way the final vote turns, the result will come only after a hard struggle and there will be a close vote. The fate of the Underwood bill which is also known as the free list bill, seems even less certain than that of the bill for reciprocity with Canada. In the lower house the Democratic machine encountered little difficulty in putting it through, and the final vote stood 236 for and 109 against. The opposition made a determined effort to gain attention to various amendments, but without other result than a week of delay and tedious debate. The measure is in unsympathetic hands in the senate, and its adoption there is said to be more than doubtful. Another matter that has been passed from the lower to the upper chamber is that of re-apportionment of congressional districts. Substantially the same bill which was passed in the former congress was sent up. According to this bill the membership would be increased from 391 to 433, to correspond with the recent census of 1910. This plan is somewhat of a compromise. One faction of the house wished to retain the present house (one practically the same size as that now existing) contending that the house is already so large as to be unwieldy. Another group wanted to increase the membership upon the present rate of apportionment which is approximately one representative for each 229,000 people. The house practically agreed that the last named plan provided an undue increase, and it was rejected. The compromise provides for one representative for each 211,877 people. By this plan no state loses in membership. A change was made in the bill passed by the Democratic house. The former bill provided for an automatic re-apportionment when a new federal census is taken. An amendment to this effect was presented, but it was voted down. If the bill is passed as presented, a tedious re-apportionment by legislation will be necessary each time a census is taken. This course necessitates a cumbersome operation in accomplishing a change easily simplified if made automatically adjustable.

The Anglo-Chinese Opium Treaty

Besieged on every hand by the Christian people of the world, Great Britain at last consented to a revision of the treaty of 1907 with China, which forced the opium traffic upon this oriental nation for a period of ten years. China has prosecuted a bitter fight against the use of the drug. Under the curse of opium, the heart of the Chinese empire was being eaten out. Thousands or perhaps millions of its subjects were becoming addicted to the use of it, and the death rate among the victims was appalling. By the terms of the treaty which had been forced upon her, China was helpless to regulate the foreign opium supply, which was largely imported from India. But Chinese officials made war upon the growth of the poppy plant within the borders of the empire, and so effectually that in many provinces it is no longer cultivated. The curtailment of this home supply heightened the demand for the foreign product, and produced a situation in which large profits were made by growers in India. Publicly and officially China appealed to Great Britain to re-open the negotiations for a new treaty, and in the end her request was granted. By the terms of the new agreement, it now will be possible for the Chinese government to put an end to the trade in a shorter time than the old compact provided. The importation of the drug is to be reduced in the same proportion that China effectively reduces the home production. Foreign opium may not be shipped into any province in which native opium is neither cultivated nor imported, but the ports of Shanghai and Canton are to remain open to the Indian product until the final suppression throughout the empire. The Indian government is to certify opium it exports to China, and the British government agrees to the heavy increase in the import duty in China. Furthermore, it agrees that the annual 10 per cent reduction of the old treaty shall be increased by one-third of the uncertificated opium now in bond in the Chinese treaty ports, plus an amount equal to one-third of the uncertificated opium landed from India within the next two months. The value of this new agreement to China is momentous, but it is a severe blow to India. The English people feel that the financial loss is greater than India should be forced to bear alone, and appear disposed to indemnify that country in the same manner that the slave owners in the West Indies were indemnified when their slaves were freed.

The Case Against the Cigarette

The use of cigarettes is a curse to the nation. There are but few states in the union that do not have some legislation in restriction of their sale, or use, or shipment, yet it is equally true that their consumption continues almost unabated. The violation of the cigarette laws in several states has been so flagrant that the repeal of these laws is regarded as exerting a better moral effect than the utter disregard of the existing statutes. Instead of fighting the evil harder, these states are countenancing a movement to give it a free hand. The public does not want the law, is the excuse given for the failure to enforce it. Possibly! But the cigarette demands a toll from the country that is startling. Not only does the evil react upon the smoker himself, but it draws heavily upon the life-blood of the nation. Two disasters, glaring results of cigarette-smoking, are still fresh in mind: One, the Washington Place fire in New York City, in which 143 persons lost their lives, was caused by the careless dropping of cigarette stubs in a pile of rubbish. The other was a conflagration in Bangor, Me., on Apr. 30. A spark from a cigarette, thrown on a pile of hay during a high wind, was quickly fanned into a great fire which destroyed one-third of the city before it was checked. Two lives and the destruction of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 worth of property were the price paid for that "coffin nail." It is said the entire city might have been destroyed had not a severe rain drenched everything inflammable. Thousands of people were rendered homeless and many absolutely destitute. Every public building except the court-house was swept away. Such disasters as these should make us think seriously before we repeal good laws.

A Nation-Wide Wave of Crime

From the reports in the daily papers, and from the reports of men who have given the matter special attention, it would seem as though a wave of crime had struck this country, more particularly affecting the large urban districts. Crimes of every description have been committed in every section of the country, and police and detective agencies have apparently been unable to apprehend the perpetrators. In New York City and Chicago, and other great centers, scarcely a day passes that the papers do not announce some new act of violence committed. Immediately following the attempted assassination of Mayor Gaynor, when that individual was at the height of his popularity, his administration was attacked, with apparently some foundation, on the ground that his dealing with criminal classes was so lenient as to constitute a public danger. Even such conservative individuals as magistrates in the police courts criticized him severely on this score, charging that such treatment constituted an invitation to criminal classes. Large numbers of thieves and thugs were said to be flocking to New York. Justice Corrigan openly declared: "The town is by far more 'open' than it was under Devery. There is not the slightest attempt to enforce the excise law. There has never been a time when the more serious offenses connected with the social evil flourished with such impunity. Gambling houses and pool-rooms have increased and now run without molestation, save for a few spectacular raids. Graft is as rampant and profitable as it ever was. The town is infested with sturdy beggars, who walk the streets almost unmolested and take by force when they can what is denied to their pleadings. Criminals from all over the country have come to New York in droves, and the more serious crimes, such as murders, burglaries and assaults grow in number undetected and unpunished." But the wave is not confined to New York. If Mayor Gaynor is alone responsible for the condition in New York, then a hundred mayors in other cities have reason to reflect upon the way in which these matters are handled in the municipalities for which they are accountable. The increasing number of labor-trouble crimes will give Chicago's executive food for thought on hot, sleepless nights.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Congregational

Ring Rule.

There are some of us who would like to discover a system of government for the church which would relieve us of all responsibility. We dream of the happy day when perfect democracy will prevail and when nobody will have to worry about the finances and the choice of the best equipped leaders for the congregations. This happy day will never come. The only thing that insures good order and efficiency in the church is Christian manhood and womanhood. These do not grow where there is nothing to do. Our very intelligence and our character depends upon the difficulties we meet. While there is improvement possible and for which we should labor, let us not be found dreaming of a fool's paradise. We Disciples may profit by the experience of the Congregationalists who have made much of the autonomy of the local church. A Connecticut layman recently wrote to Dr. W. E. Barton: "For twenty years we have been trying by means of a young Congregational church to gather together all the people in our community in order that they might partake of the benefits that come from a cultivated religious life, but the results do not fulfill our expectations, owing to defects in the system of management. Pure democracy is our theory, but not our practice. Right here is where supervision is needed." Dr. Barton replied in The Advance:

The church itself must govern its own affairs. If it is dissatisfied with the slate prepared for it, the majority of members must rise up and break the slate. The remedy for failures of democracy is not less democracy, but more. If the pastor and a small group associated with him map out the business of the church, and carry it through, regardless of the will of the majority, the remedy is not for the majority to sit quietly by and see it done, but to attend the business meetings, and assure themselves that their own counsels prevail.

But in the relation of the local church to other churches, it is logical and right that there should be supervision. If the denomination has invested money in a building or in the support of preaching that money interest should be guarded through some interested representatives of the whole denomination.

What is more important, and commonly overlooked, the name and good standing of a church form an asset of even greater value which some authority should supervise, for the good of the denomination.

It is difficult to prevent the possibility of ring rule in Congregationalism. Democracy lends itself quite easily to this when the majority become indifferent. Here is where Congregationalism needs to steer between Scylla and Charybdis; on the one hand the churches must trust their leaders and accept in good faith that which is proposed by their chosen representatives; on the other hand the people must remember that their remedy for the boss rule is not in the dictates of outside authority, but in arousing a more intelligent and conscientious interest on the part of those who constitute the whole voting membership.

What is true in this regard of churches is true of larger bodies. Associations, conferences, and national councils perform an important function in our Congregational system, and these bodies must of necessity transact the greater part of their business through their officers. The seat of Congregationalism is always the whole body. To make this body more responsible, intelligent, and loyal is the real remedy for the abuse of Congregational polity.

Presbyterian

Diversity in Modern Pulpits.

The retiring moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, Dr. Charles Little, took for the subject of his assembly sermon, "Unity in Diversity, of Old and New." On the diversity in the modern pulpit he said:

In many pulpits, the spirit of the older prophet of our text reappears. The minister is burdened with economic questions and social reforms. Children are oppressed, sweat shops are numerous, tenement houses need ventilation, injustice in wages must be rebuked, disease must be arrested, sanitary laws enacted, and the world reclaimed. Such men only should be elected to office who will be fair-minded, true, with a passion for righteousness. These are the conditions which constitute the vision of many a preacher. As the soul of Paul was stirred within him at Athens, so is his soul stirred, and he summons the church to its duty to mankind. From the pulpit, he goes down into the week with the mantle of Elijah and with his spirit pleading for civic righteousness and national reforms. He is not unmindful of the work of the individual for the individual, yet his greatest longing is to see the church as a church going forth like an army putting the prophets of Baal to death, and giving the throne to him whose right it is to reign.

Such, however, is not the vision which presents itself to others engaged in the so-called sacred calling. They look upon the individual and not society as the unit, and while desiring the wholesome results already mentioned, they will carry the good news of salvation to the individual soul. Society should be redeemed, not by the making of laws, but by the cleansing of men's hearts. Reforms should be inaugurated within, rather than without. The establishment of an internal kingdom, where the still small voice is heard and Christ reigns supreme, is the effectual forerunner of the external kingdom. These are their pulpit ideals. The modern Elisha is not a reformer, as such. He does not speak from the public platform, nor does he attempt to legislate for society upon the burning questions of the day, neither does he cry nor cause his voice to be heard in the street, but in his life and words he ever exalts Christ and him crucified, and becomes a benediction to his community as he warns every man, teaches every man in all wisdom, that he may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus.

Which shall it be, the reclaiming of society and thus the redemption of man, or saving the man and then making him the important factor in the restoration of the kingdom? Let there be no antagonism. In the last analysis, all will admit the mission of the pulpit is to proclaim salvation through Jesus Christ to every creature. As to the method of such proclamation, every servant of God, must be persuaded in his own mind, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. "Now, there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all."

Baptist

No Need to be Smart.

The world has in it a goodly number of people—perhaps a majority—who feel that religion should not make heavy demands upon their intelligence. For them faith and intellectual striving are incompatible. Others discover in the longing of man to comprehend his environment and himself, in his intellectual unrest, confirmation of the faith that is in them. Both classes are doing good work. Neither understands the other very well and each is suspicious of the other. As illustrating the sentiments of the first class we gave the following from Dr. J. B. Gambrell, editor of the Baptist Standard: (Dallas.)

Baptists do not have to know much compared with others. All a simple soul has to do is to keep in the Jordan road along which the blessed feet of Jesus trod and to look out for the tracks He made, and, after Him, Peter and Paul and the rest. It was Brother Paul who said, Follow me as I follow Christ. Baptists need not be smart. They do not have to invent any new doctrines. Their responsibilities are very limited—limited to the measure of men. They are not called on to mend the divine order, but to mind it. When they have done what the Master told them they stand in the clear and with the smile of heaven can face a frowning world. They do not have to obey the traditions of men nor even respect them, no matter how hoary with age they may be, nor how many people like them. Baptists have easy preaching. It is all in the Bible, laid to their hand, and in due order. The landmarks are set up just right, and they are plain. Repent, believe the gospel, confess Jesus, be baptized and so on. Negroes can see it as plain as daylight. Give a man, negro or what not, a five-cent New Testament, a meek spirit, a praying heart, and then turn him loose. He will find the way, which shines more and more to the perfect day—the Jordan road which cuts across the world on a bee line and runs on and on, till it enters the shining gate, opening into the city whose gates are pearls, whose streets are gold, whose light is the fadeless glory of the transfigured Christ.

We have some very keen, smart half or quarter Baptists, more or less, some of them less, who are now overworked on programs. They are so broadminded and wise, that they are about as silly as anybody else. They can't see that what they think or agree to no more changes truth than making new maps of the heavens will change the heavenly bodies in their courses. Becoming wise, they end with arrogant folly.

Baptists have nothing to change in religion. Christ has saved us much thinking by doing the thinking for us in advance. This gives us a rare chance to put in all our time on the work laid out for us. We ought to beat the world, the flesh and the devil, with all the smart set thrown in. We do not even have to take care of ourselves. The Master said, You go and I will go with you and "I will be with you alway, even to the end of the world." Going and staying with the truth, everything will work for our good. O my soul, learn the simple way and walk in it. My soul finds no delight in the stilts and starch, in the smirks and smiles of some, who long to be like the very fine people all round us. If we will stick together, stick to the simple truth, and stick to our work as laid at our hand, we will see the kingdom of God coming with such power as will awaken the sleeping nation. When we go out after the fads of the world we are hunting trouble and we are sure to find it.

Whoever reads these words of mine wherein he is equally convinced, let him go with me; wherein he equally hesitates, let him investigate with me; wherein he finds himself in error, let him return to me; wherein he finds me in error, let him call me back to him. So let us go on together in the way of love, pressing on toward him of whom it is said, Seek ye his face evermore.—St. Augustine.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

The Meaning of Christian Fellowship

The manner in which we deal with those who err reveals our strength or weakness. The weak man uses the mistakes of others to vindicate himself and to advance his personal interests. If other men sin, he feels that the world has no right to be exacting with him. The sins of others give him a chance to get the coveted office, to win popular favor, or to add to his wealth. The strong man is grieved when his brother is weak. He rejects indignantly the suggestion to build his fortune or his reputation upon the ruins of other men's lives. His success is shared by others. He rejoices that what benefits him is that which is beneficial to his neighbors and to all humanity.

The law is vindicated when the transgressor is restored to manhood and to good citizenship. The law is a guide to men that they may be mutually helpful. The rules of discipline adopted by the church are not ends in themselves; they are means of bringing members to a knowledge of themselves and of their opportunities of doing good. Therefore when some one is overtaken in a fault, discipline must be administered by the spiritually minded. Hard and fast legalism cannot render justice to anybody. This does not mean that we are to be indifferent to open and odious faults in the lives of church members. It does mean, however, that a wrong-doer has some rights and that the object of discipline is to save him and to increase the efficiency of the church.

In these days we have much to say about the minister and reform. It is possible that we do not emphasize as we should the work of the minister as friend and religious guide. He is a specialist in the business of building Christian character. He knows how to remedy defects. He can detect dangerous tendencies. He knows when to speak the word that cheers the discouraged and when to give the sharp, stinging rebuke. If he does not know these things, he lacks the essential qualifications of a minister of Jesus Christ. With him should be associated in the leadership of the church wise men and women, representing every aspect of life with which the church must deal. We cannot help people until we understand them thoroughly. The church is under obligation to use all its wisdom in order to gain a sympathetic understanding of the persons it is to serve.

Many are overtaken in trespasses because the conditions under which they live make it hard to do right and easy to do wrong. To save the fallen it is necessary to change some conditions. Miss Mary McDowell, writing of a city's part in the crime of its youth, says: "Chicago, or any other like city, is the criminal at the bar when its children fall into error because left to find for themselves in whatever way they can the outlet their nature demands.

"In the cities where the boy must live in a crowded tenement or in a public street, he is like an acorn planted in a flower pot. The nature of the acorn is to become an oak tree, and in following its God-given instinct it must, at a certain stage of development, burst through its limitations. So the boy who must share a few feet with many others, like the growing tree, bursts his bonds."

If the amusements of the young people are not of the right sort, the first business of the church is to inquire whether there is opportunity for recreation that is wholesome and refining. The bitter resentment felt toward the church in many a place has been aroused by an order to abandon certain forms of amusement which the church had put under the ban. To the young people this has often meant that the church was not interested in the things which make life worth while to youth. The leaders of the church, on the other hand, have had their convictions as to total depravity greatly strengthened by the obstinacy of youth in resisting the admonitions of age. Had the church been interested in playgrounds and in all games that give exercise to mind and body and had it given its approval ungrudgingly to the proposition that play is essential for old and young, it would have saved from falling many who are now lost to it.

Faith in God develops self-respect and self-reliance. The Christian knows his own responsibility and this he does not meanly throw upon some other person. Our Christian fellowship develops independence. We learn to accept our mistakes as our own. We confess our sins: we do not charge them up to our neighbors. We accept our share of the common work and danger and disappointment. Midweek Service, June 14. Gal. 6:1-6; Matt. 5:43-48; Lu. 10: 25-37; Eph. 2:19-22; Phil. 1:3-8; I Thess. 3:2; I John 2:9-11; 4: 20, 21. S. J.

An Unescapable Issue

The fact that their Christian union ideal is at last being taken seriously by the Christian world is compelling the Disciples to think through the question of the status of the unimmersed members of the evangelical denominations.

This is a question upon which the Disciples have always maintained a more or less non-committal attitude. It is the one point at which our characteristic intellectual courage has failed.

Few writers among us have bravely faced the issue and formulated our attitude in clean-cut terms. We have used tentative, vague and non-committal phrases in speaking of Congregationalists and Presbyterians. We have called them "our religious neighbors," "our brethren of the denominations," "the pious unimmersed," and so forth and so forth.

On the one hand is our practice of close membership which would seem to imply that only those are Christians, members of the body of Christ, who have been immersed.

On the other hand is our plea for union, which would seem to imply the conviction that underneath all the differences of doctrine and polity and ritual there is already existing the one catholic Church of Christ in which all to whom the plea is made are already members.

It is the presence of these contradictory implications in our practice and our plea that has inhibited a clear, straight-out thinking through of the question of the actual status of those whom we have never been willing either to freely admit to full membership in the church of Christ or to frankly consign to the level of the unregenerate.

There is much satisfaction, therefore, in the providential issue which has been raised on the foreign mission field. In India, China, Japan, Korea and other heathen lands the Christian community is much farther along on the way to unity than are we in the homeland. There the obstacles are less formidable and the incentives are felt with greater urgency.

Moving in the direction of an indigenous united church in their several countries, these native Christians and our missionaries to them have discovered that the nub of the problem of unity is the question of status. The question takes two forms: Will each church recognize the validity of the orders—i.e. the ministerial ordination—of the clergy of the other churches? And, will each church recognize the validity of the present membership of the other churches? This second question carries with it, either by express statement or implication, the validity of the baptism by which membership in the churches is constituted.

Manifestly there can be no unity without this equality of status, both of membership and of ministry. The basic test of the reality of union is the practice of free interchange of members and ministers.

It is understood that a majority of the Disciple missionaries in India are in favor of this practice of free interchange of members without demanding the re-baptism of those who come to our missions from Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist and the other churches.

The time has been too short since the issue has been raised in the homeland for the brotherhood to collect its wits and utter itself in terms that shall adequately express its ideal of unity and its awareness of the new day in which we are living.

There is wide variety of statement on the pages of the Disciples' journals. The Christian Standard took the first chance to feed its ancient grudge against the Foreign Society by holding it responsible for the swift and unsuspected development of Christian union sentiment among the missionaries. The most sinister threat which that sinister organ has ever held over our brotherhood is that which it now makes to use its influence to deflect money from the missionary treasury unless the society shall repudiate its missionaries who believe in practicing Christian union in foreign lands.

And the most profane words which have ever shamed the Disciples of Christ in the eyes of the Christian world are those used by the Standard in characterizing Congregationalist, Presbyterian, and Methodist Christians in foreign lands as "unbaptized heathen enrolled by denominational missionaries."

The Christian Evangelist is prudently waiting for more light—whether from the missionaries, or from a fresh study of the principles involved, or from the brethren, it does not say. It is still in the stage of equivocal speech, using words which avoid the issue as far as possible. The Christian Evangelist is usually, in the long run, on the right side of great issues, but in the really sensitive questions that come up it too often waits to declare itself until a big enough body of sentiment has collected to guarantee the outcome. We could wish to see our contemporary lead, even if it seemed to us sometimes to lead backward.

The conviction of The Christian Century on the question is well known to all our readers. This paper believes that Methodists, Presbyterians and the rest are Christians, members of the church of Christ, baptized members of the church of Christ. Believing this, there is no conceivable Christian attitude to take toward any who apply for fellowship with us save to acknowledge them as members of the church and receive them joyfully into the fullest fellowship.

In a word, The Christian Century recognizes "the validity of the ordinances, ministry, membership and discipline" of the churches to whom the Disciples make their plea for union.

The correspondence received at this office in the form of questions, contributions, congratulations and protests, indicates that a new stage in the development of our movement has surely been reached, that a too-long avoided issue must be fairly faced, and that there is no doubt about the ultimate outcome.

The two graces which The Christian Century covets above all in bearing whatever responsibility shall devolve upon it are: great plainness of speech, and great patience with those who honestly see oppositely to us.

God's providence has raised the issue. He will see that it is settled in truth.

A Regrettable Incident

We have received several communications commenting upon the part taken by Mr. R. A. Long at the meeting of the National Lumber Dealers' Association in Chicago last week. The newspapers report that Mr. Long made an address eulogizing Mr. Edward Hines, the president of the association, who is notoriously connected in the public mind and in the evidence submitted to the Illinois State senate with the corrupt election of William Lorimer to the United States senate. Mr. Hines, it is charged, and widely believed, was the organizer of the corruption fund, advancing much of the money himself with the expectation of being reimbursed by others interested afterward. In the conclusion of Mr. Long's speech he said:

"Mr. Hines has worked harder and more effectively for the lumber interests of the United States than any other man and has set a pace which it will tax his successor to maintain.

"And in proof of the statement that our faith in you is unshaken and that we see in you the most valuable president this organization ever had I extend you my hand."

Next day one of the daily papers pointed out that Senator La-Follette at about the same hour in which Mr. Long spoke was characterizing Mr. Hines in much the same words before the senate in Washington but with an appreciably different meaning.

The Christian Century regrets that Mr. Long was drawn into a situation where his amiable and generous disposition was taken advantage of to commit him, even in appearance, to the wrong side of a great moral issue. We do not think Mr. Long clearly sensed the public feeling, especially in Illinois, the state most concerned, or he would not have allowed himself to be a party to a dramatic vindication of the man whom public opinion, based on credible evidence, holds guilty of corrupting our legislature.

It is due Mr. Long that readers of the incident note that his part in the convention was extemporaneous. He was drafted to take the place of another on the program. It was not unnatural in such circumstances that his kindly personal impulses would carry him beyond the bounds which his own deliberate judgment would have set had his part been known to him in advance.

While the incident is regrettable, it can quite easily be magnified beyond its just proportions in the present state of public indignation at the men who have had any part whatever in the unrighteous deal by which Mr. Lorimer is believed to have gained his senatorial honor. Mr. Long's Disciple brethren will no doubt make due allowance for the impulsive nature of his part in the affair and not regard it with too great gravity.

Yet it is heartening to discover signs of the not ungracious sensitiveness of the Disciples of Christ to the attitude their prominent men take in these great moral social crises. The Disciples at the present moment are a leaderless people. No man stands out as the particular prophet and spokesman of the brotherhood. There is wide variety, if not confusion, of thought and policy amongst us. But probably there is no man who better deserves to be called a leader of his brethren than R. A. Long, of Kansas City. In him are invested more of the moral treasures of our high enterprise than in any other. We do not look to him, a layman, a business man, for theological leadership. His pronouncement in the current church-fellowship controversy, for example, would be only one man's opinion.

But in the highest realm where the real battles of righteousness are being fought—beside which a discussion over baptism seems almost profane—in the realm of social righteousness, Mr. Long's example and words go far. Orthodoxy on baptism seems like a tinkling cymbal in the presence of the great struggle society is making to throw off the debasing grip of wealth on political affairs.

Whatever attitude one may take on the question of giving the right hand of fellowship to other Christians, it is of supreme importance that Christian leaders refrain from extending the hand of fellowship to a man most responsibly connected in the public mind with the most notorious and noisome instance of political corruption in many years. And it is heartening to know that the Disciples look to Mr. Long for leadership in fighting the people's battles against just that sort of wrong.

Foreign Society Denies Charges Made by Christian Standard

The following statement was presented to the Christian Standard after its forms were prepared for the press last week. The editor stated that further articles of criticism of the Foreign Society were being published in that paper.

"Feeling that some might be influenced by The Standard's charges and that because of it the Children's Day offering might be affected and the great work damaged," the officers of the Society sent through the mails, presumably to the preachers and Sunday-school superintendents, copies of the statement submitted to The Standard.

A Statement from the Executive Committee of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

"It was published in an editorial in The Christion Standard of April 29 that the Hyde Park church selected Guy W. Sarvis as a missionary to China, and the impression was left upon the mind of the readers that he was selected because he was in accord with the views of the Hyde Park church and Dr. Ames, its minister. This impression was also left in The Standard of May 20.

"This representation of the facts is entirely erroneous and misleading. There is no basis for it either in fact or in truth. The Hyde Park church did not select Guy W. Sarvis, and had nothing whatever to do with his selection and appointment. The Society was in correspondence with Brother Sarvis for three years. While he was yet a student in Drake University, S. J. Corey visited him, with a view to his appointment. The Society appointed him without any reference whatever to the Hyde Park church. Their relation to the Hyde Park church will be the same as that of any other missionaries to the churches that pay their salaries. Their work will be directed by the Society, and not by that church.

"Nor is it true that Brother Sarvis approves or desires to carry out the Hyde Park plan on the mission field. When he was before the Committee he was questioned closely as to his faith and his views. His answers were so explicit and so satisfactory that he was unanimously appointed. Since the question has been raised by The Standard, he has written here that he does not believe in the adoption of the Hyde Park plan, either at home or abroad. If he understands himself, he agrees with the brethren in all essential matters. He writes that Carl E. Smith is mistaken as to his position.

"The Committee has never at any time sent out any man to any field unless it was thoroughly satisfied that he was loyal to his Lord and that he would not shun to declare the whole counsel of God and that he would worthily represent the brotherhood that supported him.

"What is said about C. B. Titus in the editorial is equally erroneous and misleading. During the dozen years or more that Brother Titus has been in China he has been unable to work in harmony with his fellow missionaries, and on this account they have requested that he be recalled. His objection to the union in educational work in Nanking was only one incident in a long series. If that had been all, there would have been no thought of his recall. If the Committee has erred in his case, it has been on the side of patience and forbearance. The Committee suffered long and was kind.

"The editorial intimation that there is some connection between the selection of Guy W. Sarvis and the proposed recall of C. B. Titus is absolutely groundless. The two things have no relation whatever.

"It is a matter for profound regret that The Standard did not avail itself of the means easily within its reach for ascertaining the facts as above stated. Instead of publishing harmful statements which have not been proved, and then calling on the Society to print a statement correcting them if they are not true, it is only fair to ask that every means be taken to ascertain the truth before publication, to the end that the cause of Missions, which is cause of God, may not suffer injury.

"The work of the Society is the work of the brotherhood, and not of the Executive Committee. If the Executive Committee does not discharge its duties faithfully it can be displaced at any annual convention. The Society has sent men and women to all parts of the world. These workers should be supported. If an atmosphere of suspicion and distrust is created and the income of the Society thereby reduced, the sufferers will not be the Executive Committee, but the men and women who have gone out, trusting in God and their brethren for support."

Editorial Table Talk

And We, Too, Say Amen!

President A. McLean of the Foreign Society urges the responsive use of the "Amen" in the services of the churches. Writing in the Christian Evangelist, he points out the biblical warrant for his position and says, "It is plain that the church has done herself a wrong in discontinuing its use. Every one who joins intelligently and heartily in the prayers is helped of God. The prayer becomes his prayer, and the blessing received in answer is his blessing. Every one who fails to join in the petitions and in the thanksgivings loses much. Not only so, but the man who leads in the public prayer is greatly helped by an audible and hearty 'Amen' on the part of the entire audience at the close of the prayer. Nothing could be more depressing than the silence that reigns in most churches when the prayer is ended. A response like a burst of thunder would help the spokesman and all the believers and the strangers present, and would be pleasing to God. Nothing in the Edinburgh Conference impressed some of those who attended more than the articulate and universal response at the end of every prayer. The response was like the sound of many waters. The 'Amen' showed that all were attending to what was said and approving the same. If we are determined to restore every item of New Testament Christianity we must restore the use of this word in our public worship. At the close of every prayer let all the people say, 'Amen.'"

The Call of the Minister

The Religious Telescope has felt it necessary to discuss the call to the ministry. What constitutes such a call? Who is to decide when the Spirit of God gives it? "If the call is individual, the one called must have sufficient interpretive power to recognize the voice and read its meaning. If the call comes to the church, a devotional life in the church is necessary to hear and understand." The duty of the church is thus stated:

> Our denomination has not put too much stress upon God's work, but it has ignored the work of the church to a very large degree. The General Conference action in creating an order of lay preachers looks toward giving the church greater privilege. While holding tenaciously to the divine call in theory, we have placed the final power in the hands of men. Still, there is a way by which our theory and our practice may be in greater harmony. When a young man applies for a license, we expect him to say that he is called to preach; nevertheless, the license is not granted except in the minds of a committee he shows special fitness for the task. After all, men of the church sit in judgment either on the call of the preacher or his interpretation of that call. If a man makes good in the ministry, we conclude that the call was genuine and that it was read aright. If one makes a failure, we are inclined to say that he was mistaken in his call. In theory we have held that God must take the initiative and do most of the work. In practice we have made actual results in pulpit and pastorate cast their influence backward a dozen years to reveal whether the man was mistaken in thinking he was called to preach. Licenses are granted, renewed, and made permanent by men of the church.

—Those who read The Christian Evangelist's confident criticism of The Christian Century's recent utterances on Christian union and The Christian Century's detailed reply are finding considerable amusement in the attempt of the St. Louis paper to divert the discussion to a totally irrelevant issue. Not a single point made by this paper has been even looked at by our contemporary, but, instead, the brethren have been led off into a consideration of the question whether or no the Campbells and Errett and other great leaders of the Disciples in former days were in favor of practicing Christian union with all members of the Church of Christ. This question has never been raised by The Christian Century. It is a purely fictitious issue conjured up by The Christian Evangelist apparently to obscure the real issue. The truth of the matter is that the "fathers" never fairly faced the question that we face today. If the contributors to the Christian Evangelist's symposium will re-read our articles they will find in them no ground at all for the construction which the editorial writer on the Christian Evangelist has arbitrarily given our words. At a later time it is our purpose to have something to say on the historical aspect of the problem. But meanwhile the brethren would, we believe, like to have The Christian Evangelist say something to the point which its earlier editorial rather smartly called in question. That point was stated in The Christian Century of last week and is restated in this issue, so it ought not occasion our contemporary much trouble to find it.

—At their state association held in Moline two weeks ago, Illinois Congregationalists discussed the subject of closer relations looking toward unity with the Disciples of Christ. A first-page editorial published some weeks ago in The Christian Century was read on the floor of the Association by Rev. J. H. Chandler, Western Editor of The Congregationalist, and several hearty speeches made on behalf of closer relations. A wrong impression of the spirit of the Disciples was given by certain delegates who represented them as proselyters, and sectarians of the extremest type with respect to the dogma of immersion. On account of these representations the Association was confused and referred its resolution to the Committee on Comity in the belief that the catholic spirit of the Christian Century editorial did not fairly reflect the temper of the body as a whole. It is hoped that something may be done to reassure the committee that the Disciples are deeply in earnest in their talk for Christian union.

—Announcement is made in "Christian Men." thatP. C. Macfarlane, secretary of the Brotherhood of Disciples, will retire from that position in July. He will devote himself to literary and religious work. Mr. Macfarlane has been the head and heart of the Brotherhood movement from the start, nearly three years ago. He has faced the difficulties peculiar to a pioneer enterprise and with them the criticisms of those who thought they could do the work better than he and the fixed indifference of those who thought the work wasn't worth being done anyhow. For a year his health has not been good. He has not been able to push the work with his normal energy. Literary work, especially the writing of stories, will prove both congenial and lucrative to him. The Christian Century wishes for him recovered health and increasing success in his work. We are glad that he says he will devote himself to literary and religious work. Mr. Macfarlane is too true an idealist to be an ecclesiastic and he is to be felicitated upon the freedom which his new work will allow.

—The Old Testament in Korean has just been completed, thus making the whole Bible available for the people of Korea for the first time in their history.

You have the spring of eternal life within you—it is called hope. Bathe in its crystal waters, ask not from whence it comes, refresh yourself and be thankful.—Lillian Sincere Ahrens.

Interpretations

CHURCH STIMULANTS.

The Sunday-schools of Hannibal, Mo., have just concluded an eight weeks' contest with those of Quincy. During this contest all schools more than doubled in attendance. One that had an average attendance during February of 180 had present the last day of the contest 811. The most dignified churches of both cities manifested great interest in the contest. The outcome is only of local interest. Of course Hannibal easily won, but the motives of appeal are of universal concern. Why do people do as they do? is a question which in some phase or other we consider every day. Because it has so many fringes of mystery it remains an eternal problem. Counting is a pastime dearly loved by the human race. The regenerate often do not regard this pleasure as entirely belonging to the world. I see, since I left Chicago, even the Hyde Park Church is giving forth its attendance and guarding the scientific accuracy of the same "by an actual count." We all love majorities. Somebody counted at Pentecost. The evangelists would not be so careful as to numbers if the rest of us were not mathematicians in religion.

One thing in favor of a church contest is that it is human. Who does not love to match himself against another in a game? Too much of our so-called religious life is outside of the human circles of activity. It does not grip and control. A contest is a relief from superimposed religiosity. Then a contest is not a vow for a whole lifetime, but only for a few weeks. It is love and duty taken on a brief trial. Most people like to be good for a few days at a time. The experience helps them to respect themselves. They can tell their children of their splendid record. Our contest was not so much with Quincy as it was among ourselves. There was a tense rivalry among the local schools. The papers published the attendance of each school. A man walked with a more important air to his work Monday morning if his school was ahead Sunday. We like bigness. We can stand more erect when propped up by the crowd about us. One school that has been here for over half a century and is connected with one of the larger denominations had only fifty-one in attendance the last day of our notable contest. If I could know the feelings of those fifty-one and interpret them, I would be getting near to the profound emotions of the saints of all time. We hear nothing but tabulations now. I would like to be able to tell the soul history of one of the fifty-one, and the reason why he is content to be numbered with so small a group. Some conviction, some mother's love, some sorrow, some grave, some hope—or perchance some prejudice and narrow loyalty—must be holding him to his humiliation.

A contest is democratic—each counts one. A mother, who brought her babe of a few weeks, said she regretted it was not twins so it would count two. There is spiritual safety in the real human aspects of a contest.

But—and all our enthusiasms after their uncurbed expression must write "but"—there is not much of the New Testament atmosphere about a contest. The former has the note of eternity; and thus stimulates the soul to life vows; while the latter is a temporary stimulant that is apt to bring a dangerous reaction. Every reader of these lines knows full well that we in these days are doing violence to our religious natures, to the only Gospel of Christ and to his church by our use of unnatural stimulants. The only cure is a return to the eternity of the New Testamet. There the soul will feed upon that which will make it mighty. It will gain strength for every task. The church and Sunday-school member will learn to pray. What a great thing it is to pray! To pray is to be born anew. It is to fire the imagination. It is to carry in your own soul that of your scholar, friend or child. The soul that prays never grows faint, never gives up. Its contest is the kingdom of Heaven set against that of sin, darkness and ignorance. When the great revival of a century ago came from heaven to revive the fainting ones of the church, a discerning minister gave as explanation, "The church has learned to pray again." Prayer like love will find a way. It will follow the scholar with the passion of the cross. The cross is the New Testament atmosphere, and in it the Sunday-school must have its permanent stimulant.

All through life I see a cross
Where sons of God yield up their breath.
There is no gain except by loss:
There is no life except by death;
There is no vision except by faith;
Nor glory but by bearing shame."

GEORGE A. CAMPBELL.

Monday Moods

"AND ENOCH WALKED WITH GOD."

Our modern Enoch, Jacob F. Burgman, is dead. At one o'clock Wednesday afternoon, May 24, his strong, heroic spirit joined the noble company of just men made perfect. For more than fifty years this dear old man was an elder of the First Church, Bloomington, Ill., and custodian of that temple of God. For more than half a century he has never missed a service at the church unless hindered by illness, which until recently was very seldom. At a conservative estimate, he welcomed five thousand persons from the baptismal pool with a cordial hand clasp and a fervent "God bless you" on his lips.

He looked the saint he was. His Christian career was a noble exegesis of the splendid motto: "In faith unity, in opinion liberty, in all things charity."

He was the most guileless of men. He never impugned motives nor dwelt on the frailties of his fellowmen. To the very last, he was a growing Christian. He never lagged behind in the onmarch of truth or made the mistake of confounding the forms of religion with the life or spirit.

Our brother's love for his church amounted almost to a passion. For him rainbows of glory flamed above its pulpit and to his eyes of faith the great Spirit of God was present there as truly as the Shekinah was to the ancient Jew worshiping in the Temple.

The relationship that this dear old saint sustained to his pastor was familiar and close as it was unique. He carried a key to the study and came and went as he chose. He read my books, and many of my papers. He was interested in everything that was worth while. His was the spirit of eternal youth.

It was a great privilege, after the stress of a busy day, or in the very midst of manifold duties, to lay aside everything and converse with this man who lived above the clouds, yet withal was so practical, so useful, so good. Few will miss him more sorely than J. H. Gilliland, his former pastor, and myself.

Poor in this world's goods, our brother was a millionaire in faith and good works, and the Bank of Heaven loved to honor his drafts upon the vast treasure he had laid up "where neither moth nor rust doth consume and where thieves do not break through and steal."

His life was beautiful and the elements of faith and love so intermingled in his character that all our citizenship might stand up and say, "Here was a Christian."

Reflecting on our brother's life, its fulness of beauty and faith, I have found myself turning to the phraseology of John Bunyan in his immortal allegory. Only such grand and mystical language seems appropriate for the thoughts that crowded their way into our minds as we tenderly away in mother earth laid all that was mortal of Jacob F. Burgman.

"Now, I saw in my dream that this man went in at the gate, and lo, as he entered he was transfigured and he had raiment put on that shone like gold. They were also that met him with harps and a crown and gave them to him, the harps to praise withal and the crown in token of honor. Then I heard in my dream that all the bells in the city rang again for joy and that it was said unto him: Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

* * *

Gen. Z. T. Sweeney of Columbus, Ind., writes concerning Col. Edward D. Baker, of whom this column spoke recently, that he was well known as a Disciple among the older Disciples of Illinois. "Senator Baker preached some in the Christian Church, his mother was one of the most faithful Disciples in Illinois and was a member of my brother John's congregation at Winchester. His brother, Dr. J. H. Baker, was a member of my father's congregation in Barry, Ill., and afterward became a surgeon in the Union army. Dr. Baker had three children, the oldest being named after his uncle, Edward Baker. He was a West Pointer, lives now at Barry. The second son we called 'Bud' Baker, was about my age; I have studied, scrapped and fished with him in our boyhood days. The youngest child was a girl, Carrie Baker, my first boyhood flame. The whole Baker family were Disciples. When Col. Baker was at Ball's Bluff just before he was killed, he ordered his regiment to lie down while he himself stood. One of his officers said to him, 'Colonel, lie down also,' he replied, 'When you have served in the Senate of the United States, you will never lie down before its enemies.' Col. Baker was a superb man and a faithful disciple."

EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

The Visitor

When it was announced two years ago that an exposition was in progress in the city of London illustrative of missionary activity in various parts of the world, few people on this side of the Atlantic were inclined to believe that such an enterprise could be more than a small and imperfect effort to set forth a great theme. In fact, the most explicit and ample accounts that appeared in the English press wholly failed to convey any impression that would serve to remove this first limited conception of the plan.

Missionary Playing with Boy.

To be sure, there were those who saw the exposition and came home to America astonished at what had been done. But even they would have doubted the practicability of attempting to reproduce so impressive an interpretation of missions in this country. Their visit to London and its great missionary tableau was almost like a shorter trip to mission lands.

* * * *

But now this enterprise has been reproduced on our own soil.

Mother Teaching Child to Worship in Buddhist Temple.

"The World in Boston" has passed into history as a monumental achievement, rivaling in all regards, and excelling in some, even the London exposition. It was this great picture of world-wide missionary endeavor that formed one of the chief attractions which drew the Visitor to Boston during the opening days of the exhibit. For months news had come of the preparations made for the great event. Under the direction of Rev. William Gardner, the general secretary of the London enterprise, who was brought over to superintend the first of the American reproductions of the picture, the Christian workers of Boston and vicinity had been carefully drilled for for the parts they were to take.

Imagine the active Christian workers, men, women and children, of a hundred or more churches in and near a great city, marshalled for weekly and sometimes more frequent rehearsals, from mid-winter to the first of May. Not less than fifteen thousand persons took active part in the great missionary picture. Each one promised to devote two hours a week during the period of the exposition, and rehearsed faithfully for the specific duties of those two hours through the months of preparation.

* * * *

Bearing in mind the presence and interest of this army of Christian workers throughout the four weeks of the exposition, let us pay a visit to this most impressive demonstration of the power and far-reaching character of missionary work.

The exposition was held in the Mechanics Building, a short distance beyond Trinity Church and the Public Library, on Huntington avenue. The immense floor space of the first and second levels of this building were completely covered by the different sections. Along the passageways you saw grouped in inclosures, suitably decorated to illustrate the different regions and climates, colonies representing the American Indians, the Negroes, the native Africans, the people of Hawaii, the West Indies, India, Burmah, Ceylon, China, Japan and Mohammedan lands.

In each of these sections the Christian workers of Boston assumed the part of the natives, aided only here and there by a few native Christians who had come from the far lands either to become residents of American or helpers for the exposition. But for the most part those who took the parts of the various groups were the Christian men, women and children of Boston, and the elaborate and thorough-going way in which they assumed their parts as to costume, activities and ability to interpret the manners and customs of the lands for which they spoke, was astonishing and deeply interesting.

These people acted out the daily life, the educational work, the religious manners and customs and the domestic duties of the far lands. Here you saw the women grinding the corn in a Bedouin tent; there a group of Indian women weaving baskets; yonder a Hindoo priest performing the offices of his religion; and all portrayed with a fidelity and a painstaking accuracy that made one feel that he was actually witnessing the scenes of remote lands.

* * * *

One considerable section of the main floor was occupied by the "Hall of Religions." Here the religious practices of the various faiths were presented, all the way from the most primitive with their rude idol figures and their superstitious use of magic and charms, through such religions as Hinduism with its trinity of Shiva, the destroyer, Kali, his bloody and repulsive wife, and Ganesha, their elephant-headed son; Buddhism with its great teacher Guatama sitting in calm meditation; Confucianism with its ancestral tablets; Taoism with its terrible gods and its nine hells; Shintoism with its worship of ancestors and its adoration of the sun, to Mohammedanism with its replica of the beautiful pearl mosque at Agra containing the pulpit and copy of the Koran.

Of course no hasty ramble through an apartment of this character can give an adequate idea of these various faiths, but if sufficient time can be spent the educational value of a careful inspection of the different cults is admirably informing.

* * * *

One of the most interesting of all the features connected with the great exposition is the illustration of missionary methods as used in the different lands. There are the printing establishments for the distribution of the Scriptures and tracts; there are the schools conducted by the missionaries.

Tea House and Jinriksha.—Japan Scene.

and the work of this instruction is amply and admirably set forth either by the individual method of a teacher with a single child-pupil, or a group eagerly listening to the instruction of a mission teacher. There is the street, temple and chapel preaching; there are the various forms of medical and surgical missionary work, with their attractive equipments of medicines and instruments. These and many other scenes from the mission stations serve to convey some partial impression regarding the manifold activities of modern missionary work.

Not the least interesting of these special exhibits was that of the leper missions, now carried on in the various lands afflicted with this scourge. The society which devotes itself to this particular branch of missionary effort operates through the mission stations of the various denominational boards, but binds together the efforts in behalf of lepers into one united system.

There was also a room in which a constant succession of stereopticon views, including motion pictures, presented scenes of interest from the different lands. The representation of some of the darker forms of superstition as they may be still seen in ancient lands was convincing. The process of foot-binding in China and the self-inflicted tortures of religious fanatics in India were very realistic.

* * * *

Perhaps the feature which most attracted the Visitor to the exposition was the pageant, "Darkness and Light," given twice daily on a great stage in the hall adjoining Mechanics Building. It is a great musical drama in four scenes or episodes, each representing some important event in the progress of world evangelism. These four scenes are followed by a fifth representing a procession of the nations to the cross of Christ. The text of this impressive work was written by Mr. John Oxenham, and the music was composed by Mr. Hamish MacCunn. The four scenes are illustrative of missions in the north, south, east and west.

The first depicts the feud between a tribe of Indians and a group of Eskimo traders, opportunely terminated by the arrival of a missionary who has found in the forest the child of the Indian chief, supposed to have been stolen by the traders.

The second is the meeting of Stanley and Livingstone in the heart of Africa. A more thrilling and impressive bit of acting could hardly be imagined.

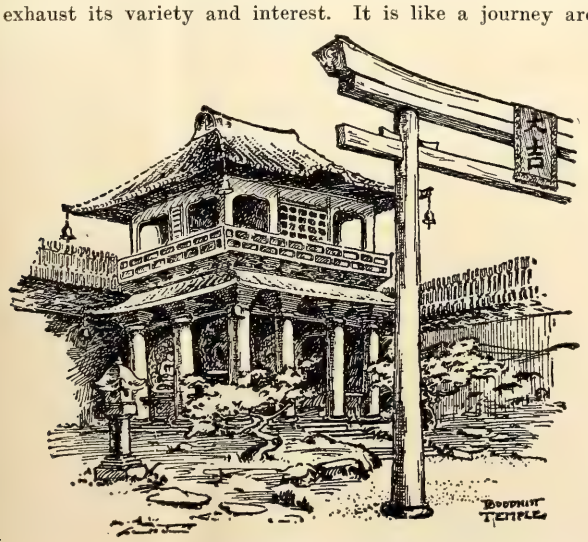
A third is the abolition of Suttee, the burning of child widows with the bodies of their husbands. This dramatic event occurred in 1829 and formed the most important invasion of native custom by Christian teaching.

The last of the four scenes represents the defiance of the goddess of fire, Pele, by Queen Kapiolani of Hawaii, who defies the goddess and the priests, and proves that their power is only a superstition, thus ending forever the immolation of human victims in the beautiful islands of the Pacific.

The conduct of the pageant was admirable in every way. The solo parts were taken with fine ability by leading singers of the church choirs of Boston, and the chorus work was adequate and sincere.

* * * *

It is difficult even to suggest the greatness and impressiveness of the exposition as a whole. Many days of constant attendance could not exhaust its variety and interest. It is like a journey around the world, in which both the good and the evil are brought to attention. But everywhere there is evident the slow but certain pervasion of human life with the Christian ideal.



Japanese Torii and Temple.

Women at Door of Zenana.—India Scene.

The business management of the exposition is in the hands of a company that has advanced the money for this elaborate production. Many features have of course been transferred from England, but many others are quite new. The history of the expositions in London and elsewhere in England has demonstrated the financial solvency of the plan. It is the expectation that all expenses will be met by the gate receipts, but no large profits are anticipated or desired.

Already plans have been made to reproduce this great exposition in other important cities of America. Almost immediately sections of it will be set up in cities in various parts of the East. But the exposition as a whole will be repeated in Chicago the year after next, and perhaps other large cities will attempt a similar plan.

But after all, the feature that most impresses the Visitor is the immense educational value involved in this enterprise. The thousands of people who visit it will gain a new and vital conception of what missionary work really means. Few individuals in even the largest cities will escape the spell of this great and fascinating picture. People will be compelled to see it, whether or not they are interested in missionary work, and once having seen it they will be incapable of total indifference or aversion henceforth.

And the greatest of all the educational advantages involved will accrue to that host of Christian people, who under the discipline of long preparation and later of regular dramatic interpretation, will pass from general to specific and intelligent interest in missionary work. The educational value of such an experience is not to be reckoned in calculated terms. A period of such activity is like a small section of real missionary labor on the foreign field, and all formal description such as that afforded by books and missionary journals passes on to vivid impressions wrought out of personal experience in the delineations and explanations of the scenes of mission life to the spectators who throng the aisles of the great panorama.

Surely with the coming of this new interpretation of the fields and facts of missionary work we are passing into a new stage of intelligent enthusiasm for the greatest of all the tasks committed to the church of Christ.

God is a kind Father. He sets us all in the places where He wishes us to be employed, and that employment is truly "our Father's business." He chooses work for every creature which will be delightful to them, if they do it simply and humbly. He gives us always strength enough and sense enough for what He wants us to do; if we either tire ourselves or puzzle ourselves, it is our own fault. And we may always be sure, whatever we are doing, that we can not be pleasing Him if we are not happy ourselves—John Ruskin.

The Social Gospel

BY JAMES SMALL.

Editors' Note—The note sounded by Mr. Small in this well-conceived article has exceptional significance. The author is a well-known and widely successful evangelist among the Disciples. Evangelism, not among Disciples alone but in most evangelical churches, has proclaimed an individualistic gospel for the most part. That the social aspect of the gospel is subject matter for evangelistic preaching has not yet been firmly grasped by the church. If Mr. Small's insight into this truth which more and more dominates the thinking of today were caught by our evangelists there would be a marvelous transformation of the methods and ideals of Christian propaganda.

I must preach, said Jesus, the kingdom of God, and out in a Galilean mountain he sent out his disciples to preach the gospel and that to every creature. We are beginning to see that the revival that only concerns the individual is not the complete gospel that Jesus and his apostles brought the world. It seems by the text quoted there is a double gospel in the New Testament, one for the individual and the other for society. If the individual aim of the gospel is the creation of a man in Christ Jesus, the ultimate aim of the gospel is the creation of a new society according to Christ Jesus.

We are coming to see that social salvation is as much a part of the evangel of Jesus, as individual salvation. We must not neglect either. We must seek to hold things in proportion. We must love our brother's material and moral as well as his spiritual welfare. The program of Jesus calls for a Christianized community and a Christianized nation as well as for a Christianized man. We cannot convert men by multitudes. The way to mend society, it is true, is to mend the individuals in society. The community will be elevated only as the individuals composing the community is elevated. A pack of wolves is as the individual wolves that compose the pack—no more human nor no less human.

Salvation Individual.

Still Jesus knew there were hindrances in society that kept men away from him and his gospel. Of course, many men are where they are because they are what they are. Therefore, Jesus dealt primarily with the individual. He knew too that men are what they are because they are where they are, and he preached the gospel of the kingdom. He sought, in a word, to bring about a renewed society which would give every soul a morally helpful environment. The church, then, must realize that "God never makes any half hinges," nor can the church live and thrive and do its work on a half truth. The church must preach, practice and appropriate all the truth that it may win the world.

I know as I have said, that individual salvation lies back of and must precede social salvation, because I know you cannot build a marble palace but of mud bricks. You must have spiritual men to build a spiritual kingdom. You must have clean Christian men to make a clean Christian commonwealth.

Program of Jesus.

These two purposes of Jesus, the regeneration of the human soul and the regeneration of human society must ever be before us for the problem of a better and diviner type of human society. I know that Jesus taught men that the believer continues to live and work and serve just as if nothing had happened. I know he taught men that life is continuous, that death is not the end, that there is life and work beyond the grave, and we are thankful for such a revelation. Anyone who will read Job xiv and John xiv will see how much superior the revelation of the new covenant is to the old on the subject of immortality. If Job had ever heard of a risen Saviour he would not have asked: "If a man die shall he live again?"

The ancients through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. Thankful we ought to be that the charmer of death planted the lamp of immortal hope in the darkened tomb so that he who goes into the grave goes into it with the light and hope of Him who has conquered death and who has made death gain. I know all that and with emphasis I will preach it to every broken heart, but I also know that Jesus came to establish a kingdom on earth. He came to regenerate and reconstruct human society. It was a kingdom of heaven on earth. Not long since when I was pleading for social justice and social salvation from the pulpit, one of the elders of the church said: "Brother, didn't Jesus say my kingdom is not of this world." This man meant that his kingdom had nothing to do with trade or business or politics, that it was heavenly and we must not think it applies to this work-a-day world. Christ did say, "My kingdom is not of this world." It is not worldly, not secular.

Rev. James Small.

The Kingdom Here.

But while it is not of the world it is in the world. While it is in the ages it is not of the ages. Worldly kingdoms are based and built on the blood of enemies. Christ built his kingdom on his own blood. Worldly kingdoms are built on the suffering of others; Christ built his kingdom on his own suffering. Worldly kingdoms are built on victory over enemies; Christ's kingdom is built on the love he bore his enemies. He did not reach his throne as other kings reached theirs. Their rule was obtained often by inheritance or election or conquest—often by jealousies, ambitions and the oppression which crushed the weak and exalted the strong. In none of these ways did Jesus become king. Therefore, he could say: "My kingdom is not of this world."

Christ's Reign.

Nor does he maintain his rule and authority as the secular potentates do. With them it is force, fraud or diplomacy or the sword. He reigns from a cross. A towel was the symbol of his reign and a tree the symbol of his throne. Had he made his throne in Jerusalem and his kingdom had been secular, the night in which he was tried. Caiaphas would have been stoned and Pilate crucified. Peter, the Ben Hur of the apostles, waited for a few words from Jesus, and an immense crowd of Galileans would have been stirred up by him to snatch Jesus from his foes and crown him on Zion's hill the successor of David, the king of Israel.

Nature of Kingdom.

And so the nature, objects and tendency of the kingdom of Christ are not of this world. Most kingdoms are short-lived. His is eternal. The kingdoms of this world touch the outside, his the inside of men. The grave ends theirs; the grave continues his. The grave can swallow theirs. The grave enlarges his. What Mark calls "the kingdom of God," Matthew calls "the kingdom of heaven," hence they must mean one and the same thing. Yet by an antithesis "the kingdom of heaven" stands opposed to the kingdoms of earth, the great world-wide empires that lived and ruled by the strength of their armies. "The kingdom of God" has as its opposite the kingdom of Satan, the great empire of anarchy and darkness, creative of misery and death to man.

Inside the secular kingdoms of earth, there is another kingdom: and one can be a loyal subject in both. Like a barrel—it can be full of vinegar and full of apples at the same time. So a man can be patriotic and loyal to Jesus at the same moment too. There can be no conflict between a just government and a pure church. Human governments will likely go on while there is crime. Jesus chose to let the civil and municipal governments go forward. What he seeks to do is to make them just, humane and righteous. As a king he would rule in the hearts and intellects of men by the truth. His kingdom has no capital, no throne, no crown, no sceptre, no insignia and no officers on earth. He reigns within men's hearts. And he shall not fail or be discouraged until the whole world comes under his sway.

Kansas City, Mo.

Waiting Upon God

This strength will show itself in the dullest duty of the common day. For they shall walk along life's common road—"They shall walk and not faint." Not only in our times of stress and strain, but in our plodding along the weary path, we are mightily helped; and heartened, and encouraged, by the strength that comes from waiting upon God. And do you know why the prophet puts that last? It is because he keeps the hardest till the end. It is because to be strong in dull and dreary duty is about the hardest task a man can face. It is a noble thing to be brave in tragic moments; but perhaps there is something even nobler than that. It is to be brave, and glad, and strong, and tender, when the sky is gray and when the road is dreary. It is in such seasons—and they form nine-tenth's of life—that he who waits on God will show his strength.—George H. Morrison.

Neither can he that mindeth but his own business find much matter for envy. For envy is a gadding passion and walketh the streets, and doth not keep house.—Francis Bacon.

Our Readers' Opinions

Baxter Wakefield—The Hero of "God and Mammon"

Many other Readers pronounce their opinions on the course chosen by the preacher whom Edgar De Witt Jones' story led into the city where he was tempted. See The Christian Century for May 11 and May 18.

A MISTAKE.

I have read with much interest "God and Mammon." If the Rev. Baxter Wakefield had half the ability the story says he has, it to my mind would have been a golden opportunity to take "Calvary" pulpit, which I should judge was a pulpit of Mammon, and make it a pulpit of God. It was his chance to get next to men like Congressman Waller, and have heart to heart talks with them, getting them to correct the evils under their control, and thus Mr. Wakefield would have reached hundreds of lives and perhaps have benefited future generations. Taking the story just as it is written, without knowing the after experience or results of Mr. Wakefield's ministry, I would say that he made a grave mistake in refusing the call. J. G.

Neosho, Mo.

IT DEPENDS.

Did Rev. Baxter Wakefield decide wisely in declining a call to Calvary Church, Cincinnati? That depends on whether he was sure he could do no good in entering upon the warfare against oppression and Mammon. Jeremiah might have hesitated but would not have finally refused the call. He would have uttered his message and left the result and himself with the Lord. Mrs. A. B. A.

Columbus, Ohio.

STRONG AND TRUE.

The young man in the story, "God and Mammon," was a strong, true Christian, and did the wisest and bravest thing. To have accepted the call to Calvary would have meant for him to sacrifice principle or else to have been relieved of its pastorate within a year. He fitted Albany but would not have fitted Calvary. Mrs. I. O. D.

Goshen, Ind.

GOOD JUDGMENT.

A second reading reveals that Baxter Wakefield's decision was not one of haste or arrived at through class-room study of the situation, but was reached through judgment formed by a well-matured minister's experience. "God and Mammon" reminds me of "The Calling of Dan Matthews" and I cannot respect a quitter. The church for a generation has accepted the naturalist philosophy of life, and to prosecute its purposes of helping, healing and teaching has been compelled to ask and accept large offerings from its rich adherents without questioning the nature of their business or sources of gain. We must reveal the deeper significance of our gospel. "We know no man of the flesh."

Alton, Ill. D. R. M.

NEITHER WISE NOR BRAVE.

The fictitious hero was conscientious, but neither "wise nor brave." He lacked wisdom, for the prophet's words fit his case, "As if a man did flee from a lion and a bear met him." Industrial unfairness is as possible for a merchant with one clerk and political graft for a school trustee as for a miflionaire manufacturer and a congressman. Denunciation will bring decapitation in either case. But let it come. Better die on the cross at the city's gate than to return to the country's quiet and hide the light under a bushel.

Belle Plaine, Ia. F. E. H.

NEED MORE OF THEM.

In my opinion the Rev. Baxter Wakefield did right. Thank God for men of his stamp, both in pulpit and pew. If more would take such a stand the prophecy of Micah, which we studied recently would be nearer at hand than under present conditions. P. S.

Minneapolis, Minn.

RIGHT PART OF THE WAY.

Wakefield did just right so far as the story goes. Would God there were more like him! But after he returned I hope he remembered his answer to Professor Rossman's question and wrote to Hon. Waller stating why he declined the call, pointing out his sin, etc. He also must write Professor Rossman, showing him what a hypocrite he is in the sight of God and man. If he does not, he might as well have accepted the offer.

Royalston, Mass. H. S. W.

QUICK DECISIONS ALL RIGHT.

Yes, he did right. Many of our best decisions come from instantaneous conclusions, if based on honest convictions. Mrs. M. C.

Lincoln, Neb.

KNEW HIS LIMITATIONS.

Wakefield doubtless knew his limitations and acted wisely; another just as wisely might have accepted the call. There is no other preacher just like Wakefield; no other layman just like Waller; no other church just like Calvary. What would be the wise thing for one to do might be the unwise thing for another to do. No general rule can be deduced from a single case, but Calvary Church needed a man who could become master of the situation. J. M. L.

Sandwich, Ill.

HIS PROPER FIELD.

The Rev. Baxter Wakefield acted wisely in declining the call to Cincinnati. The Hon. Alanson Waller was not the proper kind of person to be the leader of a church in which the minister could reasonably expect to accomplish much spiritual good. Besides, Mr. Wakfield had done and was still doing a great work in Albany, and there were there saintly people who highly prized his ministrations. Albany was his proper field at that time. G. S.

Morton, N. Y.

THE ONLY WAY.

Rev. Baxter Wakefield's decision to decline the call of Calvary Church was the only one consistent with conscience or self-respect. Under the circumstances he could have done no possible good there. Alas for poor, cynical, contemptible Professor Roosman! There is one of the most serious and far-reaching injuries by predatory wealth that is buying up our colleges and seminaries with tainted money. It is not merely that the multimillionaires are founding institutions to be called by their names; but by the power of their wealth they are perverting colleges founded and endowed by earnest, godly men and women to train young people for Christian service. W. B. P.

Oskaloosa, Kans.

RESISTED SATAN.

I will not say the young man did the wisest thing, but under the circumstances I think he acted very wisely, and more and more so as he saw more light. He yielded for a time to the temptation to advancement, but he said, "Get thee behind me, Satan," when he knew the price he must pay. He was too much under the influence of a great name, with the prefix Professor, but heard the voice of the Spirit, "If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out," and he threw away the photograph. He took a chance for disaster when he waited to see Mattie, but he did not allow Delilah to attack him with her scissors. I like the young minister. Some time give us another chapter from his history. R. L. R.

Prescott, Wis.

WISE TO AVOID TEMPTATION.

In my opinion Mr. Wakefield made a wise decision. A preacher should not be puffed up and if born for the work is perfectly willing to find pleasure in cultivating a happy spirit in what appears to critics as self-denying suffering, as regards the temptations of the world. This man's work was not finished where he was and he chose "God first," and resisted what to him was a great temptation, viz., flattery and the surroundings of wealth in a well-paid position. Twelve hundred dollars a year will not place a family in high social standing, and it may belittle them in the worldly estimation, but if a real man is back of it, the greater reward is the consciousness that he has followed the Master and not Mammon. Alanson Wallers as church members are often more powerful to draw a preacher from Christ than the average man is to bring Christ to them. I should say that Mr. Wakefield gave Mr. Alanson Waller, by refusing, a pretty loud call for him to leave Cincinnati and come to his church. I hope he heard it. C. E. K.

Stafford Springs, Ct.

FOOLISHLY AND COWARDLY.

Did he act wisely and gravely? No! foolishly and cowardly. He seems to have made his decision wholly upon what he conceived to be the character of one man. What about the others? There was "a vast sea of faces" in the congregation. What right had he to ignore them? There was a "great Sunday-school." Was there not a splendid opportunity for work? What if his host was "a sinner above all others"? He had some good qualities. He paid his debts. He was generous. He had ability and ample means; if he was not using them aright, was not here an opportunity to influence him to turn to the right way? Was it not cowardly to shrink or turn down that chance? That's the business of a minister to lead people to turn from wrong-doing to right-doing. Christ came "not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." Then he took the word of one man against his host, and made his decision on that one man's say-so, and he, a man who at one time had been hired to work against him. Ought he not to have heard the other side before he decided? Rossman had more sense; when a broader field, a larger opportunity for usefulness was offered him, like a sensible man he accepted it. Layman.

TOO HASTY.

Mr. Wakefield was too hasty by far, for one of his years, in deciding to decline the call to Calvary Church. Hence it is not strange that his decision was unwise and un-Christion. Had Jesus been animated by the same spirit he never would have come to this world to seek and to save the lost and give his life as a ransom for just such men as Alanson Waller. And Mr. Wakefield would not have had a commission from him to preach the message of redeeming love to all mankind, including the Alanson Wallers of big industrial businesses. Shall these "captains of industry," big sinners though they are, be shunned by the prophets of the Lord? Nay, the greater their sin, the more urgent their need of the gospel message, and if the messenger has not the courage to thunder the denunciations which characterized the preaching of some of the old prophets, he still has the more effective message of redeeming love—the winsome story of the New Testament which touches the heart and wins the like to him who "saves unto the uttermost."

Lincoln, Neb. F. C. C.

Mr. Lloyd George's Insurance Scheme

What It Proposes To Do For the Sick and the Unemployed.

The elaborate scheme of insurance against poverty proposed by Hon. Lloyd George, chancellor of the exchequer, is described in some detail in the British religious weeklies. According to the statements, the National Insurance Bill, as it is called, is divided into two branches, one to provide against sickness, and the other against unemployment. The sickness branch of the bill is also in two sections, one compulsory and the other voluntary, the voluntary contributors being persons not working for an employer. Under the compulsory section all working people, except sailors, soldiers, and civil servants, will pay a weekly contribution of 4d. for every man and 3d. for every woman. If a man earns less than 15s. a week he will pay from 1d. to 3d., the employer of such labour having to pay a larger contribution. Employers pay 3d. for men and women alike, and the state 2d. Mr. Lloyd George reminded the House at this point that the state was already bearing a burden of 13,000,000 pounds ($65,000,000) a year for old-age pensions—a payment equivalent to something like 5d. a week for employer and worker under the scheme. The total number of persons included in the sickness insurance scheme is 14,700,000.

The Benefits.

As to benefits, these comprise competent medical attendance, with drugs; a 30s. benefit in maternity cases, conditional upon working women not returning to work for four weeks after confinement; 10s. a week allowance for men and 7s. 6d. for women during the first three months, 5s. for both during the next three months, and 5s. thereafter so long as complete disablement continues. Where the sick benefit is more than two-thirds of the wages the amount is to be reduced. It is also proposed to set aside 1,500,000 pounds ($7,500,000) from the fund for the purpose of building sanatoria throughout the country for tuberculous patients. The money will be collected by means of stamps and dispensed through approved friendly societies. All persons whom the friendly societies will not accept will be collected together into a body called Post-office contributors, who will be looked after by county health committees to be specially elected for this purpose.

For the Unemployed.

The unemployment insurance section applies only to one-sixth of the industrial population, is limited to the engineering and building trades, and will be administered by the Labour Exchanges. It confers a benefit of from 7s. to 15s. a week unemployed pay, the workman and the employer paying 2 1-2d. each and the state taking upon itself one-fourth of the total cost.

Comment of the Religious Press.

The British Congregationalist says: "The reception given to the scheme by the country has been on the whole cordial. Mr. Lloyd George has had "a good press," and even the critical have expressed sympathy with the aims of the Bill and admiration of its noble lines. No doubt it is felt that so vast and complex a measure needs to be studied in detail before considered judgments can be given, but such a plan is overdue and is in harmony with the spirit of the age. A similar scheme has worked well in Germany, and industrial conditions are not so different here as to make the inference unsound that what has answered in Germany will in the main answer well with us, especially when adapted to the national temperament and circumstances.

The incidence of the charges and the resultant benefits of the sickness insurance scheme, is that it is in the line of wise industrial evolution, and necessary to prevent grave, economic losses due to enfeebled and disheartened workers. That all parties should be compelled to contribute for mutual benefits is the only just and safe foundation to build upon."

A Great Measure.

The London Christian World says: "In conception, scope, and purpose the Insurance Bill is a great measure, worthy of its author and of a government of whom the workers had the right to expect a good deal. It gives the lie to those who are wont to accuse the Liberal party of caring about nothing but the pulling down of the Constitution. However much some of the reactionaries of the Tory party may have hoped that by being awkward they could force the Government into a corner, or, what has been at the back of the minds of a good many of them, coerce them into the holding of yet another election, the reception of Mr. Lloyd George's Insurance Bill by all parties must surely have convinced them of the continued popularity of the government and of the hopelessness of converting the country to the Tory way of thinking. It is interesting to note that the Opposition are not going to make the same tactical mistake with regard to this measure that they made with regard to old-age pensions. On this occasion they are going to be friends of the measure. Nothing in modern politics has been quite so wonderful as the way in which the tenancy of the Opposition benches and two smashing defeats at the polls within a year have advanced the cause of social reform among the men to whom the country has generally looked for opposition to measures for the improvement of the lot of the people. All this is so much cause for thankfulness, and Mr. Lloyd George is to be congratulated on having come into his own after many days."

Its Wide Scope.

The British Weekly comments as follows: "When it is said that nearly fifteen millions of men and women, boys and girls will come within the scope of the insurance against sickness, while two and a quarter millions of men and women will come within the scope of insurance against unemployment, it will be seen that there was never a bill which directly and immediately touched so many.

"One of the happiest features of the scheme is a special maternity benefit, conditional on the mother not returning to work within four weeks of her confinement. Probably this term of four weeks will be extended; but as it is, the relief will be immeasurable.

"We specially like the further part of the scheme—the unemployment assurance. This experiment is novel. It takes two great groups of trades—the engineering group and the building group—where employment is irregular, and endeavours by a scheme of contributions to provide for the periods of unemployment. If this succeeds and is extended, one of the most terrible causes of anxiety and heartbreak will be done away. The day will come—the blessed day!—when it can be said that none in this land who is willing to work can want bread.

Mr. Lloyd George Himself.

"Mr. Lloyd George is still a growing power in the state. Nor need there be any surprise at this, for in him certain qualities are almost uniquely combined. He has the genius for oratory as no other living politician possesses it. He has one of the swiftest and cleanest cutting of intellects. He has formidable weapons for attack and defence. He has also the capacity of sustained labour and patient investigation, and appreciative, tolerant consideration for views that are not his own. But his great power lies in his charming and disarming simplicity. It was obvious in the House that both parties have yielded completely to this spell. There is no more popular man in the House. No one can meet Mr. Lloyd George and dislike him. His opponents are not his enemies. They acknowledge his gifts and his sincerity, and they know that he could ill be spared from our public life."

A Vital Contribution to Social Science

SOCIOLOGY AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS by Chas. A. Elwood, professor of sociology, University of Missouri. Here is the book that many laymen in sociological interests have been looking for. It also fills a much felt class room need. It is not a text on sociology in the sense that it is purely a treatment of social theory, but is just what its title implies—the treatment of the more significant social problems in the light of sociology. It helps the student to look at these things from a student-like and scientific standpoint. It moreover gives him the benefits of a trained observer's investigations and conclusions and an insight into the scientific sociological method of studying the fundamental social problems. Among the themes considered are those of the family, population, immigration, the city, pauperism and crime. Colleges that give short courses for undergraduates will find this the best text extant. Teachers, preachers and other studious folk will find it indispensable for their work. Dr. Elwood is rapidly making for himself a first place among sociologists. His temper is not only judicial but searching and charged with a burning interest in the vital human problems. He is not content with an analysis of thing as they are but concerns himself with rational methods of betterment. A book like this helps the zealous to temper their zeal with discretion and the analytical to charge their logic with conscience. [Boston, American Book Co., Pages 331, $1.00.]

See all things, not in the blinding and deceitful glare of the world's noon, but as they will seem when the shadows of life are closing in. At evening the sun seems to loom large on the horizon, while the landscape fades from view; and then the sunset reveals the infinitude of space crowded with unnumbered worlds, and the firmament glows with living sapphires. Even so, let the presence of God loom large upon the narrow horizon of your life, and the firmament of your souls glow with the living sapphires of holy thoughts. Ah, try now to look at the world and its allurements as they will seem in the last hour; to look at unlawful pleasure as it shall then seem, not only a disappointment, but a depraving and an envenomed thing; to look at the small aims of ambition as they shall seem when they have dwindled into their paltriness.—Canon Farrar.

"If some of us were as diligent in the use of eyes and ears as we are in the use of our tongues, our wisdom and our attractiveness would increase."—Selected.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXV. Dark Days

June 18. Text for Special Study, Deut. 12:2-7.

QUESTIONS.

1. What kind of a man and king was Manasseh as contrasted with his father Hezekiah?
2. How can you account for Manasseh's radical departure from the ideals of his father?
3. What measures did Manasseh take to suppress the religion of Jehovah?
4. Do you recall any other rulers in history who persecuted their subjects on account of religion?
5. Do you think the policy of Manasseh was popular or not?
6. Did the prophets and priests of Jehovah keep up their activity during the reign of Manasseh?
7. Is it probable that many of them suffered as martyrs for the religion they loved?
8. What elements in the popular worship did they regard as most dangerous?
9. What method did the moral leaders of Israel adopt to suppress the worship at the "high places?"
10. What body of laws did they compile?
11. Why did they use the name of Moses so constantly in their work?
12. Is it probable that this collection of laws actually contained many Mosaic elements?
13. What can be said of Deuteronomy as to its (a) literary form, (b) moral tone, (c) religious value?
14. What book of the Old Testament did Jesus quote most frequently?
15. Why did not the authors of Deuteronomy publish it as soon as it was finished?
16. What is the "Shrine," or confession of faith?
17. Explain the law of the central sanctuary, and the reason for its important place in the code?
18. What are some of the other principles of this body of laws?
19. What did the prophets and priests do with the law when they had finished its preparation?
20. Do you think they took the best method they could in attempting to provide for the nation's future?

1. THE REIGN OF MANASSEH.

To those who watch the career of the great prophet Isaiah through the forty years in which he was the adviser of the kings of Judah it seems difficult to understand how so quickly there could follow a reaction to utter heathenism after his departure. The character of Hezekiah, the last of the three kings who enjoyed the counsel of Isaiah, was excellent. He did much to purge the symbols of idolatry from the provincial places of Judah. He did not always listen to the advice of his prophetic friend, as his revolt against Assyria proved. But he paid dearly for that misadventure, and seems to have held the prophet in sincere regard.

But his son, Manasseh, was of a different sort. From the very first he manifested a perverse determination to undo all the work of his father. He restored the idolatrous shrines throughout the land. He polluted the Temple and the vicinity of Jerusalem with images and symbols of the false worship. He suppressed as far as possible the practice of religion according to the teachings of the priests and prophets of Jehovah. He persecuted the adherents of the national faith until the blood of martyrdom flowed freely in Jerusalem. Tradition affirmed that he put to death the aged Isaiah, with torture. It was an age of darkness. The cause of the true faith seemed wholly overthrown.

No doubt the policy of Manasseh was popular. The reforms of good rulers like Hezekiah are not always pleasing to the masses. People like free and easy institutions. They are not easily offended by common immorality and vulgarity. The tendency to believe in the advantage of a lax moral tone in a city is still one of the patent evils of the times. And, therefore, though the religious leaders of Judah condemned Manasseh both in their preaching, so far as it was permitted, and in their records of his reign, it is probable that a majority of the people were satisfied with his policy.

2. PROPHETS AND PRIESTS.

But what were the leaders of Jehovah worship doing during this dark age? That their public ministries were almost entirely suppressed seems clear from the narrative. Any efforts made in behalf of the national faith were attended with the greatest danger to the faithful. It is not to be supposed that Judah lacked men of the heroic spirit. The fact that Manasseh slew many in his passion to exterminate the religion of the Temple proves that there were those who went to death for the sake of the faith they loved.

Yet little headway could be made in a time like this. The chief danger lay in the small shrines outside of Jerusalem. Those "high places," against which Isaiah protested and which Hezekiah his friend partially destroyed, sprung again into vigorous life during the reign of Manasseh. They were not necessarily heathen shrines. Probably at most of them the old religion of the prophets was practiced and offerings to Jehovah were made. But the lack of supervision left them open to the invasion of heathenish ideas and practices. Those forms of nature worship against which Hosea had protested with such indignation were coming in like a flood. The symbols of idolatry and sensualism stood side by side with the altars of Jehovah. Nothing but the suppression of these dangerous seats of religious practice could safeguard the future of the nation.

Perceiving this fact and knowing that they had no power to oppose successfully the authoritative heathenism of Manasseh's court, the priests and prophets of Jehovah seemed to have devised a more effective plan for the education of Judah in days to come. Moses, Israel's traditional lawgiver, was long since dead. The common law embodied in the Book of the Covenant (Ex. 20-23, 34) permitted worship at any sacred place. This had been the custom of Israel from the first. It was the practice of the great teachers of the past, including Samuel, David, Elijah and Elisha. Yet here was the seat of the greatest danger which confronted the religion of Jehovah. It was necessary to promulgate a new body of law around the vital principle that religion must be centralized at the Temple.

The laws of Israel had hitherto been issued in the name of Moses. His was the only name that could give them validity, though many of those then in use had grown up since his day, after the manner of all custom law. To make the new body of institutes effective it must be issued in his name. Moreover the priests and prophets of the dark age realize that they were only carrying out in the new time the principles for which Moses had stood in the past. If he were alive he would prohibit the provincial worship, even as he had apparently permitted it in the earlier days. The only remedy for the evil of the age was to speak in the name of the lawgiver of the past to the present generation, and to call it to a new standard of religious practice.

3. THE BOOK OF THE LAW.

The result of this wise and timely effort on the part of the priests and prophets of this dark age was the production of a new code of law which gathered up the institutes of previous centuries, preserving all that was vital in the honored laws of the past, but organizing them into a new body of instruction with specific emphasis upon certain new principles of conduct.

This body of laws was issued in the name of Moses. In it everywhere Moses speaks, not only in those laws which had come down from his time, but in all the institutes which had grown up under his spirit through the history of Israel. It was a Mosaic law in the fullest sense, because it was conceived in the spirit of the great leader and was applied to an emergency with which he would have dealt, as they believed, in precisely the same way.

This body of law is now found in the Book of Deuteronomy, in the section comprising chapters 12-26. A large body of remembrance and tradition concerning the leadership and the teachings of Moses was preserved in oral form from earlier days. Probably much of this was authentic, and in many instances it is not unlikely that the very words of Moses have come to us in this volume. Later teachers supplied the law thus organized with a historical introduction, woven out of the memories and traditions of Moses' age, and expressed in terms of Moses' own speech. So that the Book of Deuteronomy comes to us today in the form of three great public addresses of the revered leader, uttered as he was about to bid his people farewell at the margin of Canaan. No work of the Old Testament is written with greater literary art, or contains elements of more effective moral insight and spiritual uplift. Deuteronomy is a splendid memorial to the national veneration for Moses, and is likewise a monument to the moral elevation of those persecuted prophets and priests of the dark age of Manasseh.

The proofs of the origin of the Deuteronomic law in the days shortly preceding the great reformation of Josiah in 621 B. C. are so numerous and convincing that biblical scholarship is all but a unit in assigning this great document to this period, and in justifying in the fullest degree the use of the name and authority of Moses by the men who were seeking to save the national faith from utter overthrow.

4. DEUTERONOMIC IDEALS.

The reader of this great book will observe that it contains a few sections of supreme moment.

(1) The confession (6: 4, 5). This splendid declaration of faith in Jehovah, beginning, "Hear oh Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord," constitutes the "Shema" of the Jewish faith, and is repeated, like the Mohammedan watchword, on all occasions of public and private prayer.

(2) The law of the central sanctuary (12: 2-7). This is the embodiment of the law of centralization and will receive consideration in the final section of this study.

(3) The prohibition of idolatrous symbols (16: 21, 22). Here the protest is uttered against those forms of heathenism which were invading the land to its destruction.

(4) The promise of a line of prophets (18: 9-15). Here Moses promises the nation that it is to receive from time to time the service of a prophet whom God will raise up to them, to speak in his name, so that they need not fear the actual presence of deity nor need they consult wizards and magicians. This promise of a line of prophets is one of the most important contributions of Deuteronomy to the national faith.

(5) The curse for disobedience (28: 15-21). The code was concluded with a series of blessings and curses so vivid and impressive that they must have gone far to enforce the provisions of the law.

These five sections give only a faint idea of the scope and spirit of this great body of national institutes, but they mark some of its chief features and may be regarded as the leading items in the new formulation of Israel's legislation.

5. HOPE FOR THE FUTURE. (12:2-7).

We now return for a brief study to the second of the five passages already noted. It embodies the great principle of centralization. It strictly enjoins the destruction of the shrines which have been inherited from the other nations. These "high places" on the slopes of the mountains, upon the hills and under the green trees, have been the scene of too much immorality and superstition. The altars are to be broken down, the stone obelisks, which too frequently had an obscene significance, were to be broken in pieces, and the sacred groves, trees or stakes of wood, which represented the base and sensual elements of the heathen faiths, were to be burned with fire. The images of the local gods wherever found were to be cut down, and their names obliterated from the land.

In striking contrast with these local shrines there is now erected the law of the central sanctuary. To the place which Jehovah chooses out of all the tribes to place his name there they shall resort. To this central place of worship pilgrimages are to be made. Thither all burnt offerings, sacrifices, tithes, heave offerings, vows, free-will offerings and first-born of flock and herd are to be brought. There alone the sacrificial feasts shall be eaten. There the Hebrews who wish to honor God shall resort with their households to rejoice in the good will of Jehovah toward them.

Thus, there was established, at least so far as these quiet workers of the dark age were able, a body of laws around a new and revolutionary principle whose tendency was to abolish at one stroke all the local sanctuaries and concentrate worship at Jerusalem. Of course these prophets and priests of Manasseh's day were totally unable to enforce or even to promulgate the law which they had organized. The long reign of that king postponed from year to year the realization of their hopes.

That generation passed away, and still Manasseh ruled. Their dreams of reformation seemed to fade out forever. There was but one thing left for them to do. That was to deposit the sacred roll containing the fruits of their labor, the fresh embodiment of the spirit and teaching of Moses, in the Temple. The rites of the sanctuary had not been wholly suppressed. It was the one hope of spiritual religion in the nation. There they left their gift to posterity, trusting that a day would come when it should be found and made the law of the land. Little did they dream how completely their hopes were to be realized in the discovery of the book and its use as the basis of the great reformation of King Josiah, in the year 621 B. C.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The next section will relate to "Nahum and the fall of Nineveh," and the one following to "Habakkuk and the rise of Babylon."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The political reasons for Manasseh's heathen policy.
2. The quiet work of priests and prophets during Manasseh's reign.
3. Foreign relations during the reign of Manasseh.
4. The leading features of the Book of Deuteronomy.
5. The value and difficulties of the law of centralization.
6. The problems relating to the authorship and date of Deuteronomy.

LITERATURE.

Cheyne, "Jeremiah, his Life and Times" (Men of the Bible Series); Driver, "Deuteronomy," (International Critical Commentary) introduction; Kent, "The Messages of Israel's Lawgivers," (Messages of the Bible Series); Sections on the reigns of Manasseh and Josiah the Old Testament Histories of Wade, Smith, Kent, Kittel and Ottley; Sections on Deuteronomy in Old Tstament Introductions by Driver, McFadyen and Bennett and Adeney, and the encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic, June 18: Grace for Common Duties. Eph. 4:25, 26; 5:1, 2.

The unusual thing is more attractive and easier to do because it is unusual. There is always a delight and a kind of thrill about a new experience which makes it sought by most people. The unusual makes the participant conspicuous. It fastens attention upon him. He is the subject of favorable mention. The appeal to his vanity—though he may not analyze it—makes the task a delight. Consequently the zest and enthusiasm and high glee of the high school and college graduate of which we hear and see so much just now. For similar reasons the new position which one takes in another office, school, store or factory, is so much better than the one just given up.

On the other hand, the common thing is common. Everybody does it. It is the thing I have been doing for so long it is an old story. It makes me just one of the common herd, just a stone in the great wall. The world takes such things as a matter of course. It is a part of the daily grind. Its monotony becomes almose unendurable, burdensome. For this reason the mechanic wants to change shops, and sometimes trades, the stenographer to change offices, the teacher to change schools, the minister to change fields and the church to seek a new pastor. For this reason hundreds of students quit their studies before graduation. For this reason young people tire of the monotonous duties of the home and frequently leave it to seek their fortune in the larger world of experience. Sometimes they meet with success, but more often with sad disappointments and even with tragic experiences.

But after all are the common things just so common? And if they are common are they to be despised? They are the things upon which we rise to higher things. The mechanic became such, because he has been willing to toil unseen until he learned his trade. He only builds a house or a machine who stays by his task to the end. Fruits are gathered in the autumn, rather than in the springtime. In the last analysis, battles are won by those who dig and fight in the trenches, rather than by the general who stands in the rear. It is the sack of sand which stops the incipient leak in the levy that saves the sleeping city from destruction. It is the routine duties of housekeeping—cooking, sewing, tidying, and love—which makes the home the foundation of all our safety and happiness.—a haven of rest to the one who is weary with the demands of a long and arduous day. He alone graduates who has been patient and persistent in his study for months and years before. The common things are, after all, the fundamental things, and without them life is not.

None are so well prepared to do these things as he who has a personal and vital relation with God. His purposes are linked with the Divine. He seeks to make a life that will stand the test of all time. To this end he is willing to undergo hardships as a good soldier. This gives carrying power to his purposes. It gives him dignity and a sense of worth. He knows that there is more to life than just what he sees with his immediate shortsightedness. He is disposed to measure things by a larger unit of measurement. It gives him grace to be patient with little things—to work with them. He is willing to take time to correct little misunderstandings, to overlook the injustices of those with less delicate sensibilities. And above all things we will be content to stay and labor with them rather than to despise them and refuse to have anything to do with them.

Way for the King!

Way for the King—make way!
This is the King's day;
Haste to the crowning.
Weave Him a garland of olive and bay,
And they wove Him a crown of the thorn.
Was such garland as this by a King ever worn?
Still He was King!
Way for the King—make way!

Way for the King—make way!
This is the King's day;
Haste to the throning.
Lift Him on high where a King should be!
And they lifted Him high; yea, 'twas a tree
That they gave Him for throne on the hill Calvary.
Still He was King!
Way for the King—make way!

—HAMILTON B. WILLIAMS.

We are in great danger of getting so used to things that we do not realize their worth. It is bad for a man to get used to God's love, or his wife's love, to the comforts of home, and the blessing of health. It is a bit of the hurt of sin stupefying our senses when it is so. We should aim to cultivate the same freshness of appreciation of our blessings as when these blessings came.—S. D. Gordon.

Ilinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

The Eighth District Convention will be held at West Frankfort, June 27 to 29.

The memorial sermon at Brushy in Wayne County, was delivered by D. M. Durham, who resides at Browns.

W. T. McConnell, pastor of Arcola Church, delivered the memorial sermon to the G. A. R. post of that city.

Thomas E. Israel, who has been preaching one half time at Pittwood, will preach on alternate Sundays also at Orsbonville.

The revival at Argenta, conducted by Major Griffith, the pastor, resulted in four additions, two of whom were by conversion.

L. A. Chapman, minister at Carmi, delivered the memorial sermon at Enfield, and the decoration day address at his home city.

B. S. Kello, pastor at Rinard, held a two-weeks' meeting with his home congregation, resulting in two additions.

The four churches in Danville are contemplating effecting an organization for the accomplishment of more effective mission work in that city.

Pontiac Church has raised forty-five dollars for foreign missions, and remembered the state society with an offering of ten dollars.

G. W. Morton, of Beardstown, conducted the memorial service and preached the sermon on memorial day. The G. A. R. and W. R. C. attended the service in a body.

Evangelists Sword and Kay are holding a short meeting at Donovan, which, at last report, had resulted in twenty-one additions. The pastor is F. M. R. Thackaberry.

An addition is being built to the edifice of the church at DeLand, where George W. Wise recently became pastor. The improvement will cost in excess of three thousand dollars.

At Canton, where J. G. Waggoner is pastor, there have been a number of additions recently. The memorial day service was held in the Christian Church and the sermon was preached by the pastor on "Universal Peace."

Miss Miner visited Long Point recently in the interest of Eureka College, and secured pledges to the amount of six hundred-fifty dollars for endowment and for the maintenance of the Illinois Christian Education Association.

C. C. Spencer, of Kansas, is holding a meeting at Ruchville, where H. L. Maltman is minister. On memorial Sunday the Grand Army attended the morning service and listened to a sermon by Mr. Maltman in observance of memorial day.

The memorial sermon at Augusta was preached by E. T. Cornelius, minister of the Disciples Church. The church here is to greatly improve its edifice. Almost three hundred dollars is already on hand for that purpose.

The churches in Champaign and Urbana celebrate Fellowship Sunday, annually. At this celebration, recently, the pulpit of the Disciples Church was filled by the pastor of the First Methodist Church of Urbana, and Stephen E. Fisher, of the Disciples Church, preached at the Universalist Church.

The dedication of the new church at Hutsonville, was conducted by George L. Snively, May 21. More than Fourteen Hundred Dollars was raised in excess of the amount required to pay all debts, and the congregation will use the surplus to build a parsonage. The church has no minister, but is seeking to locate one at an early date.

The missionary offering for the home society contributed by the Mt. Sterling Church, was $78.31, of which amount twenty-five dollars was contributed by the Sunday-school. The church here listened to two very highly commended addresses by Miss Lura V. Thompson, May 14. The pastor is A. L. Cole.

During the first three Sundays of May there were six additions to Third Church, Danville, where S. S. Jones is pastor. This church is contemplating an experiment with the combination service in the morning. It will not be adopted permanently until it is ascertained what favor is accorded it by the congregation.

Gibson City Church is holding its services in the Opera House during the time building operations are progressing. On two Sunday evenings recently the congregation has co-operated with the United Brethren Church in union service. The first evening the United Brethren preacher delivered the sermon and the following Sunday Mr. Lehman was the preacher.

O. M. Eaton conducted a short meeting for the Marion Church. The congregation was edified and aroused to more active participation in church work. Mr. Eaton is pastor of the church at Sailor Springs, where activity is being shown in all departments of the work. There have been twenty additions since February 1st and fourteen at Clay City, to which congregation one half time is given. At both of these appointments, Mr. Eaton delivered the memorial sermon.

H. J. Reynolds is to attend the Portland Convention at the expense of his congregation at Camp Point. Every congregation in the state capable of doing this should do so for its own sake as well as its pastor's. The minister's attendance at conventions is not a selfish thing. He goes for the profit of his congregation quite as well as for his own personal advantage. It is not a mark of far-sightedness on the part of the congregation, that refuses to make possible its pastor's attendance at such places, when the congregation has ample ability to afford defraying his expenses.

Central Church, Rockford, where W. B. Clemmer is maintaining a very successful pastorate, voted recently in a congregational meeting to plan at once for the building of a new edifice. The building in which the congregation has met for several years is a remodeled dwelling and serves very inaptly as an expression of the congregation's architectural taste, and a meeting place for a congregation of the size and spirit of the Rockford disciples. The congregation is not strong financially, but has made for itself an enviable reputation in the city for accomplishing those things which it undertakes to do.

Moline Church, which is ministered to by W. B. Slater, is succeeding admirably in its work. The pastor has just finished his first year of service. The church is being supported by the state board, and the home society, with the church at Rock Island providing the funds necessary for its maintenance. During the year there were thirty additions, eighteen being by baptism. One hundred dollars was contributed to missions and benevolence. Interest on the church loan was promptly paid and the principal was reduced. Special taxes for pavement and other purposes were promptly met, and all bills against the church liquidated. The Sunday-school has been increased 50 per cent in attendance. The church is in a hopeful condition and enters the second year with every prospect for prosperity.

The church at Blandinsville, Ill. will soon dedicate its new building. This building has been in the process of construction for nearly one year. This was due to the financial failure of the contractor, and to the unscrupulous management of the creditor's trustee, who when the contract price was nearly exhausted turned it over to the building committee who have been very successful in bringing the work to completion. Considering the fact that they have been meeting in various halls during the year the interest in the services and the attendance at Bible school has kept up remarkably well, the attendance at the Bible school averaging about 160. The new church will be dedicated by W. E. Harlow of Springfield, Mo. during the last of June. A definite date will be announced later. The new building will accommodate a modern graded Sunday-school and besides will seat 1,000 people in view of the pulpit. The building is constructed of buff pressed brick. C. R. Wolford is the minister.

Eureka College

The closing exercises of the school year of Eureka College for 1910-11 will be held the week of June 11. The Baccalaureate sermon will be delivered Sunday morning, June 11, by Rev. H. D. Clark of Mt. Sterling, Ky., of the class of '61. It will be a delight to the older students and residents of Eureka to have Mr. Clark return. Fifty years ago he walked away from Eureka College full of ambition and with the stamp of our collegiate approval upon him. To use the current expression, he has "made good." His work has been preëminently successful. He returns with a benediction for his Alma Mater, and words of good cheer for those who are trying to lead the college into larger things.

The exercises of the Bible Department will be held on Sunday evening, June 11. An ordination service will be part of the program. The annual concert of the School of Music will occur Monday evening, and the annual inter-society contest will be held Tuesday evening. The Board of Trustees will hold their regular meeting Wednesday morning and several problems of vital interest will be considered at that time. Graduating exercises for the Preparatory and Commercial Departments will also occur on Wednesday. The annual Field Day will be on Wednesday; and in the evening of that day the Senior Class will give a play. The art exhibit will be Thursday forenoon and the Alumni will hold a grand picnic and reunion on the afternoon of Thursday.

The President's reception will be held Thursday evening at Lida's Wood. Chas. S. Medbury of Des Moines, Ia., will deliver the Commencement address Friday morning, and degrees will be conferred upon Chas. Adams, W. O. Lappin, Joseph McGuire, Daisy Finger, Ruth Jackson, Bessie Lyon, and Litta Wadsworth. Eureka College has ever been proud of Chas. S. Medbury. We are looking forward with joy to his return to the school that claims him as a son, and that was largely responsible for his vision of the Christian ministry.

H. H. PETERS.

Chicago

Two additions at West End and three at Douglas Park on Sunday last.

Will F. Shaw reports $150 paid on Church Extension Loan and $50 raised for Home Missions by Sheffield Ave. Church the past week. Mr. Shaw recently addressed the church at Walnut, Ill., in the interest of Eureka College, and $100 was raised for this institution.

The Julius White post of the G. A. R. attended Jackson Boulevard Church for their Memorial services. Austin Hunter, pastor, preaching the special sermon. Mr. Hunter, on behalf of the church, extends an invitation to every Chicago Disciple to attend the formal opening of their new annex on Tuesday evening, June 6.

Already The Child Welfare Exhibit has borne fruit. The Elizabeth McCormick Memorial fund, established by Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus H. McCormick as a memorial to their daughter, is to be enlarged under the direction of Sherman C. Kingsley. Mr. Kingsley comes to the head of this foundation adequately fitted by years of service as superintendent of the United Charities, to carry out the plans already outlined. The McCormick fund tends to relieve the condition of sick babies in the congested tenement districts. Locations for these fresh air camps have been chosen, and soon fifty nurses and some half dozen camps will be at the service of these little sufferers.

The Sixty-eighth Quarterly Convention of the Chicago Union C. W. B. M. met Thursday, June 1, at the Ashland Ave. Church. The program was arranged by the Hyde Park auxiliary. In the forenoon O. J. Grainger spoke on "Missions in India—Some Methods and Results." In the afternoon session Miss Grace Abbott, of The University of Chicago, and Miss Caroline Breyfogle, assistant pastor of Hyde Park Church, were the chief speakers. Miss Abbott discussed the problems of "Our Immigrants," while Miss Breyfogle delivered an excellent address on "The Present Condition of Women in the Orient." Miss Lura V. Thompson, state secretary, was present and spoke briefly. At the business session the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Mrs. Russell, Englewood, president; Mrs. Cook, Memorial vice-president; Mrs. Hewes, Irving Park, secretary; and Mrs. Kenney, Sheffield Avenue, treasurer.

Basil Kausseff, our missionary to the Russians and Bulgarians of Chicago, will speak at several district C. W. B. M. conventions in northern and central Illinois in the interest of our foreign population and the problems they present. He speaks at Minonk, Lanark, Sandoval and Champaign.

A Special Library for Religious Workers.

The headquarters of the Religious Education Association have been recently moved to Rooms 1437-1439 in the New McCormick Building at 332 S. Michigan Avenue. Here with splendid light and convenient and ample room the permanent exhibit has been installed. This exhibit now consists of:

1. A library of over 2,500 books, consisting of works of reference, works of Bible study, on religious and moral education, text books suitable for classes in religion, in ethics, etc., and books especially devoted to the interests of the various departments. The text-book part of this library is of special value as showing the material now available for use in religious education in Sunday-schools, etc.

2. Lesson helps text-books, outline material and printed matter used in Sunday-schools and similar institutions. This is intended to reflect both the general conditions, the material available and the latest and best methods.

3. Maps, charts, pictures and illustrated material available and suitable for classes, etc.

4. Examples of work done by pupils especially in manual methods.

5. Periodicals and general literature related to religious and moral eduucation.

All this material with some other that it is not possible exactly to classify is arranged so as to be easily inspected by any persons interested. Many use this exhibit, and the appreciation of its value is growing. It is hoped that it will steadily develop in useful service. Its privileges are not confined to members of the association but any persons interested in Religious and Moral Education, Sunday-school teachers, pastors, parents, general educators, any who meet the problems of religious education, or desire light upon them are invited to visit and use this exhibit as freely as they desire. It is open daily from 8:30 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. except Saturday afternoons and is free.

The Moody Bible Institute dedicated a new woman's building on Monday, June 5. It is a seven-story fire-proof structure of brick and stone, 92 x 110 feet, located on the corner of LaSalle Avenue and Chestnut Street, and with a dormitory capacity for 208 students in addition to the superintendent and her staff of assistants. The cost of the building above the land, including the furnishings, is $225,000.

ADDITIONAL ILLINOIS ITEMS.

R. F. Thrapp addressed the Grand Army Post of Jacksonville, Memorial Day. The service was in the Christian church.

It is reported that Augustus L. Huff has received a call and accepted the same to the pastorate of Centralia Church. Mr. Huff is pastor of Lovington church. His predecessor at Centralia is J. F. Rosborough, whose resignation becomes effective shortly.

At the Fifth District Convention held in Litchfield, C. H. Metcalf of Girard was elected president for next year, with B. H. Sealock of Edinburgh, vice president, and John R. Golden of Springfield, secretary. John W. Augur of Mt. Auburn and E. H. Kinney of Beardstown were elected to serve on the Executive Board. The convention was one of the best held in recent years in this district.

Ralph V. Callaway, pastor of Havana church, delivered the Decoration Day address in his home city. The church there is prospering. The Sunday-school has an average attendance constantly of about 200. Mr. Callaway has become the marrying parson of the town, having officiated at twenty-one weddings since his pastorate began last September.

B. D. Gillispie, lately pastor of the church at Stafford, Kan., has accepted a call to Beloit, Kan.

Church Life

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

Portland is ready for convention. Local committee has worked enthusiastically and harmoniously. All arrangements completed far as possible. Coast and Northwest will attend in great numbers. We are praying for large delegation from other side of Rockies. Hope you will not disappoint us. Letter soon for publication.

THOMAS G. PICTON, Secretary.

—Did your church give the children their chance last Sunday? If you fail to observe some day in this children's month as Children's Day your school will be missing something all the year through.

—Secretary Grant K. Lewis reports that the receipts from the May offering for American missions are coming most gratifyingly. During the first ten days following the first Sunday the receipts were $5,060, a gain over same period last year of $1,761. One hundred and twenty-one churches were represented at that date which did not send an offering last year. Sixty-four churches made increased offerings. It is important that all collections be forwarded promptly.

* * *

Arthus Long, of Burlington, Ia., is in a meeting with Grand View Church, Des Moines, Iowa.

The problem of Christian union and church federation was the special topic at a recent prayer-meeting service at Central Church, Des Moines, Ia.

E. E. Violett and wife are spending their vacation in Loveland, Colo. Their last meeting was in Palestine, Texas, where 105 were added to the church.

A new church has been organized at Grinnell, Ia., and a call has been extended to W. B. Wilson, for some time pastor at Delta, Ia. Mr. Wilson has accepted the call and will remove to Grinnell at once.

In a recent contest between the Sunday-schools of the various churches of Hannibal and Quincy, First and South Side Churches of Hannibal were among the highest in enrollment, having an attendance of 780 and 811, respectively.

G. A. Hess, for the past seven years pastor at Charles City, Ia. and who has accepted a call to First Church, Clinton, Ia., will take up the work there June 11. Mr. Hess has had a very successful pastorate at Charles City, the congregation having increased from a membership of thirty-five to more than two hundred active members.

Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., is celebrating its one hundred and thirteenth annual commencement this week. Graduates from the college of the Bible number fourteen and from the university twenty-six. Professor Ernst H. Lindley of Indiana University is announced to deliver the commencement address. Hamilton College commencement was held May 25, when thirty-three young women received diplomas.

Perry J. Rice of First Church, El Paso, Tex., delivered the commencement address at the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts of which Dr. W. E. Garrison is president. This is one of the great educational institutions of the southwest and is in a highly prosperous condition. Mr. Rice also preached the baccalaureate sermon for the El Paso High School on Sunday, May 21 and is announced to the opening address before the Texas Christian Endeavor convention to be held at Wichita Falls beginning June 8.

A series of revival services is being held at West Terre Haute, Ind.

Allen Wilson is in a meeting at Fairmount, Ind.

C. J. Tannar has begun the ninth year of his service at Central Church, Detriot, Mich.

J. B. Lockhart has concluded his meeting at Corning, Ark., with twenty-three additions.

A new church will be erected at Oklahoma City, Okla., to be known as University Place Church.

The new church at Rushville, Ind., which was erected at a cost of $4,000 was dedicated May 14.

The annual convention of Iowa Churches will be held this year at Ottumwa, June 19-22.

A meeting is in progress at Hartshorne, Okla. The pastor, J. C. Howell, is assisted by Mark Sexson.

H. H. Harmon, pastor of First Church, Lincoln, Neb., has been chosen president of the Lincoln Ministerial Association.

William Sumpter of Lincoln, Neb., has accepted a call to the church at Cumberland, Ia., and began his work there May 21.

D. F. Cross, pastor at Turon, Kan., has resigned and will serve the field at Greensburg, Kan. after July 1.

Robert Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., delivered the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of the State Normal School at Pittsburg, Kan., on June 4.

James Small of Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, Mo. lectured before the students of Kansas City University recently. His subject was "The Second Mile."

The congregation of First Church, Sacramento, Calif., will erect a new edifice in the near future at a cost of $30,000. This will replace the building destroyed by fire last year.

A new church will be erected at Washington, Ind., in the near future at a cost of about $17,000. This will replace the edifice which was destroyed by fire several months ago.

A. M. Chisholm, pastor at Rockdale, Tex., reports large audiences at the services on May 21, with three additions. This makes twenty added at the regular services since the last report.

At the ninety-seventh quarterly convention of Golden Gate Union, at San Francisco, Calif., W. H. Bagby, pastor of West Side Church gave the principal address. His subject was "The Call to Youth."

A Sunday-school conference was held recently at Zearing, Ia. Walter S. Athearn of Drake University gave the principal addresses, his subjects being "The Holy Book" and "The Child's Sunday-school Teacher."

Indianapolis charity organizations are considering consolidation. A commission of eleven is making extensive investigation of the relief work in various cities. H. G. Hill of our Third Church in that city is the secretary of the commission, representing the churches of the city.

First Church, Portsmouth, Ohio, where the state convention is held this year has made a wonderful record since the first of the year. There have been 716 additions and the average attendance of the Sunday-school during the month of March was 1108.

F. P. Arthur, who has served as state secretary of the Michigan Christian Missionary Society will take up his new work as city missionary and evangelist of Detroit about August 1. Two new fields will be opened up in that city under the direction and care of Central Church.

The congregation of Central Park Church, Topeka, Kan., will erect a new building to cost about $18,000 on the site of the present edifice. About one hundred members have been added to the congregation since the first of the year, so that the present building has been outgrown.

Joseph Keevil, of Humboldt St. Church, Brooklyn, tells of the death of Theodore Axland, a young man of consecration and promising usefulness in the Christian ministry. He was educated at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., completing the course but taken ill before the graduation. The church feels that it has sustained a great loss.

The church at Plymouth, Pa., where L. O. Knipp ministers, is rejoicing that the debt of $23,000 incurred by the improvement of the church property several years ago has been liquidated and the church entirely out of debt. This is one of the oldest churches in that part of the country, having been organized in 1825.

At the recent meeting held by J. H. Jones with J. R. Blunt, pastor of South Joplin (Mo.) church, there were about fifty additions. Instead of making plans for the erection of a new building, as was first intended, an effort will be made to wipe out all the present indebtedness so that the building project can be started with a clean slate.

The Pentwater, Mich., summer colony of Disciples will be interested to hear that the congregation there has purchased the building known as the Maccabee Temple for their meeting-house. The house is being painted and repaired and will be put in good order by the time the season opens. W. F. Schrontz is the practical-minded minister there.

During the convention at Portland, Ore., two rousing sessions of the Christian Endeavor convention will be held on Sunday night July 9, one at the White Temple and the other at the Grace Methodist Church. The speakers will be United States Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, Dr. Royal J. Dye of Bolenge, Africa, Chas. C. Chapman of California, James Small of Kansas City and Austin Hunter of Chicago.

Mark Sexson has just closed a meeting at Hugo, Oklahoma, where J. Erian Thomas ministers. Mr. Thomas came to Hugo from Mexico City, Mexico and is originally from South Wales. Hugo is a fast growing city of 8000 and the church there under the leadership of Mr. Thomas is in the front rank, having doubled in membership since his ministry. One feature of the meeting was a number of men who became Christians. Many of these came as the result of the minister's careful over-sight and tactful methods. In token of their appreciation of his efficient work at the close of the meeting the official voted to advance his salary.

W. J. Lockhart, of Des Moines, Ia., has closed a four weeks meeting with the Davis St. Christian Church, Ottumwa, Iowa. In all 211 responded to the invitation. The Davis St. Church where the Iowa convention is to be held this year is a young church, but has made a splendid growth in the past ten years. Its most rapid growth has been under the present pastor, Isaac S. Elder. During Mr. Elder's pastorate a very commodious new house has been built and a very large number of people have been added to the church. Mr. Elder followed the Sunday meeting of some three years ago holding his own meeting with several hundred accessions, and since then has held other short meetings with good results, but the meeting just closed was the first extended campaign attempted since the Sunday meetings. The new converts on the closing night pledged over five hundred dollars to the coming years expenses.

Dr PRICE'S
Cream
Baking Powder

Pure, Wholesome, Reliable

Made from cream of tartar derived solely from grapes, the most delicious and healthful of all fruit acids.

Its use is a guarantee of perfect food and a protection against the ills that follow the use of alum, alum-phosphate and other low grade powders.

The mixtures called baking powders that sell for ten or twenty-five cents a pound, or a cent an ounce, are all alike, make from alum and costing less than three cents a pound.

We are in receipt of a statement signed by W. T. Moore, president of Florida Christian Missionary Society, and other members of the society warning people in the northern states against the too rosy descriptions of agricultural possibilities in Florida. "Thousands of brethren are being fooled and cheated," says Dr. Moore, by the extravagant claims being put forward for the soil of that state. Nevertheless, the statement makes the point clear that there are possibilities of prosperity there if intelligence and hard work are contributed by the investor. There is especially a need of active Christian men and women who will coöperate with the churches and Dr. Moore asks all Disciples contemplating removing to Florida to write either himself at Eustis or T. A. Cox, state secretary, at Live Oak.

We have the following good report from David C. Peters of Honolulu, Hawaii. "Three young Japanese women, previously baptized, took membership with the Honolulu congregation recently, making six additions since I arrived here two months ago. We are to enjoy the pleasure and profit of the presence of W. C. Merritt, International Sunday-school Secretary for the Northwest, on those islands promoting the better Sunday-school, for a short while. He arrived on May 20, and we expect to keep him busy. I have known Mr. Merritt in the great northwest, and am happy to have him visit Hawaii. He will do our schools good. Members of the Christian Church coming this way to visit the islands passing through to other countries, please do not forget we that are here. If you will let us know in advance the date of your arrival, we shall be glad to welcome you at the dock. We want to show you the tremendous field to be harvested here in the middle of the Pacific. If people who travel for pleasure know the delights of these islands, there would be a vast throng of tourists here all of the time. I have seen much of Europe, Africa and Asia, but I have nowhere seen a more beautiful place than this. Many are coming, and it is hoped that our work here will benefit some by the coming of our own brethren."

E. O. Irvin has resigned at Ottawa, Kan., and will make his future home in Florida.

At a recent Sunday-school convention in Canal Dover, Ohio, there were 1,520 men in line in the parade.

Clinton Aher, of Franklin, Ind., has accepted a call to Carlisle, Ark. Although this is a new field it is a promising one, having a front rank Sunday-school.

On May 21, Joseph W. Hagin, of Covington, Ky., delivered the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of Hamilton College, in the Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky.

The new church at Turlock, Calif., is nearing completion. This handsome building is being erected at a cost of $10,000. F. M. Dowling will assist the minister, C. S. Needham at the dedicatory services in August.

The congregation at Portland, Ind., is erecting a new house of worship at a cost of $20,000. Henry H. Webb, the pastor, delivered the baccalaureate address before the graduating class of the high school recently.

C. E. Wagner who ministers at South Side Church, Hannibal Mo., is in the third year of his pastorate. The Sunday-school of this church made an excellent showing in a recent contest with the Quincy (Ill.) schools, having an attendance of over eight hundred.

George P. Rutledge, pastor of Third Church Philadelphia, Pa., has served this church more than thirteen years. The past year has been one of the most prosperous in its history, there being additions at nearly every service. The men's class organized less than a year ago has an enrollment of 125 members.

The Jubilee Convention of the State Missionary Society of the Disciples of Christ of New York will meet in Buffalo on June 20-26. The six-day program covers all the work of the different activities of the churches of the state. The Men's Brotherhood session occurs Saturday evening, June 24. A side trip to Niagara Falls is planned for the afternoon.

Children's Day services were held Sunday evening, June 4, at the Lenox Avenue Church, New York. Special songs, dialogues and recitations were given by members of the Sunday-school. At the morning service, William Bayard Craig spoke on the topic: "The Mission of the Church." Dr. Craig believes the Disciples church has a special mission to the thousands of detached Disciples in New York.

An interesting story is told in the May number of the American Home Missionary of the Park Avenue Church at East Orange, N. J., where L. N. D. Wells ministers. The work was organized only eleven years ago by twelve Disciples. At first services were held in the home of one of the members, but it was not long before a building was needed, so a lot was purchased and with the help of the Church Extension Society a chapel holding 250 was erected. Miner Lee Bates occupied the pastorate for a short time and the work prospered greatly. In 1906 L. N. D. Wells, the present pastor was called and under his leadership the church grew rapidly. A modern building splendidly equipped, was erected at a cost of $40,000. The Sunday-school now has an average attendance of 450, which exceeds a little the church membership. The C. W. B. M. has about a hundred members. Last year the total amount raised for all purposes was $12,436.45, and this year over $1,000 will be raised for missions and benevolences. It is now considered one of the strongest churches in East Orange.

Enroute to the Convention

See the new wonderland opened for the tourist by the new transcontinental railway

On the new line opened for through passenger traffic May 28, you travel to the North Pacific Coast through the most majestic and magnificent scenery in the United States. Marvelous engineering feats take you through mountain gorges, and by rushing torrents that amaze you with their scenic grandeur. In addition you travel on the superb new steel train unequalled for ideal luxuriousness, solid comfort and splendid service. Leaves Chicago 10:15 p. m., daily; arrives Seattle 8:00 p. m.; Tacoma 9:30 p. m. the third day, making direct connections for Portland Another new steel train, "THE COLUMBIAN," leaves Chicago daily at 10:00 a. m. The route is over the new steel trail of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul

"The Olympian"

and

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & PUGET SOUND RAILWAYS

Send for illustrated literature descriptive of new trains and route
F. A. Miller, General Passenger Agent, Chicago

After a successful pastorate of three years, George W. Purdy will close his pastorate at Blockton, Ia., on July 30.

O. L. Cook, pastor of First Church, Hutchinson, Kan., delivered the baccalaureate sermon, to the graduating class of Oklahoma Christian University, Enid, Okla.

A new country church near Allison, Kan., was dedicated recently by P. W. Walthall of Wray Colo., who followed this with a week's evangelistic services.

E. B. Barnes, pastor at Richmond, Ky., preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., June 4.

H. O. Breeden is in a meeting with First Church, Santa Rosa, Calif. Dr. Breeden recently held a union meeting at Rialto, Calif., the Methodist and Congregational Churches uniting with our congregation there.

C. S. Brooks formerly of New Castle, Pa., has accepted a call to the church at Portsmouth, Ohio. During Mr. Brooks' pastorate at New Castle, nearly seven hundred people have been added to the membership, giving a total mmbership of over 1,400. The church has also been remodeled at a cost of $20,000, making it the largest in the city. Mr. Brooks will succeed E. J. Meacham at Portsmouth.

Ridgewood Heights Church

Several members from the Second Church of Christ, Brooklyn, moved into the Ridgewood Heights section, Borough of Queens. The attention of the Disciples' Missionary Union was called to this splendid suburban section. After a complete investigation, they found a promising field, rapidly growing, without any church service in the English tongue. They decided at once to enter the field. January, 1909, an interesting Bible-school was organized, and November of the same year Robt. Wittchen, having completed his course at the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., was secured to take charge of this mission work. Nov. 28, 1909, a mission church was organized with ten members and regular church services conducted. An old real-estate office building was rented in which to carry on the work. The church membership increased to twenty-two and a splendid Sundayschool of 175 was built up. A well-located lot on the corner of Forest Avenue and Linden Street was secured at a cost of $3,600, and a neat, temporary frame building, costing $2,000 was erected and dedicated April 30. The formal dedicatory service was held at 3 p. m. Many from our other churches in the city were present. W. L. Fisher, minister of the First Church, Manhattan, preached the dedicatory sermon.

Brooklyn, N. Y. JOS. KEEVIL.

Colorado Convention

The Colorado State Convention meets at Greeley, June 27-29. The program is not exactly the same as that to be used at Portland, but a number of the speakers are the same and the indications are that it will be Colorado's best convention.

The Greeley people are looking forward to a regular "love feast" when many of the old friends from the "east" will stop en route to the National Convention. Greeley is on the Union Pacific road, fifty miles north from Denver (can be reached by motor car from that city). It is located in a rich, irrigated valley. As you approach the city you can see the following significant sign: "This is Greeley, always sober and never broke." As the above would indicate, it is a "dry town," and always has been.

Our Sunday-school is the largest in the state, and the church is one of the youngest of our organizations, seven years of age.

Just as the city's founder, Horace Greeley, said, "Young man, go West," we will say, "Christians, come to Greeley, June 27-29."

"Four hundred and thirty-one present, $310 offering," was the Sunday-school report last Sunday. JOSEPH L. THOMPSON.

Greeley, Col.

Program for the Disciples' Rally

International Convention of Christian Endeavor Atlantic City, New Jersey. Arranged by the National Board of Christian Endeavor.

Monday, July 10-2:00 p. m. Earl Wilfley, Washington, D. C., presiding. Devotional Service. G. Everett Baker, President of Oregon Christian Endeavor Union.

"A Word of Greeting From New Jersey and the East." L. N. D. Wells, East Orange, New Jersey.

"The Debt of the Disciples to Christian Endeavor." A. B. Philputt, Indianapolis, Indiana.

"The Debt of Christian Endeavor to the Disciples." Irving S. Chenoweth, New York City.

"The World's Debt to the Fathers." Hon. Champ Clark, Speaker of Congress.

"The National Board of Christian Endeavor for the Disciples of Christ." Claude E. Hill, National Superintendent.

"Show Me." H. A. Denton, Troy, N. Y.

Closing Prayer Service, conducted by E. L. Philpot, President of the Tennessee Christian Endeavor Union.

San Francisco Letter

The West is beholding a heterogeneous people becoming homogeneous on the question of socialism. Not that all belong to a socialist "local" and carry a red card, but that the trend is that way. Classical Berkeley elected a socialist mayor. Oakland's personal piety and eminent respectability received quite a scare when Booth, the socialist candidate, qualified in the primary. He polled 9,000 votes, Mott defeating him by 2,000. Miller in the Alameda election received 500 votes, and this without the socialists making much of a fight. The peculiar thing is this: The party in Alameda numbers only twenty-five who belong to the local. Who were the 475 that voted for Miller? A good percentage were members of orthodox churches. The same was true in the other cities.

Stitt Wilson, mayor elect of Berkeley, preached in the Methodist church for seven years. He is yet a preacher. He preaches in San Francisco on Sunday morning in a theatre to the largest audience in the city. He is mild-mannered, looks like a preacher, and has no superior on the coast as a pulpit orator. We had him at the West Side Christian Church a few days ago where he addressed a joint meeting of the ministers and the Bay Union, C. W. B. M. He was well received. He said that he had always been accorded a sympathetic hearing from Disciple ministers. He declared that he grew less dogmatic each day. From similar remarks that he dropped it would appear that he is fast becoming an opportune socialist, and perhaps will ultimately adopt the method of laissez-faire.

Even the Chinese and the Japanese are socialists. Recently, two young Chinese women, one of them a graduate of the University of California, stirred all Chinatown against the Manchu dynasty. Here is a sample from Miss B. Loo, "Men, lead on; we women will follow. Great is our purpose. Our country (China) is honeycombed with the thought of socialism. The army and the navy are both affected; the Manchu dynasty will thus fall." When she closed her address, Chinese merchants, schoolboys, scholars, and elders all rose and shouted, "Choong Gwan."

The Japanese went them one better. A week or so after the execution of the socialists in Japan, the Japs of San Francisco assembled in Jefferson Square and bitterly denounced their goverment. An open letter was addressed to Counsel General M. Nagai, requesting him to appear and refute, if he wished, the charges to be made against his

A DELICACY THAT IS HEALTHFUL.

There are many delicacies one hesitates to eat for fear of their after-effects. There are also edibles recommended to us as healthful which we avoid because we find nothing appealing in their taste.

That is why we are always glad to hear of some article of diet which is toothsome as well as benefical.

Take the Graham Crackkers baked by the National Biscuit Company. Their truly captivating nut-like flavor has made them widely popular, and ,being made of the best of the wheat, they are extremely healthful and aid the digestion wonderfully. Served with milk they are delightful.

These Graham Crackers are packed under the well-known In-er-Seal Trade-Mark in moisture-and-dust-proof-packages.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

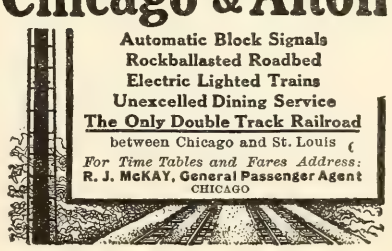
CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

J. M. LOWE, GENERAL EVANGELIST.—Church Dedications, Special Addresses. Permanent address, 1350 25th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone
Far Sounding
Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

Between
CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY
via the
Chicago & Alton



Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis
For Time Tables and Fares Address:
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO

government and the Emperor. He wisely declined. M. Myrata, editor of the Shin Zei, said: "The socialist movement has spread into every corner of the empire. The blood of the martyrs slain by the government is but the baptism of thousands."

I have seen Japs, Chinese, Hindoos, Italians, Russians, Jews, Germans, Spaniards, Frenchmen, and Americans in a hall together, or on the street, cheering some speaker, though perhaps but few present understood half that was said. Still, one couldn't help but think about the multitude that came together on the day of Pentesost, for, in, spite of many tongues, the language of brotherhood is universal and understood. I wonder if there isn't a kinship between these and those who hid in the hid in the catacombs of Rome, singing, catacombs of Rome, singing, "He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree."

Alameda, Calif. J. R. PERKINS.

Joy in the Midst of China's Famine

In the heart of the deepest sorrow you often find the most exquisite joy. China has had a famine. The center of the famine district is the north of Anhui Province. We have four mission stations in Anhui Province so it is not far from us. Floods swept away the crops from thousands of acres of the land and left nothing but a great yellow muddy waste without even a weed. Winter came and starvation. Warm weather came and with it came typhus fever—famine fever if you wish so to call it. Famine and starving and cold are bad, but there is nothing to compare with famine fever. Families die, then villiages are wiped out, then the country is made a waste with little other than wolf-like dogs and great soaring carrion birds left of life in the land. Yet we must work on and do what can be done. In this great work there are three names that should be immortal. They are Doctor Cochran, Mr. Lobenstine and Mr. Morris, of the American Presbyterian mission, at Hwai-yuen. They have worked day and night without thought of anything but the sufferings of their people.

Finally, with the coming of the fever, Dr. Cochran was stricken. A great heartbreaking sob went up in the land. Days wore on and they watched. Then there came the days of wild delirium and five men were required to hold the doctor. It seemed hopeless. All Christian China went to her knees. The orders went out even from the Catholic Church to join without ceasing in the prayers. The poor heathen people hardly knew what to do. They loved the doctor with the passion that runs deep but makes little show. Finally fifty of the men went to the native City Temple, made out an agreement which they signed, promising their god that if Dr. Cochran's life be spared that they would offer in place each man one year of his life,—fifty years they pledged their god to give their friend the "Foreign Teacher!"

And a change came. The wild brain calmed. Then rest and sleep. Now the doctor is out of danger. He is very weak, he had best go home and get his strength again. You may see him. If you do take off your hat. He has faced worse than battle. A man who goes to famine fever seldom comes back.

Do you think it has paid? You ask Cochran. Ask those that offered themselves in his place. The love and devotion of Dr. Cochran and those men who have worked with him in that awful famine has awakened a new Spirit in that sad land, has awakened a Spirit of love,—the Spirit of Christ,—that has put a new song into the hearts of the people, the song of peace.

PAUL WAKEFIELD.

Hiram College News

Arrangements for a most elaborate commencement season are rapidly being completed and from present indications Hiram will be visited by an unusually large number of her alumni this year. Commencement week begins with the baccalaureate sermon delivered by President Miner Lee Bates, Sunday, June 11, and lasts over June 15. The program for the remainder of the week will be:

Monday: Field Day, Literary Society commencements.

Tuesday: Opera, "The Chimes of Normandy" by the college vocal society.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

A Welcome Change

Smoke curling up from the farmhouse chimney as the men are coming in from the fields, gives a pretty suggestion of a good supper and a comfortable home. But it also means a hot, tired woman, working hard over a blazing fire.

Your wife can escape this with a New Perfection Oil Cook-stove.

A New Perfection keeps a kitchen many degrees cooler than any other range, yet it does all a coal or wood range can do. It saves time, labor and fuel. No wood to cut; no coal to carry; no ashes; no soot. With the New Perfection oven it is the best cooking device you can find anywhere.

New Perfection WICK BLUE FLAME Oil Cook-stove

Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners, with long, turquoise blue enameled chimneys. Handsomely finished throughout. The 2- and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without a cabinet top, which is fitted with drop shelves, towel racks, etc.

Dealers everywhere; or write for descriptive circular to the nearest agency of the Standard Oil Company (Incorporated)

Special Fountain Pen offer to Christian Century Readers for 3 months, to convince You of its Merits. Terry's "Kantleek" Fountain Pen, fitted with 14 Karat Gold Nib. Sells for $2.50. :-: To You $1.25.

(Patent Applied For)

Terry's Presto Self Fill Fountain Pen (the $5.00 kind) to you for $2.50. This Pen fills and cleans itself in a second. No Rubber Sacks to Rot—no mechanism to get out of order; does not leak or blot. Wonderfully simple—simply wonderful. Such is our confidence in the great value of our Pens over all others—bar none, that we agree to return your money, if the Pen proves unsatisfactory; we make you the Sole Judge.

JOHN TERRY CO., (Manufacturers) 313-315 Broadway, New York.
(Able representatives wanted.)

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

Wednesday: Meeting of Board of Trustees, Class Day, Alethian Literary Society entertainment.

Thursday: Commencement exercises, Alumni program and business meeting, Alumni banquet, Delphic Literary Society entertainment.

Music for the occasion will be furnished by the college orchestra and glee club. The commencement address will be delivered by Dr. Ira Landrith president of Belmont College, Nashville, Tenn., on the subject, "Level Best Living."

The senior class this year ranks among the largest and best ever graduated from Hiram college and a large number of the graduates have already accepted positions of honor and responsibility, in which they give promise of maintaining the record set by former graduates of the institution.

President M. L. Bates and F. S. Butchert, field agent for Hiram college, returned this week from Portsmouth, Ohio, where they were in attendance at the state convention of Disciples. A large number of the Hiram alumni were present and together held a banquet on Wednesday.

The lecture course committee has completed its selection of entertainments choosing from both the Ridpath and Coit lyceum bureaus for the coming season. The course will include a lecture by Frank Gunsaulus, and a musical by the Chicago Glee Club, which is sufficient announcement of its merit.

The college Volunteer Mission band held a most interesting and instructive service Sunday, May 28, at the Hiram church, when they held their annual open meeting. Addresses were delivered by the different members relative to their plans for the future in foreign lands and also on the vital problems that confront the world today on the subject of missions.

Hiram has the distinction of being one of three colleges having a separate department for missionary training and it meets the need for specially trained missionary leaders in both home and foreign field. Dr. Harry C. Hurd is director of the department this year. He is a leader of ability and capable of instructing and inspiring those who enlist in the world campaign of Christian conquest. Mr. Li, a native of China and a brilliant scholar, teaches Chinese to volunteers for service in China. Harold Baker of the class of '09 and Miss Josephine Witherstay of the same class will leave this summer for Tibet, where they will take uup the work in that field. O. T. L.

New Mexico, West Texas Convention

The New Mexico, West Texas Christian Missionary Society is the official designation of the organization which looks after the missionary interests of the Disciples in that portion of the southwest comprised in the scattered convention constituency, but thus years old and has at best only a small and scattered convention constituancy, but thus far all its annual gatherings have been characterized by unity and enthusiasm. The last one, held at Alberquerque, N. Mex., was no exception. The attendance was not large but in point of genuine interest manifested and work done the convention rivaled the larger conventions held in the central states.

The veteran Frank Talmage, who is known for the good work he has done in Pennsylvania and New York, as well as in the southwest, presided over the sessions with dignity and grace. The convention opened on Monday evening, May 22nd, and continued until Thursday evening, and every moment of the time was devoted to the consideration of themes of vital interest to this "Land of the Turquoise Sky" which is promising so much in the years to come.

The writer spoke on Monday and Tuesday evenings to good audiences and on Wednesday evening Herman P. Williams, who is serving as missionary pastor of the church at Albuquerque related some of his experiences on the foreign field, in demonstration of the power of the gospel to save. Elder G. W. Philipps, the missionary pastor at Alamogordo also spoke to the convention on that evening. On Thursday evening, Pres. W. E. Garrison, of the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts gave an address on "The Social Mission of the Church." Others present and participating in the proceedings of the convention were J. W. Rose, pastor at East Las Vegas and superintendent of Bible-school work; W. R. Quiggin recently from England, now pastor at Clovis; C. E. Hunt, pastor at Tucumcari and minister to several surrounding points; and secretary of the society and who exercises an oversight over all the missionary churches in the territory.

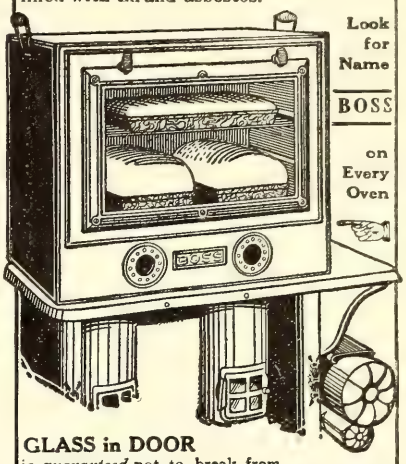
The work throughout this region seems hopeful. The churches are for the most part supplied with pastors and are growing.

The prospects for the coming year are very bright. Mr. Grim will devote all his time to strengthening the work plans and opening new work wherever an opportunity is presented. Mr. Rose it is hoped will be able to spend all of his time, after Oct. 1, in the interest of the Bible-school work. He is a genius at this sort of thing and will doubtless accomplish a great deal. It is hoped that soon some more definite work for the Mexicans residing in the territory may be undertaken and that a national sanitarium for tubercular patients may be established. Resolutions covering both these projects were adopted. The C. W. B. M. session of the convention was presided over by Mrs. Zwinglius Moore, wife of our pastor at Deming, and a good program was presented.

The next annual convention will be held at Alamogordo, at the foot of the Sacremento Mountains upon which is located only twelve miles away, the famous mountain resort Clanderoft. The convention will continue over several days and opportunity will be afforded for at least one day's outing among the pines and the clouds. It is only eighty-miles from El Paso, the best of the southwest if not of the universe. The national secretaries will all be invited. P. J. RICE.

El Paso, Texas.

USE A PORTABLE
BOSS OVEN
With Patented GLASS DOOR
on your stove or range, either oil, gasoline, acetylene, alcohol or gas.
No more spoiled bakings or worry—No more wasted heat—No more jarring or chilling of oven. Housewives can see their baking without opening door. Economy and convenience both guaranteed in the BOSS—a polished blued steel oven lined with tin and asbestos.

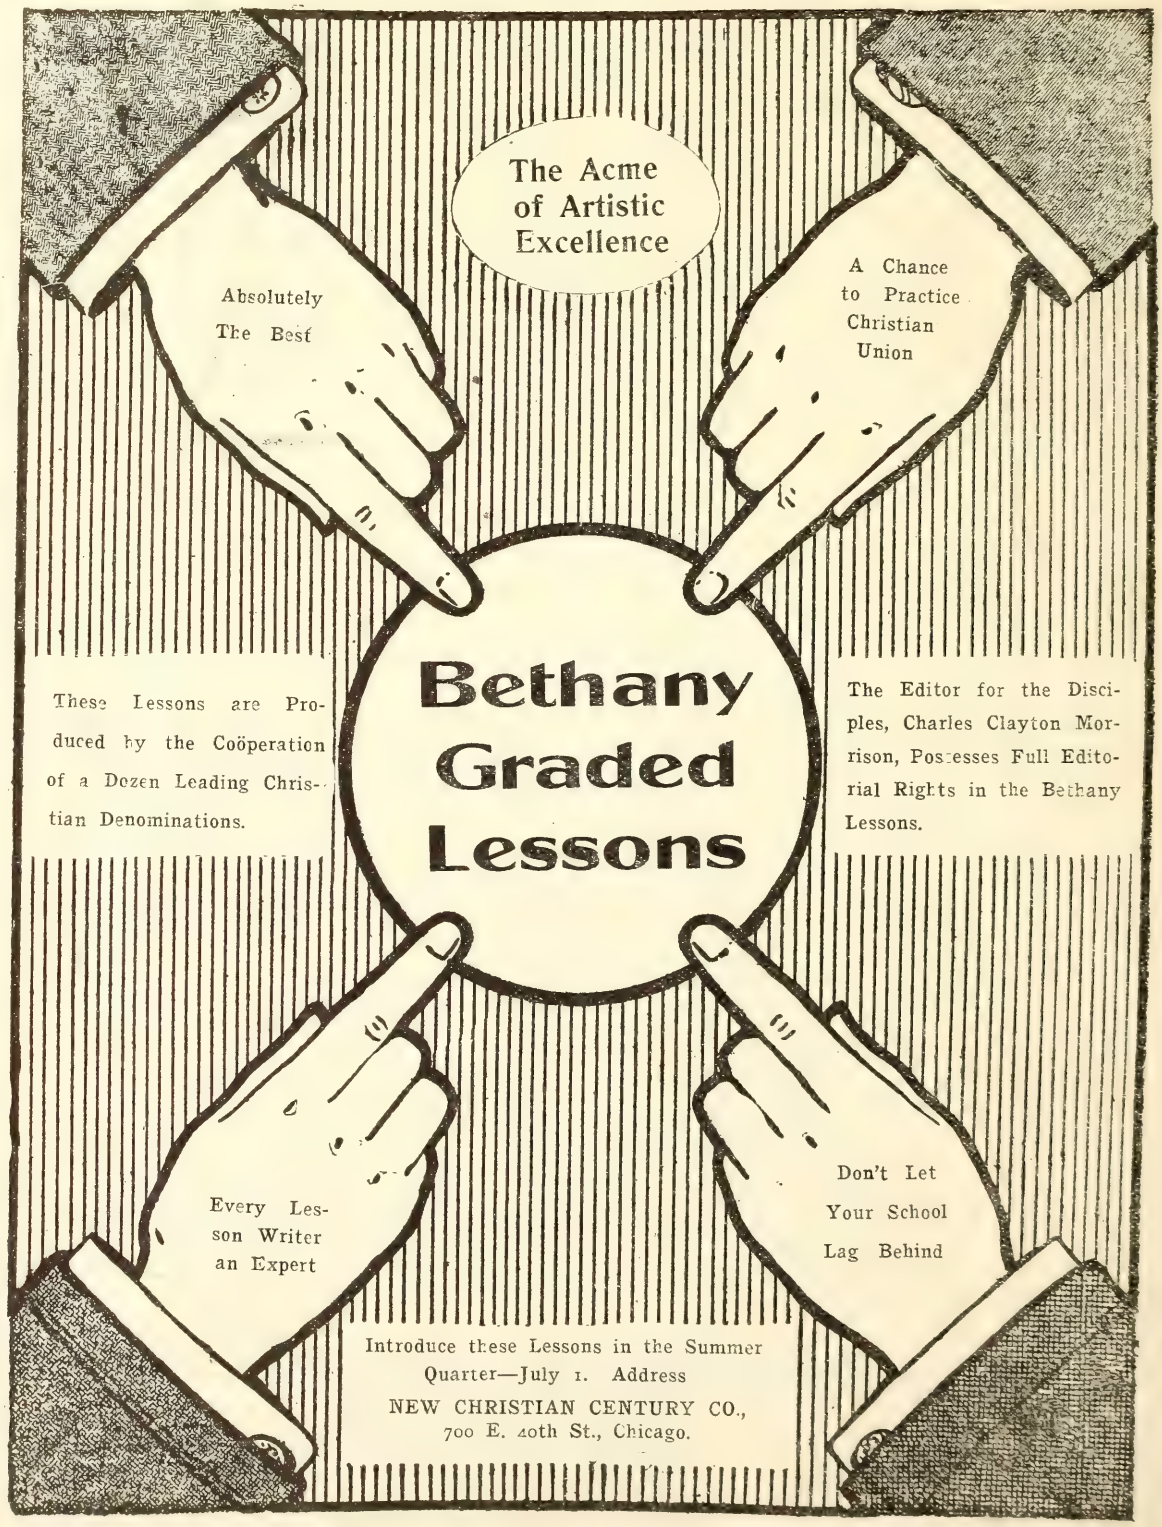


GLASS in DOOR
is guaranteed not to break from heat because it is secured by our patented yielding pressure retaining strips, which permit expansion and contraction. Glass door fits snugly in one-piece beaded front, and is held tightly in place with two turnbuckles, preventing escape of heat.
Baking qualities and ventilation superior to any other oven or range. All heat goes right into the open bottom, and is perfectly distributed to all parts of the oven by means of our patented Heat Deflector. Flame always visible through small mica windows. With the BOSS a baking costs less than a cent. It will many times over pay for itself in saved bakings to say nothing of saved fuel.
Ask YOUR Dealer to show you the BOSS Glass Door Oven. INSIST upon seeing the name "BOSS" stamped in the front of Oven. Then you know that it is genuine and guaranteed.
FREE: Our valuable Recipe Book, containing many cookery helps and full description of BOSS Ovens sent FREE on receipt of postal, plainly written, giving your own and your dealer's names and addresses.
THE HUENEFELD CO. 2156 Spring Grove Ave. Cincinnati, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Please mention this paper.)

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI
A BIBLICAL and THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of high grade located at COLUMBIA adjacent to the UNIVERSITY of MISSOURI
University Credit Courses—Ministerial and Missionary Training Courses. Departments:—Biblical and Systematic Theology, Social Service and Missions, Old Testament and New Testament. Next Term Begins Sept. 18, 1911.
For Catalog and Information address Charles M. Sharpe, Dean.

DRAKE UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL
Credit Courses in Usual College Subjects
Credit Courses in Education and Psychology
Professional Work for Teachers of All Grades
Courses in all Certificate Subjects for Teachers
Courses in Music and Art
Courses for Music and Drawing Teachers and Supervisors
For Announcement, Address DRAKE UNIVERSITY. DES MOINES, IOWA.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Introduce these Lessons in the Summer Quarter—July 1. Address
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. June 15, 1911 Number 24

Counting Life's Losses

By George A. Campbell

The Rekindled Fire

By G. Campbell Morgan

An English Letter

By Leslie W. Morgan

Disciple Leaders Speak

Condemning Attack on Foreign Society

CHICAGO

HOW A GREAT CITY CARES FOR ITS ANIMALS

BY FRANCES KINGDON.

One morning this winter a family living in Chicago awoke to face a tragedy in their household. Their faithful dog who had lived with them for seven years, sharing all their joys and sorrows as well as their chops and chocolate cake, had disappeared and could not be found. He was lost in a big city. The evening before he had gone out the back door for his usual little run around the block and he had never returned. To some people such an occurrence would have been far removed from a truly big sorrow and hardly suggestive of a tragedy at all, but this family loved their dog; he was human to them, a comrade and a friend, and to go on living without him seemed like a great big ache and a loneliness that would be hard to forget. He was not a fine blooded dog, had no pedigree and had never taken a blue ribbon at a bench show but they did not care if his ancestors were not aristocrats for they loved him. It made home-coming just a little different to every member of that household to receive his glad welcome.

Day after day passed by and still no news of their dear dog. They thought of him constantly out in the cold, homesick, maybe hungry, not understanding, waiting and wondering why some one did not come for him. They would stand on the street corners or look out of their windows hoping against hope for a sight of his big dark figure running along the streets and even at night they would listen for his polite little scratch on the door asking for admittance. When it was sadly settled at last that he was gone forever the little family began to think of all the lost pets in their city. Did they ever find anyone to care for them again or did they die on the streets heartbroken and alone after days of hunting for crusts and crumbs, trembling at the sound of a human step, sleeping out in storms and bitter cold? The family thought, too, of all the little vagabond animals of the city who never knew where to go, who were tortured and teased by the cruel, and when starving to death crept down one alley after another, gaunt and frightened, little ghosts of want, looking for a quiet place to breathe their last.

It was from their desire to be kinder to all poor neglected animals that this family became acquainted with the work of the Humane Society and the wonderful good it is doing not only for human beings but defenseless dumb beasts. They found that the Humane Society of Chicago was organized forty-two years ago and during that time has also organized seventy-eight other Humane Societies throughout the state. It has been the means of causing the legislature to pass many acts for the prevention of cruelty to animals and has put through various humane laws for them. As a matter of fact during those years it has prosecuted six thousand people who have been cruel to animals, comprising such acts as failing to provide proper shelter and food for their animals, failing to properly care for them when they are sick, mutilating, torturing, beating and over-working them. Every year cases of fiendish, almost incredible cruelty, have been described by the society, such as throwing live cats into a furnace or tying them to a post and having a mad dog chew them up. The courts have the power to fine persons guilty of any act of cruelty to animals a sum not less than three dollars or more than two hundred. If the animal that has been mistreated or killed is the property of another a sentence of from one to three years in the penitentiary or a fine of a thousand dollars can be pronounced.

Not only has the Humane Society of Chicago looked out for the animals living in the city but they have officers investigating all the cattle trains coming here. No railroad is allowed to confine animals in any car more than thirty-six hours consecutively, and arrangements must be made for them to be properly watered, fed and sheltered when unloaded. The society has also had a law passed forbidding in the public schools of this state any experiment upon any living creature for demonstration purposes. Dissection of dead animals shall be confined to the class room only. For four years the Society has given public lectures by well informed men on humane treatment of animals which have aroused wide interest on the subject.

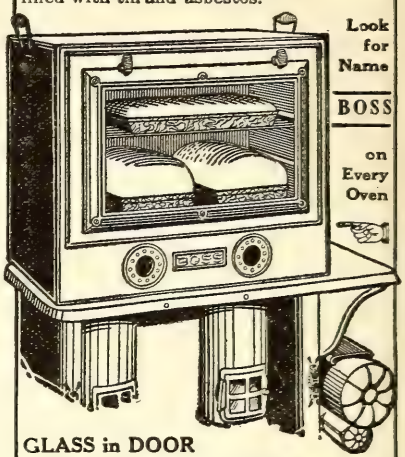
"The day is coming," says one of the workers connected with the Humane Society, "when man will recognize that all animals are a part of the divine creation and that in justice to himself he must show justice to his fellow creatures. We will then see the turning of the light of research in the direction of observing and studying conditions that are conducive to the comfort of animals. At present we rejoice that Boston is to have a hospital for the free treatment of sick and injured animals which will be a memorial to the late George T. Angell, formerly president of the Massachusetts Society. The founding of such an institution in the work of animal protection all those engaged in the work will fully appreciate. Another practical object lesson in humane education was given in the will of a prominent Illinois citizen which made provision for the care, as long as they live, of some faithful servants—three horses, 'Ned,' 'Jenny' and 'Dick.' A wealthy Colorado man also set aside a generous portion of his estate for the care of his six horses, with the injunction that from the day of his death they should be exempt from work. The Lincoln Park Board of Commissioners recently constituted themselves a humane society when they decided to reward a faithful old employe—a horse—'Porter,' who had been in their service twenty-six years. They passed a resolution emancipating him forever from heavy labor, that he is never to be sold, shall always have a comfortable home and remain the property of Lincoln Park until his death and then his photograph and history shall be framed and hung in a conspicuous place in the Lincoln Park stables."

Although it seems impossible for all the citizens and children of Chicago to become members of the Humane Society they can greatly assist the work by reporting all cases of cruelty to animals, whether they require prosecution or not, in writing or by telephoning to the society. Give name of driver, owner or party offending, and residence if possible. If unknown, give name or number of vehicle. State nature of cruelty and effect on animals, also place and time when occurring. Complainants should always give their own names and addresses so that further information can be procured if desired. The names given in confidence are never disclosed.

SHE NEEDED SECOND SIGHT—English Clergyman: "And when you arrive in London, my dear lady, don't fail to see St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey." Fair American: "You bet; I'll rattle those off sure; but what I've been hankering to see, ever since I was knee-high to a grasshoypper, is the Church of England!"—The Continent.

GREAT SIMILARITY—"There are some points about your writings that resemble Milton," said the editor. "Do you think so?" cried the delighted author. "Yes," the editor continued, "you employ almost the same punctuation marks."—The Continent.

USE A PORTABLE
BOSS OVEN
With Patented GLASS DOOR
on your stove or range, either oil, gasoline, acetylene, alcohol or gas.
No more spoiled bakings or worry—No more wasted heat—No more jarring or chilling of oven. Housewives can see their baking without opening door. Economy and convenience both guaranteed in the BOSS—a polished blued steel oven lined with tin and asbestos.



GLASS in DOOR
is guaranteed not to break from heat because it is secured by our patented yielding pressure retaining strips, which permit expansion and contraction. Glass door fits snugly in one-piece beaded front, and is held tightly in place with two turnbuckles, preventing escape of heat.
Baking qualities and ventilation superior to any other oven or range. All heat goes right into the open bottom, and is perfectly distributed to all parts of the oven by means of our patented Heat Deflector. Flame always visible through small mica windows. With the BOSS a baking costs less than a cent. It will many times over pay for itself in saved bakings to say nothing of saved fuel.
Ask YOUR Dealer to show you the BOSS Glass Door Oven. INSIST upon seeing the name "BOSS" stamped in the front of Oven. Then you know that it is genuine and guaranteed.
FREE: Our valuable Recipe Book, containing many cookery helps and full description of BOSS Ovens sent FREE on receipt of postal, plainly written, giving your own and your dealer's names and addresses.
THE HUENEFELD CO. 2156 Spring Grove Ave. Cincinnati, O

A MAGAZINE of LAUGHTER
THE FUNNIEST OF ALL THE FUNNY MAGAZINES
Brimful of wholesome wit and humor. Join the campaign for One Million subscribers by sending 25 CENTS in Coin for One Year or five (5) separate subscriptions for $1.00. Foreign sub'ns, 25 cents extra.
THOMPSON'S MAGAZINE, Dept. DH, 328 Federal St., Chicago

Between
CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY
via the
Chicago & Alton
Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis
For Time Tables and Fares Address,
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, - - - - EDITORS

Facts as to the Missionary Situation

So far in the discussion of the practice of Christian union the situation on the mission field has been referred to only in scattered allusions. The fragmentary and for the most part casual character of these allusions has left them open to possible misconstruction.

It was not the purpose of the Christian Century, after our first reference to the missionary situation, to make any further use of it in the current discussion of the practice of unity; and the editors so informed the office of the Foreign Society. The keen interest of our readers in the unity discussion keeps it sufficiently alive from week to week without drawing upon material which lies in the sensitive zone of our missionary work.

The missionary situation has become a theme of controversy through The Christian Standard's eager siezure upon it as a pretext for attacking the Foreign Society. And it is due the truth that some statement of the facts be made, detached from any polemical context, so that mistaken inferences may be checked and full justice done to all concerned.

* * *

The place to begin is with the movement toward an indigenous united church in those lands where Christians have become numerous enough to have begun to develop what may be called a social consciousness.

This movement is the outstanding fact in missions today. It was the background of every discussion at the Edinburgh Conference. It is creating a new set of problems for missionary statesmen to solve. It is forcing a reinterpretation of the Christian gospel, of the heathen religions and of our occidental sectarian differences.

These distinctions of our occidental denominations are little known and all but meaningless to the oriental church. Our missionaries have difficulty enough in conveying to the heathen mind the essential truth of the gospel. To try to impart the credal distinctions of our western theology would bring confusion and corrupt many from the simplicity that is in Christ.

It may be imagined, therefore, that our sectarian preferences and prejudices are much less conspicuous among oriental Christians than here. There is a strong feeling of fellowship among them on the ground of their common Christianity, regardless of denominational affiliation.

* * *

The policy of dividing up territory among the denominations is practiced on the mission field as far as possible. This is to prevent overlapping and rivalry and waste. The unevangelized world is so large that there is no excuse for duplication of effort in missionary work, whatever excuse for it may be conjured up for the home field.

The problem of practicing Christian unity is thus often brought more acutely to the attention of the Disciples on the mission field than here at home. There are large areas where the Disciples alone have the right to preach. When an unimmersed Christian comes into such territory, if he does not find a church home with the Disciples, he has none and he is likely to be lost to the cause.

It is affirmed that in some mission centers more have been lost to Christianity from this cause than have been won by the missionaries there from paganism. It is the loss of so many, who are only babes in Christ, that troubles the missionaries and makes them wish that some solution for the problem could be found.

One missionary in describing the results of a convert's lapsing into heathenism said, "It is often a problem of the sheer saving of human life."

* * *

In Western China a basis of federation has been adopted by the denominations at work there looking toward and almost already achieving the goal of a united church. The basic condition of this union is the recognition, by each participating body, of the Christian status of the members of all the other participating bodies and the free interchange of letters regardless of denomination. The Disciples have no mission in this territory except the mission on the border of Tibet.

In Southern India, an out and out United Church has been formed, including several denominations. The Disciples have no mission in that territory.

Two years ago, on the invitation of the Presbyterian Church of India, representatives of many of the evangelical bodies of India, including the United Church of South India, met in a conference at Jubbulpore. The Disciples have a strong mission force in Central India, representing both the Foreign Society and the Woman's Board, and they were represented on the floor of the Conference.

As has been stated before in The Christian Century, the Conference drafted articles of federation and referred them to the several bodies for consideration. The salient points of these articles were, first, a thoroughly evangelical view of God, Christ and the Scriptures; secondly, a recognition of the principle that the church of God is one and that believers are the body of Christ and members severally thereof; thirdly, an acknowledgment of the duty of manifesting the unity of the church, to the end that the Kingdom may come; and, fourthly, an agreement to recognize the validity of each other's ordinances, ministry membership and discipline without thereby committing themselves to approval of particular methods and practices.

A year after the Jubbulpore Conference the Disciples' convention was held. The chief subject considered was the relation of the Disciples to the proposed federation. They discussed the practical problem in terms of their individual convictions, of the home church's expectations, of the other Christian bodies' appeal for unity, and of the sad need of the world about them. They recommended a revision of the clause concerning the validity of the ordinances, though no substitute was formulated.

Again last March another convention of the Disciples' was held. A report of this meeting by Rev. George W. Brown was published in The Christian Century of May 25. The report states that an amendment formulated by the English Baptists which eliminates any recognition of the validity of the others' ordinances was approved. This amendment will be considered by the Federation Conference which is to convene again in Jubbulpore next August.

* * *

The attitude of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in the situation is well known to our readers since the joint statement sent out by them and published in our issue of April 27. These societies have taken no action of approval of the reception into our mission churches of unimmersed Christians.

On the other hand, the statement made on this page last week to the effect that the Foreign Society has inhibited such practice is not to be taken as indicating that there is disagreement and tension between the Society and its missionaries, as though the missionaries were pulling in one direction and the Society in another. Nothing could more unjustly represent the case than such a description.

It is equally unjust to represent the missionaries as assuming to decide such a question as this for themselves. No such inference should be made from our statement concerning the proportion of missionaries holding in favor of the practice of Christian union. Our statement itself should not have been made. There was neither occasion nor sufficient warrant for it. No vote has been taken by the missionaries on the abstract question.

Our missionaries regard themselves as humble workers in the Kingdom of God. They do not propose to assume prerogatives that belong to the church that shares with them the glory and the sacrifices of their work. They face a trying situation. Their hearts are torn with the constant appeal of the people's need and with the sense of a divided church's impotence to supply the need.

They see an independent native church arising which knows not the Joseph of occidental denominationalism. They are face to face with the question whether the Disciples' mission work shall contribute to this indigenous united church or shall be prosecuted outside of it.

But they are loyal to their brotherhood. They only ask us to share the problem with them and to rejoice together in whatever solution the good spirit of truth may send.

Social Survey

Why Children Play in Theaters

The New York Dramatic Mirror on May 3d published a full page article by Miss Blanche Bates on "The Stage and Stage Children." Curiously enough this article by one of America's most talented actresses has not been reprinted, nor given out to the press, nor has its publicity been stimulated in any way. On the other hand a letter from the General Secretary of the National Child Labor Committee to the publisher asking the privilege of reprinting the article with proper credit brought a flat refusal on the ground that the article was at variance with the views of the magazine.

The reason for this silence on the part of those who clamor to exempt theatrical interests from the operation of child labor laws is not far to seek. Miss Bates challenges every argument that has been advanced in favor of child labor on the stage. She maintains that such exploitation is injurious to the child and to the theatre. Regarding the development of dramatic ability, she says,

"In acting, the one fundamental absolute requisite is imagination, —imagination which can analyze and entirely comprehend a character in all its mental and physical aspects, and then can assume them so vividly that others are compelled to see the character in the same way. This is precisely what the stage does not teach the child. The stage instructs him to imitate, not to imagine."

Discussing the unnatural surroundings of the stage and the tendency of children to imitate the unusual she says, "A child is more apt to be completely and irrevocably ruined by the artificiality of the stage than to be elevated and ennobled." Her answer to those who claim that great artists have been developed through early life on the stage is that,

"It is quite as fair to say that these actresses have achieved their rank at the front of their profession in spite of their early connection with the stage, as to insist that they won success because of their environment. Without the handicap, they might have gone on to even loftier heights."

Miss Bates lays upon criminally lazy parents the blame for exposing their children to this environment which deprives them of educational opportunity and exposes them to hardships of travel, "being routed out in the middle of the night for a disquieting journey on jolting trains at the most unearthly hours," and denies that these children are driven upon the stage through family necessity.

Perhaps the most exciting legislative drama of the past season was enacted at Springfield, Ill., in May. A brilliant lobby, consisting of actors, playwrights, theatrical managers and their friends, invaded Springfield for the purpose of breaking down the bars which now prohibit children on the stage, and to substitute for this prohibition a weak, licensing system. Against them appeared Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, representatives of the National Child Labor Committee, and other friends of the children. The notoriously accentuated opposing groups were so obvious that the legislature refused to sacrifice the little children of Illinois to the stage, and the state is to be congratulated on declining to allow any special interest to break into her excellent child labor law.

Catholic Improving School Courses

Through the influence of the Catholic University at Washington there was founded eight years ago the Catholic Education Association, having for one of its aims the co-ordinating of Catholic educational courses with the University course, and the better relations between seminaries and the schools which prepare men for them, including, as far as possible, the high schools which now exist in most principal cities. At Chicago June 26 to 29 will be held the eighth convention of the Association. Questions for discussion will be the Carnegie Foundation and its relation to Catholic institutions, a subject with which Protestants are also dealing, the relation of seminaries to other educational work, and the courses of study in Catholic high schools. During the past year, under the direction of the Association and with the co-operation of bishops, a study has been made of these high school courses with a view of their improvement. The Catholic Church in the United States has 82 seminaries for the training of future priests, and there are 7,000 young men in them at this moment. There are 225 colleges for boys and 696 academies for girls, showing the importance of the question of secondary school. Parish schools number 4,972, and there are 76 high schools of the first rank.

Big Work of Booth's Volunteers

The Volunteers of America, with General and Mrs. Ballington Booth as leaders, have decided through their Grand Field Council just held in Cleveland, to appoint advisory boards of not fewer than five leading citizens of each city in which Volunteers have considerable philanthropic work. Such board has been found helpful in a few citieswhere already appointed. The Council also named a board of five numbers of Volunteer organizations to supervise Sunday-school work, which is growing among Volunteers. The Council learned that philanthropic work of Volunteers has made much progress within the year. Almost 35,000 families were helped last year in the poor sections of large cities, and 640,944 persons were fed with substantial meals, this large number not including the temporary assistance extended at Christmas. Homes of Mercy cared for 5,000 women, and almost 40,000 lodgings were given in the year. In the medical dispensaries 14,000 new cases were treated, and 17,767 old ones cared for, or almost 32,000 cases in all. Nearly 1,000,000 persons attended theindoor Sunday and week night meetings, and 2,700,000 the outdoor meetings. The Prisoners' League, the special work of Mrs. Booth, has now 72,000 members, and of discharged prisoners going under Volunteers' care, 79 per cent, are living reformed lives. By correspondence and service the Volunteers are in touch with 80,000 men who are ready today behind prison bars.

The Greatest Parish in the World

Trinity Church, New York, rich as everybody agrees beyond the thoughts of money values, is $2,358,394 in debt. Contrary to its former practice, it now tells in its annual reports the values of its properties, its income and its debts. Its report for last year, just issued, values productive properly owned at $15,117,000, of which $13,858,000 is real estate at city assessed valuation. According to New York practice, the true value of this real estate is about $20,000,000, but no one can be found who thinks it might be purchased for that sum. The debts are incurred for the erection of business blocks. All old tenements, those which rightly or wrongly brought scandal to the famous parish, have been torn down, all of them, and today nobody can point to a single Trinity tenement with reproach. Practically all are far better than ordinary ones. New buildings for rental are erecting in order that real estate may be productive. The income from real estate rents last year was $751,268. So many pews in Trinity's ten churches and chapels are free that pew rents brought in only $16,626. People who belong and who worship in Trinity's churches and chapels contributed last year $98,090; a large sum when it is remembered that only two of the ten are attended by people of even the middle grade, and none of them by the classes that belong to St. Thomas, St. Bartholomew's or Grace parishes. Trinity parish has 8,595 members, a gain for the year, but they are First and Ninth Avenue, not Madison and Fifth.

The productive real estate of Trinity parish, New York, placed in the report just issued at $13,000,000 and worth $20,000,000 at least, does not, of course, include its churches, chapels, cemeteries and institutions. What may be the value of these is guess work. New York City's tax officials put it at $36,000,000 and exempt it because, upon very close scrutiny, it is used for religious purposes as defined by New York laws. Valuations for purposes of taxation in New York are not under the mark, at least. Including $1,000,000 borrowed last year, the parish's income, apart from the $98,900 given by worshipers in its pews, was an even $2,000,000. Of this sum $950,000 went into the buildings for which it was secured. Here is what was done with the other $1,000,000, or most of it: Schools, of taking the place of public schools, but institutional and all for poor children, $58,500; cemeteries and gifts to help other churches outside of the parish, $65,000; salaries of twenty-nine clergy on the regular staff and a small army of temporary clergy, lay assistants and trained women, chiefly for work among the sick poor, $114,000; music, in which Trinity sets a standard for all America, $52,300; maintenances of churches and chapels, sextons, heat, light, insurance, etc., $105,000; experses connected with the income properties $507,000; interest $58,000, and so on. Attendance at Lenten noon day services in Trinity Church is 50,000 persons each year, and 100,000 enter churches and chapels, rest and pray, when no service of any kind is in progress.

It requires very little ability to find fault. That is why there are so many critics.—O. W. Holmes.

The strange thing is that a man who is satisfied with so little in himself demands so much in others.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Congregational

Do Not Blame the Church For It All.

We are familiar with the person, not always mythical, who blames the party in power for all his financial troubles. We also have an acquaintance with the person who attributes all the evils of humanity to the church. The honest and sensible critics of the church will in the end be seen to be its friends. But the fool critic needs to be told that he is a fool. The Advance (Chicago), thus answers the fool according to his folly:

A large share of the criticism of the church proceeds on the principle that the church is responsible for all the conditions of society. But the church is not so responsible. A physician is not responsible for the health of those who refuse to accept his directions or use his prescriptions. And no more is the church responsible for the results of life which is lived in defiance of its teaching or in indifference to them. If the authorities of a city keep thousands of saloons open day and night, or if the federal government nullifies the prohibition laws which religious people have enacted, the church cannot be held accountable for all the corruption, disorder, disaster and shame which result to communities and individuals because of these things. If men stay at home and read the Sunday newspapers, with all the blood and thunder and evil suggestion of scandal, pollution and crime which hold the right of way in their columns, the church must not be blamed for what they do the other days of the week.

Nor is the church responsible for not doing all the good which the idealist thinks it ought to do. The world, in spite of the apple blossoms and the dew drops on the grass, is a pretty tough proposition. A lot of people would go the wrong way even if a whole company of angels were holding them by the coat tails. And it is almost impossible to tell what human beings will do until they do it. One boy follows his mother up into a beautiful life, and another breaks her heart. One young man marries his sweetheart and they crown the glad years with a golden wedding, but another turns upon her with a revolver and kills her. The world ought to love good men but it crucified Jesus Christ. Civilized society ought to spend more money on missions than on whisky, but it does not. We are yet thousands of miles from the thousand years when all will be right. Therefore the church must not be judged as if the thousand years were already here and its work was done in ideal conditions.

Y. M. C. A.

Who Furnishes the Money?

The readiness of men to contribute vast sums of money for Y. M. C. A. buildings is easily explained. The work of this institution commends itself to men of wealth. They believe it is doing what ought to be done for the boys. In a note on the sources of money for association buildings, Association Men says:

The building and financial campaigns have brought many surprises. Contributions of large sums have come from men who have never shown an interest in the association and whose lives did not accord with its purposes. Some years ago the president of a New York Association who was visiting his partner, then in his last sickness, was asked by him to hand him a check book, and with the words, "I do not want the boys to go the way I have gone," wrote out a check for $50,000. "With this build a building for the Young Men's Christian Association." That building has done its helpful service to men for years. Another notable bequest was reported recently, and for fully double the above amount. It came from a man who had never been known to be interested in anything religious; in fact, it was said that he never passed a day without drinking whiskey, for he spent the day at a social club to which he did not leave a penny, although it was in financial straits.

Bible Study.

The Young Men's Christian Association has been a leader in the movement for Bible study. Its success in college and universities has been marked. Thousands of young men have been made acquainted with the Bible through this agency. The Men and Religion movement offers a new opportunity for leadership. Of this opportunity F. S. Brockman writes in Association Men:

The Young Men's Christian Associations were never before offered an opportunity to contribute of their best in experience and leadership to the spiritual welfare of the country, so unique, so profoundly significant, and fraught with such tremendous possibilities as comes to it in the Men and Religion movement. In no single feature are these possibilities greater than in Bible study. To miss having some part in this movement through blindness, prejudice, spiritual inertia, or pre-occupation in good but less vital matters, will be little short of criminal. The cities which will reap largely are already at work. Many towns will have a revival of Bible study, evangelism, and social service to which no team of exports will go, because the Christian leaders will plan a local campaign and have it going before September, even without any outside help. The smallest town need not be shut out of the movement. A single Bible class in a village church can make itself a local center of the mighty Continental Campaign. A group of railroad train men following a correspondence Bible course can get together and form a nucleus which may have a tremendous meaning through an entire railroad division. The time is ripe. The year is unparalleled in its possibilities and yet—and yet— some men will not see it until June, 1912, when it will be too late. There is an African proverb which runs—"The dawn does not come twice to awaken a man." Will not September, 1911, usher in a new day? But it will dawn but once.

Unitarian

The Minister as a "Good Fellow."

We are told that the minister of other days was a person who inspired awe in the hearts of his parishioners. He was not addressed as "Bill," or "Old Boy," but when people spoke to him they remembered his office and did honor to it. Nowadays we are inclined to treat the minister as a man like other men. This, let us believe, does not signify loss of respect for religion, but rather the exaltation of other forms of service than that which the minister represents. We may believe that the strong, virile preacher of the gospel is as much respected today as he ever was. But it is possible for the minister to forget the dignity which belongs to him as a man in order to demonstrate to every one that he has no halo about his head. The ministerial coat must be laid aside at times, it is true, for the minister must not be bound by regulations as to dress. The danger of going too far in the "good fellow" business is discussed by a writer in The Christian Register as follows:

Well, with much good resulting from this change of base, there is perhaps some harm. For is there not a real danger of overdoing this "sitting-up-like-human-being" business? Some one has recently called attention to the fact that the clergyman's profession is perhaps the only one in which one need not be afraid of being, and acting as if one were, a little better than, or at any rate a little different from, other men. If he is not exceptionally good, or at least trying to be, what is the sense of his calling his flock to pastures in which he himself does not graze? Even keeping a little distance may possibly do no very great harm. Thus I know of one minister who particularly liked his high, old-fashioned pulpit. Perhaps he felt that from it his utterances—which, I hasten to say, were very good, and not in the least flavored with cant—would carry a little further. And I know of another clergyman who, when asked to speak on some occasion in a private house or small hall, said: "Yes, he would, if they would have for him a little platform or something raised a trifle above the level of his audience." Of course he knew very well the subtle difference between the minister speaking from the platform and John Smith Robinson talking on the same actual level of his hearers. It is even possible that he wanted to assume the position of the man who naively said, "I'm not a arguin' with you, I'm a tellin' of you." I well remember how Dr. Henry W. Bellows said that when, on some festival occasion at the New York Century Club, all the other members put bon-bon tissue caps on their heads and fooled around for an hour or two, he refused to assume that clown-like head-gear. Why? Not, of course, because he was concerned about his dignity. As a usual thing dignity is a little matter that takes care of itself; and Dr. Bellows, on necessary occasions, had quite enough dignity with which to intimidate the most audacious. But he knew the subtle effect of such an absurd appearance on the minds of average men. When he rose in the pulpit next Sunday, would not some of his congregation inevitably think of the bon-bon cap of the night before? And, then, lo! "the good minister goes,"—spoiled by a trifle, of sourse, but irretrievably lost. And, again with Browning, is it a case of "the little more and how much more it is, and the little less, and what world's away!"

United Brethren

The Ministry and Christian Union.

According to a writer in The Religious Telescope, the Protestant churches in America had one minister to every 140 members in 1906. The ministry increases as fast as church membership. It is well to insist that ministers be better paid, but the increase in salaries should not come by legislation. There is need of increasing the worth of the ministry. Leaders of the church hold up high ideals of ministerial efficiency, but in practice there is much to be desired. We have ministers enough now. What we need is a proper distribution of religious forces, and this leads to the question of Christian union:

The ultimate solution of the ministerial problem is Christian unity. I can do no better, I think, than quote the following from Milligan's "The Resurrection of our Lord:" "The world will never be converted by a disunited church. Even Bible circulation and missionary exertion upon the largest scale will be powerless to convert it, unless they are accompanied by the strength which unity alone can give. Let the church of Christ once feel, in any measure corresponding to its importance, that she is the representative of the risen Lord, and she will no longer be satisfied with mere outward action. She will see that her first and most imperative duty is to heal herself, that she may be able to heal others also."

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

The Law of Harvest

The farmer has long understood the law of the harvest. He is now learning new applications of it. He has allowed foreign insect pests to invade the United States and he is paying a heavy tribute to the invaders. Writing in the National Geographic Magazine, Charles Lester Marlatt, of the Bureau of Entomology, U. S. Department of Agriculture, says: "The coddling moth, or apple worm, occasions a loss, in cost of spraying and injury to fruit, of sixteen million dollars a year; the San Jose scale, similarly in loss of product and cost of treatment of trees, ten million a year; the Hessian fly, the most important enemy of wheat, probably causes an annual loss of fifty million dollars, and in some years this loss has reached the enormous total of one hundred million dollars. The cost to this country of the cotton-boll weevil, from the very conservative estimate of Mr. W. D. Hunter, amounts to about twenty-five million dollars a year. All these are imported.

"Very careful estimates, based on crop reports and actual insect damage over a series of years, show that the loss due to insect pests of farm products, including fruits and live-stock, now reaches the almost inconceivable total of one billion dollars annually. The larger percentage of this loss is due to imported insect pests, and much of it undoubtedly would have been saved if this country had early enacted proper quarantine and inspection laws."

What we can figure up in dollars impresses us profoundly, especially when the dollars are reckoned by the million. We are learning to count in dollars part of the loss we sustain from preventable diseases. Bad drinking water, poorly ventilated rooms, and filthy streets occasion great financial losses. It requires a little more intelligence to see this than is required to see that a sick hog or mule is not as valuable as one that is well, but we are learning. We are beginning to appreciate the fact that health of mind is also a valuable financial asset.

Old men, if they have any sort of sense, know that the law of the harvest is operative in the moral realm. Young men may doubt it. They may admit the existence of such a law but they refuse to see that it applies to them and their deeds. But when the old man is suffering from the sins of his youth he does not need a lecture on theology to bring home to him the fact that a man's sin will find him out. In his body, in his heart, and in his relation to other persons he sees the consequences of his wrong doing. Sins which he thought the eye of man would never see have left their records where all may read.

Why did Shakespeare put into the mouth of Macbeth words like these?

> "Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
> That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
> And then is heard no more; it is a tale
> Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, > Signifying nothing."

These are the words of a man who set aside the moral law and followed impulse; they express the sort of life he has lived. He is reaping what he sowed but, like the fool such a man is apt to be, he does not put the blame where it belongs. His kind of life is a "tale told by an idiot."

If we wish the joys of friendship, we must obey the law of friendship. Loyalty to convictions may separate choice friends. Those who have no convictions and who will not deny themselves for something bigger than their own comfort or personal ambition can never be trusted as friends. The reason many of us go through the world without the sweet companionship of those who believe in us is that we cannot be trusted. We betray confidence. When others need us, we are busy with our own selfish schemes. We are ever on the lookout for reasons why we should not stand with our neighbor in his hard task; we do not display the impulsiveness of love which puts us by the side of the man who needs help. We exchange for money the respect of old friends, and speak the insulting word to the neighbor or to one of our most trusted co-workers, we satisfy an abnormal appetite for drink or tobacco when we have no money for the legitimate desires of those who depend upon us, and then we wonder why the world does not accept us as worthy of its highest honors. We can get the approval of conscience, of good men, and of God, by using life as an opportunity to learn how to love and to do good. [Midweek service, June 14. Gal. 8:20; Hos. 8:7; II Cor. 9:6-11; Rev. 14:15.]

S. J.

Not a Contradiction

Editor Christian Century: You have an editorial in the current issue of the Christian Century upon the "Basis of Union in India," in which you refer to the federation of Christian bodies in that country. I quote from the amendment which was offered for Christian union: "The federated churches agree to recognize the validity of each other's ordinances, ministry, membership and discipline without thereby committing themselves to the approval of particular methods or practices." This proposition seems to knock itself in the head. I do not understand how a rational man can recognize the validity of sprinkling as an ordinance without committing himself to the approval of sprinkling as a practice. I do not understand either how a man refusing his approval of sprinkling as a practice can recognize the validity of it as an ordinance. Will you please explain in another editorial for the benefit of some of us who do not see so clearly as yourself? After explaining, please harmonize your explanation with the statement made in another editorial, which reads as follows: "The practice of Christian union involves no change in the practice of Christian baptism."

Columbus, Ind. Z. T. SWEENEY.

It is a pleasure to reply to the above request of Gen. Sweeney. It should be said, however, that his quotation is not taken from an amendment but from the original article adopted by the Jubbulpore Conference and now being discussed by the Indian churches. The Baptists who declined to participate in the conference have since prepared an amendment to this article, as was pointed out in the editorial to which Mr. Sweeney refers. The Christian Century believes the original article to be entirely in harmony with the Disciples' position and highly preferable as a basis of unity to the substitute offered by the Baptist brethren.

The article does not ask the participating churches to recognize "the validity of sprinkling as an ordinance." It asks them to recognize the validity of the baptism administered by all participating churches. Sprinkling is not an ordinance, nor is immersion. Baptism is an ordinance. Neither sprinkling nor immersion is an interchangeable term with baptism. Baptism means vastly more than either sprinkling or pouring.

As our correspondent interprets the article it does indeed "knock itself in the head." But his interpretation is erroneous and has no warrant whatever in the text of the quotation.

The intelligent missionaries who wrote this article and are discussing it are not guilty of so palpable a contradiction. What their words clearly say is this: We recognize that the ordinance of baptism administered in the Presbyterian church, for example, is valid, but we do not commit ourselves thereby to the approval of the particular practice of sprinkling.

This describes correctly the attitude of the Disciples of Christ and we are quite sure that Gen. Sweeney does himself subscribe to it as a statement of his own attitude and belief.

We are not able to discover any appearance of contradiction between this position and the statement that "the practice of Christian union involves no change in the practice of Christian baptism." The statement, of course, refers to the Disciples' practice of baptism, not to the procedure of those who practice affusion.

The Disciples' practice of Christian baptism is to immerse all penitent believers in water, according to apostolic custom and the example of Jesus. This is the only practice of baptism upon which the church can unite. The practice of Christian union (by which is meant the receiving into full fellowship of all those whom the Disciples and Gen. Sweeney himself already recognize as members of the Church of Christ) does not in any respect modify this practice of baptism. On the contrary, it strengthens it and tends in the direction of universalizing this practice.

The full strength of the Disciples' position on baptism will not appear until they drop the sectarian practice of "close" membership which—after a Baptist mode of reasoning—they have supposed to be necessary as a protection of the apostolic form of initiation.

Disciples are today coming to see that their Christian union ideal may be trusted; that it will not carry them beyond New Testament truth; that it is not just an amiable emotion which needs to be checked and controlled by some New Testament authority, but that it is itself a New Testament ideal—the essential New Testament ideal—backed by the authority of Christ himself.

We are coming to see that Christian unity is a more fundamental New Testament imperative, logically, than the restoration of an ancient order of things. If we practice Christian union, not as an impulse simply but as a principle, the question of baptism will take care of itself.

Certainly no church can be said to be deeply in earnest in its talk about Christian union that refuses to practice union with all members of Christ's church.

And equally certainly, any church that gets deeply in earnest in the practice of Christian union will find that it can practice only immersion in the solemnization of baptism.

A Little More Light Wanted.

We have at hand another letter from Mr. S. J. Clarke, whose earlier letter with our response was printed in the issue of May 11. For the sake of clearness we have taken the liberty of interpolating our answers after the paragraphs to which they severally apply, thus dividing Mr. Clarke's communication into sections. Our readers will bear in mind that the letter was continuous in its original form. The letter with our responses is as follows:

Under the above heading appeared an article by the writer in a recent number of The Christian Century, which was answered by the editors. The light asked for was hardly given, or at least was somewhat obscured.

The editors say that no thought of affusion could have entered the minds of the apostles when Jesus commanded them to baptize. "That baptism was solemnized in apostolic times exclusively by an act of immersion in water, The Christian Century, has no doubt, that Jesus himself was thus immersed at the hands of John, there is no room for question." Well, such being the case, and as the editors say, "Paul's beautiful association of the outward act of immersion with the historic facts of Christ's death, burial and resurrection and with the convert's death to sin, the burial of the old self and the resurrection to a new life, not only shows that immersion was the common practice, but it invests immersion with a new meaning, mystical and spiritual. It Christianizes immersion one might say." If this is true, how can any other act, save immersion, symbolize the death, burial and resurrection of Christ? Affusion certainly does not.

Of course there are other acts that could have been made to symbolize death, burial and resurrection besides immersion in water. The meaning of a symbol is always an imputed meaning, not an intrinsic and necessary meaning. And this is true of immersion. Paul imputed to it its Christian meaning. His rich imagination associated it with Christian facts and so made its symbolism Christian. We agree with our correspondent that affusion would not have lent itself to such symbolism as that with which Paul invested immersion.

* * *

The editors say: "Affusion became a substitute for immersion in the third and fourth centuries, as is well known, beginning as clinic baptism and gradually extending to general use." But who had the right to change that act, substituting an act which cannot in any stretch of the imagination symbolize the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, and "the burial of the old self and the ressurrection to a new life." Has any pope, priest, minister or layman the right to say to the world that while the immersion of a penitent believer in water has been recognized as Christian baptism for hundreds of years we now substitute affusion for said immersion?

Nobody had the right then and nobody has the right now to make such a change. Much controversy and division and other mischief have been caused by the fact that somebody arrogated to himself or some body arrogated to itself the right to make such a change.

* * *

After acknowdedging that immersion was Christianized, The Century says: "To use the word baptism in such way that it can apply only to those who have been immersed carries an implication that cannot be tolerated. Some distinction must be made possible in the vocabulary itself." Why so? If immersion was practiced exclusively for three centuries who would know that baptism could be administered by affusion? Who had the right to add to the vocabulary the word affusion as a substitute for immersion?

We are not sure that we get the point of this question. It may be that an answer will be found in our reply above. Anybody has a right to add a word to the vocabulary when clearness of speech demands it. But no one has the right to make the word affusion a substitute for immersion. That would only confound speech, not clarify it.

* * *

It has been many years since the writer studied logic and the books then used are doubtless out of date; therefore he may not be able to understand clearly the position of The Century, which reads to him about as follows:

Baptism was originally the immersion of a person in water, and was so understood by Christ and his apostles, and also by his followers for three centuries. It was practiced by the Jews and Christianized by Paul.

Affusion was substituted for immersion, beginning as clinic baptism and gradually extending to general use. We therefore have in addition to "immersion baptism," "affusion baptism," "irregular baptism," or "substitute baptism."

By baptism (whether immersion-baptism of affusion-baptism) we are inducted into the church—Christ's body.

The Christian Century knows of no other way of becoming members of the Church of Christ except by baptism. Presbyterians, Methodists and other bodies are members of the Church of Christ, and became such by baptism—affusion baptism. Presbyterians are baptized members of the Church of Christ.

Now, brethren, have we not stated your position correctly? We would not do otherwise.

Our correspondent has done very well indeed, and we congratulate him on having stated the position so much better than certain others have done. In his first premise there is one defect, however, which is quite vital. The Christian Century does not state that "baptism was originally immersion," etc. We have repeatedly insisted that baptism was a great deal more than immersion. The quotation made by our correspondent near the beginning of his article would more justly represent us: "baptism was solemnized by an act of immersion," etc.

* * *

If so how can an act like affusion symbolize the death, burial and resurrection of Christ?

As we have said above we do not see how such symbolism can be read into an act like affusion.

* * *

How can one be baptized into Christ by any other act than immersion when Paul speaks of being buried with him in baptism? Can the act of affusion in any way shape or form be referred to as a burial?

One certainly could not be buried with Christ by affusion. But neither could one be buried with Christ by immersion in water. Paul says we are buried with Him by baptism. Baptism and immersion are not equivalents, as The Christian Century has repeatedly pointed out. Baptism is neither affusion nor immersion—it is the solemn act of self-consecration to Christ and initiation into the Church of Christ. In apostolic times it was always represented or administered by an immersion in water and should be so observed in the modern church. But no outward act can bury one with Christ, though an outward act may symbolize the spiritual experience. But the symbol does not effect or procure the spiritual reality; it pictures it forth. No spiritual fact depends upon its symbol. The death, burial and resurrection of Christ do not depend upon immersion, but immersion depends upon them and gets its meaning from them. The convert's death to sin, his burial with Christ and his rising into new life do not depend upon immersion for their reality, but immersion depends upon them and gets whatever meaning it has from them. It is wrong to say we are buried with Christ by immersion. We must not change Paul's statement that we are buried by baptism. The realities of baptism are self-consecration to Christ and initiation into the church, his body. These constitute the burial with Him and the rising into newness of life. Immersion is the symbol of these realities, entirely meaningless and hollow without them. For example, Presbyterians have died to sin, have been buried with Christ, and have arisen with him to walk in new life. They are members of His body, the church. They experience and possess all the realities belonging to baptism though they have not been immersed. We do not think our correspondent will question these statements—on the contrary he as joyfully recognizes the truth of them as do we. Presbyterians who have entered the church by affusion-baptism have missed something. They are unfortunate in not enjoying the beauty and the help of the outward ceremony which Paul invested with the symbolism of the chief facts of Christ's redemption and the disciple's experience. But their lack of the symbol does not invalidate the realities which they do possess equally with us all.

* * *

That Christ and his apostles instituted Christian baptism cannot be questioned. Christian baptism for three centuries was by immersion. Affusion gradually came into almost universal use as a form of Christian baptism. But who had the right to substitute affusion for immersion and call it Christian baptism? If Christ, his apostles and their followers knew of but one act as Christian baptism for three hundred years, to whom was delegated the right to change the form? Some one must have had this right, else why do you say: "The Christian Century is not willing, however, to conceive the membership of the Church of Christ as limited only to those who have been immersed at their baptism." You certainly mean to imply by this that other acts (always of course, into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit) constitute Christian baptism just as much as immersion; and that all who have had water applied to them as baptism have been baptized into Christ, his body, his church. But how can these things be?

Our good brother is quite as able to answer his last question as are we. As we said above, in answer to a former question, nobody had the right to make the change from immersion to affusion. But the statement which Mr. Clarke quotes from us that "we cannot conceive the membership of the Church of Christ to be limited only to those who have been immersed at baptism," expresses his own sentiment as well as our own. We cannot think for a moment that he differs with us here. He believes devoutly with his Disciple brethren and with us that Presbyterians, for example, are Christians, in Christ, members of the Church of Christ; that they have been buried with Christ and with him have arisen to walk in newness of life. There is not a single vital Christian reality that our esteemed correspondent would not, without the slightest hesitation, predicate of Presbyterians. He does not predicate these things of them just because "they have had water applied to them," and neither do we. Certainly they have never been immersed, and yet they are in Christ. This he will admit as gladly as do we, we are sure. But how did they get in? Does our brother know of any way to get into Christ, to become a member of the Church, except by baptism? It is not for us to say how "these things" can be. It is for him as well. So we leave his last question with himself. He can answer it as easily as can we. And meanwhile there are two things which our correspondent and ourselves must recognize as obvious and immediate duties:

First, we must practice complete Christian union with these Presbyterian Christians. Disciples must not maintain tests of fellowship that shut out any whom Christ receives.

Secondly, we must do all we can to reinstate the beautiful and meaningful ceremony of immersion in the whole church of Christ. And if we can once free immersion from the dogmatic coercion with which its advocates have for so long tried to force it upon the church we will be surprised at the way its own intrinsic appeal will win the support of Christ's people.

Editorial Table Talk

Digging in Jerusalem

The papers have had a good deal to say of late regarding popular disturbances in Jerusalem as the result of excavations on the temple mount by English investigators. The final accounts were lurid and exciting. It was alleged that by secret digging under the Dome of the Rock, on lines suggested by cipher documents discovered in the Imperial Museum at Constantinople, the ancestral treasure house of the Kings of Israel had been penetrated, and the sacred relics, including the ark of the covenant, the tables of the law, and other priceless objects, carried off to Jaffa and shipped, no one knew whither.

Such reports are not likely to mislead any but the least informed. An instant's reflection would convince any person of intelligece that there are no such sacred objects to be discovered, nor have there been for many centuries. If the testimony of the historical records of the Old Testament is to be accepted, the treasures traditionally supposed to repose in the ark of the covenent, such as the tables of law, the sacred rod and the pot of mamma, were lost or destroyed during the mutations of Hebrew history prior to the rise of Judaism, and, therefore, centuries preceding the days of Jesus.

Moreover, the inscriptions on the arch of Titus at Rome provide the information that the temple treasures, such as the ark and the golden candle stick, were carried away by the Roman troops who sacked Jerusalem in 7 A. D.

Quite aside from these fairly definite data, it is inconceivable that any objects of special interest should remain on, within or about the rocky, denuded and often plundered site of Jerusalem. To be sure there is an underground series of cisterns and aqueducts, as Warren, Bliss and Cleremont Ganneau have made evident. But these rock-cuttings are so far known, and the impossibility of their containing anything of moment so fully proved, that stories like that sent out of late are merely humorous.

It appears probable that the English investigators secured a permit to excavate on the southeastern flank of the city, in the district known as Ophel in the Old Testament, where the Mount of Zion slopes southward from the temple platform toward the Valley of Hinnom. This was the royal city of the days of Solomon and his successors. Just below it to the east in the valley of Jehosaphat were the "King's Gardens."

This part of the old city lies quite outside of the present walls, but must have been the most important section of Jerusalem in Old Testament days. If anything of value has been discovered in this district, it will be made known in due time. The fanaticism of the Mohammedan population of Jerusalem would of course make any open excavation very difficult. No doubt the fact that much of the work was done at night served to give current to the wild rumors which have been spread by the press.

Love and Logic

A refreshing word in Iowa's paper. The Christian Union, is that uttered by the office editor, Charles Blanchard, in criticism of J. H. Painter, a department editor of his own paper. Mr. Painter has been writing a series of articles purporting to criticise The Christian Century but which in the main have dealt with issues The Christian Century has not raised. Mr. Painter has not been overscrupulous, to put it very charitably, in his representations of the teachings of this paper. His logic has led him also into the most bigoted conclusions. Now Mr. Blanchard takes him to task in a gentle article on "Love and Logic." He says that he protests against "the conclusions of hard and fast logic that practically rules out love as the greatest factor in the plan of salvation. At the risk of being called a heretic, the office editor, speaking only for himself, protests against the danger of trying to reduce salvation by grace to salvation by formula. We have so emphasized (perhaps over-emphasized at times) what we call the "plan of salvation," by which we mean "faith, repentance, confession and baptism." that in the minds of some it has become a sort of sacred formula. It is against the logic that no one has or can be saved who does not go through this formula that love rebels and refuses to accept the conclusion, though it be put in the form of a syllogism."

He concludes his article as follows:

Some years ago the writer heard one of our preachers preach a sermon from the text, "Enter ye in at the strait gate, etc." And he set in forth as meaning "faith, repentance, confession and baptism." His use of the text and his conclusions were all wrong. But it illustrates the lengths that some of us go to prove our pet formula. Now I am not objecting to the formula as such but to the hard and fast logic that makes it practically impossible for men and women to be saved by the divine grace except as they enter in at this "straight gate." And this in face of the indisputable fact that multitudes of men and women full of faith and faithful in life and abounding in love, bearing the fruit of the Spirit in their lives, have not entered into the church or the kingdom according to our pet formula. I know it may be answered that we do not know that such are in the kingdom. But Jesus said, "By their fruit ye shall know them." And I am personally willing to rest it there. And the Christian world is fast coming to that point. It's the only basis of brotherhood. We are not likely to get together and stay together on any body's creed or formula of what we must believe and do. Just where we are coming out I don't know. It may be difficult, impossible, to separate love and logic. But this I feel will be the issue, when the love of God is really and rejoicingly shed abroad in all our hearts by the Holy Spirit, our pet formulas and creeds and confessions of faith will slip away from us and we will wonder why we ever permitted these things that now perplex us to separate us one from another and from the Christ whom we love.

Gold always lies under rough rocks.

Parents need to remember that children learn twice as much with their eyes as with their ears.

Monday Moods

Succeeding in Obscure Places.

Among a number of religious journals that visit me regularly, I am especially fond of the "British Weekly" edited by the accomplished Sir. W. Robertson Nicol. Each issue is a treasury of devotional and sermonic material as well as literary miscellany. It is a bright paper, is the "Weekly," and usually precise and extraordinarily accurate in quotation or comment. But once in a while, a great while let it be said, some of its matter-of-fact and sober statements about Americans are funny, very funny. Here is a paragraph from "A Man of Kent's" column in a recent number of the "Weekly."

A New Humorist.

Near the town of Atchison, in Kansas, there is a humorist named E. W. Howe, who writes, sets up, and publishes, all by himself, E. W. Howe's Monthly: A Farmer's Magazine for Town People. Mr. Howe is a farmer, an editor, a novelist, and a playwright. His novel, "The Story of a Country Town," was published twenty-five years ago, and attracted considerable attention. Now he has issued a book entitled "Country Town Sayings."

There are several statements within this paragraph that are in detail, I should think, a little twisted as to fact, but the first sentence is the funny one. It pictures Mr. Howe writing, setting up and publishing his paper "all by himself." While I do not positively know it, I have a conviction that Mr. Howe has not "set up" a stick of type for many a day. Indeed I should be much surprised if his printing plant is not equipped with linotype machines and that the only "setting up" (of type) done by his force is on display advertising and the like. And as for Editor Howe getting his papers out "all by himself," that would be almost as difficult as for Mr. John Wanamaker to "tend" his Philadelphia store "all by himself."

Mr. Howe's book is worthy a notice in the Weekly along with a row of excerpts from which I select the following:

"A woman is as old as she looks before breakfast."

"Nearly every succesful man we ever met was a good billiard player."

"How fearless and plain-spoken a man is in talking to his woman folks!"

"We have found it a pretty good rule to avoid an intellectual feast."

"There is usually enough of everything on the table except cream."

Mr. Howe's "Globesights" have long been popular as exchange items with the newspaper fraternity from New York to San Francisco. Atchison has had no bigger advertising asset than this bright editor. The career of Mr. Howe and that of William Allen White at Emporia are superb illustrations of Emerson's observation that the world will make a path to the door of any man who has a message or is able to do an important work exceptionally well.

Whether a man's field of labor is in a great city or a small town is of secondary interest providing he succeeds. (And by the term "success" here I do not mean merely material success.) As between going to the metropolis and so succeeding as to focus the eyes of the country on himself, or staying in the country town and making good so as to focus the eyes of the metropolis on his work—I should say it is hard to say which is the more praiseworthy. The latter I should guess to be the more difficult since it seems to be the rarer. Of one thing we may be sure: no man's field of labor can of itself make him great though he may, can and does sometimes make it great.

The train of thought my mood is now taking suggests to me a front page editorial of singular strength and timeliness in "The Continent" of recent date. It is entitled "Who Disparages the Country Preacher?" and the answer it makes may be put in a single word—himself. And herein is food for reflection not only for the country preacher but for his city brethren as well.

Edgar DeWitt Jones.

Anvil Sparks

Wandering minds make small wages.

No harvest is reaped without hardness.

Worry gives the doctor half his work.

No solid work was ever done by a man looking for a soft place.

A change of character accomplishes more than a change of climate.

He gives the world no kindling who always carries a chip on his shoulder.

Interpretations

Assessing Our Losses.

If life were all conscious gain it would be as different from what it is as the strongest imagination could picture. Every gain has upon it the shadow of loss. The universe of souls as well as of matter is a vast system of exchange. Gain is reached by loss, life by death, saintliness by foregoing the pleasures of sin. One cannot have the rewards of both saint and sinner. To have learned how to bargain in the universe's vast market is to have been born with the Spirit of God. It is to have eyes that see. Youth often vainly seeks to possess all. The experienced, especially the spiritually experienced, find support in a just valuation of losses. Youth seeks escape from losses; but no soul can live long without concluding that life is largely made up of losses. Even the application of all known virtue and all known science would not protect us. How, then, shall we deal with the darker things of our existence? Let us see how we should value our losses. That which lies most outside of us we should put least value upon and that which lies at the heart of ourselves, or is ourselves, we should put the greatest value upon.

A common loss is that of property; but it lies in a circle really remote from ourselves. It is of value and its loss often entails hardship both to ourselves and to near loved ones. Yet its loss is not loss of self—and indeed frequently brings a blessing. It often results in wider sympathies and greater industry.

Again there is loss of years. This is a greater loss than that of property. They can never be recalled. The sentiment of thousands, expressed in a familiar line, "Turn backward, turn backward, O time in your flight" has never been answered. The years have gone forever but they have brought their deposits, their convictions, their certainty and their promises. So that many do not regard the passing of youth as a loss but confidently look forward with hope that the best is yet to be.

Shall we draw closer to our inner selves? Then we shall find the loss of friends a sorer loss. To have loved and lost by death is not the loss I would mention. That indeed casts a deep shadow—a shadow from which none of us ever entirely emerges. All of our gaieties are sobered by its thought. But to lose a friend by unfaithfulness is a greater loss. A friend is one who has looked into your soul, one indeed whom you have admitted to the holy of holies of your life. You believed in him, and then when he has profaned your trust there has come to you a loss—a loss of faith, a loss of love, a loss of confidence in your fellow man, so great that all of God's healing time and Spirit will be necessary to keep you from becoming a faithless and loveless cynic. May God pity the faithless friend—the worst enemy—and sustainingly comfort the deceived friend!

Everywhere there are those who have lost health of body. In this world the body and soul are indissolubly united. Their interdependence it too fine for the wisest accurately to analyze. Yet we all know that physical ailments do not necessarily impair the soul's strength. Some of the sweetest and strongest spirits, valiant voices of the eternal, have borne about tabernacles of pain. Hugo says: "To be blind and yet loved is one of life's sweetest experiences." Why? Because when the body's eyes are never opened the soul forces its, wider and wider. George Matheson might never have written one of our great modern hymns if he had been allowed the activity of seeing. And, then, the body is so short lived. The old theologians were right in stressing the brevity of this life. We soon fly away.

What then is life's greatest loss?

The soul is immortal. It is myself. To abuse it is to cut into my life. It links me to God, the everlasting and the all holy one. To rob it of faith or love or purity or perseverance is to bring to myself the greatest matters little. But the small circle that encloses me in God and God in me is of infinite concern. As the following poem suggests, the loss of the believing heart is life's greatest and saddest loss:

"Upon the white sea sand
There sat a pilgrim band
Telling the losses that their lives had known,
While evening waned away
From breezy cliff and bay,
And the strong tides went out with weary moan.

There were some who mourned their youth
With a most tender ruth,
For the brave hopes and memories ever green;
And one upon the west
Turned an eye that would not rest
For the fair hills whereon its joys had been.
Some talked of vanished gold
Some of proud honors told,
Some spoke of friends who were their friends no more;
And one of a green grave
Far beyond the wave,
While he sits here so lonely on the shore.
But when their tales were done,
There spoke among them one
A stranger, seeming from all sorrow free;
Sad losses ye have met
But mine are sadder yet
For the believing heart has gone from me.
Then alas! those pilgrims said,
For the living and the dead,
For life's deep shadows and the heavy cross,
For the wrecks of land and sea;
But, howe'er it came to thee,
Thine, brother, is life's last and sorest loss,
For the believing heart has gone from thee;
Ah, the believing heart has gone from thee."

In these days of the exaltation of material things, of the ascendency of cold science and of the madness of commercial pursuits every soul needs to guard well his believing heart.

GEORGE A. CAMPBELL.

The Rekindled Fire

BY G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

"And they said one to another, Was not our heart burning within us, while he spake to us in the way, while he opened to us the Scriptures."—Luke 24:32.

During this week in conversation with an eminent, scholarly and devout professor of one of our theological colleges, he told me that he had been now for some years preaching Sunday after Sunday in different parts of the country, seeing church life at the normal; and he declared that the impression upon his mind as to the condition of affairs is that there is everywhere an appalling flatness—I use his own word—and at the same time wherever ministers, office-bearers, or church members are led into conversation on this condition of affairs they earnestly express a desire for better things; a consciousness of deadness and desire for life.

It is because I share this conviction that I bring you this evening the message of the incident in connection with which the words of my text occur. It is one of the post-resurrection stories. Here Christ is seen; no longer in the limited, straitened circumstances in which, according to his own confession as recorded by Luke, he exercised his ministry of three or three and a half years; but in all the glory and power which came to him by resurrection. He was the same as he had been during the days of his sojourning with men; and yet entirely different in very many ways. The appositeness of the story to ourselves is born of this fact.

Appears and Vanishes.

The forty days of our Lord's sojourning on this earth after resurrection were characterized by appearance and vanishing; and I personally should be inclined to say that the main purpose of his tarrying was not that of appearing, but that of vanishing. He appeared to Peter, and vanished! He presented himself without the opening of a door or the shooting of a bolt, in the midst of his disciples in the upper room; and vanished! He walked with disciples on the road to Emmaus, sat with them at the board, and suddenly vanished! He hailed the fishermen after the night of fruitless work, himself standing in bodily presence upon the shore of the lake, "Children, have ye any meat?"; and they came and partook of the breakfast which he had prepared; he talked to Peter across the flicker of the fire, in the early morning, while the light of the sun was shimmering upon the sea, about past failure, challenged his love, called forth his confession, gave him his commission, and then vanished!

Teaching for All.

The chief value in each case was not in the appearing, but in the vanishing. He was teaching those disciples, not for their sakes alone, but for the sakes of all who should follow them, that even though they could not see him with the eyes of sense he was always nigh at hand. He was training them to be independent of the senses, and dependent upon the spirit, in the matter of their fellowship with him; accustoming them not to see him, and yet to know that he was at hand; training them so that presently, one of the number of the disciples, not of those who saw him in the days of his flesh, but of those who were brought to him afterwards, Saul of Tarsus, could write, "Henceforth we know no man after the flesh; even though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now we know him so no more."

Today we are living in post-resurrection days in the fullest sense; in days when we no longer have the presence of our Lord as to the physical fact, but when we know he is nigh at hand, in the midst of every assembly of his people, the close, personal companion of every pilgrim of faith, the constant comrade of every trusting soul.

Let us then examine the story; looking at the disciples; their possession and their lack; then carefully observing the Christ; his quest, his method and his victory.

What They Lacked.

First, what did these disciples lack? They had lost their confidence, not in him but in his ability to do what they thought he was going to do. They had come to the conviction in the presence of the tragedy of the Cross that he had failed. They had hoped he would redeem Israel, break the yoke of the oppressor, restore the people of the ancient economy, bring in that day of which prophets had spoken and psalmists had sung through the long ages; but he had failed. That was their outlook, and in consequence there had been a cooling of their enthusiasm. They loved him still, and believed in his high and holy intention, and in his endeavor, but they had lost hope. Not in forgetfulness did they walk to Emmaus, but in keen disappointment. Therefore they lacked the burning, the enthusiasm, which is the dynamic of service.

I believe that at the present moment this is the condition of the Christian church to a large extent. I am perfectly convinced that there was never more personal, individual loyalty to the Lord than there is today; a loyalty which is undoubted if we think of the individual in personal relationship to Christ. But there are thousands of persons of whom all that is true, who are nevertheless suffering from a lack of certainty as to his ability to do what they thought he was going to do. They are inwardly, if not confessedly, pessimistic as to the issue of our Lord's work in the world. They are not quite sure.

Some Symptoms.

Let me give you some of the symptoms of this lack of assurance. You find Christian people are content to give attention to men who are putting him into comparison with human teachers. I find among my brethren in the ministry as I travel through the country that the articles they are reading are those which question him. We are questioning him, asking whether after all he is the One we thought he was, admitting some kind of supremacy to him, professing loyalty to him, but putting him into comparison with others, asking the question that came out of Herod's prison long ago, asked then by a man perfectly loyal but perplexed, "Art Thou he that cometh, or look we for another?"

Another sympton is that we are modifying our conception of his victories. We are not sure that the victories won were won in and by that Name alone. We are willing to discuss the possibility of some other form of religion being more suited to certain races than that of the Lord Christ. We are not quite sure whether it is final. Therefore we are a little uncertain of the possibility of his ultimate triumph.

There is consequently a marked cooling of enthusiasm, a lack of passion, an absence of fire; until today the church of God, taking it as a whole, making every allowance for exceptions, is a little afraid of enthusiasm. If I may quote again the words of my professor friend, there is everywhere an appalling flatness.

Christ's Method with the Men.

Now let us go back to our story. How did Christ deal with these men? First I pray you notice the fact of his quest.

He was seeking love, and the bursting of it into a flame, into passion, the rekindling of it into a fire! He knew it was there, overshadowed; he knew there was faith in him, loyalty to him, and that is but another way of saying that love for him still remained.

Now mark his method. He did not make himself known in order to kindle that love. He brought them back to the things they knew full well, to the old, familiar things. He brought them nothing new, but he turned the old into the new by his interpretation. Have you ever dreamed as you have read that story? Have you ever wished you could have listened to his interpretation of Moses and the prophets? I often have.

Interpreted the Prophets.

They listened to this Stranger as he took their own sacred writings, and interpreted to them their deepest meaning. They listened to him as he revealed to them the profoundest depths in the suggestive ritual of the Mosaic economy, as he breathed in their ears the secret of the love which lay at the heart of the ancient law. They listened to him as he traced the Messianic note in the music of all the prophets; showing that he was David's King, "fairer than the children of men," and in the days of Solomon's well-doing he it was that was "altogether lovely." He was Isaiah's child-king with a shoulder strong to bear the government, and a name Emanuel, gathering within itself all excellencies; Jeremiah's "Branch of righteousness; executing judgment and righteousness in the land;" Ezekiel's "Plant of renown," giving shade, and shedding fragrance; Daniel's stone cut without hands, smiting the image, becoming a mountain, and filling the whole earth; the ideal Israel of Hosea, "Growing as a lily," casting out his roots as Lebanon;" to Joel, "the hope of his people and the strength of the children of Israel; the usherer in of the fulfilment of the vision of Amos, "the plowman overtaking the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed;" of Obadiah "deliverance upon Mount Zion and holiness;" the fulfilment of that which Jonah was but a sign; the "turning again" of God, of which Micah spoke; the One whom Nahum saw upon the mountains "publishing peace;" the Anointed of whom Habakkuk sang as "going forth for salvation;" He who brought to the people the pure language of Zephaniah's message; the true Zerubbabel of Haggai's word, rebuilding for ever the house and the city of God; himself the Dawn of the day when "Holiness unto the Lord shall be upon the bells of the horses" as Zechariah foretold; and he the refiner's fire," "the fuller's soap," "the Sun of righteousness" of Malachi's dream.

Won the Victory.

What was the result? He won the victory. They came to new possession of Jesus, while as yet they did not know the One interpreting the Scriptures was Jesus in very deed. They looked back to the Cross and saw it set in the light of the ancient symbolism, of the ancient prophecy; and the inglorious tree gleamed with glory of which they had never dreamed.

They listened in astonishment, and as they listened, to employ their own word, their hearts burned within them. Coolness gave way to heat, despair to hope, disappointment to certainty; and there flamed within them the fire, not merely of the old and lost enthusiasm, but of a new passion for this very Christ in whom they believed and whom they loved, as they learned by interpretation of their own Scriptures at the lips of the Stranger, that all the things which had filled them most with fear were according to the predictions of those Scriptures.

The Discovery of Old Things.

Thus their burning of heart was the thrill of a new discovery of the old things. It was the shame of past failure. It was the passion of a new endeavor. How were all these things created? And this was created by Christ's interpretation of the ancient Scriptures which they knew, with which they were perfectly familiar; the Scriptures which they thought they had understood. They were so familiar with them that they had ceased to make themselves familiar with them.

I pray you mark this carefully; my insistence upon it is repeated because it is the key to the situation. They did not know who this was who talked to them; he was quite a stranger; but listening to the old words, giving new attention to them under his guidance they found new meaning, new value, and new power.

To Kindle the Fire.

What then does the Church need today in order to kindle again the fire, to renew the enthusiasm, to set upon the faces of her members the flaming glory of the morning, and to create again the fervor. She needs that the things she possesses should become real to her.

Supremely we need exactly what happened to these men on the way to Emmaus, a new understanding of the Scriptures of truth, a new discovery of them as the Scriptures that set forth the things concerning Christ, a new test of the Scriptures by the study of them; and the abandonment of the life to the law which flames forth from them; and the putting of them to the test in all our work and all our living.

Yet, I have not touched the deepest note of all! The Bible we have, and there is a sense in which it is being studied today as it has never been studied. There were more Bibles published last year than in any year in the history of the world; there were more Bibles printed than any other book in all the wide world; they are everywhere, and men are turning back to the study of the Bible with a keen and remarkable interest, as I know full well. Yet we lack the fire, the fervor, the enthusiasm. What then do we supremely need? To gather together around the Bible which we have, recognizing that we never can know it, never can understand it, save as we take time to listen to the Lord's interpretation of it to our own souls.

ENGLISH TOPICS

BY LESLIE W. MORGAN.

Two things have recently occurred in English politics which are most refreshing, especially since they have been taken up in a spirit which does not often exist in any nation. Party lines have been quite obliterated.

The first question is that of the proposed treaty between England and America. No party has lagged behind, all advocating the desirability of such a step. This is in response to an all but universal public demand which after all is the greatest occasion for rejoicing. Such manifestations in favor of peace would not have been possible even a very few years ago. In addition to the great meeting held at the Mission House under the chairmanship of the Lord Mayor, and with Mr. Asquith, Mr. Balfour, the Archbishop of Canterbury and others speaking, town meetings have been held in almost every important centre in the country, and these have been heartily supported by all political parties, and by all branches of the church. Individual churches have passed resolutions. Denominations have sent memorials. Societies of every class and description have indicated their approval, and altogether there has been a most active campaign in the interests of peace.

On the Eve of Peace.

The hearty support which has been given to the suggested treaty with the United States has excelled but little the expression of the desire to ultimately enter into a similar agreement with other countries. It begins to look as if we were really on the eve of a great era of peace. It is to be hoped that no vital question will soon arise which might tend to shake the foundations before they are really laid, or firmly set. Perhaps Mr. Roosevelt is right that the nations would still fight at the drop of a hat if anything touching their national honor should be involved. This is not saying, however, that there is not a more excellent way; it simply indicates that we are not yet fully Christian.

Lloyd George's Bill.

The other matter which has been welcomed with almost universal approval is Mr. Lloyd George's "Insurance against unemp'oyment and invalidity." bill. This is being brought in as a non-partisan measure, and honest effort is to be made by all parties to assist in such revision, before it reaches the final stage, as will make it most efficient. It is the most important social legislation that has been undertaken in many a day, not excepting old age pensions.

Even Mr. Lloyd George's opponents in other things cannot help giving expression to admiration of the manner in which he has framed this measure, and the spirit in which he has presented it. The task has been a colossal one and the financial interests involved very extensive. He has received valuable assistance by the example of Germany, and yet there was much new ground to cover. The manner in which he has gained the support of the already existing Friendly Societies, and numerous insurance companies, alone, is striking evidence of his diplomacy. These are to be linked up with the government scheme in such a way as not to hinder but rather to enlarge the scope of their activities. Had they not already been under close governmental supervision this would not have been possible.

Doctors Not Forgotten.

Even the doctors who serve the members of these societies, often for very inadequate fees, have not been forgotten. The chemists also come in for their portion as medicines are to be made up by them instead of by the doctors as has heretofore been the custom in this class of practice.

The erection of sanatoria for the treatment of consumption, provided for in the bill, is a feature which is most highly commended. There was breathless attention in the House when Mr. George was speaking concerning this matter, and referring in a sympathetic way to the 75,000 per year who die from this dread disease.

A grant of thirty shillings (7 dollars, 50 cents) to maternity cases is another feature which has met with universal approval. Not the least beneficial feature of this provision is that the grant is made on condition that the mother does not go back to work, in cases where she is in employment, until her child is four weeks old. This is an example of the saying, "that the condition is better than the promise."

Some Opposition Among Employers.

There is a certain amount of opposition on the part of employers to the proportion which they are asked to pay towards the insurance, but doubtless this will be adjusted in a satisfactory manner. If they should realize, in practical experience, the saving in rates which is predicted, their opposition will doubtless soon be withdrawn, when the scheme is once at work. There is a desire also for a more general application of the insurance, but this will doubtless come in time. At present about 14 million people will come within its range. The thing most to be admired in Mr. Lloyd George in connection with this whole matter is the spirit in which he has gone about it. He has seen a vision as truly as did Isaiah and he has answered the call.

The Baptist World Alliance is to be convened in Philadelphia in June, and a large number of leading Baptists have already sailed for America, including Dr. Clifford, the Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, the Rev. F. B. Myer, and the Rev. J. E. Roberts, associate and successor to the late Dr. Maclaren.

This alliance orginated in the fertile brain of Mr. Shakespeare, and his desire to see the organization perfected was probably the chief thing which induced him to refuse the offer of the secretaryship of the National Free Church Council, when offered to him last year.

(Continued on page 22.)

Our Readers' Opinions

Editors' Note

The dominant emotion with which the editors open the columns of The Christian Century to the expression of our readers' opinions on a subject involving the policy of a contemporary is not one of triumph but of sadness and humiliation.

Great as is the satisfaction in hearing the voices of the brethren repudiate the iniquity with which the spirit of progress in our brotherhood has struggled for years, it cannot outweigh the shame involved in the fact that the iniquity exists and that being essentially public in character it must be expiated publicly.

The Christian Century is consecrated to other tasks than this. Ours is a constructive work. We are set for the building up of the holy life, for the widening and deepening of the mind, for the creation of the Christlike temper, for the publishing of peace.

It is a rule that no discussion shall enter these pages except it be a courteous and earnest search for truth. We invite the opinions of our readers constantly and publish opinions that differ with our own as gladly, often more gladly, than those which agree with our own. We love good-natured, earnest discussion of views. It is a sorry day for any community that abandons free discussion.

The question of practicing union on the foreign field is one that called for a free, general exchange of views by a free, progressive people like the Disciples. It would have been a splendid demonstration of our solidarity and assurance had this new situation been faced with earnest tolerance and talked through.

Instead of that it was taken up by The Christian Standard as an occasion for threatening the income of the Society. And not the income alone, but the very existence of the Society was threatened. By the many devices which a newspaper can use to insinuate an idea without becoming editorially responsible for it, the Standard has for long been pursuing a policy that meant the disintegration of this organized work if it succeeded.

The clear perception of this and the possession of our share of the common knowledge of the motives in which that policy is rooted made continued silence seem wrong for this paper and wrong for the brotherhood. Therefore we spoke as we did in our opening editorial last week.

The response to our words has been prompt and representative —far beyond our expectation for the first week. The following pages of responses are only a part of the communications we have received. Almost as many more (and fully as representative) are being held over for lack of space, while every mail increases the number.

One of the first communications received was accompanied by a personal note in which the writer expressed the fear that the brethren were not ready to speak on this subject. "The mind of the brotherhood is in a state of suspended judgment on the practice of Christian union," he wrote, "and it is not likely that you will receive many responses to your challenge." He will be astonished to find the brave words of his own communication in the company of the equally brave words of so many others.

It is as if the "suspended judgment" of the brotherhood were a drawn bow and our editorial had released the arrow.

It is farthest from the purpose of The Christian Century to interpret these communications as bearing on any but the one subject. We do not assume nor should our readers infer that these voices or those yet to be heard are endorsing this paper's earnest desire that the Disciples shall practice Christian union. The practice of Christian union is not the subject upon which our readers are writing. The Christian Century may be right or wrong on the question of practicing union—it is irrelevant to the present issue.

Nor is Guy W. Sarvis, appointee of the Foreign Society, the issue. The Christian Century believes that Mr. Sarvis is a man of God. No man of richer spiritual life, of stronger personal character and finer mental equipment has been produced by our colleges in recent years than he. That he is consecrating his life to mission work should rejoice all lovers of missions. But Mr. Sarvis is only remotely connected with the issue that is now joined.

The issue now joined and to which our readers are speaking is—

Whether the missionaries on the foreign field—who are now not just two or three individuals but a community or brotherhood in themselves—whether this missionary community is to be trusted to meet these great problems in loyalty to Christ and their brethren;

And whether the Foreign Society which stands between these missionaries and the brotherhood, interpreting them to us and us to them—this society whose leaders have been and are the pick among our saints and statesmen—whether this society is to be continually menaced by the wanton power of The Christian Standard—

This is the issue upon which the Disciples are now registering their opinions.

The Christian Century is glad to hear from its readers on this issue. We do not wish to make newspaper capital out of it, however. The readers of The Christian Evangelist would do well to send their protests to that paper and our state papers should be deluged with communications voicing the long pent up indignation of righteous souls in our brotherhood against the dictatorship which has embarrassed our progress, depleted our offerings, and shamed the Disciples of Christ in the eyes of the Christian world.

Telling Sentences From Our Correspondence

It seems to me that the men and women who give up all and go to the dark land for Christ's sake can be trusted to be true to Him in all matters that concern the Kingdom.—J. A. Barnett.

To destroy practical, fraternal fellowship with other Christian workers in the great foreign field is not only a sin against the unity of Christians for which Christ prayed, but is also a sin against the great multitude who have joined the Christian Church because of its plea for Christian union. We betray their confidence and blast their hopes.—Wm. Bayard Craig.

The unrighteous habit of plunging our people into cataclysmic controversies is ruining our spiritual welfare. A people living in such an atmosphere cannot grow into the higher spiritual graces.—J. H. Goldner.

So long as conscientious men and women can be found and aided to carry the Scripture to those that have it not, let no Christian fritter away time and fateful opportunities in the effort to assure himself that their faith and practice are absolutely identical with his own.—Judge Frederick A. Henry.

It seems to me to be almost the last straw.—Harry G. Hill.

That the Christian Standard should become a destructive critic of our great organized foreign work is sad to behold.—John P. Sala.

We have been silent too long, hoping against hope that the editor would see the folly of his course and repent.—E. B. Barnes.

But granting for the sake of argument, that all the charges made against him are true, though he denies them in full, does any sane man think for a moment that this one teacher in a university in China could do the smallest fraction of the injury to the cause of Christ that is done by this fight on the Foreign Society?—David H. Shields.

I wonder if the time has not come for our discerning brethren to be bold and courageous enough to lift their voice and pen in protest. —A. D. Harmon.

The practical problems of the mission field can be best settled by the missionaries. Men who give their lives to such a cause can be trusted with matters of both principle and policy.—A. W. Taylor.

Stand by the Society!

Our Foreign Missionary Society has emerged successfully from many a hard struggle. We will trust to the wisdom of the board of managers now. They see the question from a world center and recognize the tremendous interests involved. What would the Master have them do at this juncture? Let them answer that question as best they can and never mind the clamor of the timid and misled.

We have talked and prayed for Christian union for a hundred years and the answer is coming just where we might expect it to come, on the foreign field where the conditions surrounding the early Christian missionaries are reproduced. Some are crying out with fear when all should be crying out with joy.

To destroy practical, fraternal, fellowship with other Christian workers on the great foreign field is not only a sin against the unity of Christians for which Christ prayed, but is also a sin against the great multitude who have joined the Christian Church because of its plea for Christian union. We betray their confidence and blast their hopes.

We do not fear for a moment that the Foreign Society contemplates any action that will in the least degree compromise the conscientious convictions of a representative Disciple of Christ. That they will go far in providing for the recognition of the conscientious convictions of other Christians on the foreign field is the devout prayer of a multitude among us. God grant that the board will have both the courage and the wisdom to do whatever they see and believe is right

The question of baptism is at its best but a question of machinery. It is a means toward an end. Without the Christ love and spirit of which it is intended to be but a symbol and outward sign it is an empty husk. Those who are the greatest sticklers for Scriptural obedience to the command ought to exhibit in discussing the question, the graces of an unfailing indwelling divine love. WM. BAYARD CRAIG.

New York City.

Confidence in the Foreign Board.

The majority are interested in the great enterprises of the Kingdom. We desire to see every knee bow before our Lord, and we listen to hear his saving name upon every lip. The high work in which we are engaged will not permit us to come down to petty, irritating quibbling. We are too busy raising the money for great foreign offerings. We believe in the nobility of world-wide missions, we have confidence in the secretaries and in the men who compose the board of our Foreign Society. All our energies are employed in securing the good dollars which shall carry the gospel of Jesus' love to the ends of the earth. We see our objective. We know what we are about. We are sincere and we will not be hindered. JOHN RAY EWERS.

Pittsburg, Pa.
East End Church.

Writes a Letter to the Standard.

In response to your editorial request for an expression on the Standard attack on our Foreign Missionary Interests, I enclose you a copy of a letter I am sending the Standard.

Editor Christian Standard, Cincinnati, Ohio. Dear Sir: Your continued attitude to the Foreign Society appeals to our church and to me as unworthy the paper founded by one of our greatest leaders. Your constant hostility leads us to believe that you may be animated by personal antagonism and unworthy motives. Your paper has an unusual opportunity for large service to our cause. It would be a tragedy to prostitute it. May we hope that you will consider the seriousness of what you are doing. The cause of foreign missions is too sacred and the interests of our valorous missionaries too holy to be made the object of an unjust and an uncalled for attack. May I kindly but most emphatically protest. If mistakes are made, there are right and wrong ways to correct them. It is decidedly to injure the whole cause on account of any disagreement you may have with some detail of conduct. Sincerely yours, JOSEPH C. TODD.

Bloomington, Ind.

A Prophetic Word.

I congratulate you on having put aside the proprieties of journalistic etiquette and spoken the prophetic word. There are some of us who have for years known—not merely by hearsay but by experience—the utter disingenuousness of the Christian Standard's devotion to orthodoxy, and have watched with growing sadness its successful exploitation of the brotherhood and the plea. We would be glad to believe that it has at last overreached itself and made apparent to all the true inspiration of its motives. If its last outbreak fails to arouse the brotherhood, we will be tempted to say, as was said of old, "This people's heart is waxed gross and their ears are dull of hearing."

The only argument that the owner of the Christian Standard is able to understand, the only appeal that is able to reach his "heart," is a discontinuance of subscriptions and orders for church and Sunday-school supplies. If the churches that appreciate the work of the F. C. M. S., and that wish to protect and foster our co-operative work, would use this argument they would soon bring this prodigal to the penitent form. Your protest is most timely. I wish you success. EARLE MARION TODD.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

An Awful Responsibility.

Without meaning to add fuel to any flame of controversy, I am bound to respond to the call of your editorial, "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out." The Standard's boycott of the Foreign Society overleaps the bounds of the ordinary journalistic divertissement. It is a calamity. That paper's undoubted power and influence are demonstrated, if demonstration were necessary, in this year's imperilled receipts of the Foreign Society. But it assumes an awful responsibility!

In this season of fruition of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and amidst unexampled popular interest in foreign missions, when every other Christian communion is pressing forward, as never before, towards the goal of world-conquest for Christ, the Disciples are actually retreating, because their oldest organ disowns the greatest work of its founder.

Friendly criticism of our missionary societies may at times be needed; but to promote hostility, or even indifference, to their appeals, is to thwart, in some measure, the Master's last and dearest hope. He will take care of the regularity of obedience to his good tidings, if only they be carried to all men everywhere, in his name. So long as conscientious men and women can be found and aided to carry the scripture to those that have it not, let no Christian fritter away precious time and fateful opportunities in the effort to assure himself that their faith and practice are absolutely identical with his own.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society should have the whole-souled support of every Disciple of Christ. Unfriendly critics of its work do incalculable injury to the extension of the Kingdom. I join in solemnly appealing to the Standard to lift the boycott.

Cleveland, Ohio. FREDERICK A. HENRY.
Judge of Circuit Court.

Works Injury to Men and the Cause.

This is to thank you for your remarkable editorial, "A Time For Loyal Souls to Speak Out." For a number of years the influence of the Standard has been pernicious. Its editorial policy has been narrow and bigoted. Under the guise of mock sincerity and of a hypocritical loyalty it has injured institutions, men, the cause of Jesus. For years it has bluffed its way and honest men have feared to speak. Now, thanks to you and others, we have learned the truth about the Standard.

Paris, Mo. FRANK WALLER ALLEN.

Foreign Society May be Trusted!

Upon the one single point regarding our support of the Foreign Society, I think its record and the standing of the men who are conducting its affairs should lead all loyal disciples to a sympathetic and patient attitude of waiting while it works out the difficult problem now before it. Both missionaries and newspapers should remember that the society has a better understanding of all the data that must be considered. No one ought to embarrass it by heated discussions at this time. It will be responsive to the will of the Brotherhood in council assembled, when it has had opportunity to make its report and receive its instructions. CHAS. M. SHARPE.

Columbia, Mo.
Bible College.

Standard is Destructive of Faith.

Yes it is time for every loyal soul to speak. It is high time that these controversies between our Foreign Missionary Society and the Standard cease.

The people down the line—the folks who pay for the paper, who support the missionaries, who are constantly being told by the preacher that our program is to "preach the gospel to every creature"—are being confused and losing faith.

I am glad the Century has spoken right out in meeting, although I wish it might have been avoided, for already there seems to be a disposition for people to class themselves according to the paper they read, and such questions as, Are you a Standard man, an Evangelist man, or a Century man? are not uncommon. I have already heard of places where a man in announcing one paper feels he must mention the others to prevent friction. Some are already concluding that it is simply a case of what one paper pro-poses the other o-poses.

We have sung Christian union in long and short meter, we have preached it loud and long but when it comes to an attempt at practice even in heathendom and our missionaries enter into the discussions of feasible and practical plans the F. C. M. S. is periodically required through press and circular to declare that they are still seeing to it that their workers are contending for "the faith" or somebody will set up the cry: We are supporting heretics! And of course that means a wail from the "defenders" saying they will keep their offering at home till it is all fixed up.

I know little of the Hyde Park plan but I know that even though they be short on baptism they are long on missions and that Brother Sarvis was not appointed until he was well examined by A. McLean, whose loyalty and consecration cannot be questioned.

We should frown on the system of dictatorship which flays and criticises a man who ventures his honest opinion even though it seems not exactly correct as we see it. Let's not put on the label, "Not Sound" too quickly.

It appears to me that our boast of liberty in opinion and prayer for union is largely a case of bluff. The editor of last week's Judge says—"Bluff is what a man puts up—Stuff is what he puts down. He puts up one when he hasn't the other to put down." I believe the Disciples have the "stuff" to put down. Let's get at it or let somebody else do it. A. IMMANUEL ZELLER.

Cuba, Ill.

Discussion Good if Christian.

The most unfortunate thing with respect to the present controversy regarding the Foreign Missionary Society, is the apparent personal animus and commercial spirit which enters into it. This has been true of the controversies in the past and it is evidently true now.

I think it is a needed and wholesome thing that these problems should be discussed in our papers and by our brethren. I think also that the present problem ought to be clearly stated by the society so that it can be intelligently discussed. But in the discussion let there be no covered motives either by papers, individuals or society. Above all let the discussion be conducted by all in the Spirit of the Master. If this is done, none need fear the outcome. H. O. PRITCHARD.

Bethany (Lincoln), Nebr.
University Church.

Our Missionaries May be Trusted!

I have read with interest and admiration your timely editorial, "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out," and wish to say that I believe you have correctly analyzed the situation that now confronts the brotherhood. It is to be regretted that one of our great newspapers is constantly assuming an attitude of hostility toward our organized missionary interests. A paper that desires to represent the brotherhood and be supported by it should be very careful that its utterances do not injure the agencies we have created for the purpose of extending the Kingdom of God. I have also read the statement of Mr. Sarvis and the statement of the Foreign Society and am quite convinced that no custom of receiving unimmersed persons into the church or of extending fellowship to them in our churches is being practiced on the foreign field. If such is the case here or there, the society evidently is not responsible. The urgent need of a united native church and the isolation of missionaries from their brethren makes the fellowship of the missionaries of all religious bodies closer and sweeter than we know at home. And it seems to me that the men and women who give up all and go to the dark land for Christ's sake can be trusted to be true to Him in all matters that concern the Kingdom. Let us take care that we are as true at home, and that these noble servants of ours and of Christ be not left un-supported because some of our semi-anti brethren persist in casting suspicion upon our splendid Foreign Society. J. A. BARNETT.

Galesburg, Ill.

Amazed and Shamed.

I read with amazement the circular sent out by the Foreign Missionary Society in order to save the Children's Day offering against the insidious attack of the Christian Standard, and I have been waiting for just such a manifesto as that contained in your editorial which I have just read. It is certainly "a time for every loyal soul to speak"—to speak in no uncertain tone for the preservation of our essential liberties.

The venomousness of the Standard's attack is only matched by its stupidity. They seem to have "Hyde Park" on the brain—though it would be well if it were only the brain that were at fault. It is a shame at this day and time in the church of the Campbells that such statements as those by the Foreign Society and yourselves should be necessary to enlighten the brotherhood and protect innocent men from insult. But they are necessary—there is the pity and shame of it. Surely the Holy Spirit of truth and justice has winged your arrow this time. May the same spirit send it home to the mark!

Richmond, Va. H. D. C. MACLACHLAN.
Seventh Street Church.

Not Surprised at Standard's Attack.

I desire to say a few words concerning the matter of Guy W. Sarvis and The Christian Standard. I am not surprised at the attack—nor time and manner of it; it is in harmony with its methods for the past decade. It is no part of its policy in such matters, it would seem, to secure the facts and furnish correct information for its readers. If it should present the facts there would be no opportunity to deceive and create prejudice. Then an opportune time for misinformation is just a few days before some important missionary offering. To raise the question just after the offering when there would be plenty of time to inform the misinformed, would be a situation very much to be deplored by the Standard.

What surprises me is that any who know the policy of this paper respecting our organized missionary interests during the past few years should be deceived by it. Its animus is so easily seen and its iniquity so gross that none should be led astray. It is certainly a time for every loyal follower of our Master to brand as traitorous conduct which is so plainly intended to hinder the progress of the Kingdom. F. L. MOFFETT.

Springfield, Mo.
Smith Street Church.

"Progressive" Sentiment has Rights

Previous to the reading of your editorial I had been informed of the deplorable attitude of the Standard in its last attack (latest of many) upon our Foreign Society. Personally I do not now subscribe for, nor do I read the Standard. It became a positive hindrance to my personal life. It is almost altogether negative of good and positively demoralizing. The present attack upon the Foreign Society is without excuse, and in direct conflict with the facts, which were available to the Standard. The whole matter seems to me to be almost the last straw. Our people have been patient, long-suffering. The name Standard has been a word to conjure with, but it has so far departed from the splendid progressive spirit of its founder that it is no longer worthy of the support of our people. It stands a self-appointed dictator, coercing browbeating, bullying.

If I have any criticism of our Foreign Society, it would be that they have been too ready to answer the "heresay-questions" of the Standard. Who constituted it a judge? Has its court jurisdiction? There are at least two parties—in attitude—in our great brotherhood. Has not a "progressive" who is a supporter of missions a right to representation—if he desires it, —as well as the so-called "conservative." So far I have not heard of the progressive insistence on this right. I believe this is because the progressive has too great an interest in missions and our Missionary Society to insist upon his own personal rights. Let the people rule. Let the loyal speak. HARRY G. HILL.

Indianapolis, Ind.
Third Church.

The Standard's Destructive Criticism.

I note your timely editorial on "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out," and wish to express my appreciation of it. That the Christian Standard should become a destructive critic of our great organized foreign work is sad to behold.

The present attack seems indeed, uncalled for, far-fetched and is a sad injustice to Mr. Sarvis. They certainly owe him an apology. Indeed, we feel that their representation is so forced that our brethren will note that there must be some grievance or purpose behind it. That paper's sin against the army of workers on the foreign field is great.

If they do not feel the sin and shame of their work in this matter, many of us Ohio preachers do. We look for better things from our religious journals.

Our plea for union will be a farce before the world as long as such journalism prevails among us.

Is the Standard, with its prejudices, able to judge the worthiness of our missionary candidates better than our beloved McLean, who has given his life and money as an offering to the spreading of the gospel plea to the uttermost parts of the earth? or than the sweet-spirited Corey, or than the energetic Rains, or than the executive committee who unselfishly give their labors to this work? It assumes to be able.

You are right; a crisis is here in our work right now. Great principles are at stake. It is a time for every true Christian in our ranks to show his colors. The Christian Standard has signified its intention to injure the great organized interests of the church for carrying the gospel into foreign lands. It makes it imperative then for those of us who believe in the Foreign Society to throw into it our most vigorous support. JOHN P. SALA.

Dayton, Ohio.
Central Church.

A Hearty "Amen!"

I have read with pleasure the editorial concerning the Standard's action toward Mr. Sarvis and the Hyde Park Church. It reads well. That something should be said there has been no doubt in my mind, and I am inclined to feel that your statement of the case and the sentiment of the whole article will meet with a hearty "Amen" from many quarters.

Allow me to express again my appreciation of the splendid poise which the Century has displayed in the last year or more in handling the most delicate problems. I am sure that this has won many friends for the paper and will accomplish much in the end. There is almost a universal recoil (so far as my knowledge extends) from the policy of the Standard among the most astute of its old supporters, and I am comforted in the opinion that there is a natural growth toward better things. My only concern is that our impatience may not disrupt and spoil what seems sure to come in time. W. F. ROTHENBURGER.

Cleveland, Ohio.
Franklin Circle Church.

A Ringing "No!"

Your editorial, "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out," is the clarion note for the hour. Long enough has the brotherhood maintained its silence while the Standard, under the pretense of protecting the faith, has thundered forth its decrees and bludgeoned those who ventured resistance. For the second time in the last five years, the Foreign Society has been obliged to defend itself against attacks from the Standard by resorting to the individual letter through the mails. The papers were silent. Leaders uttered not a word. The question began to arise in many minds, "Has the Standard terrorized the brotherhood?" Your editorial is a ringing "No,"—a stirring obligato that ought to call forth a chorus of a million Noes.

The unreasonable and trifling attack upon Guy Sarvis, one of the ablest, truest and best equipped men ever called to the foreign field, ought to unmask the Standard to all fair-minded people. Yours for liberty and loyalty.

Danville, Ill. H. D. WILLIAMS.
Fourth Church.

A Reproach upon the Brotherhood.

I approve most heartily your defense of the Foreign Society against the attacks being made against it. I have been for a long time thoroughly out of all sympathy with the course pursued by certain ones in their utter recklessness in attacking worthy causes and men and in their chronic disposition to keep the brotherhood stirred up over false issues. Such things seem to me to be far below the true Christian standard. Such a course is producing effects in some of our churches that hinder spiritual development and must ultimately cause great reproach upon our brotherhood unless our people awake speedily to see whither such a spirit is tending. ALBERT SCHWARTZ.

Clinton, Ill.

Injuring Disciples' Reputation.

The situation in our Zion today is indeed deplorable, and is not only doing great injury in our own ranks but is giving us an unenviable reputation among other religious bodies.

I have, all my life, believed in contending for "the faith once for all delivered to the saints," but I am unable to see the necessity of making war on good brethren in order to do it.

If we are to move forward and accomplish our mission in the world we must all line up for constructive work both at home and abroad and frown upon all reactionary or disintegrating influences among us.

But let us do all things in love and be much in prayer. S. S. JONES.

Danville, Ill., Third Church.

The Policy of Disintegration.

Your able diagnosis of the Christian Standard's policy of disintegration and would-be-domination of the brotherhood, should meet with a hearty response from every right thinking man among us. We have been silent too long, hoping against hope that the editor would see the folly of his course and repent. The reversion of that once great paper to anti-ism, its attempts by independent missions, and its crusades in favor of disintegration policies of any sort that would injure the work of the Foreign Society, form one of the most lamentable and humiliating chapters in our history. I am sure that our brethren need only to be shown what is the animus of its hatred, and they will speak out in no uncertain manner.

Richmond, Ky. E. B. BARNES.

Brotherhood Will Not Be Misled.

The Century just came to my desk and I must write you a line to tell you how much I appreciate your editorial "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out." It is the best thing that has come to my notice in years. For once I wish we had an authoritative body to rebuke in a manner in keeping with the continued assaults of the Christian Standard. I cannot believe that our large-hearted brotherhood will let itself be misled by such pigmy mindedness as has been exhibited in the last year from the above source. As you say, the shame of it is that the Foreign Society felt itself compelled to speak out to save itself in the Children's Day offering. Our offering was considerably more than ever before. Keep it up.

Niantic, Ill. ROBT. E. HENRY,
Sec'y. Sixth District.

Sarvis at the Worst is not so Bad as Standard's Attack.

I have carefully read your editorial, "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out." During my fourteen years of ministry I have steadily refused to enter into any of the current theological controversies for two reasons, at least; first, because they seldom partake of the Spirit of Christ; and second, I have been too busy trying to strengthen the forces of righteousness and not weaken them by further division. As you say, however, this fight on our Foreign Society is not theological, but it is a "moral iniquity." I am certain that every true disciple of Christ has watched these recurring assults on our Foreign Society with increasing sorrow and indignation. These assaults are not only a sin against our society, causing it to spend money and energy uselessly, but they are a sin against the churches of Christ in America, wasting their money and dividing their forces, and they are also a sin against the missionary and against the unsaved heathen.

I know absolutely nothing about Mr. Sarvis' theological views excepting what he has set forth in the letter sent out by our Foreign Society. But granting for the sake of argument, that all the charges made against him are true, though he denies them in full, does any sane man think for a moment that this one teacher in a university in China could do the smallest fraction of the injury to the cause of Christ, as this fight on the Foreign Society?

It seems to me that the time is long past when a private concern that is run wholly for private gain can bulldoze a million of Christ's freemen. Are there not enough men who love Christ sufficiently to say that this iniquity must cease? Are we never growing big enough to put Christ above the subscription of a privately owned paper, or some sectarian view of the gospel?

We not only ought to encourage our missionaries to lead in union work on their fields, but we ought to recall them if they do not. The conversion of the heathen world is stupendous enough without adding another sect to divide the forces.

Eureka, Ill. DAVID H. SHIELDS.

Time to Protest.

I have just read your editorial on the relation of The Christian Standard to the Foreign Missionary Society.

I hasten to commend you for the frankness and boldness with which you state the issue.

The encouraging fact in connection with this matter is that the number is legion of those who share these views with you and who have become wise to the Standard's persistent ambush attacks on our missionary interests. It is pathetic to see it exploit the brotherhood in the interests of its counting room under the role of saving the "plea."

I wonder if the time has not come for our discerning brethren to be bold and courageous enough to lift their voice and pen in protest.

We express the same convictions privately. Have we a dictatorship so entrenched that freedom of speech is synonmous with excommunication?

Do we boast of liberty and through a decade cringe before public expression on these great and vital matters that involve the essence of our religious existence?

I think A. McLean's exposure of the Standard on the eve of the Norfolk Convention the work of a consecrated hero, who had suffered long and was kind. Silence is often golden, but practiced when such interests are at stake as our missionary enterprises may be the part of a weakling and a sycophant. I commend you for the editorial.

First Church, St. Paul, Minn. A. D. HARMON.

"Who Made Thee a Prince and Judge?"

I have read the editorial concerning The Christian Standard and the Foreign Society, and while I deeply regret any religious controversies, I think your editorial timely and I am at least in accord with its spirit. Without doubt you have correctly presented the animus of The Standard, though its frequent interdictions have never affected me, as I knew there must be sinister and not devout motives actuating such utterances.

It were far better if our religious journals could devote larger space to that which builds faith, cements fellowship, unifies forces, and less to censorious criticisms. I have oft felt like saying to The Standard, "Who made thee a prince and a judge over us?" A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

Sedalia, Mo.

A Sinister Spectacle.

The Century's bold championship in behalf of deliverance from ecclesiastical despotism in the present situation is timely and heartening. That the diagnosis of the case is quite accurate, to my mind, does not admit of doubt. The signs of the times are written so large that even the wayfaring man may read the glaring letters upon our religious sky-line.

The question is, shall we longer permit a commercialized publishing house to exploit our brotherhood, browbeat our ministry into blind conformity, sow abroad the seeds of strife and suspicion, despoil our missionary boards of the treasures of the people's loyalty, and annul the whole purpose of our separate existence?

Why we should be compelled to allow anyone to wreak vengeance upon the whole scheme of world evangelization simply because they choose to regard the brotherhood's chosen agents as enemies of their house, does not appear.

As one who has been intimately connected with our Foreign Society, I rise to declare my devotion to its representatives whom I know to love and honor. I only regret that the tenor of our entire brotherhood upon which they rely for support has not encouraged them to permit our missionaries to enter more completely into the practice of our ideal of unity.

The spectacle is a very sinister one. That we should have to acknowledge the flamboyant presence of despotism and strife within our own ranks simultaneously with our plea for religious liberty and unity among the "torn and rent divisions of Christendom," is a moral anomaly. Let the call shiver through the brotherhood until we shall have vouchsafed to us the freedom to preach and also practice the truth, not as conceived for us by some religious dictator, but rather as it springs forth in our own hearts, with "none to molest or make afraid." C. C. WILSON.

Milwaukee, Wis., First Church.

Known By Its Fruits.

The Foreign Society is known by its fruits. It merits the confidence of every missionary man among us.

The practical problems of the mission field can be best settled by the missionaries. Men who give their lives to such a cause can be trusted with matters of both principle and policy.

To yield to the demands being made upon the Foreign Board would be to sell our birthright. We have ever pleaded "in faith unity, in opinions liberty."

To every one who knows Guy W. Sarvis his positive word is an end of controversy. Hearsay and the interpretation of someone else as to his opinions will shake the confidence of no one who knows his sterling honesty, his devotion to his Lord and the manner in which his life is given to Christly service. He is of one mind with our missionaries in China. Anything that would prevent his going to China with his rich abilities and consecrated enthusiasm would in consistency demand the recall of every missionary representing us there.

A. W. TAYLOR.

University of Missouri, Columbia, Mo.

Diagnosis is Correct.

I have read with interest and deep concern your editorial, "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out," and heartily endorse that part of it which deplores the attempt being made to destroy the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. For from all appearances your diagnosis is correct. That was the conclusion I had arrived at before reading your editorial. We all recognize the right of any of our religious journals to criticise the work of any of our national organizations—that is part of our freedom. But if any of them are to be destroyed, that is for the Brotherhood to decide in convention assembled.

O. W. LAWRENCE.

Central Church, Decatur, Ill.

Hoping for a New Day.

I deplore deeply the spirit that is back of these continued attacks on our foreign work. I can not, in the light of the time of their renewals, and the knowledge of personal jealousy, and personal revenge, in the hearts of some, believe there is any sincere desire to serve the truth. I am anxious to see a new day of clean, calm, truth-seeking religious journalism manifest everywhere. We need the various types of view. I try to read all. But the appeal to narrow prejudice and the attack upon character on garbled facts is unclean, passionate and demoralizing.

Emporia, Kan. O. L. SMITH.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXVI. Nahum and the Fall of Nineveh

June 25. Text For Special Study. Nahum 2:1-13.

QUESTIONS.

1. With what nations did Israel come into contact during the period we have been studying?
2. What was the territory and capital of Assyria?
3. What instances does the Old Testament record of Assyrian operations in Palestine?
4. What was the character of the Assyrians in their military conduct and their treatment of their enemies?
5. What was the feeling among the people of Israel and Judah toward Assyria?
6. What book of prophecy besides Nahum refers to the hatred in which Nineveh was held by the people of Palestine?
7. What is known of Nahum, the writer of this book?
8. What relation does chapter 1 sustain to the remainder of the book?
9. What is supposed to be its date as compared with the other two chapters?
10. What is its theme?
11. What situation is pictured in chapter 2?
12. In what terms is the overthrow of Nineveh recorded?
13. What kind of animals are referred to as like the people of Nineveh?
15. Was it assumed by the writer that such would be the fate of any city that disregarded the divine will?
14. Who brought this ruin upon the city of Nineveh?

* * *

1. JUDAH AND ASSYRIA.

The entire history of the Hebrew people might well be written in terms of their relations to contemporary peoples. Those relations usually amounted to such military vassalage as kept the men of Israel in some kind of subjection to their stronger neighbors. At first it was Egypt that was in control; then in the days of the advancing monarchy, it was the Philistines who raided their borders and collected tribute. Later still, Syria was the troublesome factor in Israel's politics. But by the middle of the eighth century B. C. Assyria had begun to assert its power in the west, and continued for a century and a half to be the practical master of the western coastland. The inscriptions which refer to Hebrew history assure us of the tribute that was paid from time to time by Hebrew kings to their Assyrian invaders for the purpose of purchasing their friendship or averting disaster. Jehu seems to have secured his title to the throne of the Northern Kingdom by payment of tribute to Shalmanezer II in 842 B. C. Menaham sent a large present to the capital of Assyria to uphold his tottering power. Shalmanezer IV, angered at the rebellion of Hoshea, besieged Samaria in 624 B. C. and the city fell in the first year of Sargon 621 B. C.

The ravages of Tiglath-pileser in Palestine brought terror to both Syria and Israel. In 732 Damascus was overcome and ten years later, as already noted, Samaria fell. Another decade saw Tiglath-pileser the master of Philistia on the southwest coast, and in 601 B. C. Sennacherib was knocking insistently at the gates of Jerusalem. The merciless character of Assyrian warfare kept the weaker nations in constant terror and indignation. The military methods of the Assyrians were inhuman. Their commanders gloried in the cruelty with which they treated subject nations. Nineveh, the proud capital of this Assyrian empire, was the object of the particular hatred and detestation of the peoples who had suffered so wantonly at its hands. It was not strange that Judah should share in this animosity and rejoice in every sign of the approaching downfall of the great tyrant. Nothing could give greater satisfaction to the people who had suffered so much at the hands of this conqueror than the news that his capital was about to fall. Even centuries later the memory of Judah's hatred of Nineveh had not died out when the author of the book of Jonah made it the background of his urgent message to his countrymen.

* * *

2. DIVINE JUDGMENTS.

Somewhere during the dark reign of Manasseh or the times of reform that follower under Josiah, a prophet in Judah, conscious of the movements in world politics that were bringing Assyria to its end, lifted up his voice in a message of triumph and exultation over the approaching tragedy. This prophet was Nahum the Elkoshite.

Of this man nothing is known save what the book declares. Probably Elkosh was a town in Judah. It has been supposed that it lay somewhere on the road from Jerusalem to Gaza. The substance of his message is contained in chapters 2 and 3. Chapter 1 appears to be a psalm celebrating the judgment of God upon his enemies. It is much mutilated in its present form, but bears traces of having been originally an acrostic. This fact, together with its lack of direct reference to the Assyrian situation, has led to the belief that it was added at a later day to the original prophecy of Nahum, and that it performs the service of a poetical preface to his work.

After the double title, "The Burden of Nineveh. The Book of the Visions of Nahum the Elkoshite," the poem proceeds with the picture of God as an avenger of wrath, visiting punishment upon his enemies, and using the forces of nature as the instruments of his will. Nature withers before his angry approach. The mountains quake, the hills melt, and the earth is in convulsions. No one can stand before his anger.

But on the other hand he is a stronghold and a refuge for those who put their trust in him. It is useless for the enemies of his people to imagine success. Whatever enemy rises up against God and his chosen people is certain to be overthrown. But more than this, he will have mercy upon the afflicted of his people, and the yoke of oppression shall be broken from their necks. The enemy of God is to be destroyed and cast into the pit. Joyous tidings are going forth throughout the land of Judah because of the destruction of the oppressor.

* * *

3. THE IMPENDING FALL OF NINEVEH. (Ch. 2.)

With the beginning of chapter 2 the real message of Nahum opens. The date at which he uttered this message cannot be known with certainty. But there are two very definite points between which it must fall. The first is the capture of Thebes, the capital of Egypt, the "No-amon" of 3:8. Thebes was taken by Assurbanipal in 663 B. C. The other event is the fall of Nineveh itself which occurred in 606 B. C. Since Nahum refers to the first of these events as past and the second as approaching, it is clear that his prophecy falls between the two dates, 663 and 606 B. C. Closer than this it is impossible to come with accuracy, though perhaps 645 B. C. would be a fair conjecture. That would place the prophecy in the last days of Manasseh's reign.

The scene is vividly set forth in chapter 2. The city of Nineveh is surrounded by its enemies, the Medes and Babylonians who brought it to desolation. The prophet foresees the final struggle of the mighty city. All the preparations for battle are noted. The streets are full of the war chariots and companies of soldiers hurrying hither and thither. The soldiers are summoned from their quarters. The assault against the walls is urged. The engines of destruction are hurried to the attack. The waters of the river are diverted from their channel, and the enemies rush in through the river

The Moral Leaders of Israel is a Sunday School course for Young People's and Adult Bible Classes. It will continue throughout the year 1911. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will supply classes of six or more with weekly copies of the paper containing these lessons, at $1 per year for each copy, or 30 cents per quarter. The class members will receive in addition to their Sunday-school lesson all the rich things provided every week in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. The papers distributed to the class on Sunday will contain the lesson for the following Sunday. Orders should be sent through the regular Sunday-school Treasurer if you wish to pay quarterly; or you may deal directly with the Publishers, enclosing remittance at the rate of $1.00 per year for each copy ordered. Be sure and give name of teacher or class member to whom papers shall be sent for distribution.

gates. The mighty lady, perhaps the queen, and perhaps the personification of the city itself, is carried away, and her maidens shriek in terror at the catastrophe.

Nineveh the great, famous from of old, has no protectors left. In vain her defenders are bidden to stand. The enemy rushes in to seize upon the countless spoil. Her strength is exhausted and in anguish she sinks into despair and ruin. The famous capital that was the stronghold of a lion-like race has passed away. No one could have dreamed that such a fate would overcome so mighty a city. But Jehovah of hosts was her enemy, and she can but perish in his wrath.

* * *

4. THE SIN OF NINEVEH.

The second section of the prophecy proper is found in chapter 3, and considers more carefully the causes that brought Nineveh to her ruin. What a terrible confusion is that which is now witnessed in the struggle of her final overthrow. The bodies lie in heaps on all the streets. This is only the fitting retribution for the idolatries and immoralities of which Nineveh has been guilty. The nations that were compelled to bow before her shall now see with astonishment the shame of her undoing. In the violence of her overthrow she shall be as much of an astonishment as she was in the splendor of her power.

But there may be skeptics who say that such an overthrow can never come to so mighty a city. Yet they would have said the same thing of Thebes, the great capital of Egypt, whose fall still echoed in the thought of the world. What city was more wonderfully safeguarded? The Nile was her protection and her sustenance. Ethiopia and Egypt acknowledged her sway. The Lybians and giant races of Africa were her defenders; yet she was utterly overthrown and her people taken into captivity. Even so shall Nineveh perish, or be compelled to seek for shelter in the day of disaster.

The decline of the Assyrian empire had been gradual but inevitable. Her people trusted too much in her great name and were weakened by luxury and vice. When at last the moment of trouble came she had no strength to resist. Her merchandise was in all the world, but her soldiers were incapable of affording her protection. Her leaders were self-indulgent and worthless, and the final test of her strength found her weak and impotent. Such was the analysis given by Nahum the prophet regarding the causes which led to the destruction of the great city.

* * *

5. THE MESSAGE OF NAHUM.

It will be seen from a careful reading of this little volume of prophecy that the seer is thinking but little of his own people, save as he shares their patriotic hope that their great oppressor may soon fall. There is in his message nothing of that effort which Amos had made to awaken his own people to a sense of their peril by the vision of divine judgments upon neighboring offenders. Perhaps the faithful in Judah needed the encouragement of such a prophecy as this in the long days of darkness through which they were passing. Perhaps the prophet thought it sufficient to assure his countrymen of a better time to come, leaving their instruction in righteousness to other messengers.

In the first chapter which contains the poem, there is strong emphasis laid upon the justice and majesty of Jehovah, the God of Judah, and this is perhaps the strongest of the elements of instruction in the book.

How completely the words of Nahum were fulfilled we know from the records of history. In 606 B. C. the combined forces that had been growing restive under the heavy hand of Assyria were led on by the Babylonians to the siege of Nineveh. The city was taken and destroyed. Its vast extent became a ruin, where our own generation of archæologists has worked with such wonderful results. So complete was the ruin of Nineveh that, when centuries later, the ten thousand Greeks whose story was written by Xenophon in the Anabasis were on the way past the site, they took the mounds of that deserted metropolis for the ruins of ancient Median cities. Thus the words of Nahum had more than come true.

* * *

FOLLOWING STUDIES:

Sec. XXVII. will deal with "Habbakuk and the Rise of Babylon" and will be followed by "Zephaniah and the Day of the Lord."

* * *

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS:

1. The evidence regarding the writer and the date of the prophecy of Nahum.
2. The closing day of the Assyrian empire.
3. The siege and fall of Nineveh.
4. The correctness of the picture of Nineveh presented by the prophet Nahum.
5. The influence of Nineveh's fall upon subject nations.
6. The religious value of the prophecy of Nahum.

* * *

LITERATURE.

A. B. Davidson, "Nahum (Cambridge Bible); G. A. Smith, The Twelve Prophets, vol. II; Farrar, The Minor Prophets (Men of the Bible Series); Kirkpatrick, The Doctrine of the Prophets.

16. Of what sins had Nineveh been particularly guilty?

17. How did the prophet undertake to convince those who were doubtful whether so strong a city could fall?

18. What event in Egyptian history had transpired shortly before?

19. Does Nahum seem to have been concerned with the moral education of Judah?

20. How was the prophecy of Nahum strikingly fulfilled?

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic June 25th. A Missionary Journey Around the World.—VI. Missions in China. 2 Cor. 11:21-28.

As we turn to a study of missions in China we will miss much of the significance of that work if we try to estimate it in terms of dollars spent and converts made. Christianity is a spirit and refuses to be compassed by figures. To study it then as a spirit which is moving upon that wonderful people, is to get a much more adequate appreciation of what it is doing.

A Chinese Christian, writing on China's needs contrasts what he calls Confucian civilization. He says, "the former rests satisfied if the self is subdued from doing evil, but the latter will not feel satisfied until that self has been so subdued that it may be directed to do some positive good." After enumerating the reforms which are now in process in China, the marvelous crusade against opium, the energetic suppression of foot-binding, the unequivocal abolishment of the time-honored educational system, etc., as the results of the Christian spirit at work there, he concludes, "a new spirit has set to work and a greater doctrine has come to be applied."

Says another observer of the work of Christian Missions in China, "The Chinese have the efficiency of mission schools, mission hospitals, and missionary physicians, and they have served as models for the Chinese to build their schools, hospitals, and the basis of their practice of medicine."

Very much then in China, as in Japan and Korea, old institutions, forms, and customs are regarded as inadequate and are being laid aside. The important thing now is what shall take their places? They must, they will, have something. Will they be institutions fashioned by Christian ideals and principles, or will it be a piecing together of various forms of heathenism? The golden opportunity which confronts those interested in Christian Missions is apparent to all who know conditions. This is again a formative period in China, and we can do at a single stroke now what would require many strokes later on. This is what gives appropriateness to Mr. Mott's latest book, The Decisive Hour in Missions.

China's population is estimated at 400,000,000, but she has less than 200,000 church communicants. Some time ago she had 15,000 students in Japan and only six of them were Christians and two of these were Y. M. C. A. secretaries, who were sent out by the association. This is a fair proportion of Christians among the students today. The challenge is, therefore, to us Endeavorers to multiply our strength over there—for some of us to go in person to that land and spend our lives for that people as Jesus spent his life for us, for others to spend our lives here, but giving of its fruits to that same unselfish end.

The Present Pope's Family

Pope Pius X is reported as much amused by long continued appeals that he create his relatives counts and marchionesses, and otherwise elevate them from present humble walks in life. These appeals come in no instance from these relatives, but from ambitious persons who desire the Pope to have noble kinsfolk. The Pope's brother is postmaster in a provincial village. He has been to Rome twice to call at the Vatican, and the Pope always refers to him as the "Post Master General." One sister is married, and her husband keeps a small inn at Riese. Here she assists in ways landlord's wives of the better grade usually do. The Pope's two other sisters, untitled and unassuming, dwell in modest apartments in Rome, quite near to the Vatican. Neither of them has taken any part whatever in affairs of church, state or society since going from Venice to Rome. Pope Pius himself conforms to custom while in the pontifical apartments of the Vatican, but when he takes the elevator—he caused the first elevator to be put into the Vatican—to his private apartments immediately above the pontifical ones, where he lives with two secretaries for companions, he is much as when, years ago, he was parish priest in Treviso.

That Which is Lost

I think no garden's sweeter
Than its sweetest flower;
I think no life is kinder
Than its kindest hour.
But all the flowering sweetness.
Lieth not in one,
Nor all a lifetime's kindness
In the great thing done.

—Youth's Companion.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

First Church, Cairo, was preparing to dedicate its new building last Sunday.

J. E. Stout is holding a short meeting with the Red Brush congregation, located three miles north of Louisville.

At West Salem, G. W. Ford is pastor. The congregation here is anticipating the erection of a new building in the near future.

On May 21 there were five additions to Centralia Church, with nearly six hundred in the Sunday-school.

Wright Spurlin is to become pastor, for one-fourth time, of the church at Pittsburg, in Fayette county.

J. H. Gilliland, Bloomington, is supplying the pulpit at Normal since the termination of the pastorate of William G. McColley.

J. D. Williams secured an offering of one hundred twenty-five dollars from Table Grove Church in the interest of district work.

B. W. Tate, who is pastor of Pontiac Church, delivered the memorial sermon at Rooks Creek, and the decoration day address at Latona.

Effingham Church will have for its pastor during the summer months, Joe L. Fisher, a student of Kimberlin Heights College in Tennessee.

The church at Chapin has invited A. E. Underwood to continue his pastorate, and will increase his salary. Mr. Underwood is available for a meeting during the latter part of June and the first week in July.

J. A. Clemens of Casey, was honored with a call to return to his former pastorate at Toledo, to deliver the baccalaureate sermon for the High School. He also conducted the memorial services in his home city.

The Shelbyville pastor, R. H. Robertson, was invited to deliver the baccalaureate sermon to the High School graduates, and the memorial sermon to the old soldiers. There have been a number of additions to this church in recent weeks.

The church at Kilbourne is erecting a new edifice expected to be dedicated about August 1. Their pastor, E. P. Gish, a student of Eureka College, is to spend his vacation in Iowa, where he is assisting in chautauqua work. He preached his farewell sermon at Kilbourne the last Sunday in May.

Paul M. Mundy, pastor of Erie Church, is assisting other pastors of the town in an effort to secure five thousand dollars for a Y. M. C. A. In the church of which Mr. Mundy is pastor, a Boy Scout band has been organized, which promises well for the boys of the community.

At the celebration of the first anniversary of the dedication of the new building at Shirley, Professor Silas Jones, Mrs. A. I. Zeller, and Secretary J. Fred Jones, were the principal speakers. F. L. Starbuck, who is pastor of this church, while receiving his education at Eureka, is succeeding in accomplishing very creditable work.

More than three hundred Sunday-school scholars of the Christian Church, Watseka, formed in line and marched to the hall of the Grand Army Corps, from whence they escorted the old soldiers to the church on memorial day. Each Sunday-school scholar bore in his hand a small flag. The minister, Ellmore Sinclair, delivered the sermon to the old soldiers.

G. W. Morton, of Beardstown Church, headed a company of one hundred people from his home town to the State Sunday-school Convention at Quincy to secure the convention for Beardstown in 1913. Their enthusiasm at the convention created a very favorable impression. It is not reported whether they succeeded in securing the convention.

The men of First Church, Springfield, encouraged by the success of the young ladies during the month of May, have assumed responsibility for the Sunday evening services during June. A special program committee was appointed to make detailed arrangements for the services. The pastor's subject for the first evening was "The Christian Man in the Community."

The Christian Endeavor Society at Cairo, Second Church, recently listened to a thrilling address, and full of pathos, from a young man under sentence to serve ninety-nine years in the penitentiary at Chester. The story of his earlier life and the pitfalls into which he fell made a very deep impression on the large company of young people who were present to listen to his story.

An invitation has been received at the Century office to attend the wedding of Miss Mary Frances Gilliland and George Edward Brammer. The wedding will be solemnized June 21st at Centennial Church, Bloomington, where Miss Gilliland's father, J. H. Gilliland, served until recently as pastor. They will be at home in Des Moines, Iowa. The Christian Century extends cordial congratulations.

The offering for missions and benevolence at First Church, Bloomington, amounts to almost one thousand dollars. This church, of which Edgar D. Jones is pastor, has a Woman's Missionary Society, which raises six hundred dollars annually, in addition to this amount, for the support of a missionary in Porto Rico. Mr. Jones delivered the baccalaureate sermon for Butler College, Indianapolis, last Sunday, and his pulpit was supplied by Charles H. Winders of Downey Avenue Church, Indianapolis.

The women of Lawrenceville Church are unusually active in advancing the interests of the congregation. Recently they purchased a new individual communion set, and now one of the young women's classes in the Sunday-school is initiating a movement to secure a pipe organ. This congregation is a Living Link in the Foreign Society, supporting Mrs. F. E. Hagin in Japan. B. F. Cato, the pastor, delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the High School graduates the last Sunday in May.

The baccalaureate sermon for Eureka College was delivered June 11 by H. D. Clark, of Mt. Sterling, Kentucky. Mr. Clark is a graduate of Eureka College of the year '61. The commencement address will be delivered this week by Charles S. Medbury of University Church, Des Moines, Eureka College has had one of its most prosperous years, and with the successful completion of its endowment campaign, will be equipped for the most aggressive and highest standard of work in its history. Every friend of this school must feel a profound interest in the successful issue of the present movement for its more adequate financial equipment.

THE SCOVILLE EVANGELISTIC MEETING AT GALESBURG IS BEING CONDUCTED

The Tabernacle at 9 a. m.

At 11 a. m.

Normal Church is contemplating the erection of a splendid new church building, well located and designed to meet the needs of the congregation in this city. Negotiations are under way for the purchase of a fine piece of property, and plans for the structure are being drawn up.

The funeral of Jacob F. Burgman was held May 24 at Bloomington, where he had lived for many years, and where he died. Mr. Burgman was for more than fifty years an elder of First Church, and also served as janitor. He was a noble man; known and loved by all who were in any extensive way acquainted with the Church of the Disciples in Bloomington.

Gibson City, where L. O. Lehman preaches, follows the "omnibus" plan in receiving its missionary offerings. Pledges are received the first Sunday in June, payable September first. Of this offering thirty per cent goes to foreign missions, fifteen per cent to home and state missions, eight per cent each to Church Extension, Eureka College, benevolence and Ministerial Relief, and eight per cent is retained as a reserve fund. Last year the congregation raised seven hundred and fifty dollars. Following the two union services on Sunday evening with the United Brethren Church, this congregation is now in a co-operative series with the Presbyterian congregation. This is the result of the congregation's desire to practice co-operation as well as the result of limitations thrown upon them by the building enterprise now on hand —a suggestion of the value our limitations may very frequently be to us.

News Editorials

Turning the Searchlight on Vice.

John R. Golden of West Side Church, Springfield, headed a committee of citizens who waited on the mayor and commissioners of the city to solicit official appointment of a Vice Commission, to do for Springfield a service similar to that done by the Vice Commission of Chicago. Immediate action by the commissioners was not expected, or sought. Whether the commission will be appointed or not, remains to be seen, but there is a wholesome sign in the effort to secure it. It reveals a desire for scientific investigation of conditions as a foundation for attacking great social problems. One of the greatest blunders, often made, is in well-intentioned but misdirected efforts against municipal and social evils. Sporadic and indiscriminate attacks are not conducive to elimination or reduction of the evils of our cities. These attacks are apt to accustom people's ears to hearing the tale without surprise, and oft repeated appeal, without action, dulls resolution and induces apathy. A united, broad study of the problem, with men of scientific training or temper in the lead, will discover the facts in such specific way and in so comprehensive form as will demand attention and encourage action in even the formally indifferent. There is extra reason for optimism regarding the suppression of vice to be found in the intelligent and masterful way our reformers are approaching the task. We are beginning to turn the search-light on our plague districts, while before there has been considerable use of the magnifying glass on small sections.

Illinois' Educational Responsibility

Eureka College is celebrating its commencement this week. Strong young men and women are receiving their diplomas certifying to their mental equipment for large responsibility and conscientious service. Eureka College is a great school. It is not great because of massive buildings, or large endowment, or for a great multitude of matriculates. It has none of these. The buildings are modest, its endowment is slender, and the enrollment is meager compared with many of the so-called great colleges and universities of the country. It is not even great because of champion athletic teams. In athletics, many schools, even in Illinois, are her superior. Eureka College is a great school because it equips young men and women for satisfactory service in life. Her graduates appear to know the meaning of life. They have secured a view-point which enables self-poise and such adjustment to life's conditions and problems as distinguishes them for their efficiency. They bear faithfully a citizen's part. Her ministers are men of character and message. On the foreign field her missionaries take high rank among the most expert and capable of those commissioned to the most difficult task of modern times.

The foregoing requires no proof. Throughout Illinois, and wherever her graduates are known, these facts are accepted. No institution produces better citizens and more self sacrificing public servants proportionately than does this college. The brotherhood of Disciples, and especially the Disciples of Illinois, may well congratulate themselves on an institution such as Eureka College. For three years a campaign has been waged to raise one hundred twenty-five thousand dollars additional endowment. So far, only a little more than one hundred thousand dollars has been secured, and there yet remain approximately fifteen thousand dollars to be received before the pledges already made shall become in force. Several facts stand out clearly.

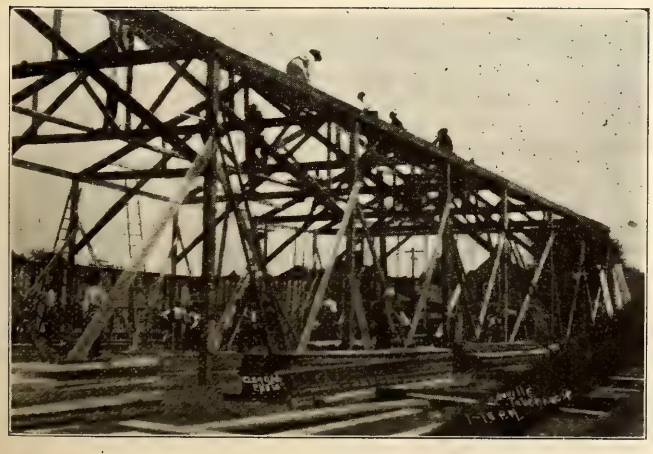
First.—The agents of the college have worked assiduously and faithfully. They have traveled thousands of miles by rail, by horse and by foot. Their appeal has been tactfully made to many cities and in the country, and that plea has been an exalted and correct one. They have a true educational ideal, and, knowing the value of Christian education, have not shunned to declare this knowledge in public and private. No college of the Disciples ever had a more masterful and more balanced claim made for its endowment than Mr. Peters and his co-laborers have made for Eureka.

Second.—The object is a conservative one. That Eureka College should ask for one hundred twenty-five thousand dollars more endowment, if criticisable at all, is to be criticised because of its being too modest an appeal for an institution so useful and progressive as this college has become. From the needs of the school, from the ability of the state, and in view of what is being done outside, there can no question arise as to the justice of all that is being sought by the institution.

Third.—The campaign cannot fail and the brotherhood be unaffected thereby. The interests of the brotherhood of Illinois attach more to the college at Eureka than any have yet dreamed. Our preachers are created here; the educated leaders in our churches are trained in this school; the missionaries sent out from our Illinois churches, who represent us on the foreign field, are the products of this college; that which keeps alive within our state a keen sense of the necessity for Christian education is the school at Eureka, for which school the Disciples of Illinois are responsible.

The kind of college which we create at Eureka will have a very considerable reflex action upon our religious and educational ideals. It will be hard for us to make out of this school an insignificant institution and at the same time become anything else than that kind of a brotherhood in this state. It would seem as if Illinois Disciples were willing to see Eureka suffer. So much energy has been expended and three years of time, and yet, the money is not in hand nor the subscriptions which the college must have for just a decent maintenance. Only about two and a half months remain before the effort will have failed, if the money is not raised. Pledges for the entire one hundred twenty-five thousand dollars must be in hand by September first, to insure the payment of what has been already subscribed. All the subscriptions have been made conditional on the entire amount being secured. The Christian Century does not believe the brotherhood of this state will be so short-sighted and so lacking in educational enterprise as to let this campaign, now so well advanced, come to an unsuccessful issue.

IN A TABERNACLE BUILT IN ONE DAY BY MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH



At 1 p. m.

At 3 p. m.

Secretary's Letter.

DeForrest Mullins has closed his work at Mechanicsburg and is now open for a new location. Address him Springfield, R. D. 4. Brother Mullins is a good young man and ought to be called at once.

The field secretary ordained A. H. Wilson to the ministry at Wapella, May 30th. Brethren Schwartz, Davis, Robertson, Barnett and the Methodist Episcopal minister were present and participated. Brother Wilson did a good work at Wapella for two years and is now on his way back to Australia, his native country, having accepted a field there.

John W. Auger supports five boys in college and a foreign missionary besides.

The fifth district convention at Litchfield showed the best work of any district this year, but there was the smallest attendance. The work, however, is the main thing. The former members of the board were re-elected, and E. H. Kinney and J. W. Auger were added to the board.

The field secretary dedicates the new building at Concord on the 11th, and the church at Mill Shoals on the 25th.

The First Church, Springfield, F. W. Burnham, is linking with us again this year in supporting the Stuart Street Church, H. H. Jenner, minister.

John Huston, W. M. Groves and C. E. Bolin are in the House of Representatives and their brethren are proud of their record. Senator Robert Jones, of Flora, is another of our good men and he is the author of the bill that is now a law prohibiting the carrying of drinking men on trains. It also prohibits drinking on trains. If the Legislature were made up of their kind nothing but good could happen.

The statistical reports are coming in lively. Keep them coming till every church in Illinois is reported correctly. Attend to it at once, please. Remember we want every report in by the 15th if possible.

The state convention program is about ready for the printer and it will be in type before long. The committee is preparing a great feast of rich things for the throngs that will be in Danville, Sept. 4-7.

The fourth district convention was held in Minonk, the 6th, 7th and 8th.

The first district convention will be held the 14th, 15th, and 16th, at Lanark.

Our missionary year closes August 1st, little more than six weeks hence. Many churches have done nothing so far for state missions. The time is short, brethren, and we need your co-operation. Take an offering soon as possible and send it to our treasurer. It may not be a large amount, but it will help our work and put your church in the list of supporters, and entitle you to delegate representation at the convention.

J. W. Hiett, of St. Augustine, writes that he will look after the state offering in a very short time. They went away beyond their apportionment on Children's Day.

The hard pull of keeping up the local work and audiences is just now beginning to be felt as the hot weather comes upon us. This is true in country and city alike. A special effort should be made by every member to attend the services regularly and keep up the interest. It is difficult to keep up the local finances, and bills and salaries run behind. Let every one be faithful to the church and work hard to keep the interest up strong through the summer; then it will not be so hard to start the fall and winter campaign to booming.

J. Fred Jones, Field Secretary.
W. D. Deweese, Office Sec'y-Treas.
Bloomington, Ill.

Church Life

—We gladly call attention of our readers to the itinerary of the Union Pacific train to Portland, of which O. F. Jordan, of Chicago, is in command. The train leaves the Chicago and North-Western station at Chicago, Tuesday, June 27, at 10:45 p. m., and runs to Omaha, via the North-Western Line. From Omaha to Denver via Union Pacific. A stopover at Denver and Colorado Springs for sightseeing. Arrives at Salt Lake City July 1 where a stop is made. Arrives at Portland Monday, July 3, at 8 p. m. the evening before the convention opens.

* * *

G. W. Burch, for the past three years pastor at Fairfield, Ia., resigned there recently.

John A. Jackson has resigned his pastorate at Sheldon, Ill., to accept a call to Owenton, Kentucky.

The annual convention of the sixth district of Kansas, held recently at Marysville, was largely attended, and a good program was given.

A new church was dedicated recently at Rosalia, Wash. J. F. Rice, the pastor there, was assisted in the services by C. F. Stevens, pastor of Central Church, Spokane, Wash.

M. H. Garrard, pastor at Grand Rapids, Mich., read a paper on "Modernism" before the recent meeting of the Michigan state convention held at Traverse City.

A. V. Hart, who has had charge of the church at Oro Del, Ia., for the past year, while attending Drake University, has returned to his old home in England.

The church at San Bernardina, Cal., captured the flag offered to the congregation sending the largest delegation to the district Sunday-school convention recently.

On the day of the baccalaureate services at Eureka College the communion was observed in the evening instead of the morning.

H. L. Willett delivered the commencement address at Christian University, Canton, Mo., last Thursday. Dr. L. W. McCreary, of St. Louis, preached the baccalaureate sermon the Sunday before.

The Minnesota state convention is being held this week at Austin. Prominent names on the program beside the national missionary leaders are Chancellor Oeschger of Cotner University, H. S. Connelly of Minneapolis, and W. R. Warren of St. Louis.

ADDITIONAL ILLINOIS NOTES.

W. F. Turner, pastor of Central Church, Peoria, was recently elected president of the Peoria Ministerial Association.

Eighth District convention will be held in West Frankfort, June 27-29. J. E. Pritchett of Metropolis is president. A good program is announced.

Among the speakers at the annual meeting of the Tazewell County Sunday-school Association held at Delavan, June 13 and 14, were O. C. Bolman of Pekin and J. W. Street of Mackinaw.

The celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the church at Table Grove was observed June 11. J. H. Garrison delivered addresses at the morning and evening services and the afternoon session was occupied by addresses from visiting pastors, former pastors and members.

Dr Price's CREAM BAKING POWDER

Improves the flavor and adds to the healthfulness of the food.

Superlative in Strength and Purity.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO., CHICAGO.

T. S. Tinsley has been conducting Sunday-school institutes in Kentucky with the work outlined under the two headings: The Physiology of the Church, and The Psychology of Religion. This is a suggestive discrimination.

Dedicatory services were held on the evening of June 30, in the new building at Beloit, Wis., which had been completely erected on that day. Frank L. Van Voorhis was present and gave an address.

At Drake University commencement this week a feature will be the recognition of the thirty years' service of Professor Bruce E Shepperd, who is just now retiring from the chair of philosophy.

P. D. McCallum, who has been pastor at Viroqua, Wis., since October, 1908, has resigned his pastorate there to return to his home in Australia. Mr. McCallum came to America a number of years ago in order to complete his education here.

The feature of Cotner University commencement last week was the installation of William Oeschger as chancellor of the university. George B. Van Arsdall of Central Church, Denver, delivered the commencement address.

Harry G. Hill, pastor of Third Church, Indianapolis, Ind., has been elected president of the Indianapolis Ministerial Association, which represents over thirty evangelical denominations and has a membership of two hundred and seventy-five ministers.

There was a large attendance at the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society at Enid, during the first week of June. Besides the local speakers, A. McLean, I. N. McCash, J. K. Shellenberger, R. W. Shepard, G. W. Muckley, Robt. M. Hopkins gave addresses touching on their fields of labor.

S. S. Lappin, editor of the Christian Standard, preached the baccalaureate sermon at the Commencement of the Johnson Bible College, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., May 21, and Adam K. Adcock, Carbondale, Ill., preached to the under-graduates in the evening of the same day. This college conferred upon them both the degree of Master of Arts.

According to local Kansas City papers, plans are being discussed to develop extensive institutional features at First Church, where W. F. Richardson ministers. This would probably include a restaurant, library, social rooms and schools for the training of the illiterate poor. Plans for rescue and mission work would also be a part of the movement.

E. V. Stivers, pastor at Forest Grove, Ore., has resigned there to accept a call to McMinnville, Ore., beginning work there Sept. 1. Mr. Stivers has been very successful in building up the church membership and promoting interest in the various lines of church activity during his three years' pastorate at Forest Grove.

Miss Rose T. Armbruster writes from Akita, Japan: A booth was erected in Akita park during the cherry-blossom season and here hundreds heard the gospel message, many for the first time. Sold 170 New Testaments, 100 scripture portions, thirty volumes of sermons and many small books, while 2,000 tracts were distributed free. The vice-governor came to listen and expressed his approval of the work.

A resolution was passed at the recent meeting of the alumnae of Christian College, Columbia, Mo., urging that $50,000 be raised for the endowment of the college. A friend of the institution has agreed to give $25,000 toward the endowment if the alumnae raise the same amount. At the sixtieth commencement held May 31, T. P. Haley delivered the address and degrees were conferred on a class of twenty.

The beautiful new home for Wilshire Boulevard Church, Los Angeles, Calif., was dedicated Sunday, June 4. The pastor, Wm. C. Bower, was assisted in the dedicatory service by C. C. Chapman, president of the Southern California Missionary Society. At the fellowship service in the afternoon, J. P. McKnight, A. C. Smither and pastors from the local Methodist, Congregational, Baptist and Presbyterian and Episcopal churches were present and gave talks. A series of evangelistic services with F. M. Dowling as evangelist is being held now. This church is strategically located and has great promise.

John L. Brandt and helpers, Prof. and Mrs. Berg, closed a successful revival at Longview, Tex., on June 1. No meeting, perhaps, ever accomplished more for the cause of primitive Christianity in this conservative little city. There were in all fifty-three additions to the congregation, and the church was greatly edified and strengthened in every way. Immense crowds were in attendance at all services, and the entire community received a great spiritual uplift. During the meeting Mr. Brandt preached the baccalaureate sermon for the High School and delivered two addresses in the interest of state-wide prohibition. All of these workers are deeply consecrated and we hope to have them back for another meeting.—J. N. Wooten, Pastor.

Uneeda Biscuit
A Nation of "Rapid Fire" Eaters
The people of the United States are known all over the world as a Nation of dyspeptics. We don't take time to eat properly or to eat proper food. Everyone would live longer—be healthier, feel better, do better work, and do it with greater ease if more time were taken in eating and more UNEEDA BISCUIT eaten. UNEEDA BISCUIT are the most nutritious of all foods made from flour. UNEEDA BISCUIT are always fresh, clean, crisp and good. UNEEDA BISCUIT are muscle makers and brain builders. In short, the National Soda Crackers are
Uneeda Biscuit
Never sold in bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SPECIAL OFFER TO CHRISTIAN CENTURY READERS—AS AN ADVERTISEMENT.

PRESTO SELF FILLING GOLD FOUNTAIN PEN

$1.00 ($2.50 kind) for $1.00 only. Patent Pending. ½ size of Pen.

YOU SAVE $1.50 if you order now, only a limited number offered at this price. This Pen fills and cleans itself in a second. NO RUBBER SACKS TO ROT—no mechanism to get out of order; does not leak or blot. Wonderfully simple—simply Wonderful. EVERY PEN FITTED WITH BEST QUALITY 14-KARAT GOLD NIB, IRIDIUM POINTED. Money returned if not fully satisfied.
JOHN TERRY CO. (Manufacturers) 313-315 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

A FEW FAVORITES

Shadows
'Tis Jesus
Lord is it I?
Christ is King
His Thought
Is He Yours?
What Will it Be?
My Savior's Love
O What a Change
No Burdens Yonder
He will Hold me Fast
The Valley of Shadows
Jesus Will Sustain You
His Eye is on the Sparrow
The Hand that was Wounded for Me
He Lifted Me

CHARLES M. ALEXANDER & DeLOSS SMITH

HAVE YOU SEEN THEIR NEW SONG BOOK?

It contains the great songs used by Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander on their Evangelistic Campaign around the world. ¶The beautiful songs by Robert Harkness are here. ¶The new songs by DeLosss Smith (author of "Christ is King," &c.,) are in this book. ¶It contains many of the old standard hymns that are known and loved everywhere, making it a valuable book for any department of church work. 56 of the World's Greatest Song Writers Represented.

It is the Most Up-to-Date Book published

2 Bindings: Bessemer Lizard (flexible) and Cloth Board. Send 25c for Sample Copy and be convinced

DeLOSS SMITH, Music Publisher, 3 WEST 102d ST., New York

NEW SONGS BY DeLOSS SMITH found in no other book

The Watchman
O Bethlehem City
O Lord be Merciful
With Strains Sublime
The Glory of the Cross
Soldiers for the King
He is Our Lord and King
Crown the Redeemer of Men
What Boundless, Matchless Love
"Some Day" May be Too Late
(new arrangement)

W. C. Cole, pastor at Goldfield, Iowa, for the past two years, has removed to Nevada, Iowa, where he has accepted a call.

Garry L. Cook, of Indianapolis, Ind., gave several addresses at the recent Sunday-school rally held at Main Street Church, Kokomo, Ind.

The church at Alaska, near Martinsville, Ind., was rededicated Sunday, C. W. Cauble, pastor at Martinsville, officiating. This is one of the oldest churches in the vicinity, having been organized in 1836.

Hillside Church, Indianapolis, Ind., is making excellent progress since their removal into their new tabernacle. From an enrollment of 165 in the Sunday-school, the attendance has been nearly trebled, having an attendance on one Sunday of 460. The Men's Bible Class, with an average attendance of twelve, has increased to fifty, and it is hoped that it will reach 100 in the near future.

The following report is from Granville Snell, evangelist for the seventh district of Missouri, with headquarters at Mound City:

"I visited Guttman, Sunday, June 4. These people have been without preaching since Bro. Harlan resigned there. W. H. Rust of Burlington Junction will probably take that work now. About forty of the preachers of the seventh district will meet at Camden Point, June 17, and give a week to rest and discussion of matters of interest to the churches of northwest Missouri. Come and be with us. J. K. Shellengberger preached a strong sermon on "The Fatherhood of God" at Mound City yesterday."

English Topics

(Continued from page 11.)

Your readers will doubtless have full information concerning the program and the purpose of the gathering. They are concerning themselves very largely with the interests of the Baptists' cause in European countries. It is hoped that a college may be established on the continent for the training of ministers.

More Like Disciples Than Baptists?

From what one hears occasionally of the beliefs and practices of certain immersionists bodies in various European countries, one cannot help wondering whether many of these people are not really more nearly Disciples than Baptists. To my mind it is very probable that if they knew of such a movement as ours they would very readily associate themselves with us.

Why should we not have a world alliance? Perhaps we have in a sense, but not in a very definite sense.

America is linked to the churches of other countries, where we are known, through her colleges, and to some of them through the work of the F. C. M. S., but after all we have done but little in linking up our forces throughout the world. We have been too busy with our state and national and provincial organizations to think of the wider field.

Is not the time ripe for a World Alliance of Disciples? The Anglo-American Conference of last year was a step in that direction. A similiar gathering in Australia a year or two hence would be an excellent thing, but even though there could not be many world-wide gatherings, the good of such an organization would not be wholly confined to that method of propagation. A world-wide sympathy could be created in many other ways, and plans laid for the spread of our principles in many lands. If we have a mission to the Christian world we should fulfill it. The "Disciple Witness" to the world is concerning Christian Union. Shall not this come first?

Unity Before World Conquest.

After all, was not the order of our Lord's prayer first, "that they may all be one," and second, "that the world may believe."

Our increasing sympathy with other denominations should not lessen, but rather intensify, our belief that we have a mission amongst them, as well as to the unconverted. And we should take heed lest others excell us in zeal for our speciality.

There has always been some question of the wisdom of the F. C. M. S. supporting the work in Christian lands, such as England and Sweden and Norway. Perhaps the formation of such an alliance as is suggested would supply an opportunity to alter this. Perhaps the Council on Christian Union would take this matter under consideration and attempt to link up the Disciples of other lands in a world-wide organization in the interests of the propagation of our plea, especially in Christian lands.

The Coronation is almost at hand, and active preparation is going on in every quarter. Every ship is bringing recruits from many lands. There is every reason to believe that the present Coronation season will be a more brilliant one than was the last, but concerning this I must write in another letter.

"Wringcliff" Priory Road, Hornsey, London.

Oklahoma Christian University

The commencement exercises of Oklahoma Christian University, closing the fourth year of the institution, were held during the last days of May. Previous to the Commencement exercises proper, the departments of voice, piano and oratory gave daily evening programmes that were largely attended by the music lovers of Enid. The entertainments were rendered by the graduates of the departments of music and oratory.

On Saturday evening, the students graduating from the University High School presented a play, in a manner reflecting much credit upon themselves and those who trained them. Sunday morning, the two congregations of the Disciples of Christ in Enid united for the baccalaureate sermon. The sermon of the morning was delivered by Rev. O. L. Cook, of Hutchinson, Kansas, and was full of sound advice to the young men and women receiving diplomas from the University. Just before the sermon, Prof. F. H. Marshall conducted an impressive ordination service, in which Herschel V. Davis, Elbert A. Taylor, J. Quincy Biggs, and Loyd Snapp, were ordained to the ministry of the gospel. Monday evening the department of oratory presented an interesting programme, and the commencement closed with the annual commencement exercises on Tuesday evening when eleven young men were granted the A. B. degree; three, the A. M.; one, the B. D.; one the B. O. Ten graduated in voice and piano, thirteen from the University High School, seventeen from the Business College, two in expression, three from the Teacher's College, one from the School of Church Workers, and three from the University Training School for Nurses, making a total of sixty-five. The commencement address was delivered by A. McLean, of Cincinnati, Ohio. At the closing session Chancellor O. N. Roth reported the total enrollment for the year as 356, an increase of 10 per cent over the previous year. These students come from fourteen states, the Dominion of Canada and Australia. A large number of gifts were reported, ranging upward to $5,000, the total amount aggregating over $30,000, which is being used in the liquidation of a debt which has encumbered the institution from its beginning. All the departments of study in the University are in a healthy, growing condition and many courses have been strengthened and enlarged to meet the growing demands of the University.

The State Convention of the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society was held for three days immediately after the commencement exercises. The programs were given in the University Chapel and largely attended by delegates and workers from all parts of the state.

Enid, Okla. G. K. STANTON.

Keuka College

The following is the calendar for commencement week at Keuka College: June 13—Meeting of Board of Trustees; June 15—Part Song Concert by Kenkina Choral Society; June 16—Karisthenia Public; June 17—Institute Graduation—Address by Mr. F. J. Gantz, New York; June 18—Baccalaureate Sermon—Pres. Jos. A. Serena: June 19—Class Day Exercises; June 19—Athenæum Literary Society; June 20—Alumni Baseball Game; June 20—Alumni Business Meeting; June 20—President's Reception; June 20—College Commencement—Address, John Chester Ball.

The college will again open its main building for summer guests during July and August. Its beautiful location on Lake Keuka, with the splendid equipment and reasonable rates, makes it an attractive place for a quiet summer where rest and recreation can be combined.

Baltimore Notes

June 3 marks the close of the Temple Seminary commencement, beginning on the previous Sunday with the baccalaureate sermon, followed by Seminary Night exercises and the day following the class exercises and the regular commencement, when seven were graduated, on the evening following, then the banquet on the next evening, closing

BAKING ALWAYS IN SIGHT.
Why Housewives Appreciate the BOSS Glass Door Oven.

This is an age when conservation is a recognized sister of economy. People are eager to hear of any plan or any invention that will save anything. There is coming out of Cincinnati the Boss Oven—a portable affair with a glass door. It can be used on any kind of a stove or range in which either oil, gasoline, acetylene, alcohol or gas is the fuel. Housewives appreciate an oven in which they can always see their baking without opening the door. It means freedom from the worry and loss caused by burnt or fallen bread and cakes.

Domestic Science Schools, where practical baking demonstrations must be successful, endorse the Boss glass door oven because, due to its method of construction, heat is perfectly distrbuted to all parts. The glass door is held in place by patented yielding pressure retaining strips, which permit expansion and contraction—insurance against glass breakage on account of heat. The glass door fits so snugly that escape of heat from oven is impossible. The Huenefeld Co., of Cincinnati, will be glad to send free to all our readers their Boss Receipe Book and Cookery Helps and Hints, with illustrated description of their Glass Door ovens, which do a baking at a cost of less than a cent.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL

Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, O.

with the next day by an outing on the Chesapeake Bay.

The graduating class this year consisted of two Disciples, two from the Reformed Church, one from the Methodist Episcopal, one from the Methodist Protestant and one from the Church of the Brethren. Our seminary is reaching into every religious body in the city and these three years of diligent Bible study are making an astonishing impression in this Roman Catholic center. Dr. O. C. S. Wallace, of the First Baptist Church, made the address to the graduates and Dr. C. H. Dodd, of the Eutaw Place Baptist Church, and Brother J. R. McWane, of Alabama, were the chief speakers at a banquet.

Several of our number will enter the various colleges next fall to prepare for the ministry and the mission field. One of our number will enter the Presbyterian School for Deaconesses. About this I shall write more later, for the time has come when the Disciples ought to establish such a school for our own young women.

Many of us are burdened with anxiety regarding the physical condition of F. D. Power and the resignation of W. S. Hoye, from the pastorate of the Beaver Creek Church, where he has served for 28 years. These two names are towers of strength in our missionary district. Dr. Power has been at Vermont Avenue Church for 35 years and is loved and honored everywhere. A few days ago one of the leading ministers of Washington City, of another communion, said to me, "There are few men like Dr. Power and he has made an impression on Washington City in Christian character and Christian service as few men that have lived here and we all feel anxious about his condition." It was reported a few days ago that he was worse, but he has rallied and is up again. Brother Hoye has likewise been an unselfish servant of the Lord's work throughout this community. His sterling character and common sense have caused him to be much sought after for advice and many of us are hoping that he will remain in the state, but he is just in the prime of his service and is a strong, capable and untiring minister of the Word.

W. E. Sweeney is the new pastor at Harlem Avenue Church and he is taking hold of the work well. H. F. Lutz's meeting at the Calhoun Street Church left things in fine shape and Brother Scott, the minister, is pushing ahead with renewed energy. L. B. Haskins is doing faithful work at 25th Street Church. J. H. Pickering, the lawyer-preacher, at Randall Street has recently closed a revival meeting there with 12 additions. Clarence Poage is leading Fulton Avenue into greater work for missions than it has ever done. W. P. George has been having fine audiences at Wilhelm Park. A year ago a gentleman presented to the Temple two beautiful lots in a suburb known as English Consul and a new Sunday-school has been started there. Lansdowne Church continues under the ministry of Brother DeHoff. The minister of the Temple is closing his 20th year and in many instances it has been the best year in our work. Our audiences have been large and likewise our offerings. There have been baptisms nearly every Sunday since last fall and during the minister's absence this summer three of his official members will supply the pulpit and they are good preachers, being called frequently to speak in other churches throughout the city.

Baltimore, Md. PETER AINSLIE.

Notes from the Foreign Society

Secretary Rains writes that two of our Japanese brethren have started a work in Soul, the capital city of Korea. They began by organizing a Bible Class and teaching the full gospel. Very soon four men asked for baptism. They were baptized on April 30. A little church has started and it will grow. One of these Korean brethren will go to Tokyo next fall and enter the Bible College where he will prepare for the ministry. Then he will go back to spend his life among Koreans. Our native Japanese missionary society will take the support of the work in Korea.

The First Church, Tacoma, Washington, becomes a Living Link in the Foreign Society, W. A. Moore, pastor.

The telegrams, letters and early receipts give prophecy of the greatest Children's Day-offering in our history. It seems assured that the Sunday-schools will at least reach $100,000 this year.

Secretary F. M. Rains will be at the Portland convention. He is returning from a strenuous journey through the mission fields. His tour of the fields will prove of great value to the work. Everywhere he has conferred with the missionaries and studied the problems of the work. Many new plans will be projected because of his visit.

The Foreign Society will have a fine program at Portland. The missionaries present will be Dr. A. L. Shelton of Tibet, M. B. Madden and wife of Japan, Miss Nellie J. Clark of China, W. H. Erskine and wife of Japan, and H. H. Guy of Japan.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Secretary.

Cincinnati, O.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

J. M. LOWE, GENERAL EVANGELIST.—Church Dedications, Special Addresses. Permanent address, 1350 25th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

A BIBLICAL and THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of high grade located at COLUMBIA adjacent to the UNIVERSITY of MISSOURI

University Credit Courses—Ministerial and Missionary Training Courses. Departments:—Biblical and Systematic Theology, Social Service and Missions, Old Testament and New Testament. Next Term Begins Sept. 18, 1911.

For Catalog and Information address Charles M. Sharpe, Dean.

EUREKA COLLEGE

A CO-EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION OF HIGHER LEARNING

COLLEGIATE COURSES

Classical A. B.
Science B. S.
History and Economics A. B.
Ministerial A. B.

OTHER COURSES

Preparatory
Commercial
Music: Vocal and Instrumental Manual Training
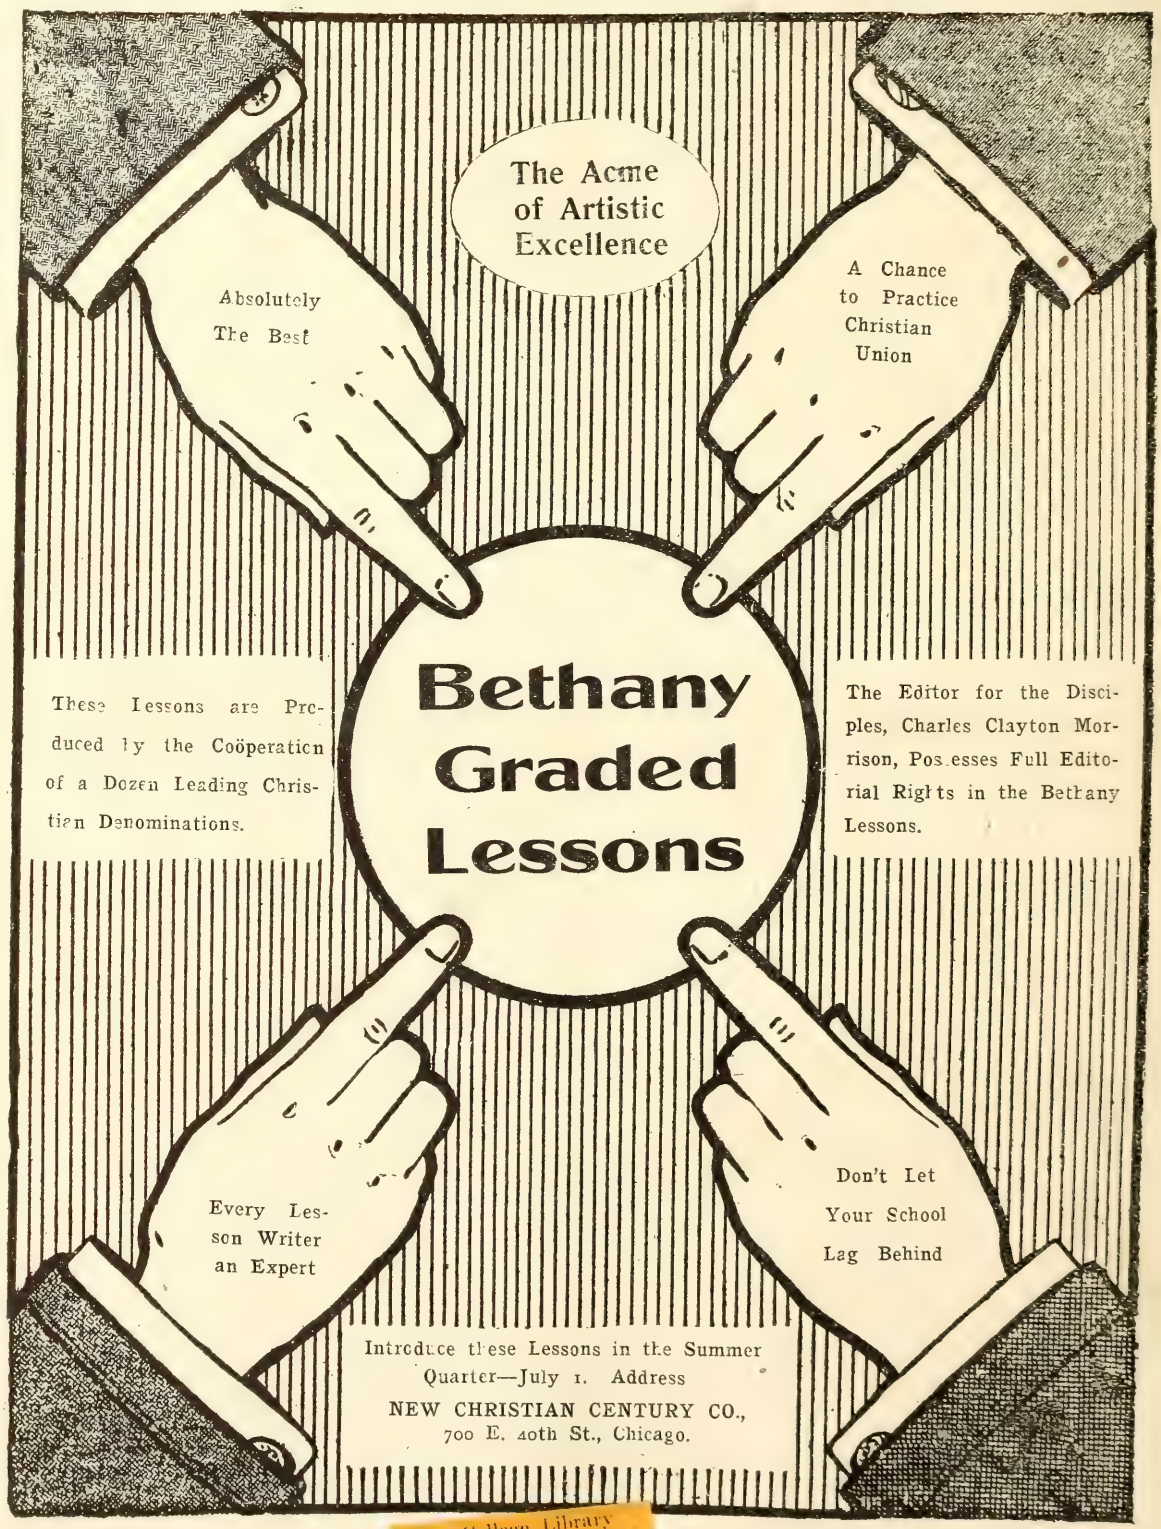
Public Speaking
Art

For further information address
Eureka, Illinois President, Eureka College

DRAKE UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL

Credit Courses in Usual College Subjects
Credit Courses in Education and Psychology
Professional Work for Teachers of All Grades
Courses in all Certificate Subjects for Teachers
Courses in Music and Art
Courses for Music and Drawing Teachers and Supervisors

For Announcement, Address DRAKE UNIVERSITY, DES MOINES, IOWA.

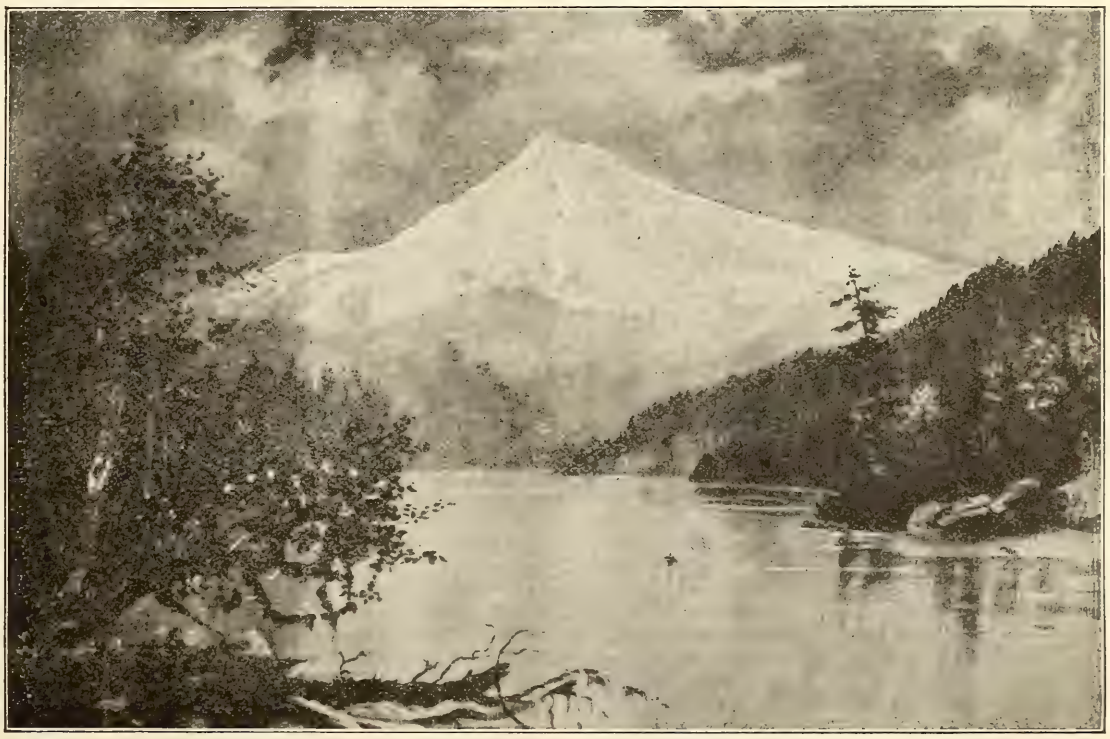


The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Introduce these Lessons in the Summer Quarter—July 1. Address
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

Bible College Library
Mar12?

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. June 22, 1911 Number 25.



Mt. Hood as Seen From Portland.

CHINA'S SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION

Amazing Changes in Temper and Custom of Ancient Empire.

BY SECRETARY F. M. RAINS.

Ten years ago I visited China. At that time I felt encouraged over what I saw. The influence of the gospel promised steady, permanent changes for good. But neither I nor others dreamed of the almost miraculous changes that have been wrought in a decade. Had anyone predicted what has actually come to pass, he would have been pronounced a fanatic by even the most hopeful. Let me note briefly some of these changes. I can mention only a few and in a very brief way.

People's Changed Attitude.

The change in the whole attitude of the people impresses you at once. They are more cordial and courteous and in every way kindly disposed. New views have come to the people, different ideals are before them, and they have a different understanding of the world and their relation to it. The old feeling of self-satisfaction and contentment with what they had, and indifference to the outside world, has passed away or is passing. They are hungering for the new life of the world. They are more respectful to Christianity. I attended a great union evangelistic meeting. There were about two thousand present. It would remind you of a Charles Reign Scoville meeting in America. There was a leader of song on the platform, a Chinese woman at the organ, Chinese women ushers, etc., etc. I have never heard better gospel singing. The people were as quiet and respectful and devout as an audience in America or England. Such a meeting anywhere in China would have been impossible ten years ago.

Government Against Foot-Binding.

The government has issued an edict against foot binding. Mrs. Archibald Little, Shanghai, has led in this movement. The cruel custom is growing more unpopular. The people are fast giving it up. A woman is not so much respected because her feet are small. This movement is wonderful. It is growing in momentum and power. It is believed that within a few years the custom will be among the things of the past.

Over three thousand miles of railroads have been built in the past ten years and about twice that mileage is under construction. Ten years ago there were only about one-hundred and fifty miles of railroads in the whole empire.

Radical and enlightened reforms have been effected in the judicial system of the empire.

Thousands of newspapers have been established and a large number of these are dailies.

Ancient system of education has been replaced by modern methods. The old examination halls have been abandoned. They covered about ten acres in Nankin alone. This is one of the marvels of modern times. This change is so great it almost staggers one's belief.

Giving Up the Queue.

The young Chinese men are cutting the queue. In many instances the movement is general. In one hotel the waiters, about fifty in number, all wore queues. They decided to remove them and they were all cut one night. The next morning the whole force appeared to serve breakfast with out a queue. The guests were surprised beyond expression.

Provincial parliaments in each of the eighteen provinces have been organized. A permanent national parliament or congress, with constitutional government is confidentially expected. Suffrage will be limited to certain property and educational qualifications.

The growth of Christianity is beyond all expectation. The number of Christians has been more than doubled. Great union evangelistic meetings are held. A National Union Evangelistic Association is under way. Our own Frank Garrett is a leader in this movement. The growth of the Christian union sentiment is even greater than in America. The Chinese Christians are demanding an indigenous Chinese Church of Christ. The growth of the Sunday-school movement is far beyond all expectation. Uniform Sunday-school lessons with suitable literature has been introduced.

Opium Evil is Broken.

The National Anti-Opium Society has been waging a tremendous war. This reform is one of the wonders of the present century. Never before has a government attacked a national evil with such vigor. Fifty years ago October 24, 1910, the opium treaty was made with England. That act was a crime on England's part beyond description. China is now begging to be released. Throughout the British Empire, October, 24, 1910, was observed as a day of humiliation and prayer that the opium traffic might speedily cease. Great anti-opium meetings have been held all over the British Empire. Thousands upon thousands attended. China's National Assembly has taken great interest in the fight, as has also the Provincial Assemblies. The Anti-Opium Society works hand in hand with the Assemblies. After July 19th, 1911, the Inter-Provincial trade in opium in all China will be entirely prohibited. At that time all tax offices in connection with the trade shall cease. This means that China is willing to give up the revenue from the trade. This step will help to unify China's people in a common cause. China is giving an example to the world. Victory seems nearer than ever before. This seems to be God's time to save China from opium. It is the Lord's doing, and marvelous in our eyes.

Signs of Suppression.

The captain of the ship on which I traveled from Calcutta to Hong Kong told me that he had only four or five hundred chests of opium as cargo for China. He said he had that many thousand in former times. He felt that the opium trade between India and China was doomed. The governor of Kiangsu reports that the cultivation of poppy has been entirely suppressed in his province. He reports also that there are now but one thousand and thirty-three shops for prepared opium in his territory against twelve thousand six hundred and sixty at the beginning of the year. His problem is the influence and trade from the outside. The opium business has been almost entirely swept out of many large cities. Thousands of the long opium pipes have been gathered and burned in a great pile at night, in many cities. Great buildings, three and four stories high, given up entirely to opium dens, have been wholly abandoned and are now used for legitimate business. Our missionaries testify that the campaign against opium has far surpassed the most hopeful expectations.

These are only a few of the mighty changes being effected in China. Christianity gives life to movements like these. Indeed the gospel message is behind all of them. China is a world-problem. It is believed by many that as goes China so goes the world.

April 8, 1911.

Let us be brave for the sake of the timid. Let us lead the way for the sake of those who will never lead but are ready at once to follow. If one speaks the word of truth that ought now to be spoken, there are many others waiting to speak it after you. Be first to stand for the right today, and you will be surprised how many others will then stand with you. Give up some habit that is bringing ill to others, and many will give it up after you who have not courage to be first in the effort.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

The Wanderings of a Bewildered Soul

In the Mazes of Christian Science.

Since God is Good and God is All,
And All is God and All is Good,
It follows, then, whate'er befall
Must fall to my Beatitude.

Since God in All is God Entire.
And I'm in All and All in Me,
It follows that I may aspire
To be considered Deity.

Since God is I and I am God,
And God is Power and Power is I,
Methinks it would be rather odd
If any Force could Me defy.

There is no matter, say the Wise;
In man and nature Spirit reigns.
I only Think that I have eyes;
I only Think that I have brains.

There is no sin. It lingers in
The Concepts of untutored thought,
And therefore to believe in sin
Is deadly sin, as I am taught.

There is no pain, and I am glad;
For God is All, and Good, and so
No pain could be, since pain is Bad.—
Yes, very bad! I ought to know!

Belief in Pain is Very Wrong.
Who thought of it, I wonder, first?
And did it take him very long
To furbish up the Myth accurst?

[In the midst of her philosophizing the Christian Scientist is suddenly seized by a severe Imaginary Toothache.]

Ouch!—Fie! I mean. How weak I am.
Thus to debase my sovereign Me
Beneath an incorporeal qualm.
An out-of-date nonentity!

[Another twist of the illusory screws.

Oh, my! My tooth! Ouch!—U-u-m! I mean
Alas, alas, my feeble faith!

[Speaking rapidly, as an exorcism.]

No—tooth—no—ache—no—felt—no—seen.
All—God—Good—Mrs.—Eddy—saith!

[The Illogical Unreality gets in some more of its work.]

Ouch!—Oh, those Drops I used to use
Before I learned the Truth of Things!
But no! the Higher Way I'll choose.
Rise, Soul, on Faith's triumphant wings!

[Further Imaginary Qualms, attended by rapid cogitation.]

Behold, how flexible is Truth:
I'll stuff some paregoric in:
It can't do harm, as there's no Tooth:
It can't be wrong, as there's no Sin!

—AMOS R. WELLS.

Growing a Name

Little Luke Hayes could write his name. He brought his slate to show his mother what round, clear letters he could make.

"Would you like to make your name grow, Luke?" said his mother.

"I never saw a name grow," said Luke.

Then his mother took him out into the garden. She gave him a stick with a sharp point, and made him write his name in large letters in the middle of a bed of black earth: then his mother sowed mignonette seed along the letters. "Now," she said, "in a few weeks you will see your name growing tall and sweet."

Luke went away the next day to visit his grandmother, and when he came home again, three weeks later, he ran at once to the garden. There was his name, "Luke Hayes," in pretty green letters, just as he had written it. Luke was delighted, and has never failed to grow his name every year since.—The Congregationalist.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

Irregular But Not Invalid

DISCIPLES OF CHRIST CONTEND THAT THE BAPTISM BY WHICH MOST METHODISTS, PRESBYTERIANS AND CONGREGATIONALISTS BECAME MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IS IRREGULAR, BUT THEY DO NOT DENY THAT IT IS VALID.

This is not to say that Disciple literature has made this distinction explicit; for in truth it has not done so. On no subject has there been such vague, inconsistent and equivocal thinking by Disciple teachers as on their attitude toward unimmersed Christians.

There is not one page in all our literature where a writer of representative temper has fairly faced his brethren of the denominations and dealt with them in complete intellectual frankness.

There are Disciples of non-representative temper who have done so. The so-called "anti" brethren do not hesitate to follow their logic to its cruelest conclusion.

They say that Christ has put baptism as the last of four indispensable steps into his church.

One can no more enter the church without taking the baptism step than one can enter without taking the faith step or the repentance step.

Immersion and nothing else is baptism.

Hence, without immersion no one enters Christ's church.

Hence, Presbyterians and the others who may not have been immersed, are not members of the church of Christ.

And our non-representative brethren frankly tell them so.

But the main body of the Disciples and the representative leaders of the brotherhood do not tell them so. They tacitly hold that Presbyterian churches are churches of Christ, that Presbyterian people are Christians, members of the church of Christ, and as such it cannot be affirmed that they are without baptism.

But this view is held tacitly.

We have never faced with complete intellectual frankness either the logic of the four steps or the practical consequences of our recognition of the Christian status of unimmersed Christians.

This is a singular fact, for the outstanding characteristic of the Disciple mind has ever been its courage to think things through. But our courage has failed right at this point. We have recoiled at the conclusion to which our logic inexorably led us, and have refused to think further. And our practical attitude toward others, adopted in lieu of the logical one, has in it implications to which we have never been willing freely to commit ourselves.

* * *

The rise of the movement for Christian unity on the mission field and in Christian lands is compelling the Disciples to think out the implications of their attitude.

For a century we have been pleading for unity. Now on the mission field we are being pleaded with to unite. It is an unfamiliar position for us, and we are embarrassed and awkward, if not humbled. We are embarrassed because we cannot fall back upon our logic, and we dare not trust ourselves to the implications of unqualified fellowship with other Christians.

On the one hand, the logic of our reactionary brethren is altogether impossible to the great body of the Disciples. Our heart is grown too big for the gnarled sectarianism in which that process of reasoning lands us.

We feel that there must be some fallacy in a chain of reasoning whose conclusion is manifestly un-Christian.

On the other hand, we are unaccustomed to the outright admission that Presbyterians and Congregationalists are Christians. We have referred to them in euphemistic but non-committal terms as "believers," or "our religious neighbors," or the "pious unimmersed," or "members of the denominations." Or if we called them Christians we have added "in a sense," or "as it were," or we have qualified their Christian title by calling attention to their "imperfect obedience."

And when some speaker or writer taking a particularly bold stand for Christian unity did refer to them as Christians it was in tones of solemn asseveration as if he were drawing a conviction from the depth of his soul against tremendous inhibitions.

* * *

And the inhibitions are tremendous.

To admit that Presbyterians are Christians, members of Christ's church, carries with it an admission that they have been baptized; for Disciples know no other way to get into the church but by baptism, and a favorite Scripture is that which speaks of being "baptized into Christ."

But this admission that Presbyterians have been baptized we are slow to make.

The Scriptures know nothing but immersion in the solemnization of baptism. Jesus was immersed. Immersion was the universal practice in the apostolic church. Paul drew the physical act of immersion into symbolic association with the great facts of Christ's redemption and of the convert's experience. The very word baptizo by which this ordinance came to be denoted was in its original signification simply "to immerse."

Here then is an apparent contradiction within the Disciples' mind: On the one hand, the text establishing immersion as the unexceptional form preceding membership in the apostolic church. On the other hand, the fact,—no less undeniable than the text,—that the great majority of the members of the church of Christ, of evangelical faith and temper, have become such without being baptized by immersion.

How shall this seeming contradiction between the text and the fact be interpreted?

* * *

Manifestly, as we hold text and fact close to each other they interpret each other.

The fact says to the text:

Affusion-baptism is not invalid; it is not meaningless. By it men do become members of Christ's body, the church. By it believing and repentant men are buried with their Lord and rise with Him to walk in a new life.

Immersion is not the substance, the essence, of baptism. The substance of baptism is the candidate's self-consecration to Christ, and the church's recognition of him now as of the household of faith. The outward form marks and symbolizes this gracious spiritual reality.

The text says to the fact:

Affusion-baptism is a departure from the historic practice of the church. The historic practice is every way more fitting. Jesus was immersed; and the same voluntary principle that draws us to the communion table in remembrance of Him should draw us to honor Him in immersion, whether we regard it as his command or not.

The continuity of the church, like that of any social institution, is supported by maintaining from age to age the identical initiatory form. The sense of the unity of the church today with the church of Paul and Peter and John is made vivid by the practice of immersion.

There is no symbolism in affusion. Immersion is rich with symbolism. The cleansing bath; the changed environment; the redemptive facts of Christ's death, burial and resurrection; the convert's death to sin, the burial of the old self and the rising into new life—these all with realistic symbolism are portrayed in immersion.

Appreciably poorer would the church be by its abandonment.

* * *

But the advocates of immersion must free their advocacy from the legalism which both the modern spirit and the New Testament abhor. No outward form gives validity to any act in our dealing with Almighty God. It is preposterous to take a position that disfranchises the great body of Christ's followers. We must not unchurch the church.

On the other hand, because the validity of affusion-baptism is admitted is no reason why its irregularity should not be insisted upon and finally corrected.

But its correction can take place only within a united church as a result of unity, not in a divided church as a means to unity.

Social Survey

New York's New Public Library

New Yorkers may well be proud of their public library for they have now one of the best equipped and largest public library buildings in the world. The dedication was made memorable by the gathering of great educators. Many prominent government officials, including President Taft, Governor Dix, and Mayor Gaynor, were present. The exercises were conducted as follows: Opening prayer by Bishop Greer; delivery of the keys by Thomas Hastings, the architect; addresses by Charles B. Stover, Mayor Gaynor, John Bigelow, George L. Reed, Governor Dix, and President Taft; and benediction by Archbishop Farley. The ceremonies were conducted in the main lobby of the building which unfortunately has a seating capacity of only 500. That number of tickets were sent out to specially honored guests. Two hours later the building was inspected by a double line of 15,000 people who, also, were holders of special tickets. The building stands upon a site which is valued at $20,000,000. Although the structure is not completed, it has already cost $10,000,000, and it is expected to cost $2,000,000 more. Some idea of the size of the building may be obtained when it is stated that it has a floor space of 275,000 square feet as compared with 226,000 in the Congressional Library at Washington. There are now about 1,400,000 books upon the shelves, and shelf room to accommodate 2,500,000 more volumes. The building boasts of the largest general reading room in the world, that being 290 by seventy-seven feet in size and fifty feet high.

A Progressive Postoffice Department

Since the beginning of the administration of Mr. Hitchcock as postmaster-general, the postoffice department has made history. As already stated in these columns, the department by the introduction of economical methods, has converted a deficit of millions of dollars into a balance of cash on hand. It is said to be the first time in its history that the receipts have exceeded the expenditures. The report for the year ending June 30 is expected to reveal a balance of no less than $1,000,000. We are reminded by a contemporary, however, that it is a mistake to assume that the postoffice is yet a paying institution. Before it can justly be said to be so, its receipts must equal all expenditures just as in the case of a private business firm. Take, for instance, the cost of the erection of new postoffice buildings and the cost of repairs on old ones, items which are now provided for by congressional appropriation. If the cost of these were included in the expense account, the report would still show a deficit. Again, the employés in the department are not too well paid. This is particularly true of those in the railway postoffice department. The country may well hesitate before it takes so sweeping a step as cutting receipts in half by the reduction of postage on letters (first-class matter) from 2 cents to 1 cent. We shall now hear no more of the proposal to increase the people's postage bill by the increase of postage on newspapers. The matter of a parcels post will probably not come up in the present session of congress, but it will be presented at the regular session this fall, and its friends hope to secure the adoption of permissive legislation at that time. One argument said to have much weight in favor of parcels post legislation is the success which has attended the introduction of the postal-savings banks. These have been especially well received in the West where the banking facilities are not as sufficient, although they are an unqualified success everywhere where the experimental offices have been opened. A few weeks ago, Postmaster-General Hitchcock announced his intention of naming, weekly, fifty new banks in which to establish savings departments. Later he announced his intention to double that number. To date no savings departments have been installed in any but second-class postoffices, but that policy will probably not be followed exclusively much longer. This is made certain by the announcement that Chicago, the largest city in the West, is to be the first city of the first classification to enjoy the benefits of the new savings institution. Much interest will follow its introduction in the larger cities. Chicago is a new city. Many thousands of foreign-born people live here, and it would seem to be a thoroughly representative location for the experiment. At the same time that we are congratulating ourselves over the good work of our postmaster-general, our English cousins are saying good things about their postmaster-general, Mr. Herbert Samuel. In his recent report to the house of commons he announced a number of reforms and improvements which parallel and possibly out-rival those of our own department. Beginning with coronation day, postal-cards will be sold for one-half penny (English), their face value, instead of 1 penny as heretofore. Stamp books will be sold for the face value of the stamps therein, thus relieving the purchaser of paying extra for the card and books. Stamps will be issued in long rolls for the use of business houses in stamping machines. The British postoffice department also maintains a telephone and telegraph system. The telephone service is to be extended for the use of the farmers. A rate of about $15 a year for unlimited service is to be inaugurated where five farmers in one neighborhood want it. Cable and telephone service to France is to be cut in half, foreign parcels-post rates are reduced, certificates for posting of a letter issued for one-half penny, and small home safes for use in connection with the postal savings department will be issued for a registration fee of 1 shilling and a deposit on each box of 2 shillings.

Germany and the Peace Movement

We hope that the attention of all those who are inclined to doubt the success of the movement for world-wide peace has been directed to the attitude which Germany has taken in the matter. It is regarded as the most war-like of all the great powers, and has scouted the suggestion of disarmament and all other projects which have to do with thrusting aside war. The German mind is scientific, and Germany wanted "to be shown" how such an end may be attained before she will consider it seriously. True to the traditions of the race, the German government has maintained an open mind and signified her willingness "to be shown." The general letter sent out by President Taft, inviting all nations to enter into negotiations with the United States with a view to arbitration treaties, together with the submission of a tentative draft of such an agreement to both France and England, completely disarmed Germany's suspicions of an Anglo-American alliance. In Washington it is now said that an agreement with both Germany and England is practically certain. After discovering what the terms of our proposal included, the German officials decided that there is nothing to lose in giving such a treaty a ten-year trial. Such an agreement would completely annul the Triple Alliance. In anticipation of that effect, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy, the three parties to the alliance, have agreed that notice of the dissolution of that pact shall be given on July 11, next, to take effect in one year. For many years England has been Germany's most dreaded neighbor, but she has already made overtures through her chancellor, Berthmann-Hollweg, with a view to immediate ratification of a treaty with Great Britain. If these two countries, which have lived almost at sword's points, can reach an agreement which will be satisfactory to both, then the world can ask no clearer testimony as to the feasibility of unlimited arbitration. If they find the relationship so pleasant as to warrant continuance after ten years' trial, then the world need not longer despair of permanent world peace and of the eventual disarmament of nations, except as armies and navies are required for police purposes.

Canada's Marvelous Growth

The decennial census which is now being taken in the Dominion of Canada, has revealed remarkable growth. The returns are far from complete, but estimates indicate that growth since 1901 has been approximately 2,750,000. Population at that time was 5,371,315. The present enumeration shows a growth in the decade of over 52 per cent. That is two and a half times the percentage for the United States in the same period. Even then, this is not fairly representative of development in the last five years. During the first half of the period increase was not so great, but of late the development of the western provinces, largely through emigration from the United States, has been marvelous. Canada is one of the few countries in the world in which there is abundant room left in which to grow. Here lie the greatest tracts of almost uninhabited, yet valuable land. In the great 100,000 square mile tract along the west coast of Hudson Bay, census enumerators were able to discover only 1,800 human beings, of whom only 200 are white.

Let us be content to "walk with God," though we know not by what force we mend our way.—Lillian Sincere Ahrens.

The common ties of daily human life are often the avenues for the divine and heavenly life.—H. F. Cope.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Christian Endeavor

The Needs of the "Better Classes."

In Paul's day the worldly wise and the aristocrats were hard to reach with the gospel message. At the present time there are many whose financial resources are far greater than their intelligence and moral power. They use their wealth to escape the duties common to all rather than as a means of conferring benefits upon the world. Such persons are apt to consider themselves superior beings. They do not listen meekly to the man who reasons of righteousness, self-control, and the judgment to come. The Christian Endeavor World thinks we ought to send missionaries to these "better classes." It says:

The man who stocks his larder with the highest-priced liquors, and frequents a club where he can at any time get other refreshments of the same sort, is as seldom troubled by a temperance missionary as by his own conscience, whereas the poor sot, reeling from a low saloon, finds very likely a rescue mission at the next door. The fashionable and guilty divorcee holds up her head as high as her neighbor, and no one ventures to tell her that her offences "smell to heaven."

The children of the so-called "better classes" are often in the Sunday-school for a short period in their early youth, but it is notorious that they make more trouble for the teacher and the superintendent than the children from the slums. Ask almost any Sunday-school worker who the unruly boys in the Sunday-school are, the boys that make their teacher's Sunday-school hour a torture and leave him with a heartache when he goes home, and he will tell you that they are the sons of the "best people" of the city or the village. No one dares to reprove them or to dismiss them from the class, lest their parents should get angry and withdraw them altogether.

Who is it that reads the best books in our public libraries? Not the blue-blooded American children, whose great ancestors landed at Plymouth or Jamestown, but the children of the Russian Jews who came over year before last in the steerage of the big transatlantic liners.

We know that this class that so much needs missionary work is the most difficult of all to approach. There is probably not a high-caste Brahmin in India or a three-button mandarin in China whom it would be more difficult to win to the way of righteousness than some of these American millionaires or those who ape their ways.

There are some things that can be done, however, even if we form no missionary society exclusively for them. Public sentiment can be educated so that they shall no longer be considered as belonging to "the better classes." The old adage that "handsome is that handsome does" can be revived and applied to them. Or we might formulate a new adage to the effect that "he alone who does his best belongs to the best classes."

Presbyterian

The Church of the Working Man.

Those who preach on the opposition of the church to the working man, need not look to Charles Stelze for assistance. He does not believe the church can be convicted on this charge. He replies to the critics of the church thus:

"The church has always been against the working man"—so some men are wont to say. I shall not discuss the purely theoretical arguments in this connection. Neither do I propose to make this a theological treatise; nor yet shall I discuss religion as such. There are some well-known historical facts which may and should be produced against the statement at the head of this article.

In the first place, its founder, Jesus Christ, was not against workingmen. Never were more sympathetic words spoken to the "common people" than were uttered by him. We are told that "the common people heard him gladly." He himself was a carpenter, and he must necessarily have had a workingman's sympathies. He constantly rebuked the oppressors of the poor. The men whom he selected as his first disciples and who were the first promoters of the church were workingmen. During the first centuries of its history, the church received its strongest support from the great labor guilds of that period—the labor unions we would now call them—and it is not impossible that Jesus himself was a member of the Carpenter's Guild in Nazareth.

In the second place, the prophets of the church were not opposed to workingmen. The strongest indictments of the labor agitator against society today are chosen from the sayings of the prophets as they are recorded in the Scriptures.

Furthermore, the Text-book of the church is not opposed to workingmen. The principles laid down by its writers would solve the social question if faithfully lived out by both the capitalist and the laborer. Scarcely a book treating on political economy which was used in any university ten years ago but is out of date today. The Bible is the only book always up-to-date, and it is the only text-book which the church officially recognizes.

Again the leaders in the great religious movements in history were not opposed to workingmen. Indeed, most of them were workingmen themselves. The great religious movements had their origin among the common people. They were fought for by workingmen, of whom thousands upon thousands shed their blood because they believed in the great principles involved.

Finally, the preachers of today as a class, are not opposed to workingmen. Many of them could be named who fearlessly denounce the sins of the rich as well as the sins of the poor. Eager to help, they are asking what they may do in a practical way to assist in raising the standard of living for the workingman.

In the light of all this is it fair to make the statement that the church is opposed to workingmen? I confess that the church has not done all that she should for humanity, because, after all, it is made up of poor, weak mortals. But give her credit for what she has done. You would demand the same treatment for trades unionism, and rightfully so.

Church of England

The Bishop of Hereford has proposed that Protestant Dissenters be invited to participate in a "united Communion service" in Hereford Cathedral on the occasion of the coronation. Lord Halifax, president of the Council of the English Church Union, has addressed a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury in which he shows the wickedness of this proposal. Without intending it, Lord Halifax has also shown that Christian feeling must be put aside for the sake of ecclesiasticism and ritualism. The argument runs in this fashion:

The Bishop's action appears to them inconsistent with the primary duty of a Bishop, which is to guard the faith and sacraments of the church, gravely to compromise the Church of England in the eyes of the other portions of Catholic Christendom, and to be tantamount to a declaration, so far as depends on the action of an individual Bishop, that the church of which he is one of the chief pastors, is indifferent to the sin of heresy or schism, however little those who are involved in such sin may be conscious of its real character, and whatever excuses may be made for them.

Your Grace will not suspect me of indifference to any measure which might promote the reunion in one fold of those for whom Christ died, but the cause of reunion will not be helped by ignoring vital principles of universal obligation. It is not only the Nonconformists who have to be won back to the church; the Church of England has duties to the rest of the Western Church and the churches of the East which she is bound to remember. She has also duties to her own children, duties which can only be disregarded by action such as that of the Bishop of Hereford, at the cost of forfeiting their allegiance and exposing the whole Anglican Communion to the most serious disaster.

Cumberland Presbyterian

Union? None of It for Us.

The Cumberland Presbyterians who stand opposed to union with the Presbyterians have strong feelings to support their attitude, whatever may be the strength or weakness of their reasons. This year the Cumberland General Assembly sent a telegram of fraternal greeting to the Southern Presbyterian Assembly and paid its respects to the Presbyterians by quoting 2 Thess. 3:1, 2, "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of God may have free course and be glorified, even as it is with you; and that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men; for all men have not faith."

The retiring moderator of the Assembly said:

God has planted the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in the most fruitful land ever known. There is no power, no wealth, no numbers, no protestations, no sneers nor persecutions from powerful denominations in this country that can prevail against it. With God behind me I can fight the devil and the Northern Presbyterian Church, and fight any other imp behind him. In all these trials, if you are looking on them as not a blessing from God, and not seeing God in all their movements, you are making a mistake.

Southern Presbyterian

"Elect Infants."

From a report of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church we have the following:

On the subject of the "Elect Infants" the Assembly had before it the information that the overture sent down last year had not been approved, and also fourteen overtures from presbyteries asking for another form of amendment to Chapter X, Section 3, of the Confession of Faith. These facts went to the Committee of Bills and Overtures, which recommended that the following amendment to said article be sent down to the presbyteries for their advice and consent: "Infants dying in infancy are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit who worketh when and where and how he pleaseth. So also are all others who are included in the election of grace and who are incapable of being outwardly called by the ministry of the word."

An effort was made to table the whole matter on the ground that the church was tired of the question and could not be brought to unanimity on the subject. This effort failed, and after considerable debate the action recommended passed the Assembly by a very large majority. The meaning of this action is that this Assembly desires that the Confession be amended so as to state definitely the belief of the church that all infants dying in infancy are regenerated and saved.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

The Place of the Cross

There can be no doubt that the cross had a prominent place in the preaching of Paul. His gospel was a gospel of the cross. Does the modern church glory in the cross of Christ? There are those who say it does not. These persons think they miss the note that was distinctive of the preaching of fifty years ago. It seems to them that sin has ceased to be terrible even to the church and that the doctrine of self-assertion has taken the place of the belief that in Christ crucified men find their strength and salvation.

A change of emphasis has doubtless come. If those who regret the changes that have taken place in the thought and preaching of the church base their doctrine of the cross on asceticism, they are right in feeling that the foundations have been shaken. The church of today does not believe that the body is vile and should be numbered among the enemies of the soul. It believes, with Paul, that the body may be abused and be made vile and that then its nerve functions are such as to hinder right thinking and right acting. But the way to treat the body is not to despise it and neglect it but to train it to be the instrument of a mind enriched by faith and knowledge.

Pain is an element in life which seems to be permanent. We have made great progress in the science of medicine. The surgeon has banished many terrors from the earth. Methods of caring for the sick have fallen to the province of specialists. We know how to protect the babies from the diseases of childhood and some day we shall do what we know ought to be done. Our knowledge of sanitation is such that we may hope finally to make all human habitations and all places of work safe for those who live and work in them. But when all is done that science can propose, death will remain and sin will remain. Hearts will be broken and friendships severed.

In view of the fact that pain is a permanent element in the life of man we ought to have no difficulty in seeing that the cross may have tremendous meaning for us. Perhaps there is meaning in pain. It is certainly foolish to ignore it. Those who have tried to live as if it did not exist have never been profound thinkers and their contribution to the common stock of hope and insight has been very slight. The outcome of such an attitude is usually the blackest sort of despair. The world is not made for persons who refuse to meet in the open what is painful and disquieting. To Paul the way of hope and joy was through pain and affliction. He gloried in his tribulations. For, knowing Christ the crucified, he knew that God was on the side of him who endured for the sake of the kingdom of righteousness, that the suffering of men was borne on the heart of God.

The cross means victory for the individual Christian. The evil habits which have so marred the life and brought misery cannot be accepted as necessary and unchanging by one who has become united to him who was crucified for the sins of men. The cross means strength, not weakness. It means self-assertion of the right sort, the assertion of our right to be clean in body and mind, to know what is worth knowing rather than to occupy our minds in the attainment of trivial facts and degrading sentiments; in a word, to live as the heirs of the grace of life and be the children of God in the full enjoyment of the favors of the Father in heaven.

The believer in the cross makes war against the evil in society. He looks for a city which hath foundations, whose builder is God, and he counts himself as one of the workmen in the construction of that city. His ideal of the faithful disciple of Jesus is that of one who lives with and for others, who advances because he helps others to advance, who seeks to change into a city of God his own city instead of fleeing to some safe retreat where he can, as he imagines, be free from the temptations which beset men in active life. It costs something to be a citizen of the United States and discharge all the duties pertaining thereto. It is easy to stand before a congregation and denounce the wicked politicians or to sit in the Bible class and show what a crooked set our business men are, but to know enough to vote right requires that we sacrifice some of our comfort, and to vote for the good of all in preference to the good of a faction is not easy. We like to hear that the gospel is being preached unto the ends of the earth; we cannot do our part in sending it or in preaching it unless we glory in the cross. The first preachers were persecuted and put to death. We are idle dreamers if we expect to share their joy with sacrifice. [Midweek Service, June 28. Gal. 6:11-18. Matt. 10:38; 16:24; Rom. 5:9; 1 Cor. 1:17; Eph. 1:7; 2:13; Col. 1:20; 2:13-15; Rev. 1:5, 6; 7:14.] S. J.

The Weightier Matters.

In one of the many conflicts of Jesus with the Pharisees he called their attention to the scrupulousness with which they tithed mint, anise and cummin, and then proceeded to warn them that they were neglecting things more important, even judgment, mercy, and faith. He did not ask them to abandon the practice of tithing, but he did ask them to add the inner qualities of character to their practice of outward conformity to statute law.

In religion as in everything else humanity elects to follow the line of least resistance. Among the things that belong to the religious life and its expression we naturally choose those that come most easily. It was easier for the Pharisees to tithe than to be humble; to pray on the streets than to love their neighbors as themselves; to enlarge their phylacteries than to forgive those who despitefully used them. Today it is easier to observe the ordinances than to be forgiving and loving. Is there any doubt that if Jesus were among us now he would chide us as he did the Pharisees? Are we not conscious of offense at the precise point where the Pharisees offended? It may not be in the matter of tithing, for comparatively few practice it, but how many of us can honestly declare that we strive more earnestly and persistently to keep our hearts than we do to conform to ceremonial requirements?

Some things in the religious life are more important than others. Among the things which are asked of us, while we may not say that any of them are unimportant, we have good authority for assuming that some are to be given first place in our thoughts and our efforts for their realization. Jesus has placed the kingdom and righteousness of God in the place of primacy among the things for which the Christian is to seek. We believe that there is ample warrant for observing the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper. Are we justified in any measure of indifference to that which he exalts to the highest place because we are so insistent upon observing certain ceremonies which he sanctioned?

Frankly, we believe that the Christian world of today needs exactly the rebuke which Jesus administered to the Pharisees and scribes of his time. We do not seek as we ought for the growth of our souls. The thing which Jesus put first we are disposed to neglect, even our spiritual likeness to himself. From our pulpits we warn people against introspection and proceed to argue disputed questions of form. In an age when so few are at all disposed to examine their hearts, when all is hurry and bustle and hustle, when reflection is a lost art, it is nothing less than ridiculous for any Christian teacher to spend his time inveighing against the danger of becoming morbid from the practice of self-analysis. If there is anything that the Christian of today needs to do it is to take account of himself as regards the things of the Spirit. We need to sit down alone and ask our souls such questions as, "Do I love God?" "Do I love my neighbor as myself?" "Am I forgiving?" "Do I do unto others as I would that they should do unto me?" "Am I merciful?" "Is my heart pure?" These and many other questions have to do with the real man. In their answer is found the revelation of character.

That word character seems to be offensive to not a few good people. They at once rise up to inform us that we are not saved by character but by Jesus Christ. But does Christ save us irrespective of character? or does he save us by inducing character?

If Jesus did not always and everywhere insist upon right character as a condition to salvation then his words are incapable of being understood. Character is the sum of moral qualities. Justice, kindness, meekness, forgiveness, patience, love—these were the things upon which Jesus insisted. Righteousness, real rightness, this and nothing less than this, he demanded of his own age and demands of us today. This righteousness does not consist in devotion to any ceremony; it is of the heart. Doing things without being what God asks is as empty and meaningless in his sight as is the adoration of a piece of wood by the ignorant savage. Forms are given meaning only by the Spirit. When the soul, loving, aspiring, seeks to express its love and aspiration through any form, then and only then does that form take on value.

We greatly need a larger measure of devotion to the things of the Spirit. We need to add to our loyalty to external ceremonies intense interest in the cultivation and growth of soul-qualities. The needs of the age can be met only by a living apologetic. People grow weary of ceaseless contention concerning outward things while so little is said—and, seemingly, thought—about the graces of human character. Put into any community a body of Christians who live the life that Jesus asks, Christians who are ready to forgive, who walk among their fellows in real humility, who practice as well as preach the homely virtues, and there is a force that cannot be resisted and that will redeem the life of that neighborhood.

A Letter From Mr. Long

Dear Brother Morrison. I note in your issue of June 8 an article entitled, "A Regrettable Incident," in which an act of mine seems to be involved, and in a portion of which article I see you are trying to prevent the public mind from being prejudiced against me in consequence of my position taken at a meeting of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association held in Chicago a few weeks ago. The closing paragraph of said article seems, however, to warn me about extending the hand of fellowship to a man whom the public mind has convicted of certain political practices.

This is to advise that I do not deem the position taken by me of a kind to call for an apology either by my friends or on my own account. Neither would I have it understood that I spoke under the excitement of the moment, or without having given careful consideration to what I was going to say, for the night before I accidentally picked up a program referring to the meeting of the next day, and noticed that I was expected to respond to the welcome address to be delivered by the Mayor of Chicago, and between that hour and the hour of my appearance on the program I gave careful consideration to what I wanted to say, and without consulting with, or making known to a single individual, what I was going to say, excepting I stated to one of the directors of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association that I was going to say something about the Hines incident in my address.

Through a certain channel I had had occasion to hear of Mr. Hines' relation to the Lorimer incident, and was convinced in my mind that Mr. Hines was not guilty of the crime alleged, regardless of the testimony of the other side up to that date.

According to my understanding, it is not right nor just for a manly man—to say nothing of a Christian man—to convict any individual before he has been heard, and believing in Mr. Hines' innocence, I was desirous,—please understand, not through a sudden impulse, but as a result of careful reasoning,—to make my position known to my fellow-lumbermen, and so I spoke with as much emphasis as my soul could command, for what I said came from my heart, and in my closing remarks I extended to Mr. Hines my hand and said: "You have my sympathy, and shall have my support until, if ever, you are found guilty of the alleged crime."

I cannot recall to mind any single act of mine I have ever committed that has brought me so much satisfaction as this deed, for I have done that which I believed was manly and Christian, and even though Mr. Hines should be proven guilty, I shall never regret having taken the position I did, for I spoke as I believed according to the evidence in my possession. If perchance it should be proven that Mr. Hines is guilty, then the last paragraph of my address just mentioned leaves me on the right side of the question.

You can use your pleasure about publishing this statement. I do not deem it necessary to publish it for my satisfaction, for regardless of whatever criticisms may have been made, or may hereafter be made regarding this matter by my fellowmen, be they my Christian fellows or otherwise, I am entirely unconcerned, because of being so deeply impressed with the justice of the position I have assumed in the premises. Yours fraternally,

Kansas City. R. A. Long.

The Future of the Church College

The service which the church has rendered to education in the past is acknowledged by all who are well informed. What of the future? The state has an elaborate program of education. Must the church retire from the field of higher education? The great churches of America do not feel that their work of education is done. They have their colleges and universities and these they are planning to strengthen. On the question of the church college the Central Christian Advocate says:

1. Church colleges must specialize and intensify. Rapidly the situation is becoming such that they can not hope to complete with the state institution in extensiveness; they can, however, specialize, and by that means they can not suffer in prestige. Their future in that is secure.

2. They must have strong moral atmosphere—we might have said religious atmosphere. They are for making of the men who will go to the special and professional colleges in the plethoric university family, sending up to the state professional schools men of such moral fiber that the church colleges will be thought a pride and a necessity in our civilization. Then they can not suffer in prestige and their future will be secure.

3. What church schools do they must do as well as any kind of institution does it.

4. They must be colleges. It will require millions to build, equip and maintain the family of professional colleges which will characterize the "university" of the future. With such a mountain of money the church college can not compete, such a mountain of money the church colleges can not hope to secure. Indeed, with a very few exceptional foundations such a dream would, if true, be detrimental. As it is the income of the State University of Illinois is four per cent net on $50,000,000. The multiplication of such estates held by churches would be a menace to republican institutions. Moreover, it is not likely, human nature being what it is, that such estates will hereafter come into the hands of ecclesiastical corporations.

5. Church colleges must be as well equipped with plant, professors, apparatus, cultural agencies, for a college as the like branch in a state university; in short they must have money if they are to solicit the men and women of the west to entrust to them their sons and daughters; for the college years come but once. Incomplete furnishing is a handicap never fully mastered. It is scarcely fair.

6. Church colleges have an unquestioned future. The state university can no more do the work of the church college than the church college can do the work of the state university. Educators realize this already. Let us band ourselves together to make our church colleges more successful in that sphere in which they can have no rival. In that way we can hope to bless and preserve mankind.

The schools of America are the creation of the churches. The churches by providing cultural courses in colleges of the past and of the resources the churches have, will more than maintain the prestige of the past, in moulding still the benefactors of coming generations.

Murderous Friends

A man of wide experience with churches and religious workers ventures the opinion that the church is the only institution in the world that will pay men for abusing it. A certain kind of preacher and evangelist draws crowds by villifying the church and the church often seems to pay more cheerfully for being maligned than for having its aims fairly stated and supported. On the success of some men in winning applause by antagonizing the church at the same time that they stand before the world as its ministers, the Universalist Leader comments thus:

It is a strange thing that among the chief assailants of the Christian Church today there are none more intense and persistent in their antagonism than some who stand in the pulpits which the church they attack has founded, and to which they are wholly indebted for their fitting and their opportunity. You will hear from them an elaborate defense of their action as they claim they are only pointing out the weakness of the church that it may be strong, but it is so easy to pick flaws; it is Easy Street leading to a cheap kind of popularity, and many there be who enter therein. So interested do they become in destroying one after another of the faiths and functions of the church they are assumed to serve, that they become known as apostles of the negative. Many people go to see, and some to hear them, for the same reason that a great crowd goes to see the fire which destroys the building, but only a few go to see the carpenters at work building it. They are the children of the theological age who like to see the splinters fly, who want to hear the crash of things falling. They are the servants at the table who ostentatiously sweeten our coffee with cyanide of potassium!

Monday Moods

Concerning the Devotions

"Let's cut the devotions." It was said during a convention of religious workers. Three or four kindred spirits were enjoying a conversation in the rear of the hall when the opening hymn of the afternoon session suddenly interrupted. Then it was that the sentence as quoted above was uttered by one of the group. The suggestion was carried out immediately. The little company left the building, had their talk out and returned in time for the first address of the afternoon.

"What are you on for?" It was at another religious convention and two ministers were conversing. "The devotional" was the reply. Whereupon the other exclaimed, "Oh!" And such was the manner of the exclamation as to leave no doubt that the speaker deemed "the devotional" the smallest and least worth-while feature of the program.

Candidly, brother mine, isn't the estimate of the two ministers precisely the same that most of us have of the devotional feature of convention programs? I think so. As a rule when one accepts this place on a program he doesn't make much preparation; oftenest none at all. Few expect anything more than a prefunctory reading of the scriptures and prayer. Some would even criticise the man who attempted more than this, charging that he took advantage of the occasion to "make a speech."

It is high time that we set ourselves like flint against this tendency to belittle the devotional period of religious gatherings. The place of the devotions on a religious convention program is first. Not first in order of services but first in place of importance. Instead of this period coming at the beginning, it should come in the very heart or middle of the session. This is the good old Scotch and English custom.

None who attended the World's Missionary Conference at Edinburgh a year ago will ever forget the "Intercessory Periods." They were the greatest of all. They lifted us close to God and made us feel the power of his presence. Vivid beyond words is my memory of one such period presided over by the gentle Bishop Moule. Under the leadership of that spiritual seer the eleven hundred delegates lost sight of visible things and "worshiped the Invisible alone."

It became necessary for me to leave the hall at the very beginning of one of the "Intercessory Periods" and by so doing I think I actually shocked my companion and fellow-guest at "Southdean," an "S. P. G." man fresh from victories of the cross in China. "Why man," said he, as I got up, "you are not going now?" "I just must" I whispered. "O too bad, too bad!" he commented, a look of hurt surprise on his face. "Why didn't you plan to miss the address and come back to this?" Sure enough! Why didn't I? Simply because I thought I could afford better to miss the devotional than the speeches. I was mistaken. I know better now.

Our churches should cultivate constantly the devotional in all the services of the house of God. There is too much chattering in our churches. Many of the so-called "hymns" we sing are unworthy a people who have at their command the really great and deathless hymns of the Faith. Reverence for sacred places and hallowed names may not be, as some one has said, " a forgotten art" but with a multitude of church members reverence is a neglected grace. Of this deplorable fact there can be no gainsaying. To the healing of this hurt let every Christian set himself assiduously.

I enjoy wholesome fun. I relish a hearty laugh, delight in a good, clean joke, especially when it is new, and splendid rhetoric is as music to my ears. But with a great company of my brethren I am hungry for a fuller and deeper devotional character in the services of the church and other religious gatherings. And I am conscious of a very great need for every personal help toward the worshipful and the devout.

Varying the phraseology of a certain famous petition a trifle, I fancy a great multitude could wish to offer it as a personal prayer: "O, God, make others wise; make me worshipful."

EDGAR DE WITT JONES.

—The leaders of the Men and Religion Forward Movement are to hold a conference at Silver Bay on Lake George, July 22-30. This will be the final fundamental outlining of the work. Every possible detail will be considered in preparation for the movement which is to begin sweeping the continent in the fall.

Interpretations

The Game That Has No Appeal

It must have been out of very bitter experience that Job wrote concerning God. "There is no umpire between us." Often he must have wished that there was some supra-God to whom he could appeal from the providences enforced upon him. The emotions of one soul are the emotions of all. What person has not felt at times the injustice of his experiences? But Job, as we all do, concluded there was no umpire to whom he could appeal.

The umpire has a large place in mundane affairs. He figures in athletics, in the school-room, in the courts of law—indeed, in every department of life. We are so anxious that every man be given justice that society has established a series of possible appeals.

But in the tremendous things of life and death there is no appeal above the decision of God. Shall we fret under this limitation, or can we find happiness and liberty in it? While some grimly and dumbly submit, others learn to sing Hallelujah. The latter find the way of health—the true way. But the darkness of life is so great that surely the supreme Umpire must be patient with those who miss the note of joy in his compulsions. His compassion certainly is greater than ours. The prayer that George MacDonald puts on the tombstone of Martin Elginbrod is certainly reasonable.

"Here lie I, Martin Elginbrod,
Have mercy on my soul, Lord God,
As I would do were I Lord God
And ye were Martin Elginbrod."

If a farmer have his crop destroyed by some vandal, he would have recourse before some civil umpire; but when Nature destroys it by frost there is no one to whom he can appeal. There is no appeal from the law of gravity that kills its thousands, nor from any other law of nature that is relentless in its merciless working.

Murder is still punished in most countries by a life for a life; but when death snatches loved ones away by accident or disease there is no one to whom we can appeal. No strong arm of justice returns them to those who mourn. In every age the cries of suffering millions have arisen beside fresh graves, so loud and so soulful, that the heart of the universe must have bled in sympathy. But no return of loved ones resulted. And from this awful silence experience teaches that there can be no appeal.

There is no umpire between us because we need none; for God is altogether wise and good. Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? How do I know? I do not know, but I feel so. The brain limps in every solution it tries to write, but the heart leaps with joy. The farmer believes in God although in a single night his crop is destroyed. The mother believes in a God of love though death robbed her of that which was dearer than her own life. Spirit with spirit meets and faith results.

That which God intends to be great and splendid he begins very small and imperfect. Paul began as a little lump of flesh. "The whole creation groaneth together." When God is done with this world the lion and lamb shall lie down together. The tuberculosis germ shall be converted into a health force, and there shall be no typhoid fever or cyclone or anything that doth make afraid.

But God is not trying to build a physical world, but a spiritual man. Here is the key to his silences and shadows. He is leading his earth-companion by devious ways to prepare him for heavenly fellowship.

"Came the whisper, came the vision, came the power with the need,
And a Soul that is not man's soul is lent us to lead."

The whisper first—the brain never gets more than the whisper—and finally the power found in the fellowship of the divine Soul leading. Surely God must be as good as Christ, and this thought comforts me. He was the great interpreter of the Father. He found love at the heart of the universe and my heart is glad to respond to his.

No soul has need of any umpire other than the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. He sees the whole; we but a part. There are enough hints of his justice to lead the brain not to despair, and there is such an abundance of his own life shed abroad in our hearts as to hold us to the peace that passeth understanding and to urge us to the high tasks of love.

GEORGE A. CAMPBELL.

Going Up to Jerusalem

BY J. S. DICKERSON.

WHETHER ONE comes from the North or from the West, he goes "up to Jerusalem." If he comes from the North he must make the journey by carriage or horseback. If from Jaffa he may now comfortably cover the fifty odd miles from the sea by railway train. It seems preposterous to enter the ancient city by so modern a conveyance as a railway carriage drawn by an American locomotive. It is incongruous, indeed, but the journey of fifty-four miles, which is accomplished in about four hours, is a most decided improvement over that by camel train or that on horseback, or even that by carriage, which methods were the only means of reaching the city until about fifteen years ago, when the present railway was built.

THE SO-CALLED TOMB OF ABSALOM, JERUSALEM. Permission of Eager Tours Co., Baltimore.

To Jerusalem.

It was a relief to leave the uninviting Jaffa and pass through the beautiful orange groves which surround the city. The trees were laden with the yellow fruit, although the ground was also covered with thousands of oranges which a recent storm had blown down. It is well to enjoy the dark, refreshing green of the orange groves, for, save the olive trees, there are few evidences of verdure or of foliage after the train leaves the vicinity of Jaffa and crosses the comparatively narrow Plain of Sharon. not by barbed-wire—no farmer in this land of poverty could afford thus to protect even his vegetable garden if he owned one—but by stones. "Remove not the ancient landmark which thy fathers have set," has a new significance when one sees that the changing of a time-honored line of demarkation would be a comparatively easy matter in a country where stones are plentiful. One may possibly catch a glimpse of a lean fox running across the hillside. One may see a crow or a partridge. But there is observable little animal life, either domestic or wild, on the journey "up to Jerusalem" from the "great sea" to the city's walls.

THROUGH THE WALLS OF JERUSALEM.—THE DAMASCUS GATE.

He must either walk to his destination, or hire one of the carriages to which are attached the worst specimens of horseflesh that are to be found anywhere. Horse-feed is scarce near Jerusalem, and drivers are brutal to their horses. One felt guilty to permit such poor, starved beasts to draw the vehicle over the muddy road to his destination. Some of the "Arabic" passengers found, to their sorrow, how weak the horses were when, during their "ride" to Jericho," they were obliged to walk weary miles owing to the inability of these forlorn, underfed nags to pull the carriages up the long hills east of the city.

The Mount of Olives.

It was perhaps unfortunate that the first impression obtained of Jerusalem was that from the Mount of Olives, for after that superb view of the city and its surrounding country every other seemed inadequate. The day, after a week or more of snow and rain, was perfect. The air was so clear that objects many miles distant could be clearly discerned. Driving from the vicinity of the Damascus Gate northward toward Mount Scopus, the route turned eastward until the summit of the Mount of Olives was reached. Here, in the vicinity of the Russian Tower, the best view of the city is obtainable. Far off to the east could be discerned sites whose names are as familiar to every Christian as his own. To the east the hills round about Jericho could be discerned and beyond them, on the other side of the Jordan, the barren mountains of Moab and Gilead could be plainly seen. To the southeast the sun revealed a silver spot where the waters of the Jordan gleamed in the sunlight and a little further on they could be made out as the muddy stream pushed itself out into the lighter colored Dead Sea. The red cliffs, near the supposed Brook Cherith where the monastery of St. George is built into the rock wall, may be seen. The monastery is a kind of penitentiary for Greek priests. Jericho, which is 840 feet below the sea level, cannot be seen, although the hills round about it are visible. Bathed in the light of the setting sun, the hills and rocky slopes, the darkening valleys and the glimmering sea, afford a fine picture, although the whole land is barren and the almost total absence of trees, to eyes accustomed to their softening effects, detracts somewhat from its charm.

THE PRINCIPAL GATE OF MODERN JERUSALEM.—THE JAFFA GATE.

There are many places which are sure to arouse the imagination on the crest of the Mount of Olives. A few of these are worthy of a visit. The hill itself affords the best obtainable view of the city. From this place Jesus undoubtedly looked pityingly across the valley to the city. On its slopes he passed that night of agony. But to assert that this or that spot is the exact scene of some event in the life of Jesus is to declare something which cannot be substantiated. Somewhere near here these tragic acts in the greatest life history of the world transpired, but to claim that this particular stone is one from which Jesus mounted the ass when he was about to enter the city in triumph, or that these very olive trees are those beneath which he passed that night of awful trial, or that this is the limb from which Judas hanged himself; to make such claims as these is sacrilegious. One must turn to the Bible for the verities; one finds in Palestine, all too often, superstition and idolatrous worship of tradition. The New Testament reads like a history written by believing men familiar with that which they recorded, the guide-books read like descriptions prepared for credulous people whose little faith must needs be bolstered up with "old wives' tales."

Too many of these alleged sites appear to be merely means to wring money for priestly needs from the ignorant.

The Church of the Holy Sepulcher.

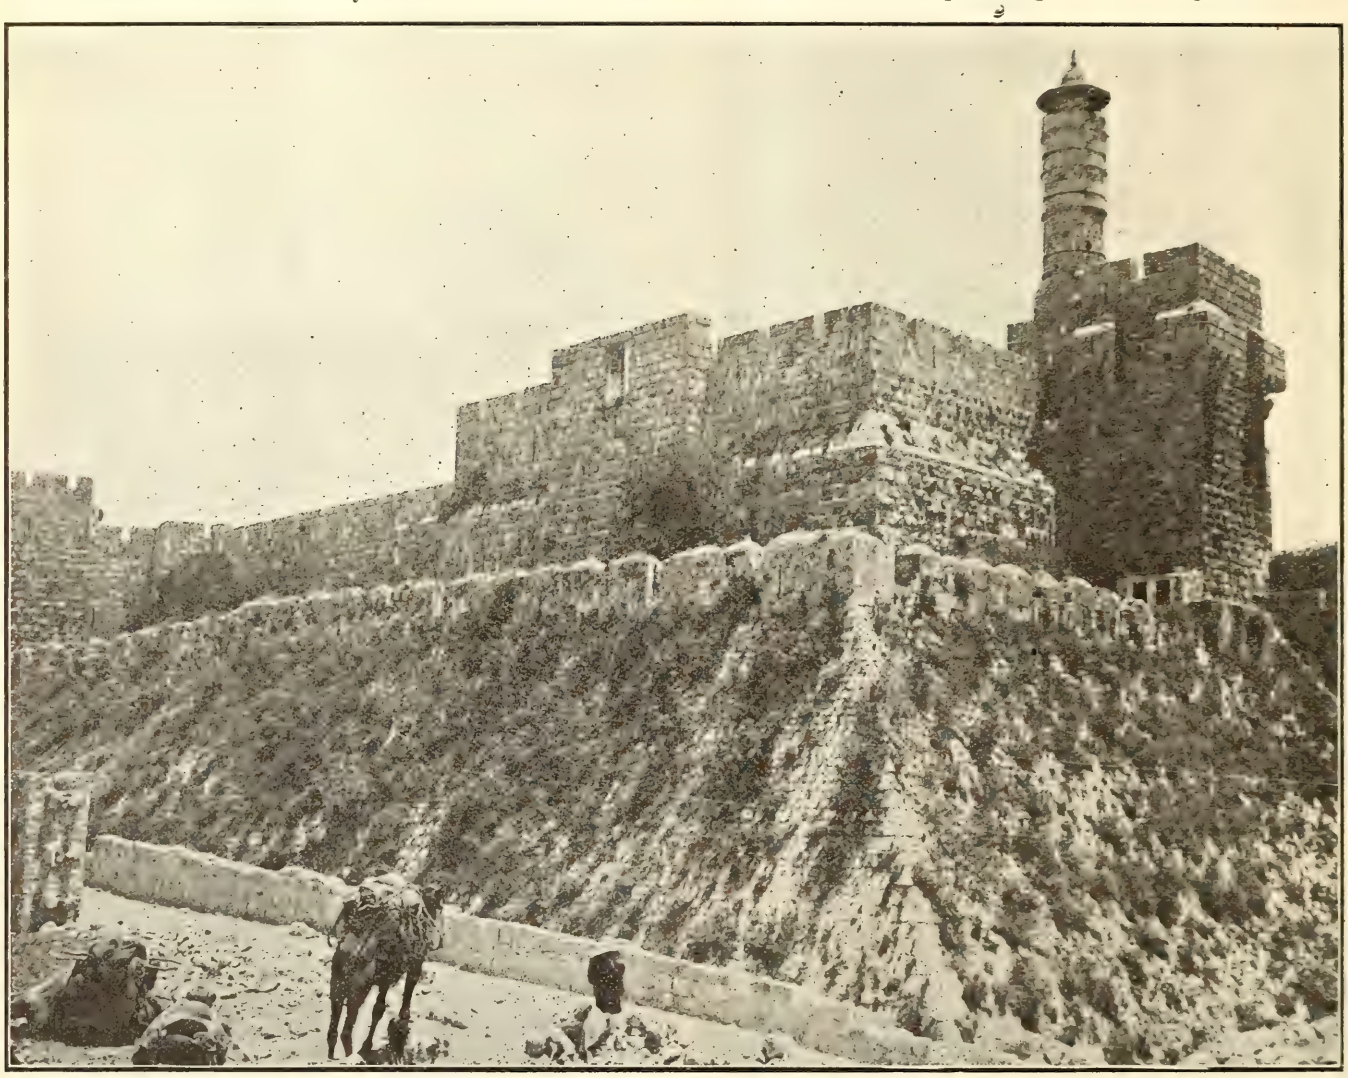
If a visit to the beautiful Hill of Olives arouses resentment and calls forth protest, what shall be said of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, which fairly reeks with impossible and preposterous traditions? It may be that the great building covers the actual place of the crucifixion and the sepulcher where Jesus was buried. The best authorities, however, appear to agree that it was on another hill—Gordon's Calvary, so-called, being regarded as a much more probable location. But even if the crucifixion really took place at this point, the other events here memorialized by chapels and stones and relics, and smoking lamps, and candelabra, and tawdry ornaments, and crudely executed paintings and decorations, gilded and bejeweled altars, and a thousand and one other symbols, could never have transpired at places so contiguous. Here is the so-called stone of unction on which the body of Jesus laid when it was anointed by Nicodemus. Here are the stone which covered the mouth of the tomb in which Jesus was buried, the column to which he was lashed when scourged by the Roman soldiers, the stone which is said to mark the center of the world, pieces of the cross, the stocks in which Jesus was placed. Numerous chapels are consecrated to different periods in the trial and crucifixion of Jesus and other events connected with his death on the cross.

The angels' chapel and the chapel of the holy sepulcher are said to occupy the spot of the burial. These small enclosures, hung with lamps and decorated with marbles, are among the most venerated places in this ancient building, parts of which must date back to the fourth century, while others were added less than 100 years ago. Hither come thousands and thousands of pilgrims from Russia and elsewhere who kiss the sacred stones and cross themselves before the many holy places. Belief in the spread of disease by germs gets a rude shock in this venerable shrine. If germs carry disease one would expect to see thousands of people stricken, for these stones are worn smooth by the continual kisses of innumerable throngs of unkempt pilgrims, who in steady streams press their lips to these supposably sacred and merit-conferring emblems.

The Dome of the Rock.

There can be little doubt, if any, that the mosque, commonly known as the Mosque of Omar, occupies the site of Solomon's and Herod's temples. There is good reason to believe, too, that the great stone in the center of the mosque is that which was once within the Jewish temple, and that upon its surface the sacrifices were made. Attendants point out channels in the rock, which is some sixty feet long, leading to outlets below, through which undoubtedly the blood of the slaughtered animals found its way, possibly outside the temple area. The tendency to perpetuate the use of sacred places, and by adherents of varied religious beliefs, was never more evident than in this instance. The best testimony indicates that this was the threshing floor of Araunah, purchased by David, the site of Solomon's temple, of that erected after the captivity, as well as of that of Herod. The Mohammedans early seized this spectacular site and for over a thousand years, at least, have used it for the peculiar services of Islam. The name, Mosque of Omar, is undoubtedly incorrect. The building is called by an Arabic title, meaning the Dome of the Rock. It is octagonal in shape and occupies the most conspicuous place upon the temple area, upon which, further to the south, there stands, adjacent to the wall, another mosque known as El Aksa.

A walk around the temple area gives one an impression of what it must have been in the days when Solomon's wonderful building here lifted its glorious walls, as well as when the Temple of Herod, associated so closely with the New Testament narrative, was silhouetted against the sky. One gets a fine view of the Mount of Olives and of the valleys to the south of the city from the temple area. Beneath his feet are still the great cisterns built by Solomon for the storage of water, and which are still in use. Beside this wonderful spot, in memory, there stands a monument in one's journey to the Near East. Volumes could be written about it, and yet it must be cut off in a paragraph or two.



"Walk About Zion, and Go Round About Her; Number the Towers Thereof."

Bethlehem and the Other Sights.

A drive to Bethlehem was a delightful incident of one day. Here in the Church of the Nativity one discovers traditions similar in character to those of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. There is great probability, however, that this site is actually that of the wayside khan which sheltered the mother of our Lord and the Babe in the manger. Space will not permit more than a mention of this strangely impressive and yet cruelly disillusioning spot with its ever-present Turkish guards, preventing the warring sects of Christians from cutting each other's throats. The story goes that quarrels which centered around the golden star in the Grotto of the Nativity led to the Crimean War. There are windows in the Church of the Nativity which have not been washed for over thirty years, because the Armenian and Greek priests are at war with each other over the right to care for these holy panes of glass.

The Preacher and His Vacation

Scriptural Warrant and Common Sense Approve the Summer Rest

BY W. A. FITE.

I have been brought up with a conviction that we ought not to do or to teach anything for which there can not be found a "Thus saith the Lord," and hence in advocating a vacation for the ministry I have been led to discover if possible either a scriptural precedent or precept. Fortunately I find the precedent in the life of Christ. After our Lord had sent his disciples forth two and two, and they had fulfilled their mission, and had returned to Him and "told him all things, whatsoever they had done and taught," he said unto them "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile." And so when we, his servants today, are tired because of what we have taught and what we have done in his name, he says to us "Come ye apart into a desert place and rest awhile." He himself in his ministry took more than one vacation. We read about him going away into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and that while there "he would enter a house and have no man know it." He did not go into Phœnica to teach—for in his personal ministry he was not sent save "to the lost sheep of the house of Israel"—he went there that he might rest. They would not let him rest in Galilee and so he went where he could. When so often he withdrew to the east side of the Sea of Galilee it was that he might get rest. And just before his crucifixion we read "Jesus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews, but departed thence into the country near the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim; and there he tarried with his disciples." This vacation was a preparation for the Passion Week. Of course Jesus did some good while on these vacation tours. He healed the daughter of the Syro-Phœnician woman when in the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and he cast out the demons from the man who dwelt among the tombs on one occasion when he was on the east side of the Sea of Galilee. And so a preacher ought not to despise his opportunities to do good when on his vacation. He should take along a few old sermons, in case the occasion should arise when he might need them.

The Necessity of a Vacation.

A preacher needs a vacation to get away from the multitude, his multitude. Following the words of Jesus commanding his disciples to come apart and rest awhile are these words, "For there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat." Contact with the multitudes makes rest a necessity. A crowd makes a draft on one's vitality. One cannot rest in a crowd. It is difficult to explain but just to be with people is to become fatigued. And particularly in this case when one is constantly on the qui vive, trying to entertain, or to bring some kind of help. This is not saying that we should not seek people and should not love to be with them. No one would advocate being a recluse because the touch of people brings weariness. For while it is true there is an enrichment of our own lives by knowing other lives, and we need the intoxicating joy of the social touch; but solitude as well as society is necessary both for the good we do ourselves as well as the help we may bring to others.

Benefits of a Vacation.

It breaks the monotony of life.

The ministry like everything is full of monotony. There is a routine about it that becomes irksome. It becomes a grind. Who does not find it monotonous thinking out two sermons a week, week after week? Who does not find it irksome to make call after call, many times to discuss things no more interesting than the weather? When there is no intermission even the prayer-meeting may become a bore. The same old hymns Sunday after Sunday finally grate on one's nerves. There is even a tiresomeness looking at the same faces week after week. A preacher now and then needs to break the monotony.

Makes Him Appreciate His Work.

A minister may love his work and not know until he gets away from it for a time. He may think that he has a holy disgust for the ministry at times, he has found it so monotonous, his discouragements have been so numerous; but if he will only get out of the groove of the grind for a time he can go back to it realizing that he was mistaken. Some men quit the ministry in hot haste because they are disgusted with its monotony and think that other fields of labor have more varied and more desirable landscapes. There was a time in my own life when I grew tired of preaching. I think God then thrust me out of the ministry for three months, during which time I had no opportunity to preach. I enjoyed my vacation at first; but soon I began to chafe under my freedom. I heard other men preach and I felt I would just like to show them how it was done. Like an old race-horse keen for the track I yearned for another opportunity to preach. And so when we grow tired of our work, if we would take a few weeks off we would come back to it with a new appreciation and joy. Usually by the time or before one's vacation is up a love for his work comes over him. He learns he could not live without work, and that while play is a very desirable thing at times, that after all the sweetest life to live is the life in which work is the rule and play the exception.

"Lives there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
I hate this petty grinding toil;
I must take rest or I will spoil.
Up in Wisconsin there's a lake:
I'll pack my trunk and then I'll take
Two weeks of solid rest and fun.
I just can't wait till its begun.

Lives there a man with soul so live,
Who didn't worry and contrive,
And fret about the work he left,
While catching fish of monstrous heft?
Who didn't telegraph at last
And catch a train that's labeled "Fast"
And with a throb of joy and pain
Plunge headlong into work again."

And so when one gets back from his vacation, the work seems so eminently worth while.

Makes One Appreciate Home.

If one lives in trunks and grips for a few weeks, at hotels and boarding houses, and is made to put up with inconveniences incident thereto, he will feel before his vacation is over that there is no place like "Home, Sweet Home." The man who loves his home always loves to return to it.

One must be away from his church and friends for a time in order to appreciate them. After a few weeks sojourn away from them among strangers he will find himself very happy to get back to the familiar scenes. The sight of the old church will look good to him. The members of his church and friends will be glad to see him and he will be glad to see them. He will discover that while strangers may have a passing interest for him, that after all only those in whom he is interested, and who are interested in him, only those he loves and who love him, can find the large place in his heart and life.

Thus it is that he gets a perspective of his work, his home, his friends that he cannot get by always staying too close to them.

Broadening Influence.

Of all men a preacher cannot afford to be provincial, narrow, or prejudiced. He should be the broadest man in his community. He must divest himself of intolerance, and bigotry, or his ministry will only be a bighting influence. We have too many men in the ministry preaching their prejudices and narrow, distorted views of the truth and in consequence are leading souls captive to a religious provincialism which works more harm than good. The southern preacher ought to go north for his vacation and the northern preacher ought to go south. The Calvinist ought to mix with Arminians, and the Arminians ought to mix up with the Calvinists. The immersionist ought to get into company of the affusionists and the affusionist should seek out the gatherings of the immersionists. To know what others are thinking, particularly those with whom we do not agree, to get their viewpoint, is calculated to make us more charitable and give us a catholicity of spirit which every preacher of the gospel needs.

Kinds of Vacation.

There are many preachers who take their vacations by holding meetings. They can supplement their meager salaries in that way. I do not believe that holding meetings is much of a vacation. During the time allotted for his vacation, if a preacher conducts revivals, he comes back to his pastorate, not rested, but more nearly worked to death than when he left. He can bring to his labor no new enthusiasm. There is no freshness to his message, but in all probability there is the same moribund deliverance that characterized him before he took his vacation. It is nothing less than injustice toward a church for a preacher to be granted a vacation by his congregation and to spend it in such a way as to return to them fagged out in mind and body.

It is not necessary for me to go into detail in speaking of the kinds of vacation offered to us preachers today. Fishing, camping, and roughing it in various ways are oftentimes advisable. I personally incline to a vacation which offers mental and spiritual refreshment and at the same time offers opportunities for bodily rest and recuperation. It is well to occasionally attend a summer school at one of our great universities. Assemblies and Chautauquas are offering today marvelous opportunities. At many such places one can have plenty of time for sleep, for boating, bathing, fishing, golfing, tennis, and hear every day the best talent of the nation's pulpit and platform. In such places one's mind rests not in the dark but in the light. With new information, new inspiration, new enthusiasm, new appreciation, rested and refreshed in mind and body, broadened in spirit the minister can come home to do better and more effective work in the great service to which God has called him.

Paducah, Ky.

Our Readers' Opinions

Editors' Note

At the moment of going to press the following statements from the Foreign Society's Executive Committee and from Guy W. Sarvis came to hand. We are withdrawing a page of our readers' opinions which had been placed on this page in order to admit these two statements.

MR. SARVIS' STATEMENT.

ADDRESSED TO THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD.

To the Editors of The Christian Standard: Since you have not seemed satisfied with my former statement and since you have published further communications from Mr. Smith and Mr. Ray which may lead to a misunderstanding of my position, I desire to make a final statement. I do not and never have advocated the reception of the unimmersed into church membership either at home or abroad and I have no intention of advocating their reception on the mission field. The Hyde Park plan does not involve the reception of the unimmersed into church membership. It simply provides for the recognition of their Christian character and practical coöperation with the church, yet I am not even an advocate of that plan. My relations with the Hyde Park Church have never involved conformity with its practices or with the views of its pastor. Since leaving Drake University in 1908 my position has not changed on the matters under discussion or on the matters brought up at my meeting with the Executive Committee at the time of my appointment as a missionary. Mr. Ray and Carl Smith have been confused with reference to the distinction which I think I legitimately make between recognizing members of other communions than our own as Christians as against advocating their admission into local churches as members. I believe there are unimmersed persons who are Christians. My expression of this belief is the basis for the statements of Mr. Smith and Mr. Ray. I said very emphatically to Mr. Ray that I believed there were other Christians than those in our own brotherhood. I also said to him, what I have always believed and preached that conformity to the teachings of the New Testament in our lives is the fundamental aspect of Christianity. I did not say and do not think that other aspects of Christianity are unimportant, or that we have any right to minimize them. I did not mean to imply that where a person has had adequate teaching with reference to baptism so that he could reasonably be expected to see that it is the will of Christ, it is not necessary in becoming a Christian. I do contend, however, that a woman like Pandita Ramabai or Frances E. Willard, or men like Robert E. Speer, W. J. Bryan, or David Livingstone, whom we would gladly accept at our communion table, but whom we would deny membership in the church of Christ, are Christians. What does our plea for Christian union mean if all the Christians are already in our fellowship? What did the Topeka convention mean by appointing a council on Christian unity? What did it mean by approving the union in educational work in Nanking? GUY W. SARVIS.

A PROTEST AND A PLEA.

FROM THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

Recent publications in the Christian Standard and especially recent editorials in that paper, which are in accord with the spirit maintained for years by that paper against the Executive Committee of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, seem to make it necessary for the members of the Executive Committee, individually and jointly, to record their protest against such injustice and to utter their earnest plea for fair treatment of themselves and of those whose chosen representatives they are.

The members of the Executive Committee are all regularly chosen, and are duly authorized representatives of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Most of them have been members, annually re-elected, for many years. All of them are members of the Church of Christ, in good standing and full fellowship. They are believed to possess at least average intelligence, integrity and consecration; to be fairly well informed in the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God; to understand and be in hearty accord with the plea of the Disciples of Christ; and to be earnestly striving in love and loyalty to their Lord to win the whole world to Christ.

These facts, the Committee thinks, are sufficient, not only to protect them against the absurd demand to prove themselves innocent of groundless charges of dishonesty and disloyalty, but also to protect the Society which they represent and its work from being publicly condemned upon the assertion of a newspaper whose chief owner and manager is known and acknowledged to be unfriendly to members of the Committee, and who has not written an editorial word for many years in favor of the Committee or its work.

The members of the Executive Committee invite and welcome investigation and criticism; but criticism only after investigation. This is only fair, not to say Christian.

All communications, whether addressed to the office or to members of the Committee individually, receive due consideration, and are answered in perfect frankness; and there is absolutely no reason or excuse for any individual or paper misunderstanding or misrepresenting the action or attitude of the Committee in conducting the work of the Society.

Groundless suspicion and unmerited distrust of the Committee have been excited, and great harm to the work of the Society has been done by publishing statements as true, which a little investigation would have shown to be utterly false, and then calling upon the brethren to condemn the Committee for offenses thus falsely attributed to them. By such unfair means good brethren have been led to condemn or criticize the Committee for offenses of which they are guiltless, and in some cases to withhold support from the Society and from the devoted and dependent missionaries on foreign fields, while many other brethren, not more interested, but less hasty, have written for the facts and found nothing to criticize.

The Executive Committee clearly and solemnly recognize their relation and responsibility as representatives and agents of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and of the churches, Sunday-schools, Christian Endeavor Societies and other organizations and individuals coöperating through that Society. They know the constitution and history of the Society, and thoroughly understand and cordially approve the abiding purpose of its founders and supporters. They are familiar with the teaching and practice of the ministers and churches of the Disciples of Christ. No member of the Committee advocates or approves anything that contradicts or contravenes this well-known teaching and practice; nor does any one of them advocate or approve the reception or acknowledgment as members of our churches, either at home or abroad, of any persons except immersed.

A Pastor's Protest

Editor of Christian Standard—I am the "least of the saints," but I cannot refrain from saying a word about the attitude you have taken toward Brother Sarvis and the Foreign Society. I know Brother Sarvis well. He is one of the best-equipped men the Foreign Society ever commissioned to the field. He is abreast the modern spirit of Christian workers in all the missions fields. He represents the spirit of Christ which is infinitely better than holding correct views and showing an unbrotherly spirit. There is nothing in his heart contrary to the teachings of Jesus.

I do not think you have been fair to him. Just as I feel that the greatest hurt the Disciples of Christ have ever suffered is the periodical attack made by The Christian Standard on some one of the choicest spirits among us. If you were pruning our Brotherhood of immoral leaders, you would challenge the best within us to approve you. But when you make your attack purely on the mental attitude men assume and the method of bringing in the Kingdom, you violate what we have preached for 100 years—viz.: that our test of fellowship is loyalty to Jesus. Is a man who is willing to lose his life on the foreign field any less loyal to Jesus than a man who sits in the editorial chair and crucifies or exalts whomsoever he wills?

I think the grossest insult to Christ, however, is that which your attacks have produced in dissipating the offering to Foreign Missions. What satisfaction can you get out of causing our Israel to turn back from the vision of a better day in missionary annals to the long wandering in the wilderness of chaotic effort? The Foreign Society has and does approve itself to the consecrated intelligence of our brotherhood for its wisdom and economy. I sincerely plead with you to train the enginery of your warfare upon unbrotherliness and stinginess, and let us place abundant resources in the hands of these men "approved of God" and cease these cruel personalities. In humiliation, penitent believers in Christ. Furthermore, it is believed by the Committee that all missionaries appointed and supported by them are in sincere accord with this policy; and certainly they would not appoint, and indeed would recall any one known to be not in such accord. They disclaim any right and disown any desire to do otherwise.

Des Moines, Ia., Central Church. FINIS IDLEMAN.

There is only one reason why this Committee gives expression of its position in regard to the reception of the unimmersed as members of the church. It is done to inform the readers of The Standard who may have been deceived concerning the position of this Committee and to allay the suspicion unjustly and wrongfully aroused by the above paper; a suspicion which has already cost the sacred cause of foreign missions thousands of dollars. In doing this we wish it understood that we believe the policy of The Standard in demanding a public statement or disclaimer from a responsible committee of Christian men in regard to their Christian belief is wholly unwarranted and destructive of Christian liberty. Such demands, if recognized as a policy, would put the committee and every other representative committee of our brotherhood under obligation to answer every suspicion and rumor put forward by any paper or individual. It would make it possible for The Standard to put this Society on the defensive every week in the year and to demand pronouncement on any item of doctrine it wished to bring up, and thus load upon a free people the intolerable burden of a religious censorship conducted by a privately owned enterprise.

Brethren, we are your representatives and agents, and our work is your work. So long as we are entrusted with the great work we will continue, as much as in us lies, faithfully to do our whole duty, as God gives us to see our duty. But we beseech you to defend the work from such unjust and injurious treatment as is referred to above.

We believe you can most effectively do this and we trust you will, in order that we may thus be assured against further injustice and annoyance in our work by such indiscriminate and unfair attacks as are complained of in this our protest and plea.

If hereafter any charge worthy of respect shall be made against your Committee by any person or paper, we suggest that the same be referred to a committee of arbitration.

Such a course may be the only possible one for the adjustment of any differences between the Executive Committee and The Christian Standard, which in its issue of June 10 publicly declares that it puts no dependence upon any statement of your Committee in a vital matter.

The mission field is so large and so ripe for the harvest, the appeals for help so numerous and urgent, the demands upon our sympathy and strength so great, and the support of the missionaries—our brethren and sisters in Christ—so imperative and appealing, that we dare not leave this great work of winning the world for Christ, and come down to parry the thrusts of those who seem bent on annoying the Committee and hindering the work.

A. McLean.	R. O. Newcomb.
S. M. Jefferson.	Justin N. Green.
B. C. Deweese.	M. Y. Cooper.
W. S. Dickinson.	H. C. Hendrick.
C. H. Winders.	C. W. Plopper.

Stephen J. Corey.

On account of distance from the office, the names of F. M. Rains and E. W. Allen are not signed.

[The Christian Century will have to reserve editorial comment on the above statements until a later issue.—The Editors.]

A Situation Inexpressibly Unfortunate.

I can not too strongly express my regret that, wholly apart from the dogmatic or ecclesiastical interests of the question now before us, our co-operative missionary work should be caused to suffer from the present aggression of certain of our newspaper interests upon the Foreign Society—one of a series of aggressions which has created a situation inexpressibly unfortunate. Let us be done with these attacks which threaten to impair the effectiveness of our business—that of making Christ known to the world.

W. C. Bower.

Los Angeles Calif.,
Wilshire Boul. Church.

A Contrast Sharp and Sad.

No contrast could be sharper or sadder than that between the old days when Isaac Errett and the Christian Standard stood in the forefront of every forward movement and the present captious and reactionary policy of this paper. "How are the mighty fallen!"

Edward B. Bagby.

Fort Smith, Ark.

The Children's Voices Are Heard.

Some may read this and say that children should be seen and not heard, but there are times when children even may speak. I want to say that Sunday, June 18, we shall have our Children's Day program and what we receive by way of an offering will go to the F. C. M. S. in whom we have the fullest confidence.

We believe that their hearts are in the work of the Master to the fullest extent.

Harley Swift.

Dorchester, Nebr.

Like a Blighting Frost in Summer.

In these glorious days of June, it is distressing to have to think of December chills. But sometimes, right in June, we have a cold, wet week that is the meanest thing in the whole weather calendar, especially if the week ends up with a killing frost. To me The Christian Standard always has the effect of a cold, wet spell in June, while its sudden attacks upon the Foreign Society are like blighting frosts in summer time. Some people seem to take special delight in the chilling weather, it makes "the other fellow" so miserable. But give me the sunshine, and the flowers and fruit unblighted by the untimely frost. This reminds me that there is a very applicable text of scripture for this situation. It is in the tenth chapter of John and in and around the tenth verse.

Iowa, City, Ia. Carlos C. Rowlison.

Our Most Destructive Force.

Yes, it is indeed a time for every loyal soul to speak out, and I want to congratulate you for your fearless and clear statement of the issue. Some of us have known of the perfidy of The Standard for a long time. It has sought to accomplish its end—which is commercial—by appealing to the prejudices and passions. Behind its every move, in pretended loyalty to the plea, I can see the hand of that prince of disruptors, Russell Errett, figuring the probable effect on the financial end of the business. The Standard is the most demoralizing and destructive force in our ranks.

Glasgow, Mo. Arthur Stott.

A Dispassionate Disapproval.

I cannot refrain from speaking a word of appreciation of your editorial in The Century of June 8. It was bold, clear-cut and definite. It will certainly elicit many responses. This is not a time for heated discussion—if, indeed, that time ever comes—but a dispassionate statement voicing the disapproval of the wanton attack of The Standard on the Foreign Society should be made by every friend of foreign missions. Personal animus and greed have no place in a genuinely Christian community, much less do they deserve to be followed as defenders of Christian faith.

Harvey, Ill. W. D. Endres.

Mission Boards Must Be Free From Dictation.

Your editorial headed: "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out," was an admirable and timely statement of the situation and I am glad to express my approval. We have reached a point where, it seems to me, all efforts to placate the wrath of The Standard are destined to be fruitless. We must act quite independent of its attempted dictation and threats of disruption. I doubt if any such evil consequences as some seem to fear will really follow, but it were better to let come what may than to temporize longer, hoping for a peace which will not come.

Of course our missionary boards will act, as they always have with due discretion and in deference to concensus of judgment as they may be able to gather it from the whole brotherhood, but they must be free and the sooner they declare their absolute and unqualified independence of such dictation as The Standard has attempted to exercise over them the better for all concerned. The churches will ultimately, if not immediately, approve such a course.

El Paso, Tex. P. J. Rice.

Exceedingly Humiliating.

To those of us who were personal friends of the lamented Isaac Errett the course of The Standard of late is exceedingly humiliating. We greatly deplore it. On the other hand our young ministers and all agencies employed to further the gospel should be very careful and keep in the middle of the good way and give the very least possible occasion for just criticism. In so far as baptism is concerned I have had little trouble in many years. The Presbyterian and M. E. ministers of a certain town were with me recently and we all used the same pool to immerse in. The battle is over and the smoke all but cleared away in the baptismal controversy.

Danville, Ill. Andrew Scott.

The Main Issue.

The attack made by the Christian Standard of Cincinnati upon the Foreign Christian Missionary Society seems to me very regrettable. By starting independent missionary efforts among the churches it will lead to the sending out of men and women unsuited in their personality or their physical health and get people away off on the foreign field without the assurance of regular or continuous support. A change of pastor in a local church or a decline of financial power may, under this arrangement, result in the abandonment of a missionary without resources 10,000 miles from home. Only by the co-operation of such a large number of churches that local vicissitudes counterbalance each other, and by working through a responsible board can regularity and continuity of support, two absolutely essential things, be secured. It is no mere accident that in its first attempts to encourage the sending of independent missionaries the Christian Standard finds itself tangled up in the old "anti" movement (see issue of June 10, pp. 8 and 9, "That Rejected Article").

I have the highest regard for the members of the present board of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and for its officers both as efficient and reliable managers of large enterprises and as Christian gentlemen. Their work in the past and their present plans so far as I know them are entitled to the hearty endorsement of the churches. Every church should continue and increase the support hitherto given them. It would be a disgrace to let factional bickerings interfere with the preaching and teaching of the gospel. As the Christian Standard itself says (June 10, page 9.)"There is no little confusion among us at present. It comes from some among us, having temporarily lost sight of the main issue." Very truly yours,

Indianapolis, Ind. C. B. COLEMAN.
Butler College.

Prefers Absent Treatment.

I'm mighty glad you have pressed the button on the attacks on the Foreign Society. I'm delighted with the words of approval in this week's paper. E. M. Todd hits centre in his suggestion of the most practical protest. The Standard czar cares little for your protest so long as you subscribe. Personally I find absent treatment far better for my spiritual health. I don't agree with you in all you have been saying lately but I'll stand by loyally in letting the light in on this unholy warfare.

C. A. FREER.

Millersburg, O.

Little Less than An Outrage.

I am thoroughly in sympathy with the Foreign Society and its worthy president and think it is little less than an outrage for the Standard to continue its attacks.

GEO. B. STEWART.

Colorado Springs, Colo.

Will Intensify His Support.

I want to offer my loyalty to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. I believe in those men and I believe they have the interests of the cause deeply at heart. I cannot imagine them capable of any act that would bring discredit upon the plea or the name of our Lord. Their administration has been most fruitful and there has been a steady growth both in the work on the field and in missionary enthusiasm at home. I do not intend to withdraw my support but rather to intensify it. Yes, I am for the Society.

Chicago. MEADE E. DUTT.
West End Church.

Strong Remonstrance, Hearty Endorsement.

Having written the Standard a strong remonstrance against its attacks upon the Foreign Society I wish to give my hearty endorsement of the stand taken by The Christian Century in this matter.

Doland, So. Dak. CLAIRE L. WAITE.

The Foreign Society a Personal Matter With Every Giver.

Your editorial, "A Time For Loyal Souls To Speak" is admirable. I wish every member in our brotherhood could read it. The repeated and unprincipled attacks upon the Foreign Society, so timed as to affect the offerings of the churches and Bible Schools and throw our International Convention into a state of panic are heartrending, particularly so, when we know that anything but a Christian motive can prompt them.

This cruel practice of jeopardizing the splendid work of the Foreign Society by attacks upon the officers who have been tested in every way and found absolutely genuine and worthy of our unlimited love and confidence, is a personal matter with me. The work of the society is my work. My prayers, my time, and my money have been put into it. The church I have served for nearly twelve years has put its money and prayers into this work. I have a right to protest against any man's effort to ruthlessly and cruelly cripple this holy enterprise, which God has looked upon with so much favor. Any man who has put anything worth while into the Society should rally to its defense in no uncertain way.

The unrighteous habit of intermittently plunging our people into cataclysmic controversies, surely for no good purpose, is ruinous to our spiritual welfare. A people living in such an atmosphere cannot grow into the higher spiritual graces.

J. H. GOLDNER.

Cleveland, O. Euclid Ave. Church.

Work Hindered by This Quibble.

Recent attack made upon our Foreign Christian Missionary Society are to be deplored. I have perfect confidence in the men who are leaders in this great work. They are loyal consecrated men. The advancement of the work of preaching the gospel is being hindered by this quibble. The work of Foreign Missions is too important a work to be subjected to such criticism as is being made at this time. Count me as one who stands by the Society. Their decision goes here.

Indianapolis. CLAY TRUSTY.
Seventh Church.

An Emphatic Protest.

Allow me to say amen to your editorial, "A Time for Loyal Souls to Speak Out." This constant effort to cripple our missionary work, by lessening the offerings for the support of the men whom we have sent out, seems to me little less than dastardly.

Rupert, Idaho. D. B. TITUS.

Native Christians Demand United Church.

I want to commend your editorial in The Christian Century regarding the many attacks the Standard has made repeatedly on the Foreign Society. That personal spite is the underlying cause of this persistent and offensive hostility is shown by the methods employed.

Too long have the missions been trying to stem the tide of this demand for Christian union on the foreign field. One thing is certain the native Christians will be satisfied with nothing less than a free united native church. The denominations that refuse to heed the demand will find their members gone to the union in spite of them. Bigotry in the mission field will be met with the contempt it deserves at home.

We must always insist that our differences be discussed in a righteous way, we must not permit any church paper to open its pages to the injury of any good man, much less so great a cause. Now that the fight is on do not stop until the issues are clearly made and settled for all time.

[Dr.] HUGH G. WELPTON.

Des Moines, Ia.

Disciples Cannot be "Bossed."

No paper, no organization is wise enough, good enough or entrenched enough, to "boss" the brotherhood, and every time I read the "Standard" I've the feeling that "bossism" comes near being a "Standard" specialty, only some issues make the feeling stronger than others.

Nothing makes a more unfailing test of my Christian temper than its editorial pages; wherefore I read it. I've prayed that it might be made fairer, sweeter, juster; and I've scolded the editors thereof privately, a little. If anathema would be effective, I'd pronounce it now and then.

I have such faith in the great good sense and solid unselfish character of our people as a whole, that I think the "Standard" in pursuit of the head of Archibald McLean will attend its own hanging before it secures his decapitation; if there is a man of God in the brotherhood, being used of God for great good above others—that man is McLean; the Lord possibly has great blessings in store for the Foreign Society and suffers "Standard" misrepresentation and injustice to further its plans for Christ's honor. The Cincinnati attitude is harmless in the long run because so contemptible; we need patience with it as with a spolied child, for the chastening will surely come whereby it will see "it" is not the brotherhood.

Your editorial resume of the situation and animus in it is timely, cogent, and palpably true. I congratulate you on its statement. You are making a great paper; a stimulating, challenging, Christian spirited paper. The Lord continue you in His grace.

Vincennes, Ind. E. F. DAUGHERTY.

What Shall One Say?

"Time to speak out!" What shall one say? What movement or organization among us will not be attacked by the Christian Standard? As far back as the Detroit Convention it was forced upon my mind that this paper was dedicated to an assault upon all of our missionary interests. What could be done? I protested, oh yes, to the owner and editor. But to what purpose was any protest by anybody? After the Norfolk episode I felt but one course was open to me and that was to refuse to take the paper, and since then not a copy of the Christian Standard has ever reached my desk. I did not feel that it was ministering to my growth in grace and felt I could get along better without it than with it. And I think I have. Really I have not known since then what it has been saying, what brethren it was assaulting, save for little rumors or references in our other papers.

Even now I do not know what can be done. I am out of sympathy with its spirit and have been for years, therefore I no longer receive it in my home. What more can I do, what more can any do? If people like the sort of thing it dishes out to its readers, why, as Lincoln said, that is the sort of thing they like. From what I see in your editorial as to the Standard's latest position on the appointment of Bro. arvis, I must simply say that I am wholly out of sympathy with any such sentiment. I have too much confidence in our Foreign Society to be misled by such unwarranted conclusions as the Standard sets forth. I am sick of this sqabbling in the name of the peaceful Jesus. Could I make any contribution to harmony and unity in our brotherhood it would be my joy. If my voice of protest against this latest scandal is of any value then I hurl it in thunder tones.

Augusta, Ga. HOWARD T. CREE.
First Church.

Loyal Not to My View But to Christ.

I have always entertained the highest regard for our Foreign Society, and I still believe in the conscience and ability of the brethren who administer its affairs. I also have the fullest confidence in the representatives on the foreign field. I believe that those heroic men and women know more about the needs of that situation than do any of us who remain at home. I am willing to trust them to the fullest extent, and to give them the largest possible freedom in dealing with converts, and the reception thereof. So long as they are willing to represent Christ in those dark places, I shall do all I can to encourage the church to support them. I deplore the disposition of any brother or brethren to suspect or attempt to arouse suspicion in the mind of others. Faith in men gives us more confidence in our Father.

I am not expecting any other man to concern himself about whether or not he is loyal to my views; I respect him because he is loyal to his view of Christ.

I thank God for any intelligent man who is willing to preach Christ to the ends of the earth. L. J. MARSHALL.

Kansas City, Mo.
Wabash Ave. Church.

Real Object of Standard's Attack.

There have been few times in the history of the Foreign Society when they have chosen a man better equipped in scholarship and more fitted through religious experience than Mr. Sarvis. My personal acquaintance with him for the two years past has led me to regard him as a man of remarkable balance and power. It is apparent to most thinking people that the Standard only makes Mr. Sarvis a pawn in its game to secure control of everything in the brotherhood through a policy of threats and suspicion. The real object of the Standard's attack are men whose lives are so holy and so serviceable to the brotherhood interests that they may not be assailed directly. With the Standard headed toward anti-ism at break-neck speed, it would seem that we might as well let it go to its logical goal and compete henceforth with the Octographic Review. I am not competent to pass upon the many questions of missionary administration that arise but I feel profoundly that to fail to practice Christian union on the foreign field at this time, even at the sacrifice of some lesser convictions, would be to nullify the force of all our larger holdings.

Evanston, Ill. O. F. JORDAN.

Heartsick Over This Attack.

A blow at our missionary interests is a blow at the heart of the brotherhood. I am heartsick over this latest attack. I could not believe it possible were not the evidence before me. I am determined to give the Foreign Society more ardent support than ever. If there must be a line of demarkation I want to be counted upon their side.

Gibson City, Ill. L. O. LEHMAN.

Utmost Confidence in Foreign Society.

I have the utmost confidence in the Foreign Society, its officers and its committee. There is a time and a place where frank and full speech will be timely: The coming national convention. And that convention for the well-being of our co-operation work ought to be a gathering together of representatives of the churches of Christ, to whom every organized society within our Brotherhood should be responsible, make report and give account of stewardship. There, if the Foreign Society or any other, has not properly represented the faith and life of the church, is the time for proper handling.

Meanwhile let us "go forward upon our knees." We have minds differing on many things of procedure. Let us seek afresh and continually the mind of Christ that it may possibly be said again, "it seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us."

Rockford, Ill. WM. B. CLEMMER.

A Contrary Opinion.

I have twice read your recent editorial enittled, "A Time for Every Loyal Soul to Speak Out."

Agreeing with you that "it is time for every loyal soul to speak," I take this occasion to speak out and say that you are wrong in the leading positions of that editorial. You misrepresent the Christian Standard, you misrepresent our brotherhood, and you are not in accord with the brotherhood upon the basis of Christian union. Before you attempt to extract the mote out of the Standard's eye you should remove the beam from your own eye.

The greatest peril today to our cause both at home and abroad is the erroneous teaching of The Christian Century.

Long Run, Ia. M. P. HAYDEN.

Unchristian Attacks.

What do I think of the present situation as indicated by the kindly protest of the Foreign Society? What can I think, having followed for years the unchristian attacks made by certain prominent men in the Standard company?

I know well, highly esteem and love some of the men associated with that once great paper, and I only wonder how they can continue the association under the present regime.

They fought the Christian Evangelist until they learned that J. H. Garrison was a spiritual giant against whom neither slings nor poisoned darts could avail anything.

Their virulent attacks on H. L. Willett, with misrepresentations of his teachings and writings as gross as those Bob Ingersoll made of the Bible, evidently had the same purpose as did their earlier attacks on Editor Garrison and his paper.

When A. McLean had Christian spirit enough to reprove their long-continued and unseemly contention, they turned their shafts toward him, and naturally are antagonistic to the work with which he is associated. Were I to characterize in one phrase my full conviction of the (un)-Christian Standard's attitude, I should say, it appears to be that of "religion for revenue only."

I will stand by the Standard when it becomes truly a Christian Standard, but I prefer the Octographic Review at present.

I shall never support The Standard in any way knowingly, until these unchristian attacks on our noblest men and organizations are stopped. I do not for a moment believe that all of its editors are guilty or in sympathy with this. I wish they might come to realize that some of the most conservative of us are so nauseated by the long-continued strife they foster and provoke, that our patience is about at an end, forbearance, ceasing to be a virtue. Yours for the truth in the spirit of Christ,

WM. E. ADAMS.

Danville, Ill., First Church.

Sorry Society Took Notice of Standard's Charges.

Your editorial on the above theme is timely and powerful. It is heartening to find one editor who has the courage to show up the blighting record of the Christian Standard. What does the Standard care for "our debt of honor" to the men and women at the front? It knows how to regulate things in India and China much better than the heroic souls who are grappling first hand with awful problems! No Mr. Editor, it's not the Standard's sense of honor. It is its grudge against the Foreign Society because to date it has not been able to control it. It would sacrifice every missionary and church on heathen soil to "down" those servants of God whose shoes it is not worthy even to dust. It would starve orphans if the superintendent of the orphanage did not acknowledge its creed as infallible. It would cut off the supplies of an army because perchance the board of strategy did not take its side of the controversy in the discussion between "tweedledee and tweedledum."

Many are sorry that our Foreign Society took any notice of this latest fiasco of the Standard. Many are anxious for the Society to ignore the Standard. The brotherhood is "on to" the Standard. It will be a complete humiliation if our Foreign Society allows itself to be drawn either into a controversy with a discredited journal, or makes, at its demand, any statement as to its future policy in appointing missionaries. Surely the men, who have never even batted an eye in the Standard's presence, will save us that humiliation!

Let me again thank you for your editorial. It is broad, sound, and inspiring. The Century's position is gaining ground every day. CECIL J. ARMSTRONG.

Monroe, Wisconsin.

Reactionary, Not Conservative.

It is indeed "Time for loyal souls to speak out" against the tyrannical rule of an organ half "anti" and the other half reactionary. Conservative is not the word, for one may be "conservative" and still be Christian in heart and conduct.

I was one that slowly and reluctantly acknowledged the situation even after I had ample evidence, but the editorial aroused the sleeping indignation that as a brotherhood we should tolerate such an influence and suffer the ignominy and disgrace that must be ours throughout the Christian churches.

I am continually wondering how long we will be thus disgraced, and how long we will tolerate it. The influence of that journal is practically nil in California. Of course, there are those whose prejudice has been so distorted that they mistake the vehement vituperation on which they weekly feed for righteous indignation.

By the way, The Christian Century is about the only paper with a national circulation that gives no uncertain sound, and that really has anything in it worth while. Probably a close second is the Pacific Christian. Some of us looked for relief from the "brotherhood paper" but are feeling disappointed. The Christian Evangelist under Brother Garrison, was a good, constructive journal, but now it is most difficult to find its policy if it has any. It seems to be casting a net for every kind and will probably make a poor catch.

While I am speaking "out" let me say I have endorsed the position for a long time, your paper takes toward the Christian standing of the unimmersed Christians, and also, the position of what "baptism" is. I think the reason why some cannot see the position you take and continue to misconceive it, is that pre-conceived idea that there is no baptism without immersion, as though the form is the principal thing. The spiritual aspects count for little with the legalistic mind. But surely any unprejudiced mind cannot help but see that it is the same faith, the same Savior, the same God, the same spirit, the same life and the same death, yes and the same good conscience, and, with equal penitence, the same regeneration and godly life following, but albeit a different form. Who will say the form is worth more than the substance? If we as a church are not willing to freely concede the baptism of those of proper age, and their Christian status, we will be left out of the union process, and present the sorry spectacle of a sect going to fossilization around a legal dogma! In fact the indication that we have a sectarian conscience is not far to seek, for in appealing to the brethren as to whether we are following Mr. Campbell, or not, in regard to baptism or anything else, is a betrayal of the fact that we consider ourselves a denomination appealing to our denominational leader. What real difference does it make to us in this day of grace, with our new situations and problems whether we are following Mr. Campbell or Martin Luther? Why not seek to know if we are following Christ? I submit that the only real way to follow Mr. Campbell, is not to take his opinion from his view-point, but to follow the Lord Jesus as best we may, for he did that.

I congratuate The Christian Century on its clearly conceived, and courageously stated, attitude toward our brethren of other denominations with whom we should unite in every good work. Enclosed find one dollar for sample copies of the issue of June 8th; I want my congregation to read that editorial and subscribe for The Century.

JOHN KENDRICK BALLOU.

Stockton, Cal.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXVII. Habakkuk and the Rise of Babylon

July 2. Text for Special Study, Hab. 2.

QUESTIONS.

1. What prophet spoke with confidence of the approaching fall of Nineveh?
2. In what year and under what circumstances did Nineveh fall?
3. What power rapidly took the place formerly held by Assyria?
4. How did Babylonia compare with Assyria in brutal strength and arrogance?
5. In what period did the prophet Habakkuk live?
6. What had been the expectation in Judah in connection with the hoped-for downfall of Assyria?
7. In reality did the fall of Assyria relieve Judah of her difficulties?
8. What problem did the change of rule from Assyria to Babylonia raise in the mind of Judah's leaders?
9. What sins among the people of Judah required punishment, and what did the prophet believe to be the instrument of this punishment?
10. Where did the prophet go to find his answer to the perplexities of his situation?
11. What was the oracle in which he found comfort?
12. What sins were making the Babylonians so fiercely hated by the people of Judah?
13. In what powers did the Babylonians put their confidence?
14. How does the prophet contrast Jehovah with the idols of heathen worship?
15. What are some of the literary features of the poem in chapter three?
16. What great event in the past experience of Israel does it describe?
17. What is the lesson drawn from this past manifestation of Jehovah's power?
18. What are the great texts of this prophecy?
19. What use did Paul make of the oracle in reference to faith?
20. In what sense is faith the victory that overcomes the world?

1. CHANGING EMPIRES.

In our last study the prophet Nahum spoke with confident assurance of the early fall of the great tyrant Nineveh, which had ruled the world from its throne upon the Tigris for centuries. That was somewhere between 660 and 606 B. C., probably about 645. In 606 B. C. that prophecy was completely fulfilled by the capture of Nineveh by the Babylonian and Median forces under Nabopolassar. Esarhaddon II, the Sardonapolus of the Greek historians, was the last monarch of the Assyrian empire, and tradition reports that when his capital was hopelessly surrounded by his foes he assembled his wives and children in the royal palace and burned it over his head, a suicide comparable to that committed years before by Zimri, the seven days king of Israel at Tirzah (1 Kings 16:15-17). A few years later, in 604 B. C., the Babylonians under their young and conquering sovereign Nebuchadrezzar met and defeated the Egyptians at Carchemish, thus gaining supremacy over the whole of western Asia. By this change of empires the old tyranny of Assyria was merely exchanged for that of Babylon, and as the subject nations soon discovered, the rule of Babylonia or Chaldea was even more ferocious and exacting than that of Assyria had been.

Meantime Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah, was ruling in Jerusalem, and Jeremiah, the prophet, was vainly endeavoring to awaken the conscience of King and people to the necessity of obedience to the will of God. In Josiah the prophets had had a staunch patron and friend, but Jehoiakim, his second son, was concerned with far less important and more material enterprises. Jeremiah reproved his royal master in unmeasured words (Jer. 22: 22:13-19; 26:33-21) and in consequence was under suspicion and disfavor throughout his reign. It is probable that the message of Habakkuk belongs to this period of Jehoiakim who regarded neither the words of prophecy nor the claims of justice, and brought upon his land such dire disasters because of his rebellion against the Babylonian power, first in 601 B. C. and then in 597.

2. THE CRY OF HABAKKUK.

Of the prophet, whose name is otherwise unknown, nothing is recorded either in the book or elsewhere in the Old Testament. He was one of the moral leaders of Israel, who was distressed at the condition of things in his age. The particular problem which seemed to baffle explanation was the transfer of power from one overbearing and cruel people to another. When Judah looked forward with confidence to the overthrow of Assyria by the destruction of Nineveh, it was confidently expected by Nahum and the other prophetic spirits in Judah that this event would be the end of trouble. Why should not the nation from that day forth be free to work out its own political and religious problems in peace?

But unhappily the downfall of Nineveh was only the beginning of fresh disasters. Upon the ruins of that empire arose one more exacting and more fierce. The cruelties practiced by the Assyrians in their western campaigns were forgotten in the atrocities committed by the Babylonians. How could such events be justified? Where was the providence that permitted such miscarriage of justice?

But a still more intimate problem arose in connection with Judah's own inner conditions. The land was filled with violence and misrule, probably the result of changing political conditions and the weakness of Jehoiakim's government. The opening verses of chapter one are description of this spoiling and violence. For such conditions there must be punishment, and the prophet sees that God is raising up this Babylonian power to be the instrument of chastisement for the immoral and perverse elements in Judah. The Chaldeans, or Babylonians, swift and bitter, are to devastate the land like wild beasts. Their advance is irresistible and their plunder not to be reckoned. They scoff at opposition and laugh at fortresses. Wicked and insolent they press onward, proud and godless.

How can God enploy such a nation as the weapon of his correction of Judah? Does it not seem unaccountable that He who is too pure to look upon iniquity should regard with tolerance a destroyer so rapacious and insolent as this dreaded foreigner, who spoils the nation with his plundering raids and catches them as fish in his net? Will he never cease to destroy? Where is there hope when he advances? These are the problems that stir the heart of the prophet to protest and insistence upon response. Sin must be punished, as he believes; but why choose so rapacious and vindictive an instrument, and why seem to destroy hope forever by passing on the power of world-wide sovereignty from one tyrant to another?

3. THE PROPHETIC WATCHTOWER.

(Chap. 2.)

The prophet now attempts to find a solution for his problems. Like a lonely watcher of the night he retires to the tower of outlook and meditation. He demands of God, like Job, an accounting for the moral perversity of the age and the riddles too deep for his own solution. In this mood of waiting and listening he received the divine response. It came in oracle which has become one of the most notable words of prophecy. It was not easy of comprehension at first, as he was told, but the gradual unfolding of history would make it increasingly clear.

Then the oracle was given. It was in two impressive utterances. The first was the admission that the Babylonian enemy was puffed up, insolent and unjust. No defense was made of this instrument of the divine justice in the world. But the second part of the oracle gave the true solution of the difficulty: The just man shall survive through his faithfulness; victory comes by holding on persistently to the divine assurance. Here is the answer of the Book of Job to the problem of suffering. We cannot always understand why the events of life take the ordering that seems perverse and distressing, but our salvation is in trust in the providence of God. In waiting for His disclosure of his purpose we find satisfaction and victory. The just man lives by his faithfulness.

Then follows a list of the sins which made the character of the Babylonian spoiler so difficult to tolerate. A drunkard, haughty, avaricious, rapacious, cruel, he gathered nations in his net without remorse. Surely such a brutal people must come to grief. And here follow the taunting words of the nations he has ravaged. Who will not take pleasure in the humiliation of the Babylonian? The violence wrought by the conqueror shall be returned upon his head by those whom he has plundered and impoverished.

The woes that follow in the latter part of chapter 2 apply admirably to this rising power which seemed so remorseless. The cruelties practiced by these Babylonians were enough to make the unconscious timbers and stones cry out from their places in the ruins of cities. Their buildings were the result of bloodshed and iniquity. The work of generations they destroyed without remorse, little aware of the fact that Jehovah and not they was to rule over all the world. They had made the nations drunk in their violence and cast shame upon them. In consequence they must drink to the dregs the cup of God's avenging justice. Their plundering raids in Palestine shall not be forgotten. The violence done to man, to the land and the beasts of the field must yet have its righteous compensation.

Makers and worshipers of images shall suffer in the folly of their superstition. How can intelligent men bow down to wood and stone and call upon them for help? There is no power in a dumb idol. But Jehovah is in his holy temple, let all the earth keep silent before Him.

4. AN ODE OF CONFIDENCE.

The final chapter of this short book is a poem fashioned after the manner of a psalm. Indeed its structure, its heading, its subscription, "To the chief musician, on my stringed instruments," and the triple appearance of the pausal word "Selah" at the end of stanzas, shows that the poem was used liturgically in the temple service, and may have been copied in this book from some collection of temple hymns. Its theme is the confidence of the psalmist in God, in view of His former wonderful works in behalf of His people. Few passages of the Old Testament are grander than the section of this poem which describes the coming of Jehovah from His ancient habitation in the southern deserts, leading his people to the place of their new possession in the land of promise. This passage is to be compared with the similar descriptions in Judges 5 and Deuteronomy 3, which emphasize the same ancient Hebrew belief that Jehovah originally inhabited Mt. Sinai in the desert south of Palestine, and had changed his habitation to Mt. Zion when the tribes journeyed through the wilderness to the borders of Canaan. At that time nature was in a panic at the approach of deity. All the voices of creation were lifted in terror or exultation. The sun and moon stood still, and the waters were dried up.

Yet God was not angry with nature at that time, but with the enemies of his people. Why not then have confidence in the same God in every time of trouble? Devastation and ruin may come against the land, and nature be stricken with drought and barrenness. But the man of faith may rejoice in God who is his strength and his defense.

5. THE VICTORY OF FAITH.

Into the critical problems connected with the book of Habakkuk it is impossible to enter. The commentaries and introductions deal at length with such questions. Whether the book is integral and consecutive or fragmentary and in parts displaced cannot be easily determined. But its central teaching is found in the oracle so admirably stressed by the entire arrangement of material both preceding and following it. The just man lives by his faithfulness. No spiritual truth was ever more worthy of emphasis than this. The trust in God that waits with serene confidence for the parting of the clouds and the clear shining of the sun is the secret of victory over all misfortune.

It was not strange that the apostle Paul seized upon this great text and made it central in his teaching (Romans 1:17; Gal. 3:11.) It is, to be sure, with a new interpretation of the word faith that Paul employs the text. In his vocabulary faith has become the concrete and explicit acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as a personal revelation of God and the object of implicit trust. Therefore, with Paul faith embodies the entire complex of personal relations to the Master in loving submission and service. This is quite a different term, therefore, from the faith of our text, which denotes reliance, steadfastness and waiting upon God.

And yet in the Christian thought of the first century the word faith thus made concrete and personal by Paul regained also its universal character as a Christian trust in the moral order of the world, and the ultimate triumph of righteousness over sin. It is in this sense that it appears in the Johannine writings. "This," cries the great Evangelist in the first of his supplementary epistles, "is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith" (1 John 5:5.) But he immediately adds, as if to keep the personal values of Jesus' leadership in mind, "And who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the son of God." In this firm confidence, Christian trust in God and in the divine purpose for the world reaches its highest point. The just man, the saint, lives by his faith in the life and program of the Christ, and in this confidence he leans upon God and awaits in confidence the issue of the divine program.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The title of section XXVII will be, "Zephaniah and the Day of the Lord." and of XXIV, "The Early Years of Jeremiah."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The rise of the Babylonian empire.
2. Jehoiakim and the prophets of his day.
3. The moral problem in the mind of Judah involved in the transfer of authority from Assyria to Babylonia.
4. The oracle of Habakkuk and its value as a theodicy.
5. The literary structure of the Book of Habakkuk, especially the poem in chapter 3.
6. The use of Habakkuk's oracle in the New Testament, and in the messages of the reformers like Luther and Calvin.

LITERATURE.

G. A. Smith, "The Book of the Twelve Prophets" vol. II; A. B. Davidson (Cambridge Bible for Schools); F. W. Farrar, "The Minor Prophets" (Men of the Bible); Kirkpatrick, "The doctrine of the Prophets," pp. 269-290; Jordan, "Prophetic Ideas and Ideals," pp. 130-137.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic, July 2, Ways of Serving Our Nation. Esth. 44:1-17. (A Patriotic Consecration Meeting.)

These are days for patriotic expression, and the purpose which brings us together in this meeting is religious. But patriotism and religion are branches from the same stem, and a patriotic consecration meeting is perfectly consistent. To ask for ways of serving our nation is another way of asking for ways of serving our Lord. Are we not as Christians committed to the good? And did not Paul conceive the powers of the state as "the powers that be ordained of God" and that "rulers are not a terror to the good work, but to the evil?" Indeed we must regard all institutions and movements which make for the promotion of our well-being as a part of the work of bringing in the kingdom.

Ways of serving the country. These are times for encampments and reunion of the G. A. R.; of dress parade of the National Guards; of flags and fire-crackers for the children. Our minds almost naturally revert to the days of the Revolution, of Washington, and Valley Forge, and our souls are stirred by the brave men of that day who consecrated their lives to the cause of freedom. We all but regret that we were not privileged to have a part in that immortal struggle. A minister recently said in a memorial sermon that he envied just a little the old soldier who had been thus privileged to serve his country. We rightly honor the man who was a true patriot and did not hesitate to answer his country's call with his life in behalf of the cause of liberty. No more fitting tribute could well be paid than to close the houses of craft and commerce and to adorn their graves with flags and flowers.

But after we have paid all due homage to our brave sires who bought our liberty with their own life blood, let us rejoice that the barbarism of war is soon to be numbered with the things of the past and that it is no longer necessary. While in our history it has been inevitable, it was none-the-less destructive. The destruction of property, the loss of time, and waste of human life, have rendered the world that much poorer. We should rejoice that we are privileged to serve our nation in a more fruitful and constructive way. It is our glorious privilege to live for our country. Here is the field for our lives. We are to serve by opposing the various forms of our national evils. What would be a better service than to put all our might to the destruction of the liquor business which claims a hundred thousand lives outright annually? To stand for honest representation in the official life in our city, state, and nation is to guard the foundations of a free people's government. To stand for integrity in business, out of yhich alone confidence can come, tends to weld our people into a great body which in turn strengthens and protects the individual.

Not only is this our opportunity, but our Christian obligation. As Christians we condemn the wrong and stand for the right. We cannot then say that this wrong was done in the political field and is, therefore, of no concern to us. It must concern us and for us to ignore it is to shirk our Christian duty.

Moslem Divisions Healing

The progress and sense of strength of Mohammedanism has also been checked hitherto by the great division which makes two people of the followers of the prophet. In Bombay a month ago there was a riot between the Sunnis and the Shiahs which resulted in as many deaths as a small battle and was only ended by rifle fire from the British troops. Persia is mainly Shiite, holding to the Koran, but rejecting the tradition and the authority of the early Caliphs, Abubeker, Omar, and Othman, while regarding Ali as caliph and martyr. Turkey and the rest of the Moslem world is mainly Sunnite. But the revival of Moslem hopes and zeal, the misfortunes of Persia and the evident purpose of the Christian powers to exploit Turkey for their own profit are beginning to draw the leaders of the two sects together. Recent conferences between these leaders make it possible that among the heathen people the Christian missionary, and the Christian powers of Asia, may soon have to deal with a Mohammedanism not only of revived missionary zeal, but also of united faith. Only a Christianity true to the orders of its Founder in active discipline of the whole world can win in such a conflict.—Men and Missions.

I need not tell you that you will find your labor prosper in your hands in proportion as you live near to Him, in all the ways He has appointed—in His blessed sacrament, in the solemn prayers of the Church, in the private and even, if I may say, in the unspoken prayers which, amidst all the occupations of life, will ascend from your own heart.—William E. Gladstone.

When Christ gets into a man's heart all the rest follows—all the cleanliness comes the same day, and on the morrow comes music, and on the third day comes the dawn of heaven.—Joseph Parker.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

Ogden Sunday-school secured nine dollars as its offering on Children's Day.

Washburn Church Sunday-school raised one hundred dollars on Children's Day.

Fisher Church Sunday-school made an offering on Children's Day of $27.53.

The churches at Prairie Hall and Berryville are being ministered to by I. Kello.

W. S. Gambo has resigned at Herrin and entered the pastorate at Olmey on June 4.

Camp Point Sunday-school made a Children's Day offering of $66.58.

Saint Francisville is having preaching one-half time by J. M. Battenfield, whose home is at Clay City.

The Sunday-school at Batavia, where E. A. Henry is pastor, will contribute twenty-five dollars as its Children's Day offering.

Mrs. Royal Dye and family have returned to their home in Eureka, after some months absence visiting with relatives.

Miss Bertha Lacock is home on a furlough from her mission work in Porto Rico. She is resting in Eureka.

Pekin Sunday-school received an offering of more than twenty dollars for foreign missions, on Children's Day.

Harold E. Monser, residing at Champaign, is preaching on alternate Sundays at Findlay and Cadwell.

Roy E. Weare, who was graduated this month from Ashley Johnson's Bible College in Tennessee, is to become pastor of Joliet Church.

Julius Robertson, son of the pastor of Shelbyville church won first honors in the Interstate Athletic and Oratorical Contest held at Charleston last month.

E. W. Sears, pastor at Winchester, delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the high school graduates, and was the chief speaker on Decoration Day.

Denver Church Sunday-school made a Children's Day offering of $55.04. The offering was made without a special Children's Day program.

The church at Quincy, where Clyde Darsie is pastor, will have a revival meeting in October, conducted by Lowell C. McPherson.

Danville First Church Sunday-school received an offering of about twenty dollars on Children's Day, which is to be increased before remitted to the Foreign Society.

The Sunday-school at West Point will send eight dollars and eighty-four cents for foreign missions, as a result of its Children's Day celebration.

The new church at Concord was dedicated last Sunday by Secretary J. Fred Jones. Two weeks from that date the secretary is to conduct the dedicatory service at Mill Shoals.

Evengelist, H. M. Barnett closed a two-weeks' meeting at Lowe's Chapel, resulting in twelve additions. The pastor of this church is E. T. Hartley, whose ministry is succeeding.

The revival at Galesburg, where J. A. Barnett is pastor, and which is conducted by Charles Reign Scoville and his helpers, in the tabernacle built in a day, is meeting with phenomenal success.

State Secretary, J. Fred Jones, assisted in an all-day meeting at Allenville the first Sunday in June, and ordained J. W. Hoskins to the ministry and two elders for the local church.

The baccalaureate sermon for Lincoln College was delivered by Milo Atkinson of Centennial Church, Bloomington. The subject of the sermon was "Instruction in Grace."

A class of young people in University Place Sunday-school, Champaign, taught by the pastor, Stephen E. Fisher, made an offering for foreign missions of two hundred and seventy-six dolars, which is expected to reach more than three hundred dollars.

A. H. Wilson, who has been pastor for two years at Wapella, left the church to accept a pastorate in Australia, his native land. Before leaving Wapella, he was ordained to the ministry by State Secretary J. Fred Jones, with the co-operation of ministers from surrounding towns.

David H. Shields delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the high school graduates of Eureka for the third consecutive year. He was also honored with the invitation to deliver the memorial sermon. Mr. Shields read a paper before the Ministerial association at Peoria on a recent Monday morning.

Evangelist H. O. Breeden was interrupted in his meeting at Santa Rosa, California, by a message advising of the serious illness of his father, whose residence is at Ipava, Ill. The evangelist, together with his singer, Mr. Travis, was invited to return in the fall for another meeting.

At Springfield, West Side Church, there were seven additions the first Sunday in June, all but one of these being by confession, and the result of decision day. The Children's Day program in the evening resulted in an offering of almost forty dollars.

O. L. Cole, who has been pastor of Mt. Sterling Church for two years, presented his resignation to the congregation, to take effect the first of September. Mr. Cole is leaving for the purpose of doing graduate work in the university, and with the appreciation and esteem of the entire church and community.

The sixtieth anniversary of the organization of the Table Grove Church was celebrated last Sunday. J. H. Garrison, editor of the Christian Evangelist, delivered the addresses morning and evening. Visiting pastors and friends of the church made addresses in the afternoon. Fred S. Nichols is the pastor.

C. E. French, for the past three years in the pastorate at Tallula, presented his resignation to the congregation. No announcement has been made regarding Mr. French's future plans, but his relinquishment of the pulpit at Tallula will afford some other strong church an opportunity to call a very successful pastor.

At Central Church, Peoria, where W. F. Turner is minister, there have been fifty-four additions in six months. The congregations in the evening are better than for many years, and the Sunday-school is in a thriving condition. The missionary budget of this church, together with that of Howett Street is twelve hundred dollars. With one half of this amount, a living link missionary will be supported on the foreign field.

Among the resolutions adopted at the Fifth District Convention at Litchfield was the following:

"We the representatives of the Church of Christ, assembled at the Fifth District Convention, whnch was held May 31 and June 1, denounce the methods used in the election of William Lorimer to the United States Senate, and the retention of his seat by the vote of Senator Cullom."

The Children's Day offering at Beardstown was $18.50. This will be considerably increased before remittance is made to the Foreign Society. The church at Beardstown is a new organization and has been without a property of its own until recently. The building occupied for some time has been purchased. The building is not sufficiently large for the Sunday-school, and arrangement has been made to use the parsonage for some classes. G. W. Morton is the successful pastor.

Albert Schwartz has resigned at Clinton after a three years' pastorate there. He closes his work June 25. The local paper in commenting upon the city-wide regret with which his departure is being received notes particularly the "fine spirit of unity existing among the ministers of the community," which spirit, it says, has been largely due to Mr. Schwartz's inuence. He will not take up any work this summer but will take a much needed rest and be ready for work in September.

The new Fourth Church, Danville, was ready for dedication June 18. Secretary I. N. McNash was dedicator. There were three services—10:30 a. m., 2: 30 p. m., and 7:30 p. m., with the communion service in the morning. The afternoon service included the dedicatory sermon. Owing to the small auditorium and the location of the church, the other churches of the city did not adjourn their services. First Church choir furnished the music for the afternoon service. The pastor is H. D. Williams.

F. Louis Starbuck will remain another year, by invitation of the church at Shirley. On the anniversary of the dedicaton of the new church and of the present pastorate, an entire day's celebration was held. Speakers from outside the town were H. H. Peters, Mrs. Carrie F. Zeller, Silas Jones and J. Fred Jones. In the reports it was discovered that all debts had been paid and that a balance was held by the treasurer. The congregation is now ambitious for a parsonage, and such a building will likely be started at an early date. The membership was more than doubled last year. At the Sunday-school service in the morning, an offering amounting to nearly thirty dollars was received for foreign missions.

W. B. Clemmer, pastor at Central Church, Rockford, conducted services at Freeport, on a recent Sunday evening.

Central Church, Rockford, W. B. Clemmer, minister, had, as a goal for Children's Day, 300 present and $30.00 offering. The attendence reached 215 and the offering was $44.75.

T. W. Grafton of Kansas City addressed the City Sunday-school Union in Peoria on the Boy Problem, and was listened to with great enthusiasm. As a partial result of his visit, many Boy Scout companies are being organized.

J. H. Gilliland, who is supplying the pulpit at Normal, left vacant by the removal of Wm. G. McColley to Paxton, is endeavoring to induce the church to revive the building project which has been under way for a year.

Andrew Scott, district secretary, of Danville, sails with his daughter from Montreal for Glasgow, July 1. Mr. Scott came to this country from Scotland. He will visit the scenes of his early life making headquarters with his brother James Scott in Edinburgh.

News Editorials

An Audience Or a Church, Which?

"Our young pastor is doing a great work. He draws great audiences and thrills them with wonderful eloquence."

The above is an extract from a report recently found in news columns of one of our papers. It is to be hoped that "our young pastor," in this case, is doing something more than drawing and thrilling great audiences. Unless he is doing something more, his work is amounting to very little. A minister's supreme duty is to build up the church. That is something more than getting people into the church building, helping them through the baptistry, or writing their names on the church roll. It is the making of a brotherhood that will illustrate before the community the meaning of Christ's ideals and demonstrate their practicability. Getting an audience is a little job; building a church is a tremendous undertaking. Unfortunately there is a popular standard that measures a church by its membership and a preacher by the size of his audiences. Accordingly some superficial ministers are tempted to work, not for a church, but for an audience. Such men never build a church. They may sometimes get an audience, but never, a church. As Dr. Charles E. Jefferson says; "A church is of supreme importance. . . . An audience is not worth working for. An audience is a crowd, a church is a family. An audience is a gathering, a church is a fellowship. An audience is a collection, a church is an organism. An audience is a heap of stones, a church is a temple. Preachers are ordained, not to attract an audience, but to build a church. Coarse and ambitious and worldly men, if richly gifted, can draw audiences. Only a disciple of the Lord can build a church. It is not uncommon for a supposedly mighty church to wilt like Jonah's goard, as soon as the man in the pulpit vanishes. The structure was of hay and wood and stubble, and it disappeared in the fire of God's swift judgment day."

Chicago

By Vaughan Dabney.

On Friday, June 9, the executive board of the Chicago C. W. B. M. union met in the tea-room of Marshall Field's and arranged that the next city rally would be held in October at Sheffield Ave., Irving Park arranging the program.

The second quarterly congregational dinner and business meeting of the Metropolitan Church was held Monday evening, June 12. Charles Reign Scoville, minister at large, was present and addressed the meeting.

The regular annual meeting of the Chicago Christian Business Men's Association was held June 12 around the banquet table in the Grand Pacific Hotel. C. C. Morrison delivered the address of the evening. At present there are over forty members of this association.

The seventh session of the summer school of missions, under the auspices of the interdenominational committees of the Central West, representing Women's Boards of Foreign and Home Missions, will be held at Winona Lake, Ind., June 22 to 29. The Disciples on these committees are Mrs. A. R. Atwater, Mrs. Carl Bushnell, Mrs. E. M. Bowman, Mrs. T. B. Knights, Mrs. C. C. Morrison and Mrs. M. E. Harlan.

Nelson Trimble reports a busy week at Gary, June 18-25. This week is in commemoration of the opening of the Gary work a year ago, in which time we are advised that two churches have been erected, three corner lots secured, and $11,000 in cash, loans and pledges, has been raised. The program consists of athletic contests, banquets, Sunday-school and C. W. B. M. conferences. Some of the speakers for the conferences are Errett Gates, Austin Hunter, I. R. Lines, Claude E. Hill, O. F. Jordan, Cecil Sharp and Herbert Carpenter. On Saturday evening, June 17, a supper is to be given to the Englewood choir, after which a musical program will be rendered in the Jefferson school by the choir. On Thursday, June 22, a Gary C. W. B. M. will be organized by the women of the South Bend Church. On Sunday afternoon, June 25, the corner stone of the new church will be laid. All Chicago Disciples are invited.

Rev. John Clifford of London, president of the Baptist World Alliance, preached the baccalaureate sermon for the members of the spring graduating class at the seventy-ninth convocation, Sunday, June 11 at Mandel Hall. Dr. Clifford thinks the great need of today is spiritual toning. On Tuesday, June 13, the convocation address was delivered by Count Johann Heinrich Von Bernstorff, Imperial German Ambassador to the United States. His subject was "The Foundations of the German Empire." The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Dr. Clifford, and Count Von Bernstorff received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Chicago is determined to call a halt on Missouri's evident attempt to start a procession of our preachers to that Beulah land of Discipledom. The curve of that state's policy was not disclosed in the call to Professor A. W. Taylor, but when G. A. Campbell was called to Hannibal and R. W. Gentry to Columbia there were good grounds for concern. The most guileless cannot doubt the last maneuver, however. Kirksville calls Orvis F. Jordan, of Evanston Church, the captain of our hosts here! Such casus belli could not be ignored. The Evanston Church rose up, armed itself in defense and flashed the news to The Business Men's Association meeting that very night in annual session. These men went to the telegraph office after adjournment and sent night letters to the Evanston pastor saying that he could not go, that the work here was too great to spare him, that he belonged to the whole city and a good many other things just like that. Next morning Mr. Jordan sat on his veranda and held a reception of messenger boys for two hours. After which he sent a messenger off with about ten words of his own. These words went to Kirksville. They were very courteous, no doubt, but they meant, simply, "No." Let Missouri take knowledge from this that Chicago is aware of her designs and intends to defeat them!

At a reunion of about forty former members of the West Side (Jackson Boulevard) Church held in Los Angeles, May 19, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted and sent to the Jackson Boulevard Church.

"Grateful for the manifold blessings that have attended our days and the kindly Providence that has directed all our wanderings and for this happy hour that brings us together again we wish to send a message of remembrance and love to the church and to the pastor (J. W. Allen) who have helped to make us all that we are for Christ and his kingdom. Our minds go back to the days gone by in the dear old West Side Church when we were associated with the heroic men and women who through darkness and light lifted up the standard of the cross. One by one we have called their names and enumerated their quiet and unassuming sacrifices. The most of us as little children learned the way of life from the lips of that prince of men and loving pastor, J. W. Allen, and many of us his hands laid in the memorial baptismal grave and over some of us his benediction was pronounced when the marriage vows were spoken. We remember with tenderest love the men and women of God whom we knew in the years of "Auld Lang Syne" who went bravely on toiling upward in the night. Now we believe that they have found the morning light. They being dead yet speak and their works do follow them. We remember the charter members two of whom we have with us tonight. We remember the elders and deacons, our Sunday-school superintendent and teachers and the officers of all the societies. We count it our joy and crown to have been numbered with this royal company. We live over again the blessed hours of the prayer-meeting service and we have spoken the names of the dear souls who spoke of the peace that comes from above and we have sung again tonight the songs we heard there when we were children. Of all the beautiful pictures that are painted on memory's wall the ones of the dear faces of that blessed fellowship are the most imperishable. We have shaken your hands again tonight and have taken new courage for the tasks of all the morrows because of the memories of what you have been. We know of at least a score of churches in our beautiful sunny southern California which have been enriched by the treasures that have poured from your hearts as our deserts have been made beautiful and fruitful by the rivers that have been turned to them from the hearts of the mountains. We would speak a word to show you the magnitude of your undying work through the unending years. We subscribe our names as a poor token of our love and appreciation. God be with us till we meet again, till we meet at Jesus' feet. God be with us till we meet again."

In addition to this was also a letter from Bruce Brown, a former pastor of Jackson Boulevard, who was present at this reunion. He says "From a small company of former members of Jackson Boulevard is growing in Los Angeles what will without doubt be our greatest church in all the great west, Wilshire Boulevard Christian Church. Had it not been for the dear old Jackson Boulevard Church this great work in Los Angeles would never have been possible."

Fourth District Convention.

The Fourth District Convention which recently convened in Minonk took a significant forward step so far as the leadership of the churches by the District organization is concerned. A definite plan was formulated for a campaign by the district to enlarge the offerings of all the churches to missions and benevolences. Each church was urged to formulate a definite missionary prayer for itself which shall be fair to all our general interests and adequate to their ability. A standard of $2 per resident member was set as the proposed aim of the churches for the coming year, and arrangements made for vigorous effort to bring the churches to the standard. We believe the plan is good for the following reasons:

1. It includes all missions and benevolences, not simply our own state and district work.

2. It sets a standard for the churches to strive for.

3. This standard, while hardly the maximum for which churches should strive is far in excess of former efforts and approaches more clearly our ability and responsibility.

4. It leaves the churches free to formulate their own missionary programs and divide their money as they see fit only suggesting that at least 15 per cent be given to state and district missions.

5. It solves for our churches the problem of the unification of our missionary enterprises by handling it in the local church.

6. It gives to each church the proper missionary perspective, one that is adequate to our ability, fair to all interests, and world-wide in its reach.

The plan has been tried in a few of our churches in recent years with success and we are looking hopefully forward to larger things this coming year. Further particulars will be published later.

Gibson City. L. O. LEHMAN.

Secretary's Letter.

June 11 the Normal Church raised $12,269 in cash and pledges as a starter for a new church building and extended a call to J. H. Gilliland to become their pastor and he has accepted. Bro. Gilliland has been supplying the pulpit for some weeks and had charge of the services when the money was raised. This is a very happy arrangement the leadership of a master church-builder.

The field secretary spent Sunday, the 4th, with the Allenville church, Major Griffith minister. There were two services in the grove and one in the building. Bro. Mathers was also present. John Hoskins was ordained to the ministry and two elders of the church were ordained at the time. The church is thriving under the inspiring ministry of Bro. Griffith. He and his family are all fine singers.

Hundreds of Illinois churches have not yet sent us their statistical reports for this year just closed. Kindly look after it at once if yours has not been sent, using the stamped envelope we mailed you. This is important, brethren, in order to have a correct Year Book.

The missionary year will close in a few weeks. The treasurer's books show that not half the church in Illinois have made an offering thus far to state missions. Has yours? Look into the matter and if it has not, present our cause to your people right soon before they go away on their vacation and take the state offering and be counted as a contributng church. It ought to be a matter of real pride and gratification to know that your congregation is in line to help evangelize Illinois and aid the weak churches in their struggle.

W. D. DEWEESE, Office Sec'y-Treas.
J. FRED JONES, Field Secretary.
Bloomington, Ill.

Church Life

—The cut on the front page is loaned by the Union Pacific Ry., whose train under the management of O. F. Jordan leaves the Northwestern Station in Chicago Tuesday, June 27 at 10:45 p. m. On this page in last week's paper will be found the itinerary and schedule.

—The publishers of the Bethany Graded lessons are surprised and pleased at the way orders are coming for these lessons for the summer greater. Many schools are preparing for the autumn by introducing the lessons now.

* * *

A new church was dedicated at Wewoka, Okla., on June 4.

Dr. Bruce Brown, pastor at Fullerton, Calif., reports twenty-two additions to the church during April and May.

C. C. Wilson, of First Church, Milwaukee, is secretary of the Congregational ministers' association of that city and also secretary of the general ministerial association.

The congregation of First Church, South Leavenworth, Kan., have been donated a lot, and plans for building will be begun immediately.

The church at Hill City, Kansas, will hold a revival beginning the second Lard's day in October. Charles E. McVay of Hardy, Nebraska, will have charge of the music.

The annual convention of the Missouri Christian Missionary Society, held this year at Cape Girardeau, had a large attendance. Next year's meeting will be held at Brookfield.

There were three adults added to the Christian Church in Blandinsville on last Sunday at the morning service. The church is full of cheer as we approach dedication. C. R. Wolford is the minister.

S. T. Willis was inaugurated president of Virginia Christian College at Lynchburg, Va., last week, succeeding Joseph Hapgood. The latter was present and made an address at the inauguration exercises.

John P. Sala closed his first year at Central Church, Dayton, Ohio, and reports 140 additions to the membership. The Children's Day offering was $300, the largest in their history.

A. N. Glover, who resigned his pastorate at Fullerton, California, on account of ill-health is recovering slowly, but will probably rest several months longer before taking charge of another work.

J. H. Fuller has terminated his work as missionary in Monterrey, Mex., where he has spent four years under the auspices of the C. W. B. M. He reports himself as enthusiastic for Mexican missions.

It is of interest to note that S. M. Perkins, of Davenport, Ia., was recently elected to the office of president of the Iowa Sunday-school Association comprising twenty-two affiliated religious bodies.

J. H. Challener has begun work as pastor at Chikasha, Okla. He captivates the local paper with his remark that his motto is "Keep things moving," and explains that it means either the work must move or himself.

J. M. Rudy has resigned at Greencastle, Ind., to close his work Sept. 1. He will enter upon evangelistic work. Mr. Rudy's work has been singularly successful in Greencastle and his previous evangelistic experience was notable.

Fred M. Gordan, of Knoxville, Pa., has accepted a call to Flatbush Church, Brooklyn, succeeding Walter S. Rounds who has become university pastor at the State University of Indiana.

Barton O. Aylesworth, ex-president of Colorado State College and of Drake University has accepted a call to the church in Chandlerville, Ill. Illinois is his home state and she welcomes him back to her borders.

Claire L. Waite and Mrs. Waite are in a good meeting at Doland, S. D. A new church has been organized, twenty-five persons have responded to the invitation to accept Christ, and a fine lot donated for a new house.

For eight weeks James W. Johnson, minister at Redfield, Ia., has been confined at home from a severe attack of appendicitis but will be able to be in his pulpit again June 18. During his illness, Marvin Lansbury of Neosha, Mo., a Drake student, supplied the pulpit.

C. A. MacDonald, the Sunday-school specialist, who has been holding institutes in various parts of the land has accepted a call to be superintendent of young people's work and leader in the Sunday-school of First Church, New York City, W. L. Fisher, pastor.

E. L. Day, formerly of Noblesville, Ind., was installed as pastor of North Park Church, Indianapolis, Ind., recently. Among the ministers who attended and took part in the services were C. H. Winders, A. L. Orcutt, A. B. Philputt, C. M. Fillmore and Clay Trusty.

John R. Ewers is delivering a series of Wednesday evening lectures on "The Christian and His Social Relations" at East End Church, Pittsburgh. Problems of the family, business, pleasure, society, etc., are being treated. His last two lectures are "Will Jesus' Social Teachings Work Today?" and "What am I Going to Do About it?"

In his church calendar E. F. Daugherty of Vincennes, Ind., confesses that he forgot the prayer-meeting one Wednesday evening! He was so actively working for the completion of a Y. M. C. A. building fund whose time limit expired that evening that he "forgot that this church existed. That's the first half-hour he has forgotten it, and it probably won't occur again."

A. D. Harmon, pastor of First Church, St. Paul, will sever his relationship with that church October 1, after a fourteen year pastorate. The church board has known of his purpose for many months. These years, he says, have been full of hard work and joy. In that period the church has grown from a virtual mission into a splendid prestige, equipment and permanent strength. Mr. Harmon has been intimately identified with all the religious activities of the city—president of the city ministers' union, president of the city civic federation from its organization, and ten years president of the Disciples' state missionary society. He plans to spend a few months after October with his family at Cable, Wis., make a trip to the old world and after that return to work again. We congraduate the St. Paul Church on the long term of service of its pastor and wish both him and it happy new alliances.

Renewed interest is being taken in the church in Ogden, Utah. About twelve years ago the church ceased to hold regular services, and the membership scattered. A valuable lot is owned by the church, but there is no building on it. Recently a meeting was called at which time a board of trustees and clerk were elected, and plans made to incorporate the church. A Christian Link Circle has been organized by the women, and is recognized by the trustees as a nucelus around which a church may grow. Hopes are strong that in the near future they will be able to call a pastor and resume regular services.

G. H. Bassett of Salisbury, Mo., has accepted the call to Independent, Kan., to succeed J. A. Longston.

Three notable achievements have been accomplished during the three years pastorate of E. B. Bagby at Fort Smith, Ark.; the payment of a debt of $8,500 on the church property, the purchase of a handsome pipe organ, and provision for the planting of a mission. This latter is made possible through the generosity of a member of First Church who has bought two lots and will build and furnish a Memorial chapel. Mr. Bagby starts July 3 for a two mnths vacation in Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia.

First Church, Oklahoma City, Okla., subscribed $23,500 on June 11 toward their building fund of $125,000. A balance of $6.500 is all there remains to be secured. J. H. O. Smith is the pastor. It was here that C. R. Scoville held his great meeting last winter with 1,500 conversions. The new church is rapidly nearing completion, the walls of the building being practically complete and all in readiness for placing the roof on the structure. As soon as this is done the work of finishing the interior will be rushed as rapidly as possible. The congregation expects to occupy the building by January 1.

First Church, Augusta Ga., Howard T. Cree, minister, has received twenty additions to the congregation in the last two months by confession and baptism. Quite a few of this group are young men whose presence promises well for the future of the church, these have all come into the church at its regular services and without holding any series of meetings. Recently the Sunday-school organized an orchestra of six from its own members which has proved helpful in the musical feature of the school session. Mr. Justice Lamar, who returned home from the Supreme Court for a vacation of several months, will resume his Sunday morning lectures to adults in the Sunday-school. In the spirit of Christian fraternity the pastor occupied the pulpit of the Citadel Square Baptist Church in Charleston June 4.

The telephone number of The Christian Century has been changed to Douglas 5966.

MONTANA CONVENTION.

The state convention of Montana, in session two weeks since, resolved upon an aggressive campaign by the placing of two evangelists in the field, one for Eastern Montana and Northern Wyoming, the other for Western Montana. A system of missionaries' rallies in the interest of state missions, with a "team" of five or eight men, was discussed. The convention elected the following officers: President, Charles W. Barnes, Helena; vice-president, Frank Maples, Billings; recording secretary, E. M. Romine, Red Lodge; treasurer, W. W. Beeman, Billings; corresponding secretary, J. S. Raum, Fromberg; executive committee, Charles W. Barnes, of Helena, W. W. Beeman, of Billings, J. S. Raum, of Fromberg, P. B. Bartley, of Helena, S. C. Kenyon, of ozeman, Dr. C. C. Albright, of Anaconda, and W. M. Jordan, of utte.

Summer at Bay View

What Chautauqua and Northfield are to the East Bay View, in northern Michigan, is becoming to the middle West. There, is held every July and August, a series of great conferences in vital themes, that are attended by large audiences often running into the thousands. These are the Bible, Missionary, Labor and Social Welfare, and Good Health Conferences, in charge of eminent leaders of national reputation, and extending over four weeks. The place is also the seat of the Bay View Assembly and Summer University, whose brilliant programs and highly organized educational work draw people from all parts of the country. Another Bay View magnet is its cool and healthful climate, known far and wide. The place is entirely a summer city, amid the groves on Lake Michigan, and has a great reputation for its pleasant life. For the announcements and general information, write J. M. Hall, Boston Boulevard, Detroit, Michigan.

"Garfield's Pastor" is Dead

F. D. Power, one of the most widely known and widely beloved pastors among the Disciples died at his home in Washington, D. C., June 14. For some weeks the condition of Dr. Power has been such that the end was not unexpected. Death was due to a complication of diseases. He had steadily been losing ground for more than a year, though he rallied eufficiently several months ago to take part in the services of installation of Earle Wilfley who had been called to be co-pastor with him of Vermont Avenue Church.

Dr. Power was born in York county, Va., in 1851. His father was Dr. Robert Henry Power and his mother before her marriage was Miss Abigail M. Jencks.

The son was sent to the Old Field School, near his home. He entered Bethany College in West Virginia in 1871. A short time later he was ordained a minister of the Disciples of Christ.

In 1874 he was called to the pastorate of the Disciples' Church in Charliottesville, Va. A year later he accepted the pastorate of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, which was then a small, struggling congregation. Year after year, through Dr. Power's indefatigable efforts, the work broadened and the church became known far and wide

From 1881 to 1883 Dr. Power was chaplain of the House of Representatives. He was also known, not only in Washington, but in many parts of the country, as "Garfield's pastor."

Dr. Power, who was given the honorary degrees of A. M. and LL. D. by his alma mater, Bethany College, was at one time president of the American Missionary Society, and at the time of his death was a trustee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Some years ago he wrote the "Life of W. K. Pendleton, president of Bethany College." He was also the author of other volumes, including "Bible Doctrine for Young Disciples," "Sketches of Our Pioneers," "Thoughts of Thirty Years." All of these books dealt with his work in the ministry of the Christian Church.

In 1874 Dr. Power was married to Miss Emily Brown Alsop, of Fredericksburg, Va., who, together with a daughter, Mrs. Abbie Clark, survives.

Sixty Years the Standard
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
A Cream of Tartar Powder
Made from Grapes
NO ALUM

Promising Church Dedicates Parish House

Wilshire Boulevard Church, Los Angeles, W. C. Bower, pastor, dedicated its beautiful parish house Sunday, June 4. The structure cost $25,000 and will serve as a sanctuary until the final house is erected on the corner of the lot. This congregation is only about a year old, but has already gathered a membership of 135 and a Sunday-school of 175. It is located on the most beautiful boulevard in Los Angeles and has among its members, Mr. Charles C. Chapman who matched the gifts of others for the new house dollar for dollar. The entire cost was thus provided for. Mr. Chapman, as the California custom seems to be, officiated at the dedication services and in the evening of that day F. M. Dowling began a series of evangelistic meetings. Various evangelical bodies were represented in a union fellowship service in the afternoon.

The new house is of club-house style of architecture. The auditorium has a seating capacity of more than 700. Besides a handsome ladies' parlor and pastor's study and commodious and well lighted circular class rooms, some of the unique features of the building are a ten-foot mantle decoration with an etched and hammered brass hood with a design of mountains and trees in natural colors, in which a glowing fire lends cheer and home-likeness to the evening service; a large stage across one end of the auditorium, with all of the accessories for secular programs; a handsome recessed pulpit on one side of the auditorium, and a recessed baptistry with a beautiful art glass window having a figure of an angel against a background of mountains and lilies. The art windows blend beautifully with the scheme of tinting and stencilling. The commodious basement will be fitted up for the home of a neighborhood men's club and a banquet hall for the social life of the church. A gallery extends over the entire west end of the auditorium. The ceiling gable roof is lighted by 187 points of electric light. The Wilshire and Normandie entrances both have pergolas. The approach to the building is a beautiful park 125 by 140 feet fronting on Wilshire Boulevard. This lot, where the permanent building will be erected, is the generous gift of the Chapman Brothers Company, consisting of Messrs. Charles C. and S. J. Chapman and Mrs. F. M. Chapman. This lot is valued at $25,000. Here it is proposed to erect within a few years a building to cost $100,000 which will be in thorough keeping with the architecture of the surrounding community.

Mr. Bower, the minister, has been with this church but a few months, having come from New York City. He is proving himself a wise and inspiring leader.

To the Churches of Christ

Your attention is hereby called to the following clauses found in article III of the Constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society: "Any congregation contributing $10 or more shall be entitled to one delegate in the annual meeting of this society for that year, and any state missionary board or society contributing a dividend from its state treasury for the objects of this society shall be entitled to two delegates in the annual meeting of the general society and to one additional delegate for every 5,000 disciples in the state; any church, Sunday-school or other local Christian association shall be permitted one delegate annually for ten years for each life membership or life directorship taken by the association as such."

Now those churches, Sunday-schools, and other organizations having the right, under these clauses, of representation in the annual meeting, to be held July 4-11, 1911, at Portland, Ore., are heartily invited to avail themselves of it by electing competent delegates and providing them with certificates of such election.

Yours fraternally,
H. D. SMITH, President
American Christian Missionary Society.

Wisconsin

The building-in-a-day enterprise at Beloit, May 30, was a great success in every way. Between seven and seven a fine chapel was erected, with exception of a few finishing touches, and dedicated that evening. There is great rejoicing and it is with some difficulty that we are able to realize that this really happened in Wisconsin. But it did and we are all proud of it and have taken renewed courage from it. Great credit is due N. A. Borop, the minister there.

R. E. Thomas has taken work at Readstown, West Lima, and Pleasant Ridge, having taken up his residence at Readstown. We are sure a fine work will be done in these fields.

J. H. Bullock, preached the baccalaureate sermon for the S. W. Teacher's Training School at Richland Center on May 28.

Work on the addition to the building at Rib Lake, where J. Sig. Stone ministers, has been started. This work will be largely done by the boys of Mr. Stone's Bible class. Mr. Stone is preaching at two country points with fine success. He preached the baccalaureate sermon for the high school of Rib Lake on May 28.

The meeting at Ontario, held by the writer, closed May 21 after continuing three weeks, with 32 accessions. A building project was started which will result in a fine equipment for this splendid band of workers.

We regret that P. D. McCallum is soon to close his work at Viroqua. He sails July 1 for his old home in Australia, from which he has been absent nine years. A successor has not as yet been secured.

Our state convention will be held with the First Church, Milwaukee, in Sept.

FRANK L. VAN VOORHIS.
Cor. Sec'y & Supt. of Missions.
Green Bay, Wis.

Some State Conventions

Just before leaving for the great conventions on the Pacific coast, we wish to take a few minutes to report some very pleasane visits recently to a number of state conventions. These have included Ohio, West Virginia, Michigan, Missouri and Oklahoma. We had hoped to include Arkansas also but were unable to get there. These conventions will be reported in full by others, but we wish to say just a word concerning the Sunday-school interests.

In Ohio after a year's trial of evangelistic work only, the convention voted unanimously to employ a Sunday-school superintendent to devote all his time to distinctive Sunday-school work. The present evangelist, L. I. Mercer, has done a splendid year's work and he will continue as an evangelist under the state board, but Ohio with her great schools, is to have a superintendent also.

In West Virginia, the efficient state secretary, O. G. White, has been doing his best to serve in every capacity and the convention appreciated all that he has done. But the Sunday-school interests are so important that at Brother White's recommendation, a state superintendent will be appointed to serve without pay until funds are in sight with which to pay him, and we are glad to say they are already coming into sight.

Michigan began to organize her Sunday-school forces last February when the state board with the aid of the Sunday-school department of the American Christian Missionary Society put Walter G. Hopkins, a student in the university to work as state superintendent. His work for the four months has been highly commended and it will be enlarged and continued.

Missouri and Oklahoma have had efficient state superintendents for many years. J. H. Bryan, the present incumbent in the strong state, presented a fine report. H. S. Gilliam in the new state has been doing pioneer work. Both men were highly commended and their work has been of a splendid character this year.

In all the states the front rank enthusiasm is high. There seems to be a determined effort in every one to win the national banner. The personal contact with representatives of the various schools, with state superintendents and executive committees, we believe is well worth the time and expense of attending these state conventions, even if no time were granted for speech making. We have had however, opportunity in all these meetings for both addresses and conferences.

We are pleased to announce that the material is ready for the July and August American Mission programs. This includes a beautiful wall chart with leaflet of explanation and full directions for each month. The material may be had by writing the Sunday-school department of the American Christian Missionary Society. If you do not have a missionary committee or secretary in your school, appoint one next Sunday and send us the names with a request for these programs. In the meantime you can use them yourself pending the appointment of your missionary department. Though made at heavy expense, this material is sent you free upon request, but only upon request. Write us today.

ROBERT M. HOPKINS.
American Sunday-school Superintendent.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

J. M. LOWE, GENERAL EVANGELIST.—Church Dedications, Special Addresses. Permanent address, 1350 25th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

HIRAM COLLEGE. Send for Illustrated Bulletin, Souvenir Mailing Card and Complete Catalog to PRES. MINER LEE BATES. HIRAM, O.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone
Far Sounding
Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

A MAGAZINE of LAUGHTER
THE FUNNIEST OF ALL THE FUNNY MAGAZINES
Brimful of wholesome wit and humor. Join the campaign for One Million subscribers by sending 25 CENTS in Coin for One Year or five(5) separate subscriptions for $1.00. Foreign sub'ns, 25 cents extra.
THOMPSON'S MAGAZINE, Dept. DH, 328 Federal St., Chicago

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

Between
CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY
via the
Chicago & Alton

Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis
For Time Tables and Fares Address:
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO

Notes From the Foreign Society

Splendid news comes from the workers in Africa. The following are some of the most recently reported baptisms. At Monieka nineteen; at Longa twenty-two; at Lotumbe, twenty-seven; at Bolenge forty-nine and six restored. At the most distant and newest station, Monieka, there are fifty native evangelists working.

Lovington, Illinois, becomes a living-link in the foreign society. A. L. Huff is the pastor. This is a great victory for a church in a small town. The people are enthusiastic and will support Mrs. P. A. Sherman at Hatta, India.

A conference of the Protestant missions in Central India was recently held to consider closer Christian unity among the native churches. Our own workers took the position they have always held, namely, that they would welcome and encourage co-operation in every way so long as it did not interfere with the absolute freedom of our churches to teach and practice the precepts of the Scriptures as we understand them.

G. M. Brooks of Carlisle, Ky., reports that the negro church of that city plans to support a native evangelist in Africa next year.

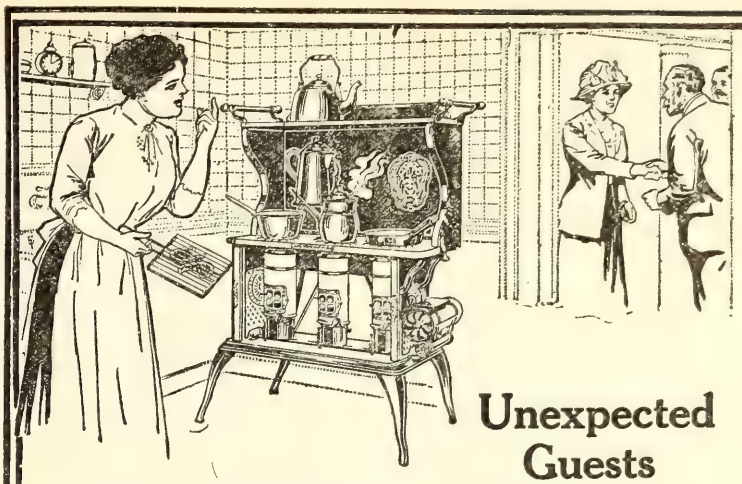
Herbert Smith of Lotumbe, Africa, reports an offering of $10 from the church for missions. No member has $50 worth of property and wages are eight cents a day

The receipts of the Foreign Society are thus far considerably behind those of last year. This is a source of keen disappointment. We had hoped for a large gain. It is not too late yet to go far beyond last year. Let every church and Sunday-school give loyal support this year. Many offerings are slow in coming in. We trust that remittance will be made at the earliest convenience so that as good a report as possible may be made at Portland. The convention comes in the middle of the fiscal year and no full report can be made.

Many people have made inquiry recently as to the names of the men on the executive committee at the National conventions, While these men are elected annually at the national conventions, yet some do not know who they are. The names of the brethren who serve on this important committee are as follows: A. McLean, president, Cincinnati; W. S. Dickinson, business man, Cincinnati; Justin N. Green, minister, Cincinnati; S. M. Jefferson, professor, College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.; B. C. Deweese, professor, College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.; H. C. Kendrick, minister, Georgetown, Ky.; R. O. Newcomb, business man, Cincinnati; C. H. Winders, minister, Indianapolis; F. M. Rains, secretary, Cincinnati; Stephen Corey, secretary, Cincinnati; E. W Allen, secretary, Kansas City, Mo.; C. W. Plopper, treasurer, Cincinnati; M. Y. Cooper, business man, Cincinnati.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Sec'y.

Cincinnati.



Unexpected Guests

The farmer and his wife were about to sit down to a cold supper when they saw some old friends driving towards the house.

The good wife was equal to the occasion—thanks to her New Perfection Oil Cook-stove.

She had it lit in a moment, and her guests hardly were seated on the porch before a hearty hot meal was ready for the table—sausages and eggs and long rashers of streaky bacon, and rolls just crisped in the oven and fresh coffee—and the hostess herself as cool and neat as if she had not been near the kitchen.

She never could have managed it with an old-fashioned range. The New Perfection is the quickest, most convenient and best cooker on the market.

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners, with long, turquoise blue enameled chimneys. Handsomely finished throughout. The 2- and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without a cabinet top, which is fitted with drop shelves, towel racks, etc.

Dealers everywhere; or write for descriptive circular to the nearest agency of the Standard Oil Company

(Incorporated)

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

A BIBLICAL and THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of high grade located at COLUMBIA adjacent to the UNIVERSITY of MISSOURI

University Credit Courses—Ministerial and Missionary Training Courses. Departments:—Biblical and Systematic Theology, Social Service and Missions, Old Testament and New Testament. Next Term Begins Sept. 18, 1911.

For Catalog and Information address Charles M. Sharpe, Dean.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $31,000 building just completed. Twenty college-trained, experienced teachers, Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior-College course leads to an A. B. degree; College-Preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated catalogue address MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, PRESIDENT

Next session begins Sept. 12. Columbia, Mo.

A FEW FAVORITES
Shadows
'Tis Jesus
Lord is it I?
Christ is King
His Thought
Is He Yours?
What Will it Be?
My Savior's Love
O What a Change
No Burdens Yonder
He will Hold me Fast
The Valley of Shadows
Jesus Will Sustain You
His Eye is on the Sparrow
The Hand that was Wound-
He Lifted Me [ed for Me

CHARLES M. ALEXANDER & DeLOSS SMITH

HAVE YOU SEEN THEIR NEW SONG BOOK?

It contains the great songs used by Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander on their Evangelistic Campaign around the world. ¶The beautiful songs by Robert Harkness are here. ¶The new songs by DeLosss Smith (author of "Christ is King," &c.,) are in this book. ¶It contains many of the old standard hymns that are known and loved everywhere, making it a valuable book for any department of church work. 56 of the World's Greatest Song Writers Represented.

It is the Most Up-to-Date Book published

2 Bindings: Bessemer Lizard (flexible) and Cloth Board. Send 25c for Sample Copy and be convinced

De LOSS SMITH, Music Publisher, 3 WEST 102d ST., New York

NEW SONGS
BY DeLOSS SMITH
found in no other book

The Watchman
O Bethlehem City
O Lord be Merciful
With Strains Sublime
The Glory of the Cross
Soldiers for the King
He is Our Lord and King
Crown the Redeemer of Men
What Boundless, Matchless Love
"Some Day" May be Too Late
(new arrangement)

The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Introduce these Lessons in the Summer Quarter—July 1. Address
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Bible College Library
Mar 12 '

Volume XXVIII. June 29, 1911 Number 26

College Number

ACCOUNTS OF THE COMMENCEMENTS

A STUDENT IN GERMANY

ADVANCING SCHOLARSHIP AND THE DISCIPLES

THE VISITOR AT THE COLLEGES

A POINT OF HONOR—Editorial

REV. FREDERICK D. POWER

CONCERNING OUR DIFFERENCES

CHICAGO

Hiram College

AIMS TO BE

THE BEST OF ITS TYPE

STRICTLY COLLEGE WORK	CLOSE PERSONAL TOUCH WITH STRONG TEACHERS AND EARNEST STUDENTS EXPERIENCED FACULTY
HIGH EDUCATIONAL STANDARDS
MODERATE EXPENSE	WHOLESOME ENVIRONMENT

Correspondence is invited from young men and women of earnest purpose and from parents who desire the best educational advantages for their children. Address,

President Miner Lee Bates,
HIRAM, OHIO

1869 1911

Hamilton College

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY

Standardized Junior College Course, requiring two years for a high school graduate to complete.

A shorter Preparatory Course for those not graduates of high school, admitting, without examination, to Vassar, Wellesley, etc.

Faculty of 29, from Vassar, Yale, Wellesley, Columbia, Berlin, Leipsiz, Paris, Cornell, The University of Virginia, The University of Chicago, The New England Conservatory, etc.

A faculty of seven teaching Music, Expression, and Art. A three-story gymnasium; out-door sports.

A select student body. 303 enrolled this year from 21 states. 733 graduates.

One of the Colleges of Transylvania University, founded in 1783.

Grounds, buildings and endowment held in trust by an incorporated Board of Trustees, under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ.

Large, shady, park-like campus. Five modern buildings, heated by steam from a central plant, and lighted by gas and electricity.

Delightful dormitories. Home care. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals. Libraries, laboratories, etc., fully equipped.

Forty-third session begins Sept. 11, 1911. Write for catalogue.

H. G. Shearin, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale),
President

... The Bible College of Missouri ...

WHAT AND WHERE?

1. A high grade Biblical Seminary, controlled by a self-perpetuating board of leading Disciples in Missouri.
2. Located at Columbia, in close relation to the University of Missouri, and enjoying all its remarkable facilities.

EQUIPMENT AND ADVANTAGES.

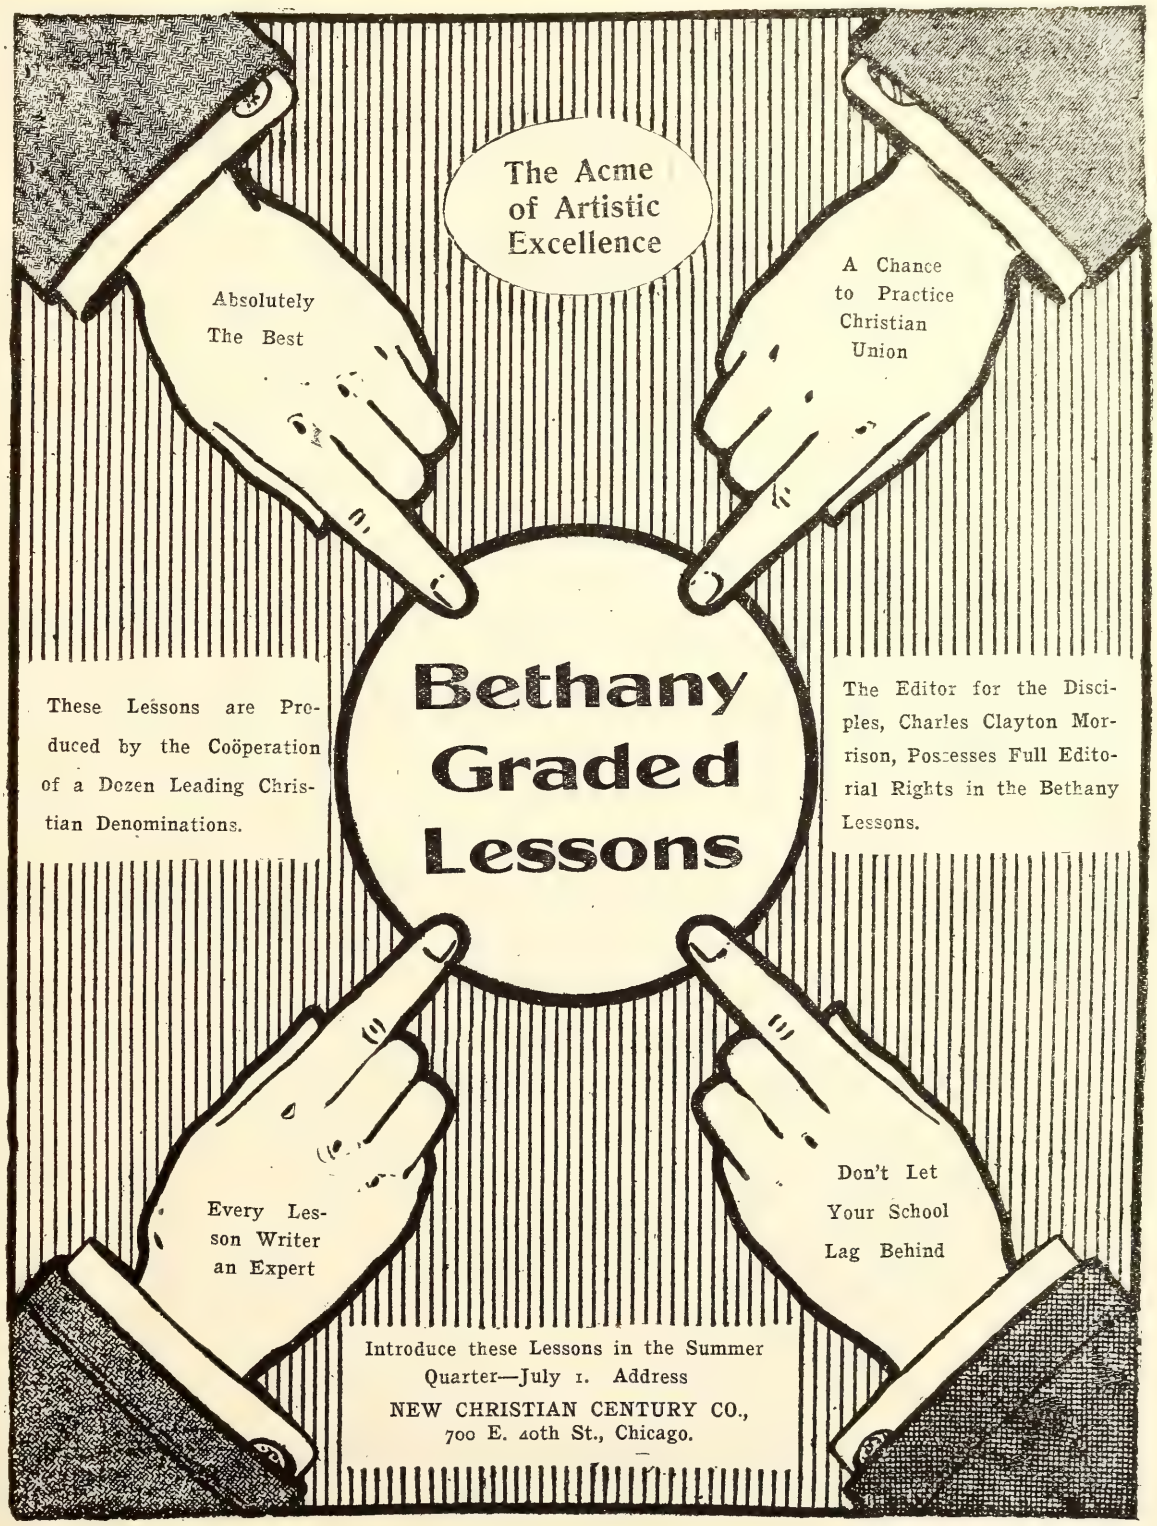
1. Beautiful and adequate building.
2. Endowment and property worth $200,000.
3. Five well manned departments—Old Testament, Christian Theology (Biblical, Historical and Systematic) Social Service and Missions, Church History and Practice. Most complete theological curriculum offered among the Disciples.
4. Specially good opportunities for self-support in the case of students who can preach acceptably.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL POSITION OF THE COLLEGE

1. Devoted to the Christianity of Christ.
2. Stands for Scholarship, Freedom, Loyalty and Service.
3. Regards all the great theologies as efforts of honest thinkers to express the Christian verities for their own age, but accepts none of these systems as final.
4. Strives to interpret the gospel as pre-eminently a social ideal to be realized by men and women of open mind and loving heart.
5. Advocates ancient and scriptural ordinances as being most richly suggestive of Christian truth, as most consonant with a spirit of close adhesion to Jesus Christ, and as most universally acceptable in the church.

Next term begins September 18. For catalog address

CHARLES M. SHARPE, Dean.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Introduce these Lessons in the Summer Quarter—July 1. Address
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

Labor Sunday September 3

To the Protestant Ministers and Church of America.

The Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America hereby request the ministers and churches to prepare for the appropriate observance of "Labor Sunday," September 3.

It is suggested that the secretaries of local associations of ministers in each city and town communicate this request to their constituencies, with the hope that the observance may be universal. Such local secretaries are invited to communicate at once with the secretary of the Federal Council Commission, who will send them literature, both for their own guidance and for distribution among the ministers of their localities.

A leaflet of "Suggestions for Labor Sunday" and programs suitable for either a Sunday morning service or a union evening service will be sent by the commission upon application.

An immediate response is urged upon the part of all the Protestant ministers of America.

FRANK MASON NORTH, Chairman.
Clarendon Bldg., New York City.

Lake Geneva Conference

The popular summer sessions of the Y. M. C. A. Institute and Training School held during July at Lake Geneva open June 28 and bid fair to be the best and largest in the history of the twenty-two years at the lake.

The faculty for the month will number more than seventy-five men, each a specialist in his own line of work. Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch, Ph. D., of Rochester, George L. Robinson, Ph. D., D. D., of McCormick, Dr. Robert W. Rogers of Drew Seminary, Dr. Fiske of Oberlin, Dr. W. S. Hall of Northwestern and Dr. Raycroft of the University of Chicago, and many other eminent lecturers, even Corsan the Swimmer is among the number who will be there. The Summer session no doubt will number three hundred or more men. It is hoped that this year's school will make a large contribution to the associational brotherhood and to the religious advancement of this country and the world.

The Fourth of July will be celebrated appropriately with athletic and aquatic sports in the afternoon and patriotic speeches and illuminated stunts in the evening. Commencement and class day exercises for both sessions will take place at Lake Geneva the 26th of July.

New York City Mission Notes

The Quarterly Convention of the Auxiliaries to the C. W. B. M. was held at the Third Church, Brooklyn, June 13. The convention was honored by the presence of Mrs. DeWitt Knox, secretary of the National Foreign Missionary Jubilee. Mrs. Knox gave a most interesting and helpful address on "The Inspiration of our Jubilee."

The evening service was given to the work of the Disciples Missionary Union. Short helpful talks were given by a representative from each church, on the work of the organization, followed with an address by Joseph Keevil on "Our Progress."

The record of our mission work for the past year show: added to the mission churches 59—by confession and baptism 33, by letter 13, by statement 12. A total membership in the five mission churches of 441. In the Bible-school 563. For current expenses $1,753.09; for missions $304.05. A total of $4,051.68, or nearly $10 per member.

While the work of the past year has been of interest and profit, we believe a greater and beter work will be done the coming year. One of the real pleasures of the work is the present delightful co-operation of the pastors and churches in the work. They are interested and find pleasure in making the work possible. We may be weak in numbers and financial resources in this great metropolitan city, but we are making progress in the interest of the kingdom.

An exceedingly profitable evening was spent June 9 at a dinner of the Men and Religion Forward Movement at the Hotel Astor. Mr. James G. Cannon presiding, the following stirring after-dinner addresses were made. "The Boy," Mr. Warren L. Bunger, Dayton, Ol; "The Bible," Elmore Harris, D. D., Toronto, Can.; "Evangelism," Mr. Hubert Carleton, Boston, Mass.; "Missions," Mr. W. B. Millar, New York; "Social Service," Rev. Charles Stelzle, New York; "To Church Life," Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D.; "To Civic Life," Mr. Raymond B. Fosdick; "To the World," Mr. Robert E. Speer.

JOSEPH KEEVIL, Supt. of City Missions.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

J. M. LOWE, GENERAL EVANGELIST.—Church Dedications, Special Addresses. Permanent address, 1350 25th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

A MAGAZINE of LAUGHTER
THE FUNNIEST OF ALL THE FUNNY MAGAZINES
Brimful of wholesome wit and humor. Join the campaign for One Million subscribers by sending 25 CENTS in Coin for One Year or five (5) separate subscriptions for $1.00. Foreign sub'ns, 25 cents extra.
THOMPSON'S MAGAZINE, Dept. 94, 328 Federal St., Chicago

1798 Transylvania University 1911
OLDEST COLLEGE WEST OF THE ALLEGHENIES
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY
In the Heart of the Blue Grass
Continuing Bacon College, Founded in 1836, the Oldest College among the Disciples
Standard courses leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., LL. B., and A. M.
Faculty composed of professors especially trained in the best American and European universities.
Students from 30 states and foreign countries.
More than 150 ministerial students.
The Law School of Henry Clay and Justice Harlan.
Average cost to student, less than $200 a year.
For catalogue and other information, write to
R. H. CROSSFIELD, President :: Lexington, Kentucky

Glendale College
Founded 1853
Glendale, Ohio
C. H. & D. R. R.
Situated in Cincinnati's most beautiful suburb, this residence school offers unusual opportunities for young women, and girls between the ages of twelve and fifteen—for which especial arrangements are made.
SPLENDID COLLEGIATE COURSES for high school graduates leading to a diploma Preparation for all colleges with certificate privileges. Art, Music, Expression, Household Economics. Ample equipment, commodious buildings, large grounds, and a pleasant home life. A location unequalled. Terms $360 per year. Parents are invited to call.
MISS R. J. DE VORE, President

BETHANY COLLEGE:
Seventy-first session opens Sept. 19. Courses offered: Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Philosophical, Literary, Agriculture, Horticulture, Music, Art, Oratory, Domestic Science, Shorthand, Book-keeping, Normal, and Engineering.
Two dormitories for young men, and one for young women. Special supervision given to young boys and girls. A thorough Preparatory Department maintained. New modern, fireproof dormitory, with seventy-five rooms, will be ready for the opening, Sept. 19. New $60,000 building for Science, Agriculture, and Horticulture in process of erection. New pipe organ just installed. Central heating plant for all college buildings. The college has recently received for buildings, lands, improvements, more than $150,000.
Located on trolley line seven miles southeast of Wellsburg, Brooke County, W. Va. A strong faculty of twenty-four members, an earnest body of students, and inspiring and helpful surroundings, make Bethany an ideal place for study. Expense of board, room, tuition, and entrance fee as low as $185 for the year. Opportunities offered earnest young people whereby they may help themselves by earning part of their expenses. Graduates in Normal Department are given first-grade teachers' certificate, good throughout West Virginia. For catalogue and full information, write President Thomas E. Cramblet, LL.D., Bethany, W. Va.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR
CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
FOR YOUNG WOMEN
An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women
Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $31,000 building just completed. Twenty college-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior-College course leads to an A. B. degree; College, Preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated catalogue address MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, PRESIDENT
Next session begins Sept. 12. Columbia, Mo

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, - - - - EDITORS

A Point of Honor

Commencement ought to mean for the graduate the entrance upon a new stage of life, a new way of conceiving life. He passes now from the stage of law to that of grace, from obedience to "Thou shalt," to responsiveness to "Thou oughtest." He goes from the feeling of necessity to the sense of responsibility; from the matter of course acceptance of things as he happens to possess them to a serious recognition of the way they came to be his.

There are dispensations in individual experience as well as in racial history. Society has moved through the paternal and legal dispensations to the dispensation of freedom. And each soul passes through these stages recapitulating the epochs of the race.

Childhood is the paternal dispensation of the soul. It is the stage of dependence, of innocence, of irresponsibility. Everything is done for the child. Nothing is exacted from him. Play is his business. He is made to feel as little as possible the restraints and goads of duty. Love and joy are the atmosphere of this dispensation.

In youth the soul has passed into the dispensation of law. The impulses are put under check and control. The imagination, which, in childhood, ranged capriciously without let or hindrance, is now tied down by parent and teacher to real things. Home and school seem to youth's mind to symbolize restraint, restriction of liberty, against which aggressive protest is incessantly made.

Graduation from high school or college marks the soul's passage from the dispensation of law to the dispensation of free action. Paternalistic and scholastic restraints are removed. The soul now chooses its own course, projects its own plans, puts forth its own initiative, bears its own responsibilities.

* * *

Commencement is thus the initiatory ceremony into the mysteries of freedom. It marks the real birthday of a man or woman.

The most searching question for the graduate,—this initiate into the freemasonry of mankind,—is whether he shall conceive his new life in terms of self or in terms of service. Shall he regard his liberty as his chance to "get even" with the universe for his years of restraint and tutelage, and forthwith set to work to exploit the world with those tools which long discipline has sharpened and tempered? Or shall he consecrate his talents and himself to the high task of making a better world for others?

No doubt an education may be capitalized for selfish purposes. The educated man is abler to accomplish his own aggrandizement at the expense of others than his uneducated brother. And the sorry commentary must be written that culture has by no means proved always to adorn a noble soul.

There are, no doubt, graduates who think of their educational equipment in selfish terms. Their motto is, The world owes me a living: it owes me wealth or ease or honors, and I shall claim my right to the limit.

* * *

However true it may be as a social principle that the world owes each individual a living, it is a vicious principle when the individual asserts it for himself. Any man who comes to the world with such a claim will surely prove a bane upon society, and will cheat himself out of life's most precious goods.

The great soul, the true man, does not assert any such claim for himself, though he may assert it on behalf of others. He knows the demoralizing effect upon himself of yielding to the suggestion that society owes him anything. There is no power of recovery in such a claim. There is no dynamic in it. It spells moral defeat when any soul asserts it.

The motto of power for the graduate and for every soul is: I owe the world my life! This was Paul's great word. "I am debtor," he said. The sense of debtorship was the root out of which his missionary passion grew. It was the dynamic of all his multifarious activities on behalf of others. His question was not that stupid one of Peter's: We have left all and followed Thee, what shall we have therefore? but, Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?

* * *

And this is the burden of our Commencement messages today. Our teachers are striving to create the Pauline conscience in us, to make the graduate see that he is under special obligations to serve the community, to be a home maker, a church worker, an active citizen, a promoter of all good causes in the community and in the State.

This is a new note in education. It signifies the final democratization of culture. In former times education was for the few. It was a class pursuit, a class privilege. It gave an aristocratic rank to its possessors. It was not regarded as inconsistent that culture and hauteur should dwell together in the same soul. Education was a means of escaping the hard service of the world. One need not soil his hands if he had knowledge.

Occasionally some cultivated soul would break through its caste and in spite of its culture embark upon an enterprise of service to the poor, the sick, the oppressed. But this attitude was one of patronage. Such service was a sort of adventure. It relieved the ennui of life or diverted the soul from grief or disappointment.

Today the graduate is being taught to serve not in spite of his education, but because of it. The very possession of culture lays the graduate under an obligation to serve unselfishly which the uncultivated cannot in the nature of the case feel.

"Noblesse oblige" is the device being graven on the conscience of each graduate. It is being shown the graduate that he enters into harvests upon which he bestowed no labor. The whole educational process, conducted by parent and teacher, which at the time seemed to the youth a restriction of his liberty, he now sees as the liberator of his intelligence.

And if he has any moral sensitiveness, the thought of what parents and teachers and philanthropists and scholars and the State itself have done that he might go forth equipped for life will organize itself in his mind in the form of a great debt which only a life of unselfish service can discharge.

Once get this point of honor fairly raised in the graduate's soul and the curve of his character will inevitably be determined by it. The sentiment of honor is a very penetrating thing. No soul can be comfortable in accepting life selfishly when it is once perceived how intimately its honor is involved.

* * *

The dispensation of freedom then, is the dispensation of grace. Here at last the soul realizes that all of life is a free gift to him, that he earns nothing and can claim nothing.

The graduate looks out into nature and beholds her ministering to him in air and water, in fuel and food.

He looks back into history and sees men building a civilization through painful milleniums—for him.

He looks out into the industrial order and sees men making his shoes, his clothes, his foods, his house, his books, his paintings, his church—ten thousand hands are working—for him.

And he sees all this put into his lap before he has proved himself worthy of it, before he has shown that he deserved an infinitesimal fraction of it.

And then, if he has any imagination at all, he will perceive just the sort of a universe he has come into—a universe of grace, a universe that puts itself at his disposal because it trusts him to do the noble thing.

And if there be any moral chivalry in him, if there be any resiliency of the soul, he will accept his life as an affair of honor and fling himself into it with unconquerable moral passion.

Social Survey

Popular Election of Senators

In response to the repeated demand of the people for a constitutional amendment providing for popular election of United States senators, the senate has at last passed a bill with this provision by a vote of 64 to 24. The vote was a comfortable margin over the majority of two-thirds necessary for such an amendment, and in addition it is fairly representative of the attitude of the country in this matter. Strangely enough, the order of procedure on this amendment was reversed from the usual order. The sentiment that resulted in the passage of the amendment has been growing for the past twenty-five years, and in that time, legislatures in more than two-thirds of the states have declared themselves in favor of the change, and have urged their representatives to further the movement. Those resolutions are not of legal value in the passage of the present amendment, but they indicate the attitude of the people in those states, and give rise to the conjecture that action endorsing the amendment will be promptly given in the required number of states. The bill as passed by the senate is not in the exact form in which it was sent up from the lower house. An amendment to the bill was made which leaves to congress the control of the times, places, and manner of holding popular elections of senators. Two senators are to be elected from each state by the voters of each state respectively who have the qualifications to vote for members of the lower house of the state legislatures. The addition of this amendment will make a conference with the house of representatives necessary. Should it be approved by the lower house, the president will undoubtedly sign it, and it will become a law as soon as the states ratify it.

Census Report for England and Wales

The publication of the British census report for 1911 has excited considerable comment. Many interesting figures are given, some of which will correct popular misconceptions concerning the British people. According to this census, the population of England and Wales is 36,075,269. In 1901 there were 32,527,843 people in the same district. This represents an increase of 10.91 per cent. The increase in the preceding decade was 12.5 per cent; in the decade from 1881 to 1891, 11.7 per cent; and from 1871 to 1881, 14 per cent. This is a creditable showing and does not compare unfavorably with the corresponding figures for our own country. Of course the per cent of increase in the United States was about 21 for the last decade, but that is not the whole story. Exact figures as to the proportion of increase by immigration and by births in the United States are not at hand, but immigration furnished a large percentage of our increase. In England and Wales the reverse is true. It is computed that the actual increase by births is about 15 per cent, but that this was greatly reduced by emigration to other countries. Thus it may be seen that the actual natural increase in these countries does not widely differ. The average density of England and Wales is 618 to the square mile, while in the United States it is only thirty-one. The most densely populated state, Rhode Island, has only 508 to the square mile. This growth in England is of quite recent origin. In 1801 her population was only one-fourth of what it is now, and from the fourteenth to the sixteenth centuries it remained practically stationary at about 2,500,000 people.

A Rebuke to Race Prejudice

Admirers of President Taft's so-called judicial poise were treated to a rude shock recently when the president burst out in righteous indignation against Col. Joseph Garrard, commander at Fort Myer, Va., for discriminating against a Jewish candidate for promotion.. The young man in question, Private Bloom, unable to secure appointment to West Point in President Roosevelt's administration, was advised by Mr. Roosevelt to go into the ranks and work his way up. This advice the young man followed, and is said to have made a creditable record. He recently took examinations for promotion, but because of his Jewish descent, failed to receive an endorsement for promotion by Garrard, the officer in command of his division. Colonel Garrard admits, "The young man is undoubtedly honest and upright, ambitious and probably deserving," but declares that, "the presence of the applicant's family at a military post would be subversive of discipline and their probable treatment a source of mortification to them and frequent cause of trouble to commanding officers." Under our eyes, it would seem, an aristocracy has developed with inflexible lines of caste. In anticipation of the peace era, the army appears to be perpetuating itself by metamorphosis into a social organization supported by the government. But President Taft, in his official capacity as commander-in-chief of the army and navy, has set himself firmly against such an order of development. In his letter to the secretary of war, he says, "It is difficult for me to read the endorsement of Colonel Garrard . . . with patience and without condemnatory words. . . . The statements made by Colonel Garrard are not true with reference to the standing that Jews have in this country. . . ." Mr. Taft denounces the action as narrow. But it has some foundation on fact. Unfortunately, many people entertain these narrow prejudices with Colonel Garrard, though we do not believe this so generally true as the colonel indicates. To say the least, it is not a flattering commentary on our social institutions, and the swift rebuke of the President will receive many seconds throughout the country.

Threatened International Strike

An international strike of trans-Atlantic seamen recently threatened to tie up international commerce, but danger now appears to have dissolved to a large extent. On June 14, at London, Glasgow, Liverpool, Cardiff, Bristol, Southampton; and at many Belgian and Dutch ports, the strike among the seamen was declared against the Atlantic lines. A strong effort was made to enlist all the seamen at each port in the walkout, but this was not successful. The declaration came on the date of the sailing of the big White Star liner Olympic in its maiden trip across the Atlantic, and an especial effort was made to tie it up, but it got away on schedule time. In its case, as in the case of several other vessels about to sail, a satisfactory settlement was reached between the company and the seamen. In Amsterdam, the situation was more serious for a while. Crews of three vessels of the Royal Line refused to go on board and were dismissed and other crews were signed to replace them. Had there been trouble in securing them, hundreds of Chinese seamen were ready to act as strike breakers. Fortunately, this strike cannot easily spread to the United States. The laws of this country and the contracts of the men are such as to prevent it. Seamen are obliged to take the vessels back to the port from which they came. It is comforting to know that there is at least one form of labor trouble from which this country is practically immune.

Trade With Our Colonies

Taking the official report on trade for the first ten months of the fiscal year, as a basis, the indications are that trade between the United States and its non-contiguous possessions will reach a total of $202,000,000 for the year. In seven years this trade has increased more than $100,000,000. Imports constitute slightly more than half of this trade, but exports show a considerably larger percentage of increase. In 1903, the earliest year in which records are available, exports to the territories—Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines—aggregated $36,000,000. Last year they aggregated $83,000,000, and this year the total will probably reach $96,000,000. That will make a total increase since 1903 of 170 per cent. Imports from the territories aggregated $59,000,000 in 1903, and $108,000,000 in 1910. Indications are that they will aggregate only $107,000,000 for 1911, but the increase for the seven years is 80 per cent. The greatest gain in outward shipments was made with Porto Rico. For the ten months exports have been made to that island at the rate of $35,000,000 per annum as compared with actual exports of $27,000,000 value in 1910, and $7,000,000 in 1903. Hawaii ranks first in the value of imports into this country, though the figures for the fiscal year were considerably below these for the year 1910. Shipments have been made at the rate of $40,000,000 per year as compared with $46,000,000 for the year ending 1910 and $26,000,000 for the year ending 1903.

Religious Conditions in Ireland

Irish Catholics, encouraged by Pope Pius X, will make new efforts so to adjust political conditions in Ireland that losses in Catholic Church membership and population may be stopped. It is claimed by them that new laws, the adoption of which they hope for soon, will change the situation, and even lead to increase in population and church strength. Census figures just made public show a loss of 76,824 in Ireland's population in ten years, the lowest, however, of any decade since 1841-51. The figures for respective large religious bodies are: Catholics, 3,258,000; Episcopalians, 575,000; Presbyterians, 439,000; Methodists, 61,000, and others, 57,000. The Catholic loss was 2.1 per cent; the Anglican, 1; the Presbyterian, 0.8, and the Methodist, 0.3. Leinster alone of all the provinces increased in population. The largest losses were in Connaught and Munster.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Universalist

One Ministerial Advantage.

There is not much to be gained by emphasizing the disadvantages of the minister's life. Of course, young men who think they are called to preach the gospel ought to know something of the hard work and the bitter disappointments which they must meet. The people to whom the gospel is preached ought to have some appreciation of what the man who preaches to them has to bear. But the opportunities of the minister are many and these the minister should understand and prize. Parents who worry about the future of their boy who has decided to enter the ministry should read this from the Universalist Leader:

Of course the minister's salary is too small in many if not most instances; of course there are difficulties in the way of providing for old age, and in securing the proper equipment for work, but there is something to be said on the other side. In no other profession can a man step at once from the preparatory school into a living salary; it may not be a big salary, but if the young minister is worth anything there is "a living" awaiting him at the very door of the seminary. If he is not worth anything he will probably get exactly what he is worth! If the young minister is efficient—and that is a great word—if the young minister is efficient it will not be long before he is getting more than a bare living. Still he may never get such an income as the successful lawyer or physician, but the chances are that he will get as large an income as the lawyer or physician of his caliber! And he will have, at once, in social standing and opportunity to serve the position to which the others may never attain. And he must figure the advantage of those early years which, while lean years, are not the starving years of those who seek entrance to the other professions. He comes out of the seminary in debt, but the others are more apt to come out of the first decade of practice still deeper in debt. We believe that the pay of the minister today is inadequate, but at the same time we are disposed to recognize the fact that few men suffer less for what may be termed the actual necessities of a happy and useful life. Get your boy into the ministry if he is called that way, and don't worry about his support; he can command there, as in any other field, exactly what he is worth.

Presbyterian

Christ or the Church?

"Do these people really desire that the kingdom of God make progress in the world, or is their world that of an organization which does not touch many of the most vital interests of religion?" This is the kind of question that is being turned loose in more than one community in this country. It prompts The Presbyterian Advance to say:

We unite with The Congregationalist in the wish that we could know just how much vital energy on the part of men and women throughout this land is expended just to keep up a church organization, and we pass on a question it recently asked: "Is all the work done now by the isolated units (separate churches) really contributing to the kingdom of God?" It must be confessed that it looks very much as if the supreme purpose of many congregations, as seems to be the only purpose of many individuals, is just to keep alive. But why should a church live unless it lives for something? And why should we strain so to "keep up the church" unless the church is kept up for the purpose for which it was called into existence by the Head of the Church. Is your work in the church for the Christ and his kingdon through the church, or is it just for the sake of keeping up a denominational organization? To your mind is the church an end in itself, or is it only, as it ought to be, a means toward an end? It is to be hoped that we are really nearing a better day when the ideal of "keeping up the church" will give way to the better ideal of serving Christ through serving our fellows.

Religion and Reform.

Zealous promoters of measures for the removal of the evils with which we are afflicted have been known to denounce the church for what they consider its failure to do its part in the work of reform. Occasionally one arises to announce that religion and progress cannot keep house together. The service of religion to social progress is often overlooked by some who are profoundly religious. The Presbyterian Advance, after stating its belief in every movement that promises to give a larger life to all the people, says:

But there is something else; it is religion. In the city which is said to be as bad as it was fifteen or twenty years ago there live certain families of whom we have had more or less intimate knowledge during that period of time. They were and are religious families. In those families fifteen years ago there were a number of children. The children are now grown and to the citizenship of that city in need of reform they have added a very respectable number of honest, law-abiding, upright, useful citizens. Meantime, in the same city, there have grown up the children of other families which were and are by no means religious families, and of these children a considerable number have been added to that element of society the existence of which causes the city to feel that it is in need of reform. We do not mean to say that all the children from the religious families are to be counted among the good citizens and all the children from irreligious families among the bad citizens, but we do assert that the truly religious families have contributed very largely to the increase of the good citizenship, while the greater number of the new citizens who came from homes without religious influence have been added to the group which is the cause of the cry for reform.

Now suppose that all of the families of the city had been under true and vigorous religious influences twenty years ago, can we suppose that anybody would today assert that the need of reform is as great as it was then? What are we driving at? Why, just this: If there were only more religion in that city there would not be such great need for reform. No, we do not discount the good work of the reformers. It is needed. But we fear that sometimes the reformers do discount the good work of the churches and of the Christian families. This slow, patient, unspectacular process of Christian teaching pursued by the churches and in the homes of church members does not exhibit any very marked effect in a day or a year, but if this process were not continually going on the need of reform would soon be very much greater, though, alas! there might not be any reformers to discover the need. It is a good thing that good people walk up now and then and put forth vigorous effort to make bad things better, and it is not at all remarkable that in their enthusiasm and zeal some of them cannot understand why all church members do not get equally enthusiastic and zealous, or that they hastily declare that the churches are not doing any good; but the truth of the matter is that the most powerful influence against evil and for good that the world knows anything about comes through the patient, persistent teaching and training of church and school and Christian home. If all were a good deal more zealous in making people truly religious there would not be such great need for spasmodic bursts of zeal in behalf of reform.

Unitarian

The Minister's Training.

It is difficult for the average man to accept the new at its full value without underestimating the importance of the old. We can examine but one thing at a time and if that thing happens to please us, we are ready to say it is the most important thing we ever saw. New methods of ministerial training may so absorb our attention as to cause forgetfulness of the good in the old. Wisdom was not born with us. On the way in which ministers are prepared for their work The Christian Register remarks:

In the training of ministers many traditional things once highly prized are passing. New things are coming in, and the effort is being made everywhere to bring the ministry of religion closer to the common life of the people. But it is quite as easy to make mistakes which are fatal to usefulness as to turn out men who are unfit for their new tasks because of the antiquated methods which they retain. The ministry was never closer to the common life of the people than it was one hundred to one hundred and fifty years ago. In those days the ministers were not prepared for their work by special studies in social science. They got close to the people because they were of the people, loved the people, and associated with them on equal terms every day in the week. When a man has been thoroughly trained in heart, conscience, and intellect, so that he has become a magnanimous thinker and a broad-minded spectator of human affairs, wholesome contact with the people will quickly supply him with the social data that he needs for his work.

Fads from the East.

There are some people who see nothing good in what is foreign. There are others who think they must go abroad to find wisdom. The latter are the easy victims of crooks of various kinds. The Christian Register states in the following paragraph what most sensible people in this country have learned thoroughly:

Ever since the Parliament of Religions was held in Chicago peripatetic Swamis, Yogis, adepts, and philosophers, mostly Hindus, have visited this country and reaped a rich harvest of money at the expense of sentimental devotees. Some of these men worked publicly and some in secret. There were a few men of noble presence and high character. There were many more who were of the kind so adequately described in the second epistle to Timothy: "For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." A reputable native of Bombay told the writer some years ago that many of these persons, because they lost caste by coming here, changed their names and could not be identified in their own country. The Americans, hard-headed as they are, love that which is occult and mysterious, and to these men professing to hold the keys of the unseen palace of truth have given a welcome and access to their homes, a hospitality which many are now learning to regret. In Cambridge, Mass., the worst part of the exposure relates to the way in which the wily Oriental got access to the treasure chests of innocent women.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

The Patriotism of the Kingdom

"Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel," said Dr. Johnson. There is justification for the remark. The cloak of patriotism has covered many kinds of wickedness. The land-grabber skilfully conceals his real motive and enlists the support of patriotic feeling in behalf of his greed. The grafter shouts the praises of the republic while he steals from the pockets of the citizens. Ignorance, narrowness, and bigotry have all drafted patriotism into their service. But the misuse of a sentiment is not a good reason for doubting its nobility. Love of country has been and is one of the noblest passions, and he who has no country for which he is willing to sacrifice is less than a man.

Religion, too, has been the refuge of scoundrels. They have sought its sanctions for their schemes of exploitation. The "wars of the Lord" have too often been the wars of the devil. The privileged classes have said to the dispossessed, "You are waging war against the throne and monarchy of heaven when you denounce us for keeping you under our authority and in poverty. We are the Lord's appointed guardians of the earth and are entitled to use others for our purposes." Talk like this has ceased to awe anybody. We have read our Bibles enough to know that God is not on the side of injustice. They are defying the authority of God who wrong their fellow men.

The patriotism of the kingdom is based upon knowledge. The mob does not rule where the principles of universal justice have been formulated in the habits and customs of the people. Opposition to everything that is foreign gives way when knowledge enters. The patriotism of the kingdom unites men in opposition to what is false and defiling. The true patriot is aroused by acts of injustice, whether the sufferers be members of his own race or citizens of his own country, or men of other races and countries. Lying, stealing, and oppression are sins which do not become virtues when they add to the wealth of our country at the expense of China, Mexico, or a country of South America. The patriotism of the kingdom is ethical, and therefore it discards tribal standards of right and wrong.

The kingdoms of this world have been agents in the building of the kingdom of heaven. The brutal monarchies of the ancient world broke down barriers of race and religion which kept men apart. We feel more kindly toward these despotisms when we remember the crimes committed to gratify race pride and to satisfy the demands of tribal gods. The prophets of Israel came forward with their visions of universal religion at a time when the thought of universal political dominion was filling the minds of men. Paul was protected by the power of Rome from mobs of Jews and of Gentiles. As governments become more responsive to the needs of the people and cease to represent the desires of a few, they will become still more important factors in the progress of the universal kingdom of righteousness.

To be a citizen of the world one must be a citizen of some particular country. The man who has no ties of homeland has nothing to give to the world. The contempt which the average American citizen feels for certain persons who are ashamed of their American citizenship and who hasten to renounce their allegiance to the government of the United States and to enroll themselves as subjects of some foreign potentate, is evidence that genuine patriotism still lives in America. We ought to despise no man simply because he ceases to be an American citizen. But there is something wrong with those who are ashamed of the country that has made them what they are. We could count ourselves fortunate in being rid of them if we were not citizens of the kingdom of heaven and therefore interested in the welfare of the countries with which these renegade Americans have become identified.

The day on which we celebrate our national independence may profitably be used to increase our respect for all the peoples of the earth. The style of oratory demanded for the Fourth of July has changed. We are not anxious to rebuke the wickedness of King George III, and we utter malicious jibes about the speaker who tries to awaken in us feelings of anger against England. The truly patriotic demand that we take account of our efforts that we may know how well we are doing our share of the world's work. The nation that glories, let it glory in the fact that it is promoting peace and good-will among men, that its influence is on the side of justice and never on the side of those who prey upon the weak. [Midweek Service, July 2.—Dan. 2:36-45; Isa. 9:6, 7; Matt. 28:18-20; Rom. 9:1-5; I Cor. 15:24-28; Rev. 11:15.] S. J.

F. D. Power

When David learned of the untimely end of Abner's life in the gates of Hebron, he said to his people, "Know ye not that a prince and a mighty man is fallen in Israel this day?"

Such was the thought of all who had known Frederick D. Power, when the news of his death was reported from Washington last week. For no one in the ranks of the Disciples has come nearer the stature and esteem of a great man than he.

He came of Virginia stock, and was a noble embodiment of the fine ideals of the Old Dominion. The instant impression made on all who met him was that of a gentleman of the rare type for which the South has been famous. There were combined in him the high qualities of dignity, courtesy, genial good humor and personal integrity rarely found in any man.

He prepared for his work as a minister at Bethany College in the days when it was the foremost, in fact almost the only, college of the Disciples, and throughout his life he loved the town, the school and the men who shared with him the privileges of its instructions. Again and again he was called back to deliver addresses at Bethany and he always responded with the feeling that to be "on performance" again in the familiar halls was the chief honor and satisfaction of his life.

As a convention figure he was always notable. It was felt by the men and women who had long known him through the medium of the religious press, that a convention trip was worth the making if Dr. Power was to speak, and he never fell below the high standard of effective and inspiring utterance. His addresses were always prepared with a sense of the responsibility they imposed. Many of them were mastered even to their verbal form, and flowed forth in a convincing and delightful volume such as only a voice and presence like his could make effective. Nor was it on our own platforms alone that his power was felt. From the first he was a trustee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and many other interdenominational interests called him to a voice in their counsels and on their programs. And he always spoke with dignity and eloquence, sustaining nobly the credit of the people he loved.

For many years Dr. Power wrote regularly for our papers. Few writers among us have ever wielded a more facile or charming pen. His letters from abroad were classic. His comments on matters connected with the brotherhood were pertinent, genial and admonitory. Perhaps the finest single piece of writing he ever did was his beautiful notice of his brother's death. That and one or two of his Bethany letters will not be forgotten by those who read them.

Frederick Power was many sided in his interests. He spent his life in the pastorate of the Vermont Ave. Church, of Washington. As the years crept on his people got into the habit of celebrating the recurring anniversaries, until Mrs. Power protested that it was too heavy a reflection on her to talk so much about the long years of her husband's ministry there.

No pastorate in the history of the Disciples has been more significant for permanence, happy relations and conspicuous efficiency. The fact most noted in Dr. Power's long ministry in Washington was his pastoral relation to President Garfield. Yet this was but an incident, albeit an important one, in a long and crowded career.

One of the lighter, yet effective bits of work done by Dr. Power was the preparation of the courses on the history of the Disciples, which he edited, and in large measure wrote, for the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses, projected and managed by Dr. J. Z. Tyler. In connection with this course he wrote the text book on "The Pioneers."

Through all the commotions and disturbances that have marked the intellectual and theological history of the Disciples in recent years Dr. Power kept a quiet and confident spirit. He deeply regretted the down grade tendencies that marked the course of some of our journalism, and at last made his protest effective by withdrawing his writings from the paper for which he had written for a quarter of a century. He felt that it no longer spoke for him and for the open-minded and forward-moving section of the brotherhood, yet he maintained his genial friendliness with all the great family of his brethren. He loved them all, and bore them on his heart.

It is hard to believe that Fred Power, as we affectionately called him, has gone out from our assemblies. We have no one to take his place. In the conventions we shall miss him. In the Bethany reunions his familiar presence and voice will be awaited in vain. To the large company of public men who have sat under his ministry in Washington something will be missing in the worship. But the memory of his wholesome, friendly, eloquent and devoted personality is a permanent asset of the Disciples, and we may believe that he has passed out of the weakness that marked his closing months into that strength and service which are the dower of all the sons of God.

A Touch of Humor in a Solemn Situation

The past week brought interesting developments in the case of the Foreign Missionary Society and The Christian Standard. The statements issued by the Society's Executive committee and by Mr. Sarvis were published in our last issue. They were received at this office too late to permit comment. And the demands upon our space in this educational issue are such as to crowd out our interpretation of these statements this week which must, therefore, be deferred until the next issue.

The tension of the situation has been greatly relieved, and, indeed, an element of humor injected into it by The Christian Evangelist. Every one who read the statements of Mr. Sarvis and the Executive Committee knew, of course, that they sounded the knell of this particular campaign of The Standard against the Missionary Society. And, sure enough, when The Standard appeared it was holding out the olive branch to the Committee, making, as was to be expected, an angry exception of one member only.

The sorry fight was clearly over, and the Cincinnati publisher gave assurance of his purpose to be good.

But the situation became humorous when The Christian Evangelist arrived with a passionate editorial, raising its voice at times almost to a shriek, calling upon its readers to arise and speak out their allegience to the Foreign Society and the missionaries. Our St. Louis neighbor had evidently heard from the brethren that there was a crisis on, and forthwith sprang into the arena with a frenzied shout.

Many of the friends of The Christian Evangelist had been marveling for weeks that that paper kept silent when the conflict raged. Some were seriously asking whether the managing editor's guilty complicity with Russell Errett in one of the most disgraceful episodes of the Cincinnati publisher's long list of usurpations had so involved him that he could not now speak out.

There is no doubt that The Christian Evangelist heard from the church leaders urging the editors to join with The Christian Century in opening a channel for the expression of the long suppressed indignation of the brotherhood. The editors admit that "one or two brethren" had written, "anxiously inquiring why The Christian Evangelist is silent" in the present crisis. We are sure there were more than "one or two," for our own office received a considerable number of letters from their readers saying that they had written urging the editors to speak out bravely. One of their readers, a prominent contributor, said he told The Christian Evangelist that "silence was sometimes golden but now it would be suicide."

But when the Evangelist did speak the battle was already won. No doubt this week's issue will contain the indignant and daring expressions of its readers in response to its editorial headed, "The Crisis of Today." But the editorial should have been named "The Crisis of Yesterday," for it was fully in the past tense when the commander of The Evangelist host gave the order to advance.

Nevertheless The Christian Evangelist's support is hailed with delight even if it is belated. An expression from its readers will lay up virtue against the day when The Standard repeats its long accustomed attack on our sacred interests.

However, it would be well to call The Evangelist's own attention to the wise and eloquent words with which it closes its brave appeal: "The honor of the Son of God, the advancement of his kingdom and the salvation of those for whom he died, all wait on the promptness and thoroughness with which we act."

The italics are ours.

The Peace Movement and the Churches

The sentiment in favor of arbitration with the United States is most substantial and hearty in Great Britain. The Free Church Council of England and Wales at its recent annual meeting in Bournemouth appointed its officers to prepare a memorial of appreciation to President Taft for his efforts on behalf of peace and present the memorial to him in person. Audience with the president was arranged by Dr. E. B. Sanford of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, and the following memorial was presented in beautifully illuminated letters on parchment:

Mr. President:—On behalf of the National Council representing the whole of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales, having about 10,000 separate congregations, we beg to express our profound thankfulness, not only for the most Christian proposals that you have made in favor of arbitration between the two countries, but for the cordial unanimity with which those proposals have been welcomed.

Not only have you taken a step in advance more momentous than any statesman has previously ventured to suggest, but you have had the happiness of witnessing its approval, both by the masses of the people and their leaders, more farspread and enthusiastic than any thing that has been witnessed in this generation.

We are gratified to know that these proposals are to be embodied in a permanent form, and we cannot doubt that they will have a profound effect on the relations between civilized nations.

We welcome the growing community of conviction and feeling between the United States and Great Britain which evinces their agreement in humane aspiration, progressive spirit, and moral ideals.

Holding, as they do, empire over a third of the population of the world, their agreement to withdraw all disputes from the final arbitrament of the sword must have far-reaching results.

We beg to offer you the expressions of our profound respect and congratulation and of our wish that you may long be spared to exert your personal influence on behalf of all that will help to further the upward progress of mankind.

June, 1911.

Rev. Charles Brown, President.
Rev. F. B. Meyer, Secretary.
Sir J. Compton Richett, Treasurer.

And now comes the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America proposing that Sunday, July 2 be consecrated to the publishing of the gospel of peace. The Council addresses its communication as follows:

To The Pastors and Ministers of the Churches Associated Together in the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The Executive Committee at its meeting held at the Assembly Room of the Bible House, on Wednesday, June 14, authorized the sending out of a call to consider on Sunday, July 2, questions of International Arbitration and Peace.

The fact that this Sunday is so close to the national holiday, July 4, makes it especially fitting that such themes should have the attention of the pulpits of this country on that day.

The immediate occurrence of the coronation of the king of England brings to the front the mutual relations of these two nations. It is a happy fact that the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales has sent a committee to present in person to the president of the United States an expression of their gratification of his proposal that there should be a treaty of arbitration between these two great nations. In their communication to the president they say: "We are gratified to know that these proposals are to be embodied in a permanent form and we cannot doubt that they will have a profound effect on the relations between civilized nations."

The Federal Council urges the churches of America to meet the National Council of Churches of Great Britain and Wales in this cordial spirit.

The theme, however, is a vaster theme than that which concerns the mutual relations of even these two great nations. We would urge the consideration of referring to International Tribunals of Justice matters of difference and dispute among all the nations of the earth so that the time may come as speedily as possible when the rule of law will be observed and obeyed among all peoples as the decisions of the courts of the United States and its Supreme Court are observed in matters of nation-wide commerce that in other days would have led to internecine disorder and strife.

It is as truly the function of the gospel to minister to the establishment of law as it is the function of the law to be the servant of the gospel.

In behalf of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

WM. H. ROBERTS.
WM. I. HAVEN.
E. B. SANFORD.

Professor Herbert Martin reënforces the Council's announcement with the earnest suggestion, in which the Council concurs, that each communion coöperating in the Federal Council shall appoint a committee whose object shall be the awakening of its own communion to a larger sense of the significance of the movements of the present day looking toward universal peace. It is planned to articulate these committees with the Federal Council through a special committee of twenty-five members consisting of one representative from each of the coöperating communions. This matter will likely be presented to the Portland Convention.

The Christian-Evangelist on Immersion and Unity

It it evident that The Christian Evangelist does not have much confidence in immersion. That paper says that if the Disciples offer their fellowship to unimmersed Christians on the basis of the practice of immersion only "this element of the church [the unimmersed] might easily come into the majority and decide that immersion is a divisive practice that ought to be discontinued in the interest of Christian union. How could that result be avoided on the principle of our congregational autonomy? That is another possible result of The Century's position which it does not seem to have thought out."

Now The Christian Century has more confidence in immersion than The Christian Evangelist. We believe that immersion is intrinsically appealing; that institutional coercion is not necessary to maintain the practice of immersion; that the main reason so many are prejudiced against it today is that is it made a dogma by its advocates; that if once it were freed from this dogmatic setting and given its true place in the ritual of initiation into the church of Christ its intrinsic fitness and beauty would command men—it would more than hold its own in comparison with affusion.

It is surprising to find The Christian Evangelist so insecure in its faith in the New Testament argument for immersion.

The Christian Century does not claim to be omniscient on the subject of the practice of Christian union. There are, no doubt, many points which we have not thought out. The fact that all the ranges of this theme have not been explored by our thought does not, however, deter us from committing our heart to it. It is the will of Christ that all his disciples should be one; that there should be no wall of separation between those who are members of his body. Presbyterians and Congregationalists are members of his body, members of his church, and we refuse, in obedience to Christ, to erect a human device—a formal right hand of fellowship or an enrolment book—into a barrier to divide them from us.

We favor the practice of Christian union because it is the will of Christ, not because we have "thought out" all the results of the practice. Nevertheless the particular bugaboo which our contemporary triumphantly calls us to task for overlooking is a perfectly obvious commonplace which we discussed months ago in the following words:

"It is important to recognize that the plan of practicing Christian Union concerns itself with but a small fraction of the possible members of our church. It should be distinctly understood that it is not being proposed for the sake of winning people away from other churches by making their admittance into our congregations easy. This would be the very essence of sectarianism, yes, of sin, and to call it the practice of Christian union would be shameless hypocrisy. As our membership now stands probably not more than ten per cent are from other churches. An overwhelming proportion of our converts are by confession and baptism, as it should be. The fear that in the practice of Christian union the unimmersed would some day outnumber the immersed and by vote establish the practice of substitute forms of baptism alongside of immersion is groundless. If such a condition should develop it would show that the church was engaged more earnestly in proselytism than in evangelism. Such a church would be a parasite, living off the blood of other bodies. The operation of the moral law, not to say the spirit of Christ, will forever impel the church to grow by evangelism. But such growth means increase of immersed believers, since the church would practice nothing but immersion-baptism in receiving persons by confession.

"Moreover, the company of those who unite by letter without immersion, while it would be continually augmented by new recruits, would also be continually decreased by the immersion of those who through the preaching of the "more perfect way," desired to obey it. And if we are really so sure as we say we are that immersion is a more fitting form of baptism than any substitute for it we may safely trust the truth of the New Testament to work its way into honest hearts without our making our understanding of the matter a test of fellowship."

* * *

In further proof of our blindness to the logic of the practice of Christian union The Christian Evangelist prints the following paragraph.

This is very clear from one of the points it [The Christian Century] makes in its statement of the reasons which impel it to insist on immersion from persons applying for membership from the world, namely: "that immersion is the only form upon which divided sentiment can agree, and is therefore demanded by the exigencies of Christian union." Why is immersion "demanded by the exigencies of Christian union" on The Century's plan of union? According to its position "a congregation of Disciples striving to practice Christian union, can do nothing less in all consistency and conscience than extend its complete and hearty fellowship to such Christians" as have been received into the fellowship of other religious bodies, by any mode of baptism. It does not appear from this that immersion cuts any figure in the matter of Christian union. The Century does not seem to see the logic of its position.

We have labored over that paragraph as we used to labor over a difficult passage in Ovid. We certainly are deficient in something more than logic, for it must be confessed that we cannot even make sense out of it. The sentences do not seem to track. If the editorial writer who produced that paragraph, or any of the readers of The Christian Evangelist, will tell us what it means we will be grateful. We cannot entertain the conclusion that our contemporary is just stringing words together in lieu of clean-cut ideas.

* * *

Toward the end of its editorial The Christian Evangelist gives such a good illustration of a Disciple habit which was characterized in our opening editorial last week entitled, "Irregular but not Invalid," that we wish we could have had it in time to use as an example in the body of our article. We refer to the habit of equivocal, non-committal speech when speaking of the Christian status of our denominational neighbors. This paragraph is a classic of non-committal canniness. Quoting The Century's statement that "a church practicing Christian union would not raise the question concerning the form by which such persons (members of Pedo-Baptist churches) were inducted into Christ's church, but would raise this question: Are such persons members of Christ's Church?" the Evangelist says:

Why should it raise that question, if membership in any other religious body is to be accepted as conclusive evidence of membership in Christ's Church? But having raised the question, which seems to us a very proper one, how does the Century seek for an answer? Not by ascertaining whether such persons have complied with the New Testament conditions of membership in Christ's Church, as one would suppose a church having no other rule of faith and practice than the New Testament would do, but simply by ascertaining the fact of membership in another religious body, whose teaching and practice on this very question we are seeking to correct in order to remove an obstacle to Christian union. In this course The Christian Century cuts the roots of our restoration movement so far as it has any relation to the union of Christians. This is not denying that such churches are churches of Christ, but if so, they are churches of Christ in error concerning matters of such importance as to have produced and perpetuated divisions in the body of Christ. We set out to practice "a more excellent way," and to give our united testimony to such way. Why, then, should we now adopt a double standard of membership, and thus nullify our testimony?

The italics are The Christian Evangelist's. Note the sentence beginning, "Not by ascertaining—." This sentence seems to imply that the unimmersed are not members of Christ's church—and yet it does not say so. Note again, "This is not denying that such churches are churches of Christ," but The Christian Evangelist will not be caught affirming that they are churches of Christ. Again, "but if so" —hypothetical, non-committal, unfrank! Why any particular words should have been italicised in that paragraph we do not see. Nobody is calling in question the sentiments found in italics. The Christian Century is no less earnestly committed to the correction of the erroneous teaching of our sister churches of Christ than is The Christian Evangelist. And it is an entire gratuity to be saying to a Disciple newspaper contemporary that if these churches are churches of Christ they are in error concerning certain important matters. This paragraph is a consummate illustration of editorial casuistry.

* * *

Why cannot we have from The Christian Evangelist a great ringing, unqualified, unequivocal statement that Presbyterians and Methodists and Congregationalists are Christians, members of the Church of Christ, baptized members of the church of Christ, and that the congregations to which they belong are churches of Christ just as truly as are our own.

Cannot Dr. J. H. Garrison, long time pleader for Christian union, himself the embodiment of the fraternal spirit, lover of all Christian souls and causes, champion among his brethren of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which includes Presbyterian and Congregational churches on the same level of Christian status with Disciple and Baptist churches,—cannot Dr. Garrison take the editorial pen from the timid finessing hand that wrote the above paragraph and fling out such a statement as has never yet appeared in our literature; a statement wholly in the declarative mood, without indirection, without any reservation or ambiguity, without the usual qualification on account of "imperfect obedience" (a qualification which must, of course, be taken for granted not in their case only but in ours as well); a statement that will commit him and the paper he founded and the great majority if not all of his brethren plainly to the basic presupposition of our plea for unity which is that those to whom the plea is made are just as truly Christians as are we ourselves?

This, Dr. Garrison, would be a crowning word for your great editorial career. This word would be emblazoned on our banners after you are gone. It would abide in the world longer than any word you have spoken in your more than forty years of public utterance. It is the most potent asseveration yet left for you to make.

God give you grace to make it!

Editorial Table Talk

A Prejudice Broken

The item in the Drake University news notes elsewhere reporting the granting of the degree of Doctor of Divinity to Rev. Charles S. Medbury and Rev. Peter Ainslie is deserving of comment. Drake University is to be commended for breaking through the prejudice against that particular degree and conferring it upon two such worthy candidates.

Nearly twenty years ago B. B. Tyler and B. W. Johnson were thus honored. The latter declined the title and gave his reasons in the columns of one of our papers of which he was then associate editor. Much discussion of the incident followed and so considerable was the hostile sentiment against the granting of that degree that neither Drake nor any other college has since ventured to confer it.

In lieu of the proper title, our larger colleges have been accustomed to grant the inappropriate and cumbersome title of LL. D. to those ministers whom they chose to honor.

It is good to know that the spell of the foolish superstition against this particular title has been broken. Why a man whose scholarship and achievements are in the field of divinity should be honored with a degree belonging to other fields of scholarship and service it is hard to say. And more difficult of explanation is the inconsistency that has tolerated the degree of Bachelor of Divinity and balked at that of Doctor of Divinity.

Our words must not be taken as encouraging the promiscuous bestowal of this honor. By men of genuine learning such titles are held lightly. Some colleges are guilty of cheapening the higher degrees by their free and easy and undiscriminating choice of candidates. This is to be condemned.

But where a men has attained true scholarly culture and by his culture has rendered outstanding service to mankind, it is eminently fitting that his worth should be recognized by an accredited college in the bestowal of the divinity degree. Dr. Ainslie, Dr. Medbury and Drake University will please accept our congratulations.

The Victorious Church

The world would seem to be out of joint were there no prophets to arise and tell us the church is destined to disappear from the face of the earth soon. These prophets often imagine that wisdom was born with them. History, however, unfeelingly discloses the fact that their wisdom is all borrowed. But disregarding the professional alarmists, we must reckon with many earnest souls who feel that the church is losing ground. They point to the falling off in church attendance, to the growth of unbelief and the failure of the church to meet its social responsibility. The Universalist Leader refuses to be frightened and it doubts that the facts are as they are so often stated by the prophets of evil. It believes the church is doing the work it ought to be doing, not perfectly, of course, and that it is a conquering church. It prints the words, "THE VICTORIOUS CHURCH," as a text and then adds:

In these days when so many are talking about the decline of the church, it is a pleasure to set up these words where all can see them, and realize that they tell the truth. There are ebbs and floods in the church as in everything which has life. There are local figures which are discouraging. We can all remember times when conditions seemed far more favorable, and in the long reach of the centuries through which the church has lived, it is possible to find any kind of figures we are looking for. Two thousand years ago Jesus stood alone in the world; today the great human forces of the world, which hand to hand encircle it, sit at his feet learning the alphabet of his great lesson of life. Few of them may be able to pronounce a single word perfectly, few perform perfectly his simplest example; like children in the kindergarten the world's people are but weaving straws and matching colors, but they are in the seats of the learners and their position is prophetic. Two thousand years ago the Teacher stood alone; at the end of the first century there were five millions in his school, at the end of ten centuries there were fifty millions. At the beginning of the nineteenth century the figures show there were sixty-eight recorded members of his school out of every thousand in this country, at the end of the century there were two hundred and twenty-six to every thousand. And during the last forty years when it has seemed to many that the cause of Christianity was declining, the gain has been tremendous, and the actual figures show the decline of those not connected in some way with the Christian Church, from twenty-seven to less than ten per cent.

The Ministry of Old Age

Is there a place in the church for the ministry of old men and old women? Of course there is. Here and there workers may be crowded out merely because their hair is gray. There are churches so lacking in insight that they must have arbitrary rules for determining the fitness of men and women to serve them. One of these rules is that no one with gray hair shall be accepted. But the majority of churches choose for their servants those who give promise of usefulness. On the ministry of the old the United Presbyterian says:

We should remember that a large part of the world's best work is done by those whom we call old. Indeed, there is no clearly defined boundary in age. When does one become old? We cannot answer by the calendar for some never become old. They do not yield to the lassitude that age sometimes brings on; they have something yet to do, and they are intent on doing it, and on doing it well. Many of our leading men of business are away up in the seventies; there are men held in highest place in professional life and political positions whose years have reached or passed the fourscore. They have not relaxed their vigor or bowed under the work of the years.

We are happy in having among our correspondents some who have been long in active service, and to whom we look for counsel and help. In a letter recently received, one who has entered the last quarter of a century speaks of his work and his plans. Of the latter he says it will require twelve years to complete what he now has in view. Another in his seventies tells us of his stated ministerial work, and we happen to know that the people to whom he has ministered ever since his ordination cling to him in love and grow in grace under his expositions of the Holy Word. Today we have a letter which has suggested these remarks. It is from one who is approaching his eighty-second birthday. He has long served the Lord in the eldership, and has been a blessing to his community. It is written in the peace of the blessed hope. We quote the closing sentence: "I suffer little except from weakness. I feel when writing this letter that not many more can follow it. Indeed if the Lord's time had come and I felt that my work was done, the call would be received with joy." Knowing him as we do, his words are as a blessing from one who has lived in the joy of the Lord.

The Visitor

The commencement season, which extends from the early part of May to the end of June, and includes the closing exercises of every sort of educational institution, from the kindergarten to the university, has a set of interests and attractions unknown to any other season of the year or any other activities. At first glance the name seems a misnomer. Why apply the word, "commencement," to an occasion which is really the closing of the particular educational work in which the students have been engaged, and is too often the end of all effort to attain a competent education?

The answer is twofold: In the earlier history of American colleges, and the English institutions on whose lines they were founded, the degrees were conferred, not at the close of the academic year in which the work was completed, but at the opening of the one succeeding. In this way the dates on which graduation occurred was really the "commencement" of the year's activities. This custom has now given way to the more convenient one of closing the course of study and conferring the degrees at the same time. But in a truer sense the day that sees the students leave the sheltering walls of the school or college in which they have been initiated into the serious work of education is the day of beginnings for the big adventure of life-making, an enterprise whose first steps only have been taken in the class-rooms and laboratories of the schools. Happy is the graduate who realizes that his departure from the high school or even the college is only the "commencement" of his educational career, and that the graduate courses of the universities and the still greater school of life are yet before him.

* * *

Christian College at Columbia, Mo., is one of the schools for young women which has attempted to realize as fully as possible the needs and opportunities of woman's education which the last few decades have revealed. It is not so far back that the institutions open to women were few in number and of the most limited equipment. It was not supposed that education in the formal and competent sense was intended for women at all. A little literature, a little French, a little music, a little fancy work, and something called "deportment" or "manners" were all that were deemed essential. Today all this is changed. The institutions that open their doors to young women, either exclusively or in the form of co-educational advantages, are far more numerous than those to which young men have the right of entrance. And for the most part the courses of study are equally adequate and exacting.

The commencement season at Christian College was of special interest as a "home-coming" occasion, for the former—one dares not say the "old"—students and alumnæ. They were there in great numbers, some of them from the very earliest classes, and they were proud to see the expansion of the school during the last few years. Mrs. St. Clair has proved herself a most competent, gifted and gracious president, and the Disciples of Missouri and the country at large have reason to be gratified at the position achieved by the college under its present management. A new and ampler equipment is being secured, and the school is in all regards worthy of its environment at the seat of the state university.

The procession of the graduates into the handsome auditorium of the Christian church was a beautiful and inspiring sight, and the interest manifested by the friends of the college and the people of the commnuity in the baccalaureate services and the other events of commencement week made evident the high regard in which the institution is held.

* * *

The following Sunday, June 4, found the Visitor at Fargo, N. D., after a week of commencement addresses in Nebraska, Iowa and Illinois. Fargo is the seat of the State Agricultural College, and the religious services in connection with the commencement season were held in the gymnasium and military drill room of the college at 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. It was an inspiring sight to see the scores of young men and women who had completed courses in agriculture, domestic science, and normal school work, and were preparing to take their places in the development of the material and educational resources of the great Northwest. These new states are keenly alive to their resources and obligations. It is far easier to secure adequate funds for state schools in the West than in the East, though the latter is supposed to be the financial seat of power.

But if the soil is the real source of wealth, it is certain that the and rewarding occupation—agriculture. The proof of this statement is to be found in the numbers and character of the young men who are flocking to the schools where scientific agriculture is taught, and the large proportion of them who deliberately choose farming as their life work; and the number of foreign students, especially from the Orient, who are pursuing studies in agriculture in American schools, show how rapidly the world is waking to the importance of this oldest, but most neglected, vocation. The young men of China, Korea, India, Turkey, the Philippines, and South America are forming a noticeable percentage of our student groups in schools of this class.

An interesting episode occurred on the evening of the Visitor's stay in Fargo. Mr. Peterson, the pastor of the Baptist church, and a former student of the University of Chicago, invited Mr. Sapp and the members of the Christian church to a union service in the Baptist building. The Visitor spoke on the work of the Memorial Church of Christ in Chicago, the progress toward the union of the two bodies, Baptists and Disciples, and the growing spirit of unity in the universal church. The occasion was delightful. It ought to result in closer relations between Disciples and Baptists in Fargo. Such movements are significant as pointing the way to customary, and later to habitual, relations. Only the survival of the sectarian spirit on one side or the other, or both, can prevent the union of two bodies so nearly related.

* * *

At Canton, Mo., on one of the most picturesque hills overlooking the Mississippi, stands the handsome central building of Christian University. This is one of those colleges of the Disciples that in spite of limitations and poverty has for the long years of its history maintained with unfaltering courage, and at great sacrifice on the part of its faculty, its testimony to the sanctions of the Christian faith and the need of a Christian education.

The small college has always played an important part in the story of American education, and it is the hope of the Visitor that it always will. Perhaps the odds against it were never greater than today. It is in danger of being ground out between the lower millstone of the public school and the upper millstone of the state university. Yet it has elements of value which no other foundation can supply. It is perhaps true that Garfield's figure of Mark Hopkins and the log has been overworked, for there are few logs on which are to be found men of the Hopkins type, yet for intimacy of relationship between instructors and students, between the students themselves, and between the students and the ideals for which the institution stands, the small college has advantages which no large institution can provide. There is a place for graduate instruction in the university, and no student ought to waste time in trying to do graduate work in a college that has no competent equipment for it. A student may well resent, either at the time, or in after years when he sees things in their true perspective, any efforts made to induce him to spend added time in the college after he had completed its baccalaureate course. But the value of the experience actually required to attain the degree of an honest and competent college no young man or women need regret. There is a spirit of fellowship, friendship and love in the small school which is impossible in the large one, and in so far as it makes the attempt to secure men and women for its faculty who possess adequate training and Christian character, it is prepared to do for its students a work of first rank importance.

* * *

The commencement exercises at Christian University were largely attended and full of interest. The Visitor had never before been at Canton. President Johann presented diplomas to a group of young men and women of whom the faculty should be proud. Several of the men are already in the ministry, and will go on to graduate studies as they are able. Professor Robison is dean of the biblical department, and with his colleagues is doing excellent work in strengthening the courses in preparation for the ministry.

The school has received some generous gifts, notably that of Mr. Stockton of St. Louis. But much more is needed, and ought to be forthcoming from a brotherhood as resourceful as ours, and as deeply indebted as we are to the faithful and sacrificing services of the colleges. Back of every interest we have—ministerial, missionary, journalistic and educational—lies the work of instruction, of which our colleges are the chief and increasingly efficient interpreters. Money alone cannot make a great institution of any sort, least of all one of an educational character. No amount of external equipment can compensate for the lack of competent instructors educational conscience among the Disciples.

* * *

Later in the day the Visitor found himself in Hannibal, the newly-acquired parish of George A. Campbell. It was a hot day—one of those days that Missouri can turn out when it really tries—and the Visitor was inclined to stay in the shade. But Campbell has annexed a membership in the "Country Club" with its fine golf grounds as one of the perquisites of his new pastorate, and was anxious to show that the Scotch golf instinct functioned properly in his case. The story of that afternoon on the links cannot be told here. For the Visitor it was mostly a series of "foozles," tall grass and lost balls. But Campbell had to stand the expense, and he was in such good form himself that he was willing to overlook all the awkwardness of the rest of the "foursome." But the Visitor learned Campbell's method of capturing the men of Hannibal. He takes them out to the golf links, and in the course of the round, no matter what it is he wants, from a subscription to the repair fund to a pledge to unite with the church, they "come across." He has certainly mastered the fine art of making friends—fine, wholesome, loyal friends—and the affection in which he is held is manifest on all hands.

An elaborate plan of remodeling is under way at the church. The edifice, which is admirably located, will be one of the most comfortable and convenient in the city. The most substantial men in Hannibal, a city of unusually solid and progressive character, are members of the Christian church. A second church, active and growing, occupies an admirable place in the artisan section of the city. It is something of a compensation for the keen regret felt at Mr. Campbell's departure from Chicago to find him so well located, his family so truly appreciated, and his opportunity so great as seems to be the case in Hannibal.

Interpretations

Concerning Our Differences

This is a great day in which to have part in the work of the kingdom. A new vision and a new passion possess the church. These we are not able yet fully to interpret, but we have hints of their tremendous vitality. The heart of humanity is in our present-day religion. Man as man is exalted. A passion is upon us to get back to "New Testament Christianity." We are not idly mouthing this great phrase, "New Testament Christianity," or the other synonymous phrase, "the simple gospel," for we are trying to read into them their profound and holy content. We are trying to measure our souls by their searching light and their uncompromising demands. Both contain the cross of the Son of man.

We are seeing that Christianity exists to make man whole. All of its symbolism and observances are simply helps to build man into a Christlike character. That great liberating statement of Jesus, "The Sabbath was made for man," is finding lodgment in our minds. Perhaps we have not as yet fully measured its meanings; but certainly we are understanding hints as to its import.

As a result of this there is a social note in our gospel of today. Man as body and soul is being ministered to. The weightier matters of the law are gaining our attention. Man's condition in this life, as well as that which is to come, is regarded as important. The slum is seen to lead neither to health nor to heaven. Prevention of sin as well as salvation from sin is now emphasized.

God is regarded as sensible. Dogmas that do him an injustice are having a hard time. The atmosphere of today will not permit of extreme Calvinism, nor will it permit of legalism in religion. We simply cannot believe that God is a great Roman Emperor.

It is not so much new doctrines as a new atmosphere that marks our age.

The holy faith of our fathers, the faith that held them to an exalted view of the authority of the scriptures and made them to be men of iron, is not being discarded; but the Scriptures themselves have created for us new accents—those of humanity, fraternity, love. The sons have heard the call to heroic faith as clearly as did their good fathers. The authority of the Christ appeals not less to them, but it is the authority of his love rather than the authority of legal injunctions. This day could offer martyrs for its faith, indeed is offering great hosts of servants for men of our brotherhood breathe this atmosphere, and are necessarily controlled by it. They therefore will not emphasize the outer observance, nor magnify the differences of the denominations as much as they will stress the spiritual back of the material, and emphasize the fraternal in their relations with all professing Christians. The worst enemies of any ordinance or doctrine are those who overwork it; for as sure as any truth is overstressed it will lead to a dangerous reaction. Every swing of the pendulum necessitates another swing.

The younger men among us as a whole are anxious to be true to all that was true in the religion of their fathers. They are afraid of superficial holdings. They know the springs of life are deep in the nature of things. They reverence the great life-giving stream that has ever run through the church. Reverence, not inconoclasm, characterizes their attitude.

To understand them we must know that they talk relatively. The unsympathetic soul might honestly misquote every one of them. For instance on the subject of baptism, every discerning man among us knows that there has been a great deal of legalistic talk. After my first baptisms I was met on the bank of the river and told by a regulating brother that I had not baptized any one of the three candidates. I was quite disturbed until he told me that because I had not used the words, "unto the remission of sins," I had not baptized them. The younger men are charged with being evasive. They answer with a "but" or an "if." That is because they honestly wish to state their full convictions. In the present confusion it is the only answer honest souls can give. Would it not be possible for honest men to give opposite answers to different people?

If the brother who criticized me after my first baptism were to ask me, "Don't you believe in baptism for remission of sins," I might truthfully answer, "No," meaning by that not as he does; for as I remember him he was grossly legalistic, sinfully and quarrelsomely legalistic. His soul apparently never rejoiced in the spiritual religion of Christ. On the other hand, if a soul came to me with a heartfelt appreciation of baptism, to the same question I might say, "Yes." The former had no conception of baptism, while the latter had the Christ-conception.

Every man chooses his words according to what he thinks are the thoughts of him to whom he is talking. We strive to even up truth oftentimes by overstating it as much as our friend understates it. Who of us would like to have all our chatty conversations reported as our mature conclusions?

Yet there is a difference between the past generation and ours. It is not a propositional difference as much as a sentimental one. The younger man may believe all the dogmas and propositions of the fathers, but whether he has been to the university or gone to school only in the great world of experience he likely has been baptized by a new spirit—that of his his own age—for God has a baptism for each generation. The marvel of the church's history is that, although each passing generation has been suspicious of the succeeding one, Christ has continued to breathe himself anew and more fully on the unfolding years. May God richly bless the old men who believe in the young ones, and may he keep as sweet and hopeful as he can the old men who are fearful as to the new tendencies. And may God grant that with each year those who try to force the younger men to feel and talk the language of the past may grow less. May he keep the young men true to their best light, kind, and filled with a burning faith in God and man.

No man knows to what heights God may lead this generation. No one knows just how he will lead to union. In the confusion we may miss his call.

GEORGE A. CAMPBELL.

Ministers are wonders. It is a marvel how much they do under the conditions. The minister is the only man in the community who has responsibility without authority. He can command nobody. Most of them haven't one paid helper. Suppose a man is responsible for results in his office, and yet his office force may work or not as they choose; and never are they all there. Yet this is the condition under which clergymen do their work. They are responsible for results. They need a large body of helpers to produce the results. But they can command nobody; and they never know how many will be there. Neither the doctor nor the lawyer will accept responsibility unless he is in control and his orders are carried out. But the minister, and he alone, has responsibility without a particle of authority. It is a marvel that he does so much.—The Church Militant.

The American Student in Germany

Contrasting Customs of German and American Universities

BY ERRETT GATES.

It is the ambition of nearly every American student to spend a period of study in Germany. This is not peculiar to the theological or philosophical student; the medical philological, musical, scientific, and military student all look to Germany for leadership in their respective fields. Even in the new science and art of aerial navigation, Germany is fast taking the leadership. Just outside of Berlin there is already a training school in the management of flying-machines and air-ships in full operation. A vast field of 500 or more acres has been enclosed with a high fence, where representatives of all the famous makers and operators of flying-machines give demonstrations for the benefit of students and spectators throughout the entire year. Germany does not miss any chance to become teacher to the world.

Germany Produces Leaders.

Italy may produce a great criminal sociologist, France a great philosopher, England a great physician, once in a generation or a hundred years, and attract special groups of students, but Germany seems to produce leaders in all spheres of human learning all the time. And the interesting thing about it is that the students of all nationalities feel the pull of German scholarship. I attended an assembly of the International Students' Union in Berlin last winter, at which there were present representatives of twenty-one nationalities. Addresses were made in the German language by a Chinaman, a Japanese, an Englishman, a Greek and an Italian, while an American student from Cornell presided over the meeting.

American's Disadvantage.

There were during the last year 300 American students in all the 21 different German universities; 100 of these were in the University of Berlin. The largest proportion of them were students in the philosophical faculties; the next largest number was in the faculty of Germanic language and literature. As a rule the American student is at a serious disadvantage the first few months of his residence in Germany. His lack of acquaintance with the language on his arrival obliges him to devote the larger part of his first and possibly his second semester to the acquirement of a sufficient familiarity with it to be able to listen profitably to lectures, and to read without tediousness. In view of this serious handicap it is not difficult to understand what was whispered about university halls, that the foreign student in a German university makes a poor class-room record. The average American student simply cannot take part in the discussions or recitations of lecture classes and seminars. Provision is made for the inclusion of non-participating students in seminars in the distinction between "ordinary" and "extraordinary" members.

Importance of Final Examination.

A still further accommodation in the German university system for the foreign student is the custom of basing all credits for work and the conferring of a degree upon a final examination. A student registers for a lecture course and after the first few lectures secures the professor's signature to his class-book, which testifies to the student's entrance upon his course. At the close of the semester the student goes again to the professor for his signature in his class-book, which testifies to the students presence at the close of the course. What the student was doing between the opening and the close of the course, the professor does not know. Whether present or absent during the most of the lectures, he has no means of knowing, for no record of class attendance is kept. The student may have trifled away all of his time in drinking places, or in play-houses, or in student and other social functions. The professor knows nothing about it. The test comes, not at the close of each term but at the close of three or four years when the student comes up for his examinations. There is just one day of judgment, as between the professor and the student, and thas is the last day.

It is apparent how well such a scheme works for the foreign student. The longer he remains in the country the better he understands and uses the language. His proficiency and readiness for examinations are an accumulative process. He would fail utterly in the first few examinations if they were held at the close of each semester.

Is German Student Ahead of American?

Whether the German student is a better student than the American student, and better equipped at the close of his study, are much discussed problems. At a meeting of American students in the University of Berlin, called together by the Harvard Club of Berlin, the American ambassador, David J. Hill, spoke. And he addressed himself to this question of the differences between the German and American student. He had had experience both as a student in Germany in his early days and as student, professor, and president of an American college. He said there was no doubt in his mind that the German student, at the close of his college course, was better trained technically than the American student. He would be able to read more easily a page of classical Greek or Latin, and on the branches of learning covered in his course, would be able to pass a better examination. What he had studied he had learned well, through the drill of the German system. But the American student, while not technically so perfect in the college disciplines, had learned a great deal more of life and possessed a great deal more of individual initiative, and would be able to use what he had acquired to more practical advantage. The German student is more finely and specially trained, but out of his groove he is far less able to turn his training to account than the American student. The German student will translate the page of classical Latin more readily, but if the American student succeeds in translating it he will make more out of it. Dr. Hill thought this explained the want of imagination and of human interest in works of German scholarship. They are usually as dry as dust, or as cold as the frigid zone, but they are mechanically exact and scientifically remorseless. Nothing seems able to turn a German scholar aside from the pursuit of the line of his investigation to the remotest limit, not even consideration for an intelligible literary style in which to clothe the results of his investigation.

Duels and Beer Drinking.

There are two customs in German university life that the American student, especially the theological student, can never quite get used to—the student duel and beer-club. The one shocks because of its utter stupidity and barbarism, the other because of its social strangeness. The German theological students do not join in the duels, though there are a few scarred faces among them—scars received before they joined the theological faculty. But the theological students have their beer-clubs as well as the others. At a reception given by the "Theological Students' Union" to the new students who had entered in October 1910, there was a liberal supply of beer. Several professors were invited in to speak; and over their foaming mugs of beer they talked to the students of the deepening of the spiritual life, and of self dedication to the personal and social redemption of humanity. In American theological student life, beer-drinking and spiritual devotion are not usually looked upon as congenial companions. But the German theological student has no difficulty in uniting them in an apparently happy and consistent union. A glass of beer means no more to him than a dish of ice cream or a glass of lemonade to an American prohibitionist. Such is the difference in social custom and training between the two countries.

Dueling Decreasing.

Concerning student dueling it ought to be said to the credit of the German moral consciousness that it is not treated with any such degree of social tolerance as beer-drinking; nor is it carried on with any such openness and freedom. Duels are secretly arranged and are supposed to be carried out under the strictest bond of secrecy. But as a matter of fact anyone who is very anxious to witness one, has little difficulty in securing an invitation from some acquaintance to be present. They are overlooked by the police authorities, as many other student breaches of good order, so long as no serious damage is done. It is seldom that a duelist gets anything more than a skin wound about the head or face, and the moment blood is drawn the duel stops. The wounds are then carefully nursed into beautiful scars that are looked upon by the ladies and the boys of the streets as marks of courage. A kind of hero worship is accorded the much-scarred duelist in student circles in Germany, as the foot-ball star in America. The German student who wears on his cheek a scar carries about with him a conspicuous certificate of membership in an exclusive students' union, (for only members of such unions can participate in duels), and at the same time evidence of a superior social rank.

Joy of life seems to me to arise from a sense of being where one belongs, as I feel right here; of being foursquare with the life we have chosen. All the discontented people I know are trying sedulously to be something they are not, to do something they cannot do. In the advertisements of the county papers I find men angling for money by promising to make women beautiful and men learned or rich—overnight—by inspiring good farmers and carpenters to be poor doctors and lawyers. It is curious, is it not, with what skill we will adapt our sandy land to potatoes and grow beans in clay, and with how little wisdom we farm the soils of our natures. We try to grow poetry where plumbing would thrive grandly, not knowing that plumbing is as important and honorable and necessary to this earth as poetry.—David Grayson, in "Adventures in Friendship.

Advanced Scholarship Not Enemy But Ally

How Modern Scientific Study of the Bible Re-enforces Disciples' Principles

BY G. N. STEVENSON.

The Disciples of Christ have earnestly contended for four cardinal principles and their logical consequences. These principles may be stated as follows:

1. The rejection of humanly devised creeds, symbols, confessions, theological systems and formulae as possessing any authority over the consciences of men.

2. A distinction in spiritual value between the revelation of the Old Testament and that of the New.

3. The ascription to Christ of the highest place of authority in the religious life of man.

4. The breaking down of the walls of sectarianism and the restoration of an united church upon the universal elements of the Christian religion.

Once Heretical Now Orthodox.

These principles as enumerated by the Campbells at the opening of the nineteenth century were looked upon as heretical, revolutionary and dangerous. Not a single position taken by these nineteenth century reformers found any degree of acceptance in the religious world. Contrary to the teaching of the great minds of the sixteenth century, the Holy Scriptures had come to be looked upon as a homogeneous, verbally-dictated whole, and no distinction was made in spiritual value between the Old and the New Testaments; symbols and creeds were the supreme tests and Christ was relegated to a secondary place if not entirely forgotten. The walls of sectarianism were as hard as adamant, admitting of no destruction. So deeply entrenched had these views become in religious thought and so completely had they connected themselves with all that is essential to worship and salvation, that they very stubbornly resisted every effort to destroy them. There are signs, however, that the death knell of this creed bondage and sectarianism has sounded, and that the supreme head of the church is ushering in a new era.

Advanced Scholarship Supports Disciples.

For now almost one hundred years the Disciples of Christ have been pleading for the adoption of the principles mentioned above. During that time they have enlisted in their movement fully a million and a half of people. But what is more gratifying than this numerical growth is the fact that every doctrinal position so daringly taken by them at the beginning has been fully endorsed by the advanced guard of the modern critical Christian theologian. The foremost thinkers in assemblies, synods, conferences, colleges and universities are as one in their acceptance of these cardinal positions of the Disciples. This change of front, however, it not wholly due to the Disciples' movement, but has come about through deeper and more permanent causes. The modern student of the record of revelation, with a better equipment than it was possible for the scholar of a century ago to possess, and withal of a more unbiassed mind, has arrived at almost identical conclusions apart from the Disciples and indeed without any definite knowledge of their existence. The main positions assumed by this religious body are receiving a re-enforcement from an unexpected quarter. Side by side with the work now being carried on by the successors of the Campbells, another movement is being conducted, from a different viewpoint perhaps, but in the spirit of the same early reformers from whom the Disciples have taken their life. I refer to that scholarly, critical, yet reverent, study of the Bible from a literary and historical standpoint, now engaging the attention of the highest learning of the church. What the Campbells contended for seventy-five years ago and what the Disciples stand for today a scholarly and conscientious criticism has adduced as some of its most assured results.

Our Debt to Criticism.

This modern study has made it clear that the Old Testament stands on a different plane from that of the New. The memorable sermon on the law of 1816 finds support, not only in the teaching of Jesus and his apostles, but also from arguments drawn from the origin and nature of the law itself. Criticism has shown it to be the outgrowth of the spiritual mind necessarily limited by its environmental conditions, and hence revealing human as well as divine characteristics, the human and provisional only to pass away at the coming of the deeper and more spiritual teaching of the son of God (Bruce Apologetics 323-325). With the same reverent but relentless criticism that characterizes the study of the Old Testament, the creeds and confessions of denominationalism are examined and one by one are shown not to be in keeping with the principles of true Protestantism. "Biblical criticism," says a recent writer, "implies the obligation to permit nothing to stand between the inquiring spirit of man and the Word of God. It cannot recognize churchly authority, if that authority as in the earlier Roman mode undertakes to check investigation and to impose compulsory interpretation. It cannot be satisfied to adopt confessional declarations about the Bible and its contents as substitutes for personal acquaintance with the sources and personal assurance of their teaching. Every barrier raised before Holy Scripture most give way; and one must stand unfettered and unembarrassed in the presence of the oracles of God, assured that whatsoever is of truth shall attest itself as the revelation of God."

Rev. G. N. Stevenson.

Disciples Debt to Modern Scholarship.

Great as is the debt of the Disciples in particular and the Christian world in general to the modern methods of Biblical study in placing the Old Testament and the creeds in their proper perspective in the development of final truth, we owe much more to that method of criticism in that it has restored to us Jesus as the Lord of life. The burning words of the immortal Chillingworth when he said, "Take away this persecuting, burning, cursing, damning of men as the words of God; require of Christians only to believe Christ and to call no man master but him only," have been reset in the religious thought of today, not only in the familiar creed of the Disciples, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," but by those patient students of religions who after sitting at the feet of the wisest masters of the world have come back to place the sceptre of authority in the hand of Jesus as the only master of men and Lord of the conscience.

Christ is Ultimate Authority.

"To the burning question," says Prof. Bruce, "Who or what is the seat of ultimate authority in religion? the most recent apologetic answers Christ: Christ, not other religious masters, not the individual reason, not the church, not even the Bible."

And Dean Farrar says at the close of one of his most scholarly works, "I, too, have examined many sects; I have considered many phases of teaching; I have found nothing better than to believe in Christ. The one thing needful to be desired in all the world is this: to find Christ and to be found of him, not having a righteousness of our own, even that which is of law, but that which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith."

Sectarian Walls Broken.

As a result of this death blow to traditional exegesis and post-Reformation symbolism the walls of sectarianism have been broken, and in their intense passion for truth scholars of every religious affiliation are finding a common meeting point in the universal elements of the Christian religion as first presented by the incomparable Teacher of Galilee. Modern scholarship has overstepped the bounds of narrow sectarianism and with the torch of truth in her hand is searching everywhere for contributions to a better understanding of that final faith to which all mankind will ultimately become adherent. It is fast consuming to ashes old systems and old philosophies of religion; it is causing both protestantism and catholicism to cast aside the accretions of cruel and ignorant centuries, thus revealing to modern eyes the church as she appeared in the mind of Jesus and in the eyes of the apostles in the first century.

Broad Biblical Study An Ally.

From this brief outline of some of the results of the modern scientific study of the Bible, we are justified in holding that every permanent principle contended for by the Campbells finds reënforcement in the conclusions of a free and untrammeled study of the history and method of revelation. It is my firm persuasion that if the Disciples are wise enough to make an ally instead of an enemy of this broad method of Biblical study they may yet reap the results of their heroic fight for freedom during the last century, and they may yet be saved from becoming a narrow sect side-tracked in the onward march toward final truth by the very organizations that hitherto they have looked upon as false to the principles of the great Protestant Reformers.

Bridgeport, Conn.

Closing the College Year

How the Glad Commencement Season Was Celebrated

Oklahoma Christian University

Oklahoma Christian University has just closed its fourth session. The fourth annual commencement was held in the University chapel, Tuesday night, May 30. The address was delivered by A. McLean of Cincinnati, Ohio. The baccalaureate sermon was preached the previous Sunday by O. L. Cook of Hutchinson, Kans. Sixty-five young people graduated from the various departments. Eleven of the number received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, four the degree of Master of Arts, one the degree of Bachelor of Divinity and one the degree of Bachelor of Oratory. This make a total number of thirty-two degrees conferred by this young institution. The entire enrollment for the year is 357. This is only a fraction under 10 per cent increase over last year. All departments show a marked growth, but the largest increase is in the College of Liberal Arts where the growth is 40 per cent. Fourteen different states, the Dominion of Canada and Australia are represented in the enrollment. The ministerial department enrolled eighty-five; forty of the ministerial students supplied sixty-five churches with preaching in the vicinity of Enid. Three hundred dollars has been raised, mainly by the students and faculty, to place a living link evangelist through the Oklahoma Christian University Missionary Society, in the field. This evangelist is to work in the territory contiguous to Enid. His special work will be to hold meetings with the churches that are now without preachers and place with them a student from the University. Through this means it is hoped that a great many more ministerial students will be supplied with preaching.

In completion of the original contract entered into by the citizens of Enid and the University, the University within the past year received $18,000 from the city of Enid, $12,000 of which is in property.

Through the beneficence of a number of our brethren, $30,000 has been secured during the past year in gifts. This money is being used in the liquidation of the debt which has hung over the institution from its beginning. As the college is now coming out from under the debt that has been a burden, it is feeling a sense of relief that heretofore it has not experienced.

R. A. Long, so well and favorably known for his princely gifts, has offered $25,000 toward a $100,000 block of permanent endowment. The next aggressive movement will be to secure this $100,000.

The school is now recognized as a prominent factor in the educational interest of the Southwest. It is competing in athletics and debate with the leading schools of Oklahoma and is winning more than its share of victories. It is drawing many students from the high schools which is giving an air of maturity to its student body. In four years this institution has won a place both in our brotherhood at large and among the colleges of the Southwest. O. N. Roth.

Enid, Okla.

Drake University

Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, gave the commencement address. His subject was "Crowns." There were hundreds of graduates and everything showed the signs of prosperity.

A plan is projected to raise a half-million of dollars for additional endowment. Over $100,000 has been secured. President Bell knows how to organize and prosecute large enterprises like this.

Professor Herbert Martin, Ph. D., from Yale, now teaching in New York City, will succeed Professor Shepperd in the chair of philosophy.

The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Peter Ainslie and also upon Pastor Medbury. Dr. B. B. Tyler, of Denver, is the only other person to whom this degree has been given, and Drake is the only institution among the Disciples which has ever offered the degree.

The alumni are planning to form local associations in various cities, and the general alumni association took steps toward securing fuller coöperation among the graduates of recent years. The Chicago alumni who were present promised to revive the association in this city.

Professor D. R. Dungan is yet in Des Moines, but will move to California as soon as he sells his home.

Dean Norton is growing in popularity as dean of the College of Arts. His recognized scholarship and fine administrative ability are rapidly making him indispensable to the institution.

The senior class play, "Sweet Lavender," was a work of art. Mr. Buel McCash, son of our worthy secretary of the A. C. M. S., played the leading role.

The music college, under the direction of Dean Holmes Cowper, gave a most delightful concert on the eve of commencement day.

Des Moines, Ia.

Transylvania University

Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., has recently received a gift of $15,000 from W. P. Bowers and wife, Muncie, Ind., for the endowment fund. The university agrees to add to this a similar amount, making $30,000 in all, which is to found the Bowers' professorship. This is the second professorship that has been founded in Transylvania within the last few months, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Waters, of Pomona, California, giving the first.

Robert A. Bledsoe and wife have endowed the Hugh A. Bledsoe Scholarship, in memory of their only son who died some years ago, and Mrs. Carrie Sewell has endowed the Sewell Scholarship. These named gifts of $2,000 each were received about the middle of June. Both of these donors live in Louisville, Ky.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowers but recently made a gift to the Foreign Society, and are administering on their own estate rather than leaving this task to others. Their example is worthy of emulation. President Crossfield reports that more than $190,000 of the required $240,000 has already been raised, and he believes that the remainder will be forthcoming. With the entire indebtedness paid by the curators and an addition of $200,000 to the endowment funds, Transylvania will be prepared to do the most effective service in its history.

Lexington, Ky.

The Bible College of Missouri

The Hub of the Wheel.

When one places the hub of a wheel at Columbia, and describing a circumference about Missouri, discovers that it strikes three corners of the state, he does not wonder that the Bible College of Missouri seeks and deserves the interest of the entire Missouri brotherhood. Situated in the very heart of that brotherhood our school has a geographical situation that could not be excelled. It is so located as to be able to minister to almost every county of our great commonwealth. Its young ministers are equidistant from churches located at all four points of the compass.

When this splendid geographical feature is combined with its nearness to the great central University of Missouri, its location becomes a strategic one indeed, and the Bible College of Missouri may rightly be called, "The Hub of the Wheel." In short, it is Missouri's school and has already reached a point where the Missouri brotherhood may well be proud of their growing Biblical seminary. For its influence stretches far beyond the borders of the state, and its name is becoming known abroad. Eight of our former students are now upon the foreign mission field. Our students come from far and near. Four young men are now present from Australia, and more from other lands will no doubt follow.

The question is almost answered, "Shall the State of Procter, Haley, Garrison, and the host of other noble Missouri men, have a school that is worthy of the unique history they have given the cause in our state? For the Bible College of Missouri, centrally located, strategically situated, possessing an immense leverage and a splendid business frontage, bids fair to become the Biblical seminary of the central West.

The Christian Church in Missouri has had a noble history. Her future may be great as well, if we who are her workers will it so. And part of that greatness, part of that success for Christ and his Kingdom, will be the Bible College of Missouri, "The Hub of the Wheel."

R. W. Gentry, Field Sec'y.

Hamilton College

The week ending May 25th was devoted to the closing programmes of this institution, as follows: The graduating recital in music, given with full orchestral accompaniment by Miss Myrtle B. Hawkins and Miss Amelia L. Lowe, pupils of Fraulein Scudo. The baccalaureate service, with an address, Wisdom's Ultimate Goal, by Rev. Joseph W. Hagin, of Covington, Ky; the presentation of King Rene's Daughter, a Danish drama, by members of the Marlowe Club; the assembly of the alumnæ; the art exhibit; the Senior Class Day exercises, including the rose-chain procession and the planting of the class-ivy and the commencement exercises, with an address on The Ideals and the Idealism of Education, by Dr. Charles W. Kent, of the University of Virginia.

The vision of education grows larger and larger, the speaker said, as we advance and the first thoughts in his address would be given in the form of pictures. Five different types of education have existed, all of which have rendered large service to the conception we now have.

Education was first for the service of the church and the volumes and manuscripts studied by the monks were only of scholastic value, but the student who poured over his books, the quiet scholar is heard with the advance messages of today. St. Francis of Assisi was a type of the scholar whose message goes out to the world for the uplift of mankind. If the pulpit is to lead it must be wiser than the pew, and the leaders of today must be educated.

The next picture was education for the court. Finding wisdom lodged in education, kings used it as a badge of arrogance, power and oppression, but it became the uplifted torch showing the high place of privilege, and by gaining it the people are out of sympathy with the old arrogance and thoughtlessness of Kings.

The third picture was education for chivalry, when men caught a new vision and rode forth to perform good deeds for the world. The best illustration is "King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table."

Culture is no cosmetic for the weakling; the true culture is that of the soul, which lights the face of him who possesses it. The trained mind has the chivalry of self-respect.

Fourth was education for commerce, which grew out of chivalry. A well-trained mind is the one best fitted for a business career, and there should be more provision made for the teaching of business and trades since there must always be more craftsmen than professional men and women.

The fifth picture is education for citizenship, the right adjustment of man to his environment, to know what he thinks of himself, his fellow man and God. He must catch the collective and co-operative spirit, as he owes it to his country to serve mankind as best he can. It is said that no country in the world cares so little for its homes as America. This is not right, and education must adjust the minds to improvement in this direction. What shall be some of the tests of education? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy strength and all thy soul."

Thirty-three diplomas were conferred, among them the first for the completion of the Junior-College course, a two years' extension of the old curriculum, organized two years ago. The growing number of young women who desire only the standardized courses was very apparent from the class-roll. So marked is this tendency that hereafter the general course will not be offered, there being practically no demand for it.

Among the announcements of interest made during the week was that concerning the addition of Fraulein Ella Stark to the faculty of music. She is a full graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Berlin, and has taught for the past eight years in National Park Seminary, Washington, D. C., and Mary Baldwin College, Staunton, Va. She has given concerts in Munich, Wurzburg, Nuremberg, Berlin and Paris. In America she has played in the Johns Hopkins University and in the Peabody concerts in Baltimore, in Louisville, Nashville, New York and in other cities in each under the auspices of a large philharmonic society. During the regime of the Roosevelts, she gave recitals at the White House. In Louisville, her brilliant performance elicited from Henry Watterson in the next morning's issue of his Courier Journal a cordial editorial of praise.

Honors in various scholastic departments were awarded to Misses Mattie L. Hubble, Lucile Eubanks, Mary E. Lackey, Mary K. Burrier, Ailene H. Hunter, Vestina W. Bailey, of Kentucky, and to Miss Annie Brassfield, of Tennessee, and to Miss Bess Steunenberg, of Idaho. The standard of scholarship has been unusually high this year, and the competition for the various prizes was unusually close.

A total of 303 cultured students from Christian homes has been in attendance upon the various classes—the largest enrollment in the history of the institution. No serious illness or untoward accident has occurred to mar the harmony of college life.

The year just closed has furnished proof of the strength which has come from co-ordination with Transylvania University. Inspired by her educational ideas and guided in her finances by a wise board of trustees who see to it that every penny of the income and increment of Hamilton is expended for the good of her students, her growth has been a most natural one. In pursuance of this policy $68,000 has recently been spent on new buildings and fuller material equipment: and the salaries of the professors have been advanced so as to secure strong and experienced women. During the current summer the college chapel will be redecorated throughout, and the various corridors of the main building will be given new wall-treatment. The seven buildings in use are all being put in the prime of condition for the opening of the forty-third session on the 11th of next September.

Lexington, Ky.

Eureka College

The fifty-second commencement exercises of Eureka College have just closed. The whole class of 1860 was present. As the whole class consists of E. W. Dickinson, it has not been hard to get a full attendance. In 1861, Eureka graduated twelve, four of whom had a reunion this year. H. D. Clark, Mt. Sterling, Ky., a member of the class of '61, delivered the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday morning, June 11. It was an eloquent sermon delivered by a princely man. In the evening A. C. Gray preached on "The Minister and His Message." At this service two of the graduates, Cyprus Mitchell and J. A. Sinclair were ordained to the ministry.

The annual concert of the School of Music was better than usual. The music department is rejoicing in the recent purchase of four new pianos. On Wednesday evening the senior class gave a play, a portion of the Merchant of Venice. This, with the burlesque on Commencement by the Juniors, which preceded it, was very much appreciated. On Wednesday forenoon fourteen were graduated from the preparatory and commercial departments. S. S. Lappin, Cincinnati, made a splendid address. The commencement exercise on Friday forenoon was the climax of a most eventful week. Ten, six men and four women, received the bachelor of art's degree. The address on "The Final Test of Our Democracy" by Charles S. Medbury, of Des Moines, was a splendid presentation of a democracy in the past and the problems of democracy of the present.

A unique feature of all exercises this year was that no admission was charged with the exception of the alumni banquet. The alumni supplied a program this year entirely different from that of previous years. Miss Jessie Newlin of the Universiay of Chicago gave a discriminating interpretation of "King Rene's Daughter."

With the endowment nearing completion, with a splendid prospect for an increase of students, with an excellent esprit de corps, Eureka College and its friends are facing the future with anticipations of success.

Eureka, Ill. A. C. Gray.

Butler College

The commencement exercises on Thursday, June 15, closed the fifty-sixth year of service for Butler College. The last chapel meeting of the year, held on the preceding Friday morning, ushered in the commencement season. Following the farewell speeches of Miss Flora Frick and Mr. Andrew Leitch, representatives of the senior class, President Howe spoke feelingly of his personal and official relations to the members of the class.

On Sunday afternoon, the Rev. Edgar De-Witt Jones, pastor of the Central Christian Church, of Bloomington, Ill., preached the baccalaureate sermon to a large and appreciative audience.

In addition to the unique class day program on Wednesday, the Coburn Players gave, under the auspices of the senior class, two excellent performances on the campus. Between the two plays the faculty, alumni and friends enjoyed a campus picnic luncheon, renewing old acquaintances and making new ones.

In his inimitable style, Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, delivered the commencement address, to an audience that taxed to the utmost the capacity of the college chapel; indeed, many were unable to obtain admittance. At the conclusion of the address, President Howe conferred the degree of A. B. on twenty-five young men and women, and the degree of A. M. on three candidates, John Wesley Burkhardt, Charles Otis Lee and Maud Muriel Russell.

The past year has been the best in the history of the college. The attendance was quite 30 per cent larger than that of the year before and the best possible spirit pervaded the entire institution. There is every indication that the growth of recent years is permanent. The friends of Butler College feel that it is entering on an era of greatly enlarged usefulness. The increasing demands on the institution call for increased facilities. Realizing that the college cannot effectively meet the demands upon it without enlarged resources the Board of Directors has announced its determination to add $500,000 to the endowment funds within the next five years. The graduating class showed its interest in the forward movement by starting a "living endowment," each member of the class pledging a definite amount to be given each year till further notice.

On his request, Professor C. B. Coleman, head of the department of history, has been granted a leave of absence for next year. He will spend the year at Columbia University. During his absence, his work in the college will be conducted by Dr. James G. Randall, an alumnus of Butler College, who during the past year has been a member of the faculty of Syracuse University.

A most important addition has been made to the faculty in the person of Professor William Charles Morro, formerly dean of the College of the Bible, at Lexington, Ky. Dr. Morro comes as head of the department of ministerial education, in which department the work is being materially enlarged. Prof. Morro occupies the Reeves Memorial Bible Chair, a chair founded by Hon. Marshall T. Reeves, of Columbus, Ind., in memory of his parents. Mr. Reeves has for many years been a trustee of Butler College and is keenly interested in its development.

Professor Jabez Hall continues the work in that department which he has so efficiently done for the last fourteen years. The friends of the college feel that the appointment of Dr. Morro, which is a part of the general plan adopted several years ago, means great things for the cause represented by the institution in Indiana.

Indianapolis, Ind. J. W. Putman.

Christian College

The Jubilee Week at Christian College which closed the night of May 30, will be long remembered by the almost two hundred guests who assembled in this beautiful little college city for this significant occasion.

The weather was of the ideal commencement order, successive days of sunshine with the sympathetic thermometer registering in the 90's. The reception given by President St. Clair at Christian College on Wednesday night was attended by almost five hundred guests.

On Thursday morning a great gathering of alumnae assembled in the college auditorium for the eagerly anticipated time of reminiscences and roll call of classes. In the midst of the interesting program there came a most startling interruption. Dr. and Mrs. R. D. Shannon and their daughter, Mrs. Carey Shannon Meriwether, of Sedalia, were among the most distinguished and welcome guests. Dr. Shannon, son of the late President James Shannon of the University of Missouri, was

(Continued on page 19.)

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXX. Zephaniah and the Day of Jehovah*

July 9. Text for Special Study. Zeph. 1.

QUESTIONS.

1. State the conditions prevailing in the reigns of Manasseh and Josiah respectively.
2. To what group of reformers did Zephaniah belong?
3. How was he related to the royal family of Judah?
4. What seems to be the most probable date for the book?
5. What was the Scythian invasion?
6. What was the character of these invaders?
7. In what manner did the prophet make use of this event?
8. With what does Zephaniah threaten the land in the opening of the book?
9. What reasons are assigned for this destruction?
10. What part is God to have in the disaster that is about to come?
11. What sorts of conduct are mentioned with disapproval?
12. What class of the people is chiefly to blame for the crisis?
13. What time of terror does the prophet announce as near at hand?
14. What was the usual interpretation of the Day of Jehovah in Israel?
15. What new meaning does Zephaniah give it?
16. In what events were these predictions really fulfilled in the history of Jerusalem?
17. What neighboring nations did the prophet threaten?
18. What is the prophet's last appeal to Jerusalem?
19. Why is the section (3:8-20) thought to be from a later time?
20. What features in the book are most notable?

1. THE TIMES OF ZEPHANIAH.

We have had occasion more than once to note the long and depressing reign of Manasseh, the son of Hezekiah. To the prophetic spirits in Judah his period of rule (686-641 B. C.), was a time of disaster to the true religion ,and little could be done save to prepare for reformation and wait for better days. But around the figure of the young and ardent Prince Josiah, the grandson of the king, there gradually gathered a choice group of spirits, and when the times were changed and Josiah came to the throne, these men said something of the fulfilment of their hopes. Among them it seems probable that Zephaniah, himself a young man, had a place. As his geneology is given in the opening of the book that bears his name, it would seem that he was a descendent of King Hezekiah in the fourth generation.

The great event in the reign of Josiah (639-609 B. C.) was the discovery of the law book in the temple, and the beginning of the great reformation (621 B. C.). Did Zephaniah write his book before or after this event? There are several hints that the former is the preferable view. This would explain in part the unfavorable opinion in which the prophet holds the nation, which is hardly consistent with the high hopes created by the Deuteronomic reformation. More than this it seems likely that a particular event in the experience of the Western coast lands gave point and significance to the words of the prophet.

About the year 626 B. C. a vast horde of Scythian horsemen swept down from their mountain fastnesses in the north, between the Danube and the Don, over the more fertile and civilized lands of the Levant. They were wild, fierce tribes, without mercy, plundering and destroying wherever they went. Herodotus (1:105) tells of their terrible invasion of the south, and the panic their approach inspired. They were like the Goths and Vandals, the Huns and the Tartars, of later ages. Before them went terror; behind them was left desolation.

We do not know that these fierce horsemen molested Judah. In fact the difficulty of climbing up to the central heights of Palestine makes it improbable that they carried their devastation into this region. Perhaps they only passed along the coast plain, on their way toward Egypt. But they were near enough to inspire the nation with sickening fear, and the prophet used this emotion to impress Judah with her danger, if she did not repent of the evils of her immediate past, with which she seemed all too content.

2. THE COMING DAY OF JEHOVAH (Zeph. 1).

A terrible destruction is announced, that shall consume the entire land. With something like the recent Scythian invasion in mind, the prophet assures his hearers that more drastic and far-reaching calamities are soon to come.

The reason for this dread prediction is the persistance of idolatry in the land. In spite of all that has been done by the prophets and reformers of the past, the worship and the priests of the local cults still abide in parts of the land. The coming destruction will sweep them away with all apostates from the true faith.

Jehovah, marking the sin of men high in business and political affairs, has determined upon this needed step. He cannot tolerate the continuance of the present state of indifference to his will. He has made ready a banquet of slaughter, and has summoned his guests, as at a sacrificial feast. Those who are doomed to suffer in the approaching crisis are some of the royal family itself. Probably the "king's children" refers to members of the royal household rather than specifically to the sons of Josiah, who would be too young at this time to be thus marked by evil practices. The leaping over the thresholds may refer to acts of violence or robbery, or to the imitation of foreign customs, like those of the Philistines. Particular reference is made to the trading section of the city, as if the commercial practies of the time were beyond further tolerance in their dishonesty and violence.

Particularly are the rich and easy-going business men of Jerusalem denounced. They are comfortable, luxurious and arrogant. They have heard the preachers denounce their selfishness before, and they are not afraid that anything will happen now. The "Day of the Lord," the time of judgment and trial, they do not fear. They are confident that the Lord will do nothing, in spite of all the prophets say. On such men calamity is soon to fall.

For there is to be a Day of the Lord. That term has been used for the most part to describe the time when God shall arise and deliver his people from their foes. But it also means that he will deal with the scoffers and the skeptics of Israel.

And here in these graphic words is contained the first clear announcement of the great doctrine of the "Day of the Lord," the time of crisis, the Day of Judgment to come. Set forth in these alarming sentences, it developed into a fixed doctrine of a judgment day, when the good should be rewarded and the evil punished. By New Testament times it had come to an important place in Jewish eschatology, and proved the matrix of some of the teachings of Jesus. In the poem of Dante and the hymns of the middle ages, the "Dies illa, dies irae," the "day of wrath, that day, that day," was the great final assize, in which the books are to be opened, and every man judged.

And surely such a "day of Jehovah" fell upon Jerusalem all too soon. Whether the prophet had in mind such a tragedy as overtook the capital in 586 B. C. we cannot be sure. But the very darkest of his predictions came true in that awful time.

3. THE NATIONS AND JERUSALEM.

Chapter two of this short prophetic book is a summons to the people of Jerusalem to repent, in view of the judgments of God upon neighboring nations. After the manner of Amos, though not with such art, the prophet announces the coming of destruction upon the nations near at hand, which will best serve as examples to Judah. Philistia, Moab, Ammon, Ethiopia and Assyria are all threatened with early disasters. In view of such judgments upon sin, will not Judah show signs of repentance?

Down the coast the destroyer is to come. The cities of Philistia will feel the stroke of his vengenance, and lie prostrate and deserted.

Moab and Ammon are to be visited with a like ruin, and become a desolation, like the neighboring cities of Sodom and Gomorrah long ago. This section (2:8-10) shows signs of being a later insertion. Neither Moab nor Ammon was in the path of the Scythians, and an oracle of a later date may have been set in here by another hand.

But the Ethiopian dynasty of Egypt is to feel the blow under which the nations are reeling.

And Assyria, the hated oppressor in the north, is also to fall. Nahum had recently sung in notes of triumph of the approaching destruction of Ninevah by Babylon. Our prophet takes up the same refrain and glories in the downfall of the mighty empire. The picture of Ninevah's desolation could hardly be more vivid. Silence, broken only by the cries of wild creatures, shall brood over the scene of present luxury and power.

*By an error of arrangement, the study of Habakkuk last week was inserted prematurely. That one and the present should change places.

Such a fate as shall overtake the careless and insolent capital of the world has never been heard of in the past, and shall be the astonishment of all men.

4. THE PROMISE OF FUTURE BLESSING.

In the final chapter the prophet turns to Jerusalem again for a last appeal. The nation has been led astray by evil-minded leaders. Princes, judges, prophets and priests are selfish and unfaithful. In spite of a good and earnest king, the people have before them the examples of worthless men in places of power. The result is popular degeneracy.

But Jehovah will not remain passive while such evils pervade the land. He has made clear how his judgments fall on other nations because of sin. Shall not Jerusalem feel his hand in chastisement even more? The very fact that Israel is the people of God is the reason why he must deal first of all with their sins. As Amos had said long before, "You only have I, Amos, of all the nations of the earth, therefore will I visit upon you punishment for your sins."

But in spite of all the warnings received, both through her own prophets and the experiences of nations across the frontier, Jerusalem is proud, oppressive and disobedient, her rulers avaricious and rapacious. Even her religious leaders pervert their office. And the ample instruction given by God is the reason why he must deal first of the people. The notable examples of national disaster that have been furnished seem to be without result.

The remainder of the chapter is in such marked contrast to the first part, and seems to refer so distinctly to a time when Judah's people shall be reassembled after a great dispersion, that there is much to vindicate the suggestion that the entire section (3:8-20) is from a different period and writer, perhaps during the exile, or even later. The attitude of these verses is that of indignation against the nations that have wasted Judah, and divine pity for the scattered people. Perhaps the utterance that binds this fragment to what has gone before is the oracle regarding the Day of the Lord. For as in the former part of the book, that day was to be a time of reckoning with the sinners in Judah, so now it is conceived as a moment of retribution for the nations that have wasted the people of God. In that day, after the stroke has fallen, there shall be a reformation, and the lands shall speak a purer speech. The proud and godless shall be winnowed out, the exiles brought home, and the poor but faithful remnant shall find its reward.

The book closes with a song of triumph and rejoicing over the vindication of Jehovah's righteous plans, and the blessedness of his people.

5. THE MESSAGE OF ZEPHANIAH.

In these utterances of this obscure but eloquent prophet needed emphasis is given to several great religious truths. One is that suffering has a disciplinary value in the experience of individuals and nations. When all other means have failed, the impenitent may be turned to amendment by suffering.

Another is the recognition of God's purposes in all history, and the consummation of his will through the least promising agents. Even the rough and barbarous Scythians have a part in God's program, in so far as they bring the nations to reflection upon their duties and sins.

But of course the great doctrine of the book is the Day of the Lord, the time of judgment upon sin. And we have seen already how this idea developed into the later Jewish and Christian doctrine of the judgment day.

No one who reads the book will miss the feeling of moral earnestness and deep religious conviction. It is an impressive document, and must have exerted a wide influence upon its readers. If its author was a preacher, as is probable, and gave living attestation to the truths of which he wrote, his prophetic significance was all the greater.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The title of section XXIX will be "The Early Years of Jeremiah," and of XXX, "The Last Days of Judah."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The times and character of Zephaniah.
2. The Scythian raid as an example of secular events with a religious significance.
3. The Old Testament doctrine of the Day of the Lord.
4. The New Testament and Christian development of the idea.
5. National afflictions as religious lessons.
6. Leading values of the book of Zephaniah.

LITERATURE.

G. A. Smith, "The Book of the Twelve Prophets," vol. 2; A. B. Davidson, "Nahum, Habakkuh and Zephaniah," (Cambridge Bible); F. W. Farrar, "The Minor Prophets;" Kirkpatrick, "The Doctrine of the Prophets." Articles on Zephaniah in the introductions, encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

College Commencements

(Continued from page 17.)

the first pupil ever enrolled in Christian College and Mrs. Shannon and her daughter, Mrs. Meriwether, had returned as alumnae for the home-coming. In response to the roll call of her class Mrs. Shannon made a delightful speech telling of the pioneer days of the college and closed with the characteristic, cherry words, "but there was never a complaint!" Immediately upon seating herself Mrs. Shannon fell forward in what seemed at first a fainting spell. She was carried from the room and the program proceeded, only to be interrupted by the announcement by Mrs. Edmund Wilkes, who was presiding, that Mrs. Shannon had expired from a stroke of apoplexy. Instantly a great wave of sorrow and excitement swept over the assemblage, but Mrs. St. Clair met the situation with an appeal for the exercise of Christian faith and hope She spoke most tenderly of the lovely, saintly life which had just closed, saying that for this beautiful, loyal daughter of Christian College the jubilee was not only a home-coming but a home-going as well. After an earnest prayer the meeting adjourned. A handsome floral offering and resolutions by the alumnae, attested the deep sympathy felt for Dr. Shannon and his family, and, in harmony with the request of the bereaved ones, the program of the week was continued as planned.

On Thursday night a very clever presentation of Rostand's "Romancers" was given by members of the Mary Arden Club, the finished work of the cast showing the excellent training of Miss Trappe, director of the School of Oratory.

On Friday morning the splendid new Academic Hall, known as the J. S. Dorsey Memorial Hall, was dedicated. The beautiful dedication services were held in the Gothic chapel, which, with the connecting study hall, was taxed to its seating capacity of more than five hundred. Mr. R. H. Stockton, of St. Louis, who made possible the building of Dorsey Hall, was on the platform and upon being called upon by President St. Clair made a gracious speech felicitating the building committee. The most impressive feature of the program was the dedication of the group of memorial windows by President Luella W. St. Clair in memory of her daughter, Annilee Marguerite. The central lancets of the quadruple window show an adaptation of Burne-Jones' "Hope." It is a splendid specimen of art glass.

On Saturday afternoon a garden party at the beautiful home of Mrs. E. Sydney Stephens brought the hundreds of guests and hostesses together in a delightful social occasion. At 8 o'clock the opera "Martha" was given by pupils of the Conservatory of Music in the college auditorium, under the direction of Prof. Henry Valentine Stearns, director of the conservatory and Prof. Alexander, director of voice.

A beautiful Lord's day brought rest from the full program of "good things" and at night the baccalaureate services formed a satisfactory climax with its impressive processional of college students, the seniors in white silk cap and gown, and the musical program all given by college talent. Dr. Herbert L. Willet, of Chicago, preached a strong sermon on the fitness of Christ as the present day leader, his inspiration of all true womanhood, and, in turn, woman's ideal for man. "Woman is man's greatest inspiration and man will climb to whatever goal she demands," declared Dr. Willett.

Monday morning at ten o'clock the alumnae again assembled in the college auditorium and among other results of their deliberations were the resolutions to raise an endowment fund of $25,000 by June, 1912, on the partial assurance of an equal amount from a friend of the college. These earnest loyal alumnae are making for, and will achieve success. The first contribution to the alumnae endowment fund was from Mrs. John Bryant of Independence, Mo., who subscribed $500.

Tuesday morning occurred the class day exercise with the flower chain procession, class song, and the historic ivy-planting. At night came the climax of the week, commencement, with its splendid address by Dr. T. P. Haley of Kansas City, on "The Ideal Woman." Dr. Haley's fitness as the commencement speaker was emphasized as many of his friends recalled his long and active interest in Christian College. He has been connected with it from its founding, having had sisters, cousins, daughters and granddaughters educated within its historic walls. President St. Clair's impressive charge to the twenty-one literary graduates and the delivery, in all, of thirty-two diplomas and a number of gold medals closed the 60th commencement of the college.

Columbia, Mo.

Texas Christian University

Texas Christian University, at Fort Worth, graduated twenty-eight young men and women. Twenty-one received the A. B. degree and one A. M. The commencement address was delivered by President E. O. Lovett of Rice Institute, Houston, Texas, his subject being "The Real and Pressing Obligation of Good Citizenship Upon the University Man."

All our afflictions are Christ's refinings, and the purer the gold, the hotter will be the fire; the whiter the garment, the harder the cleansing.—A. Thompson.

Never, never wait for post-mortem praise. Speak the kind words which love prompts, and remember that words of loving-kindness are the best possible tonic which can be given, even to the happiest of the mortals. —Kate Tannatt Woods.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

Browns Sunday-school exceeded its apportionment in the Children's Day offering.

B. W. Tate, pastor at Pontiac, is available for a meeting in July and lasting through a part of August.

Bellflower Sunday-school celebrated Children's Day, and sent $17 as its offering to the Foreign Society.

H. F. Kern, who has been pastor at El Dana, has resigned to enter college. His work has been successful in this pastorate.

The Sunday-school at Greenview sent an offering of $16.33 to the Foreign Society as a result of their Children's Day program.

George F. Chandler, pastor at Youngstown, is to hold several revival meetings in the fall. He is now under promise for Mt. Pleasant and Plymouth.

J. A. Sweet, of Marshall, is having splendid success in his work at Humboldt. Their Bible-school has increased from 40 to 104 and their audiences are large.

The Sunday-school at Tallula, where C. E. French is pastor, made an offering of $27 on Children's Day. The church here is supporting a native evangelist in Africa.

Charles D. Houghan will supply the pulpit at Arrowsmith during the absence of J. C. Reynolds, the pastor, at the Portland convention.

The Sunday-school at West Village was apportioned $60 for foreign missions, but made an offering exceeding $70. The minister is P. M. Durham.

First Church, Bloomington, Edgar De Witt Jones minister, has the money raised for their Link with the state society, and the money goes to the Moline Mission, W. B. Slater minister.

At Hord, where E. S. Thompson of Flora preaches, an offering of $20 for foreign missions and $22 for home missions was recently received. The congregation is in a prosperous condition.

Howett St. Church, Peoria, had the largest day in its history on Children's Day, with an attendance at Sunday-school of 414, and an offering of more than $172. The pastor is William Price.

At Charleston church there have been a number of additions recently, and the Children's Day offerings will be 100 per cent greater than last year. George H. Brown is the pastor.

George W. Schroeder, in his annual report to the congregation at Bridgeport, showed a total number of additions during the year of eighty-seven, thirty-one being by baptism. A new church edifice and parsonage are now under construction.

Vawter and Marty are holding a revival meeting at Catlin, begun just recently. This is the second meeting for Mr. Vawter in this town, having held one last year with about 140 additions.

A. E. Underwood will hold a meeting for some church during the latter part of July and the first week in August. Mr. Underwood is pastor of the church at Chapin, where the Children's Day offering amounted to nearly $20.

University Place Sunday-school, Champaign, made an offering of $633.67 on Children's Day. This is to be divided between home and foreign missions. It exceeds by more than $100 any offering made in previous years.

A Sunday-school institute was conducted for one week at Astoria by Miss Alice Hornbeck, state Sunday-school evangelist. The school was increased in attendance, and more thoroughly organized for efficient work.

C. B. Dabney, of Barry, preaches for Boston Chapel near Girard half time, and for Mt. Hebron in Adams county one-fourth time. He has one-fourth time open. Mr. Dabney is one of our splendid men and ought to be called by some church within reach of Barry.

The Sunday-school at Harvel, where S. R. Lewis is pastor, gave its Children's Day program to a crowded house, and received an offering of $15. The school is happy in having achieved all the points necessary to become a front-rank school, and has made application for its pennant.

Noble church, on a recent Saturday evening, congregated at the pastor's residence without previous notification, and left a large store of gifts as a token of appreciation of his ministry. M. O. Dutcher was the recipient of the surprise.

There have been several additions to the church at Stanford, where Norman H. Robertson preaches, and the Sunday-school received an offering of nearly $60 on Children's Day. Some modification and improvement of the present building is to be attempted soon.

Knoxville church, where Clark Walker Cummings is pastor, had the pleasure, recently, of a Monday evening service conducted by Mr. Harker and the Rockwells, who are a part of the Scoville company. The Children's Day offering of this church amounted to $42.82.

C. R. Scoville's meeting at Galesburg reports 414 added in eighteen days of invitation. Mr. Scoville's messages call attention to the fact that the strong Universalist and Congregational colleges there predispose the people toward other religious bodies than our own. He gives the pastor, J. A. Barnett great credit for his three year's work there.

Rev. E. M. Rhodes, pastor of First Baptist Church, Danville, addressed the Garfield Club of First Christian Church of the same city, on the subject of Christian Union, with special reference to the Baptists and Disciples. Mr. Rhodes is a believer in union, and expressed his conviction that the day was not far hence when his own and the Disciple Brotherhood would be united.

George W. Wise, minister at De Land, is preaching a series of sermons to young men on Sunday evenings. The series includes the following subjects: "The Young Man With a Purpose," "The Young Man and His Thoughts," "The Young Man and His Mother," "Man's Folly," "Man's Wisdom," "God's Mercy." The Sunday-school of this church made an offering on Children's Day of $40.

At Christopher, special effort was recently made to interest men in the Sunday-school. With the assistance of Oscar Cartledge of Benton, chairman of the Men's Adult Bible Class Department of the County Sunday-school Association, a men's class was organized with seventy charter members. Many of these men were converts in the meeting held only a few months ago.

J. B. Holmes, pastor at East St. Louis, is receiving a large number of additions into the church during the regular work. On June 5 there were nineteen additions, thirteen of these being by confession. The Children's Day offering from this church will be far in advance of that given last year. Mr. Holmes is attending the International Sunday-school convention at San Francisco, and later will be at Portland for the National Convention.

C. C. Spencer of Peabody, Kans., has been leading the church at Rushville in an evangelistic campaign, to the profit and delight of the entire congregation, and resulting in two additions. The pastor, H. L. Maltman, highly commends the work of Mr. Spencer. The Rushville church is to co-operate with other churches of the city in a union evangelistic meeting in the fall, to be led by Dr. J. M. Beedles and Fred Fisher, who formerly was with Billy Sunday.

The church at St. Joseph has recently put in a quantity of new hymnals, "Gloria in Excelsis." This is a great song book, having few, if any, of the light and unreligious numbers of such common use in many churches. There is almost as much significance in a church's purchase of a suitable hymnal as in the employment of a pastor. It is a pleasure to note a desire on the part of a small congregation to have a hymnology which is suited to a service of worship.

W. B. Clemmer, of Central Church, Rockford, may be secured for a revival meeting during his summer vacation. This is an opportunity for a church to secure a strong pastor with excellent evangelistic qualities, for the summer season. Mr. Clemmer is ready to sacrifice on the financial side for the sake of such a meeting. The church at Rockford is looking forward with faith to its new building enterprise. Notwithstanding this, the Children's Day offering for foreign missions amounted to $75.

The Fourth District convention wos held at Minonk, June 6-8. There were about 75 in attendance, and the program was good. N. H. Bobertson presided and addresses were given by him, L. O. Lehman, Miss Myrtle Park, Rome G. Jones, J. P. Darst, Osceola McNemar, W. H. Storm, Edgar DeWitt Jones, J. Fred Jones, and others. The C. W. B. M. program was given the first day of the convention, and is also reported as helpful.

Mrs. Rochester Irwin conducted the music for the convention, and Miss Morris, and Mr. Marty, singing evangelists, were also present and sang beautiful solos.

The convention adopted a resolution recommending to the church members of the district that an average of $2 per person be raised for missionary work, and one offering per year be taken.

The officers last year were reelected.

Robert W. Moore, pastor at White Hall, is preaching a series of sermons on the debt Christendom owes to the several religious bodies. The series includes the Jews, Catholics, Lutherans, Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists and the Disciples of Christ. Mr. Moore is making no effort to make these sermons critical, but is seeking to deliver a tolerant and appreciative message. The Christian Endeavor Society of this church has recently been holding union services with the Presbyterian Society, and the pastor has accepted an invitation to preach at the Presbyterian vesper service. Mr. Moore has recently been busy preparing and delivering extra addresses, among which is the annual address to the Oddfellows, besides appearing on the district convention program at Carrollton, and being assigned a place on the program of the District Sunday-school Association meeting to be held at Jacksonville. It is reported that Mr. Moore has been recently honored with the presidency of the Greene County Ministerial Association, which is an interdenominational fellowship, including every minister in the county and several adjoining counties. This pastor believes in Christian Union, and in the practice of it whenever and wherever it is possible to do so.

Chicago

At the mid-week service of Memorial Church, June 21, Dr. Errett Gates was the chief speaker. Dr. Gates spoke on "A Winter in Germany."

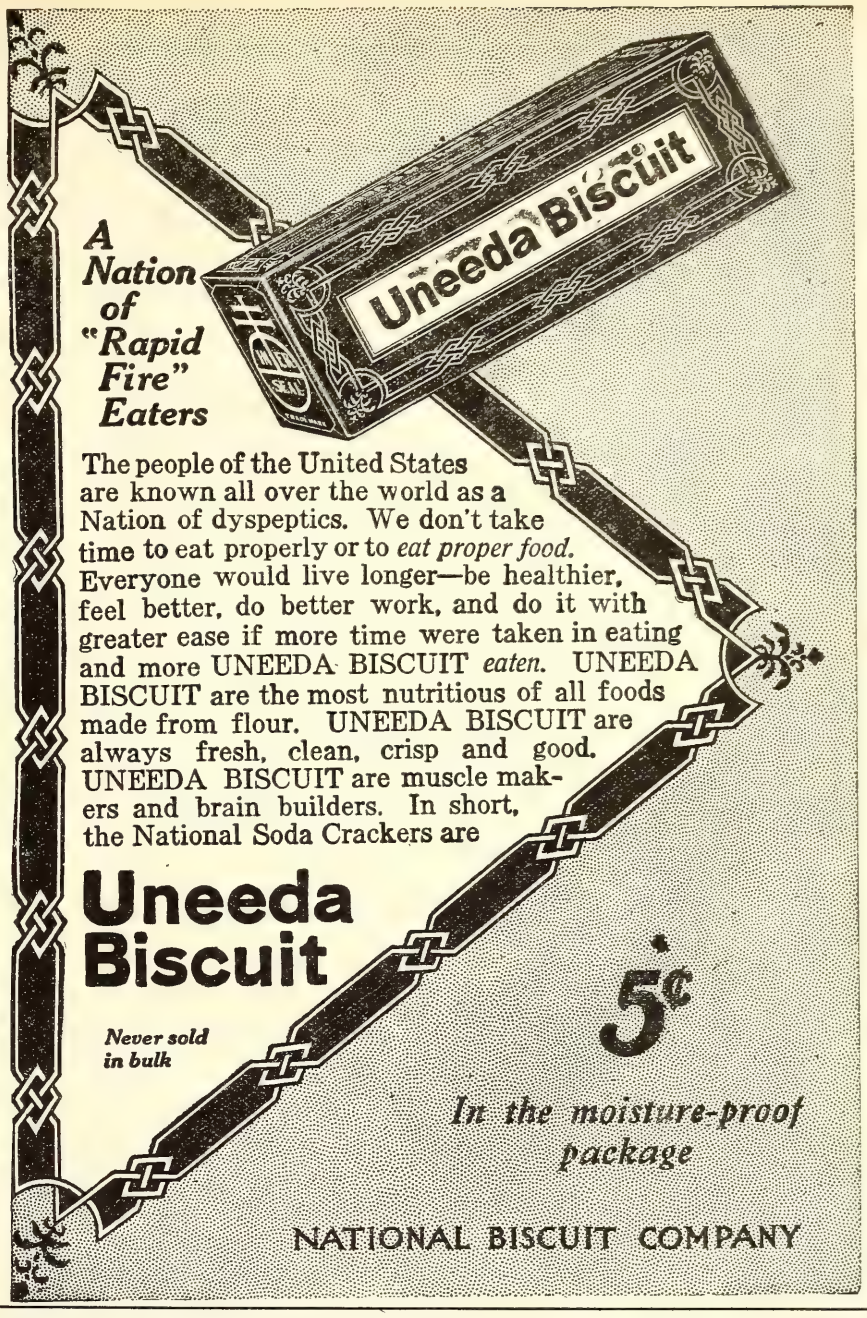
It is understood that on July 1 a Presbyterian Church will be established at Wilmette. Jas. M. Wilson, D. D., of Seattle, Wash., has been called from that city with a pastorate of 700 to open up the work on the north shore. In a community of 15,000 people on this north shore there are no Baptist, Presbyterian or Disciple churches.

The thirteenth quadrennial general conference of the Free Methodist Church of North America is in session at the Chicago Evangelistic Institute at Washington Boulevard and Wood Street. Two hundred delegates are present, including five bishops. There are about 1,000 ministers in the church. They minister to some 34,000 members.

Will F. Shaw, of Sheffield Ave. preached for the Maywood Church, Sunday evening, June 18, G. L. Tynor, being out of the city. Mr. Shaw's pulpit was supplied by Boy's Secretary Storey of the Ravenswood Y. M. C. A. The Sheffield Ave Church raised the necessary funds to send their pastor to the Portland Convention, but Mr. Shaw feels he is needed here just now, and therefore will not avail himself of the liberal offer of his congregation.

Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, lecturer and preacher, now brings his message to the public through the medium of the press. A feature of the Chicago Record-Herald is the weekly editorial by Dr. Gunsaulus, in which he gives an interpretation of life. His first editorial appearing June 11 was entitled the "Over-flowing Cup." As June comes to us, overflowing with bud and beauty and fragrance, so the lives of men should flow over with charity and mercy. In the editorial of July 8, Dr. Gunsaulus interprets for us the religion of irrigation. The soil—dusty and non-productive— must be rebound to the heights that furnish the life giving water. We are urged to "get a water right" and enrich the sordid life of humanity by the real water of life.

In a recent issue of The Michigan Christian Advocate, the folowing article relating to the city of Chicago, furnishes food for thought to all interested in the extension of the kingdom in this city. "Chicago has be-



Uneeda Biscuit
A Nation of "Rapid Fire" Eaters
The people of the United States are known all over the world as a Nation of dyspeptics. We don't take time to eat properly or to eat proper food. Everyone would live longer—be healthier, feel better, do better work, and do it with greater ease if more time were taken in eating and more UNEEDA BISCUIT eaten. UNEEDA BISCUIT are the most nutritious of all foods made from flour. UNEEDA BISCUIT are always fresh, clean, crisp and good. UNEEDA BISCUIT are muscle makers and brain builders. In short, the National Soda Crackers are
Uneeda Biscuit
Never sold in bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

EUREKA COLLEGE

A CO-EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION OF HIGHER LEARNING

COLLEGIATE COURSES

Classical A. B.
Science B. S.
History and Economics A. B.
Ministerial A. B.

OTHER COURSES

Preparatory
Commercial
Music: Vocal and Instrumental Manual Training
Public Speaking
Art

For further information address
Eureka, Illinois President, Eureka College

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

come one of the leading Roman Catholic cities of the world ranking with Rome, Paris, Vienna, Dublin and Muenich as a stronghold of that church. No other city of the world ever rose from a single parish with 100 communicants to an archdiocese of 1,000,000 souls in 75 years, with 188 Catholic churches, 143 porochial schools in which are 81,680 pupils. The city has German, Italian, French, Spanish, Persian, Negro, Syrian, Hungarian, Belgian, Croatian, Swiss, Lithuanian and Catholics of many other nationalities."

VAUGHAN DABNEY.

Dedication at Danville

Over nine years ago the Fourth Church in this city was organized. Nearly seven years ago it built a tabernacle as a temporary place of worship. June 18, it occupied and dedicated a fine new house of worship. The structure is built of dark brick, substantial in every way, and has a total auditorium capacity of about 500. The basement is yet unfinished, but, when completed, the building will contain ten class rooms, two robing rooms and a study. Dr. I. N. McCash, who was the dedicator, pronounces it one of the finest and most substantial structures he has found in all his travels. The interior is beautifully and tastefully decorated.

Thus far the building has cost about $10,000. It was found, on the eve of dedication that it would be desirable to raise about $6,000. To all who knew the church and the community, it seemed an utter impossibility. The afternoon service was selected as the time to call for money. Conditions were by no means favorable. The country had been scorched with a drouth for two months. Many working men were occupied only part of the time, and the audiences were not as large as expected.

But we had been fortunate in securing Dr. McCash for the occasion; he proved himself the champion dedicator. Without the use of any doubtful methods, appealing ever to high and noble motives, tactfully keeping his audience in a fine mood, he actually raised $6,300. The largest pledge was only $625, that made by the ladies' society of the church.

Here in Danville this dedication is looked upon as the finest thing of the kind that has occurred in these parts. On all sides people are saying they never saw such liberal giving.

The ministers of our other churches, W. E. Adams, J. S. Hyde and S. S. Jones, with many of their people were present and assisted greatly in the duties of the day. The minister of the near-by M. E. Church, Ray O. Wayland, with many of his flock, was present and contributed $5. A band of ladies in the M. E. Church also gave $10 and other members contributed freely.

Evangelist C. R. L. Vawter, who is now in a meeting at Catlin, also favored us with his presence in the afternoon.

We are happy. Our prayers have been more than answered. The burden has been lifted. The way has been lighted. Great praise is due the building committee, F. S. Hall, Dr. Winslow, Dr. Redmond, Guy Neff and Wilbur Long.

But the church and community are full of the praises of Secretary McCash as the masterful dedicator who deserves great credit for the successful occasion.

H. D. WILLIAMS.

Church Life

G. W. Burch has resigned at Fairfield, Ia.

B. H. Whiston leaves Austin, Minn., to accept the pulpit in Missouri Valley, Ia.

Alba, Mo., built a church house in one day by the coöperation of seventy-five volunteer workmen.

P. J. Pond, pastor at Audobon, Ia., preached on a recent Sunday on the theme, "Does it Matter What a Man Believes?"

L. N. D. Wells, pastor at East Orange, N. J., has recently been appointed on the lecture staff of the New York City schools.

The New London, Mo., church house is being torn down and the erection of a $12,000 building begun.

H. C. Littleton, of Clarion, Ia., preached for the Modern Woodmen of America at Shenandoah at their memorial service.

C. M. Keene closed his minstry at Owosso, Mich., last Sunday. He had been there five years, and the church was beloved in his leadership.

The Seattle Ministers' Federation re-elected Joseph L. Garvin president for the third year. Mr. Garvin is pastor of First Christian Church.

First Church, Sacramento, Calif., has let a contract for building a new $32,000 building. Their old house was burned a year ago.

C. F. Sanderson is being welcomed to the pastorate of Dean Ave. Church, Spokane, Wash., succeeding Bruce Brown, now at Fullerton, Calif.

Wm. H. Erskine writes from Akita, Japan, that he has just closed a four day's meeting at Tsurnoka with six baptisms and many earnest inquirers.

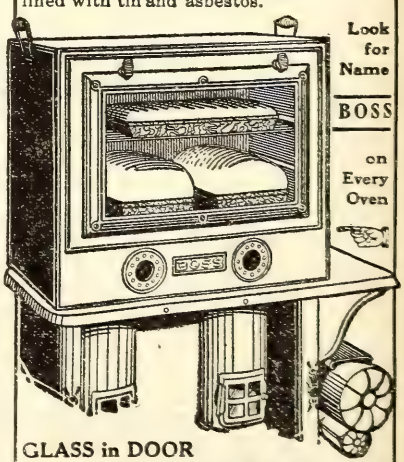
Under the leadership of C. W. Van Dolah a second church is being organized in Hutchinson, Kan., and it is expected a new building will be erected before the close of the summer.

Five almost totally delayed the church building at Fredonic, Kan., June 20. This was the newest and prettiest church house in the twon. It was built there years ago, $3,00 insurance was carried.

The new church house at Brodshaw, Nebr., was dedicated June 18, by Chancellor Oeschger of Cotner University. The pastor is Edward H. Longman who has been there five years. The new house has good rooms for Sunday-school classes and is an up-to-date work-shop. Twelve hundred dollars was raised in dedication, putting the organization out of debt.

Marion, Ind., Church, of which J. P. Myers is pastor, is experiencing a great and steady growth. Since the middle of February not a Sunday has passed by without additions to the church. Since October a total of 240 persons have been added. One source of strength to the pastor is the fact that so many of the members of the church are active in teaching others the way of life. Mr. Myers recently preached the memorial sermon to the G. A. R. at Marion and also at La Fountaine, Ind. The new building recently dedicated, has proved a great assett in building up the church.

USE A PORTABLE
BOSS OVEN
With Patented GLASS DOOR
on your stove or range, either oil, gasoline, acetylene, alcohol or gas.
No more spoiled bakings or worry—No more wasted heat—No more jarring or chilling of oven. Housewives can see their baking without opening door. Economy and convenience both guaranteed in the BOSS—a polished blued steel oven lined with tin and asbestos.



GLASS in DOOR
is guaranteed not to break from heat because it is secured by our patented yielding pressure retaining strips, which permit expansion and contraction. Glass door fits snugly in one-piece beaded front, and is held tightly in place with two turnbuckles, preventing escape of heat.

Baking qualities and ventilation superior to any other oven or range. All heat goes right into the open bottom, and is perfectly distributed to all parts of the oven by means of our patented Heat Deflector. Flame always visible through small mica windows. With the BOSS a baking costs less than a cent. It will many times over pay for itself in saved bakings to say nothing of saved fuel.

Ask YOUR Dealer to show you the BOSS Glass Door Oven. INSIST upon seeing the name "BOSS" stamped in the front of Oven. Then you know that it is genuine and guaranteed.

FREE: Our valuable Recipe Book, containing many cookery helps and full description of BOSS Ovens sent FREE on receipt of postal, plainly written, giving your own and your dealer's names and addresses.

THE HUENEFELD CO. 2156 Spring Grove Ave. Cincinnati, O

A. L. Ward, lately of Boulder, Col., has entered auspiciously upon his work with Central Church, Pueblo. He preached his first sermon on June 18. The congregations esteems him highly.

George Taubman called the attention of the Linwood Boulevard Church, Kansas City, to the fact that the people of that city spent last year $2,250,000 on theaters alone and asked them to compare that with the amount invested in religious work.

C. A. Shornton, of Verdon, S. D., will preach for the new congregation just organized by Claire L. Waite at Doland, S. D. Forty-five persons entered into the fellowship of the young congregation during Mr. Waite's meeting.

V. M. Ellston lives at Lewis and preaches for the church at Griswold, Ia. His parishioners presented him with an automobile recently as a token of their appreciation and a suggestion that they would like to see his face often between Sundays. His ministry at Griswold is flourishing.

The funeral service over the body of Mrs. Carrie Nation were conducted by W. S. Lowe, of Central Church, Kansas City, Kan. Mr. Lowe characterized the noted enemy of the saloon as a woman of conviction, a woman of independence and a woman of remarkable courage.

Peter Ainslie preached the sermon at the dedication of a new house of worship at Mountain, Harford County, Md., recently. Thomas Wood is the minister of the church and has been instrumental in leading the congregation into the new building enterprise. The Baltimore churches are interested in this growing work.

Hillside Church, Indianapolis, is "booming" steadily. The pastor, Chas. M. Fillmore, reports a greatly increased Sunday-school numbering now near to 400 constantly. Mr. Fillmore's large class of men is a joy to him, he says: "They are studying Dr. Willett's Moral Leaders of Israel with keen delight." The new building project is progressing.

An exchange reports that the initial program of the state convention of Arkansas was addressed by "Hon. C. C. Smith" of Cincinnati, representative of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and "who also superintends the education of colored people in the south." This is saying a good deal for Brother Smith but not a bit too much!

S. Boyd White resigned at Moberly, Mo., but the congregation would not listen to it. His salary was increased and many other persuasive things done, and he will remain. A great work with substantial achievements is credited to his ministry there. The entire community took a part in urging him not to go.

E. F. Daugherty is not a country pastor, for he resides in the city of Vincennes, Ind., but he is doing actual work on the country church problem. He spends Sunday afternoons and many week nights with the churches of the country, studying their needs, uplifting their ideals and drawing them together with the town and city churches into a county association. This is arduous but rewarding work.

Evangelist Geo. L. Snively, of Lewistown, Ill. has assisted churches in raising over $100,000 at dedications during the first half of the present year and is now engaged to assist J. M. Vawter at Sullivan, Ind., July 9; W. P. McCormick, Norwalk, O., July 16; F. M. Nifong, Fredericktown, Mo., August 20; R. P. Meeks, Corinth, Miss., August 27; and A. F. Hanes, Elkins, W. Va., October 8. He hopes to help thus consecrate a quarter of million dollars during 1911. Almost invariably these dedications are followed by brief meetings greatly increasing the membership and otherwise strengthening the churches.

Notes From the Foreign Society

Our Cuban Sunday-school at Matanzas sends a Children's Day offering of over $25. Melvin Menges is the missionary. He writes that they have held their first services in the new mission building. This new structure will comprise both church and a dwelling for the missionary and his family. Brother Vennum of Champaign, Ill., generously made this building possible.

During F. M. Rains' recent visit in Nankin, China, he baptized four, two men and two women, in the church with which A. E. Cory works.

The missionaries of Damoh, India, write that on May 21 the thermometer stood at 113 degrees indoors and 198 in the sun. P. A. Sherman writes that in spite of the heat all are well, although pretty well fagged out.

Chas. P. Hedges of Bolenge has gone to Lotumbe, Africa, to construct a home for Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Smith. These workers have been living many months in a mud house. Lotumbe is one of the most distant churches and is reached only after a long river trip. We should have a medical missionary for this needy field at once.

The colored Christian church of Carlisle, Ky., will take up the support of their own native evangelist in Africa next year. I. H. Moon is the pastor.

Dr. L. F. Jaggard and wife of Longa, Africa, have just returned on their first furlough. He will be located at Des Moines, Ia. He reports fine progress in the African work. Ray Eldred is also located at Longa, and has full charge of the work in Dr. Jaggard's absence.

The following missionaries will speak on the Foreign program at the Portland Convention: Dr. A. I. Shelton, Tibet; M. B. Madden and wife, Japan; W. H. Erskine and wife, Japan; Miss Nellie Clark, China; H. H. Guy, Japan. Mr. and Mrs. Rains will also be present and speak concerning the work on the fields where they have recently visited.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Secretary.
Cincinnati, O.

Milwaukee 1912

The Disciples of Wisconsin and all the regions round about are hoping and praying and working that the National Convention of 1912 may come to Milwaukee. The two churches, with their splendid ministers, the Ministerial Association, the Citizen's Business League, and the Mayor of Milwaukee, also the Wisconsin Christian Missionary Association in convention assembled, have given urgent invitation. J. Fred Jones, of Illinois, says: "I am cordially in favor of Milwaukee for the convention."

Milwaukee is a most beautiful city, on Lake Michigan, and is the eleventh city in size in the United States. She is a great convention city, being easy of access from every direction, and possessing every facility for taking care of a great convention. The auditorium is one of the greatest in all respects in America.

This convention can and will if brought here, be used mightily in the extension of the kingdom in this part of the country. We have been negligent of this great and ripe field too long. Let us atone. Here is a splendid opportunity. With wide open arms and with hearts believing we invite the hosts to assemble in Milwaukee in 1912.

FRANK L. VAN VOORHIS,
Superintendent of Missions and Cor. Sec'y.

VALPARAISO UNIVERSITY
(Accredited)
VALPARAISO, INDIANA

One of the Largest Institutions of Learning in the United States

Thirty-Ninth Year Will Open September 19, 1911

In 1873 the school had 3 Departments, 4 Instructors and an annual enrollment of 210 different students. Now there are—

25 DEPARTMENTS 191 INSTRUCTORS

and an annual enrollment last year of

5521 Different Students Excellent Equipments

The reason for this remarkable growth is in the fact that the Institution is constantly increasing its facilities, strengthening its courses of study and offering additional advantages, without making the expense to the student any greater

DEPARTMENTS:

Preparatory, Teachers', Kindergarten, Primary, Pedagogy, Manual Training, Scientific, Biology, Civil Engineering, Classical, Higher English, German, French, Spanish, Italian, Elocution and Oratory, Music, Fine Art, Law, Pharmacy, Medical, Dental, Commercial, Penmanship, Phonography and Typewriting, Review.

THE DENTAL DEPARTMENT

recently acquired by the University is the well-known Chicago College of Dental Surgery, one of the oldest and best equipped dental schools in the country, Dr. Truman W. Brophy, Dean, Chicago, Illinois.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The course of study in the Medical Department is the same as that of the best medical schools. The University owns its college and hospital buildings both in Chicago and Valparaiso. Two years of the work may be done in Valparaiso, thus reducing the expenses, or the entire four years may be done in Chicago

THE NEW MUSIC HALL

enables the School now to accommodate all who wish work in music

CIVIL ENGINEERING.

The Revised Course in Civil Engineering is proving a most valuable acquisition. No extra charge.

The expenses are made so low that anyone can meet them.

Tuition, $18 per quarter of 12 weeks.

Board and furnished room, $1.70 to $2.75 per week.

Catalog mailed free. Address,

H. B. BROWN, President,
or O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

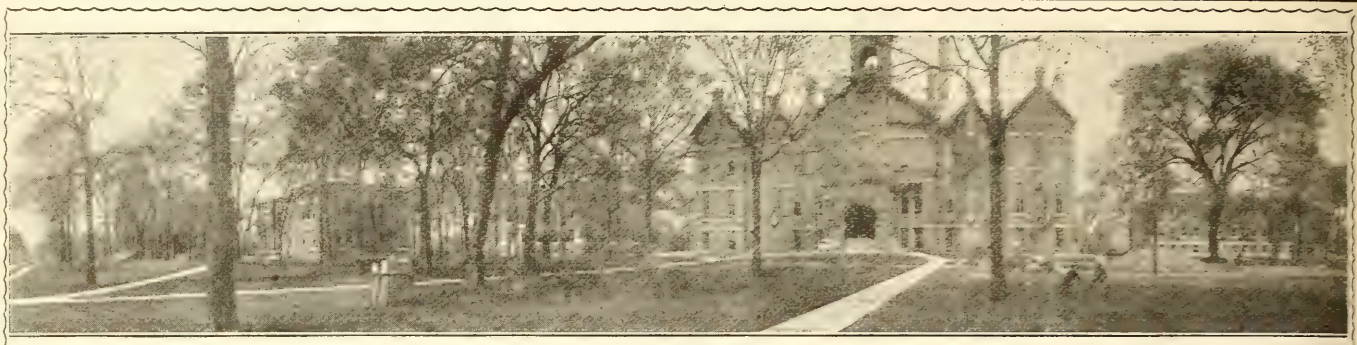
CALENDAR:--Thirty-Ninth Year will open Sept. 19, 1911; Second Term, Dec. 12, 1911; Third Term, March 5, 1912; Fourth Term, May 28, 1912. Mid-Spring Term, Apr. 2, 1912; Mid-Summer Term, June 25, 1912.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Between
CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY
via the
Chicago & Alton

Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis
For Time Tables and Fares Address:
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO



Drake University

Drake University is thirty years old, has eleven buildings devoted exclusively to school purposes, employs more than 150 instructors, and has an annual attendance of more than 1,800 students. The University is located in the best suburb of "Beautiful Des Moines," with easy access to every point of educational and religious interest in the city. Library facilities are unexcelled in the West, living expenses are moderate and opportunities for remunerative employment are unusually good. School in session throughout the year.

College of Liberal Arts—Four-year courses, based upon four-year high school courses, leading to the degree of A. B., Ph. B., S. B. In the School of Education, included in this college, are courses for Students in Domestic Science.

Primary Teachers.
Kindergarten Teachers.
Grade Teachers.
High School Teachers.

College of the Bible—Graduate course, requiring three years' work, leading to degree of D. B.

College of Law—Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to degree of LL. B.

College of Medicine—Four-year course, based on four-year high school course and two full years in college, leading to the degree of M. D.

College of Dentistry—Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to the degree of D. D. S.

Institute of Fine Arts—Special courses, based upon such preparation as best fits the student to pursue the study of his chosen course most profitably. The Institute of Fine Arts includes three distinct departments:

Conservatory of Music.
School of Painting and Drawing.
School of Dramatic Art.

EXPENSES. Expenses are reasonable when the high character of the work is considered. Opportunities for earning money while attending school are not excelled in the middle West.

For announcement or other information concerning the work of any one of these colleges, address,

DRAKE UNIVERSITY, Des Moines, Iowa

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Volume XXVIII. July 6, 1911. Number 27

Christ's Ideal of Union

By Perry J. Rice

Baptist World Alliance

By Arthur Holmes, Ph. D.

A Costly Triumph

Editorial

History Repeating Itself

By E. B. Barnes

CHICAGO

History Repeating Itself

Present Situation Not Unique in Life of Disciples

BY E B. BARNES.

We are a people of perils, a generation of moral cliff dwellers, living daily in expectation of disaster. Read our history since the close of the Millenial Harbinger period, and you will hear from month to month the ringing of the alarm bell. The men who rang never lacked a following, or a temporary glory. But the bell that rang our doom rang surely the knell of the ringer. We are here, and he is gone, leaving us an example to be avoided. A peril has always been on tap. We have rung alarms when we should have written books; we have brewed panics when we should have studied the things that made for peace; we have suspected when we should have encouraged each other; we have denounced when we should have tolerated; we have allowed the fanatic rather than the scholar to lead us; we have been the victims of the incendiaries rather than the children of the prophets; we have allowed the sword to become mightier than the pen. Ours is a march in which the rear leads the procession. Our belief in our mission, and the optimism of the few have preserved us in the midst of great perils.

No Exceptions in Propaganda of Frenzy.

There are no exceptions in this propaganda of frenzy, whether the occasion be the fatal use of the title 'Reverend' on Isaac Errett's door-plate at Detroit, or the latest threnody of the sooth-sayers that doom camps on our progress and treason presides at our feasts. There is, as ever, the unvarying wail over our growing friendliness with our religious neighbors, and the denunciation over the perfidy that would lead us again into the bondage from which we have been delivered. Then there is the desire to keep us from advancing a single step beyond those taken by the fathers, the daily summons to the sun and moon to stand still. We are exhorted to go on unto perfection, but the boundaries are proscribed, beyond which if a man go he finds himself in the teeth of lions. No matter what the occasion, the language as well as the convictions of the alarmist have never changed. Time mellows neither the one nor the other. Both are as fixed as the eyes of the dead. Some one, so runs the tale of woe, has ever been attempting to introduce practices subversive of the principles of the Restoration movement, or to burden us with an ecclesiasticism which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear. The lament and its language endure forever.

Our Theological Doctors.

That we still have a habitation and a name is due to the sleepless vigilance of the watchmen upon the walls! Had it not been for these pilots of the far seeing eye and the resolute hand, the ribs of the old ship of Zion would long ere this have been bleaching on yellow sands. These good brethren remind one of that class of physicians who today report the patient at death's door, and who, next week, point with pride to the robust victim on our streets saved from an untimely grave by their unfailing skill. By our theological doctors, I have been frightened so often that I am immune to fear; I will stalk into the domain of death, none daring to molest or make me afraid, if only my family leech is within hearing; while our theologians are on the job, I will descend without fear into the hades of heresy.

Not Drawing on Imagination.

But that no one may conclude that I am drawing on my imagination for facts, I appendas extract taken from Lamar's Memoirs of Isaac Errett, vol. 1, pp. 280-282. Whether we are passing through a similar period, and whether the forces that are working today, fearful and destructive, are the same that have appeared among us before to check our progress, to terrify the timid for a time, and then to be outgrown and held up to ridicule as Lamar holds up the reactionaries of other days, I leave the reader to judge. We hear today—and how familiar the sound—that the old ship of Zion is in danger, treachery is on board; the sleepless editor, as ever, is at the helm; if the faithful will only stand by him—and the Rocky Fords, and the Piney Woods are still shouting their devotion—all will be well. The tempest-tossed craft will emerge in safety, if the brethren will not forget their subscriptions. Let him that readeth understand. The spirit of Benjamin Franklin, of whom Mr. Lamar speaks, is in our midst today. Once more history is repeating itself. Here is the extract:

LAMAR'S CHARACTERIZATION OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

He was quite clear in his conception of the logic of the plan of salvation. He could state it with accuracy, argue it with force, and support it by scripture and reason; and when this was the work that was specially required to be done, he was a workman that needed not to be ashamed. When, however, it became necessary to reach down into the depths of the soul's profounder difficulties—into that region of weakness and disease—nay, the region where death reigns, and where, consequently, logic is powerless—where the voice of almighty love and heaven-born charity is the only quickening influence—then it was that he seemed to come short. And I have no doubt that it was his inability really to appreciate in men and in churches the difficulties which lay beyond his plea—the obstacles which his arguments could not reach—that generated in him the ungracious spirit which at length largely possessed and characterized him. He became intolerant. He could not put himself in other men's places. There were ten thousand influences operating upon them which he could not fully understand—influences connected with early impressions, with parental education, with religious associations, with religious experience, with venerated and saintly examples—which naturally made them slow to accept what he preached as the conclusion of the whole case—but all these went for naught. He felt that what he preached or published was the truth; that he demonstrated it with almost mathematical certainty; and hence its rejection could be the result only of criminal opposition to the truth. Such a spirit might crush and silence opposition, but it could rarely win men to the voluntary and glad acceptance of the gospel.

Attitude Toward Others.

His bearing toward brethren who differed from him was much the same. If they were disposed to be charitable to their fellow creatures, and especially to their fellow Christians of other churches, and generously, without constraint or stint, to recognize all that was pure and lovely and of good report among them; if they sympathized with their religious troubles, and were disposed to be patient, considerate, forbearing and helpful, rather than harsh, exclusive and condemnatory, it was regarded and proclaimed as a falling away, a compromise of the truth, a bid for popularity, a longing for the flesh-pots of Egypt. Such men as Isaac Errett, Robert Richardson, W. K. Pendleton, C. L. Loos, the Haydens and many more—the very loftiest characters in the brotherhood, and as lofty, morally and spiritually, as any in the world—if only they differed from him, were held up as "unsound" and unfaithful, while the editor of the "Review" was the great champion of the truth and hope of the cause.

Tone of the Paper Lowered.

Among the patrons there were many, of course, who accepted all this as gospel. As a natural consequence the tone of the paper was lowered. Its earlier volumes had been comparatively temperate, modest and of good spirit, and upwards the brethren, at least, conciliatory and kind. But now, though it still published from time to time an excellent and readable article, its columns began to be mainly filled with very inferior matter—matter that was "original" in every sense of the word. And, unhappily, there was no lack of copy. It came pouring in, in immense quantities and from all quarters—from Hickory Flats and Piney Groves and Sandy Hooks and Rocky Fords—letters, articles, reviews, communications, criticisms—all of them "original" in conception, and some of them in spelling and syntax as well; and their burden was a wail that so many were seeking to seduce the brethren from the truth, followed by an exulting gratulation that the "American Christian Review" was still the "Old Reliable," and giving honor to its able and uncompromising editor as the Magnus Apollo of the Reformation!

Editorial Policy.

The editorials, of course, were responsive and powerful. Uncircumcised "compromisers" and profane "innovators" were shown no quarter. It was no time for dilly-dallying. The old ship of Zion was in danger. Storms were raging; waves were roaring; timbers were creaking; breakers were ahead; tricky and evil-disposed brethren were concealed in the hold; the prospect was gloomy—but nil desperandum! The "American Christian Review" was still on board; its sleepless editor was still at the helm; he understood the evil designs of the wicked; and if the faithful would only stand up to him, the old ship should be carried safely into port. Now was the time to subscribe!

Richmond, Ky.

When we cannot bring as many as we would to the service of God, we must bring as many as we can. . . . If we cannot reform the land, let us put away iniquity from our own tabernacle.—Matthew Henry.

Is the task small? Is it difficult? Am I insignificant—even unfit? Nevertheless it is in relation to God's work. It is assigned to me by him. It is in accord with his plan. I must hear in it his call to press forward, to use the powers I have.—Henry A. Stimson.

Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M. NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well-designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

J. M. LOWE, GENERAL EVANGELIST.—Church Dedications, Special Addresses. Permanent address, 1350 25th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

WHITE SLAVERY, a book of 250 pages, retails at 50 cents and 25 cents. The best and cheapest book on the subject. Astoundingly low terms will be made to all Christian Associations, King's Daughters, Epworth Leagues, Endeavor Societies, B. Y. P. U.'s Ladies' Aid Societies, Y. W. C. A.'s, Ladies' Sodalities, W. C. T. U.'s, and Sunday-schools, etc., which will enable them to procure funds for their benevolent enterprises and help us turn on the light of knowledge. Send 25 cents for sample copy. Mrs. Alice Hall, 1919 W. Adams St., Chicago.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

Christ's Ideal of Union

The burden of our Lord's intercessory prayer is the union of all who believe. As the prayer advances the circle of his solicitous interest continually enlarges. At first he prays for himself, that his true dignity and worth may appear in the trying ordeal through which he was about to pass. Then he voices a petition for his immediate disciples, that they may be kept and sanctified, i. e. set apart for service. Following this is a prayer for all who shall believe on him through the testimony of the apostles, and then there is a still more comprehensive petition for the ultimate triumph of all his followers.

Vital Union With Himself.

It is a vital union that he desires; such a union as exists between himself and the Father, which, as he continually affirms, is a union of a most intimate and vital character. He had no life apart from the Father. His words and his works were not his own but the Father's and they bore witness that he came from God. His prayer is that believers may have a similar union with himself. The parable of the vine and the branches presents a fuller exposition of the same thought. In it he insists that believers can have no life apart from him. If they do not abide in him they will wither and die and be cast forth and burned. The same teaching is elaborated in what follows the parable. The union of which he speaks is a union of love such as the Father has for the Son and the Son has in turn for believers. It is a union resulting from obedience and issuing in fullness of joy. The commandment he especially emphasizes in this connection is that to love one another even as he has loved us and manifested his love by giving himself for us.

Christ's Mission to Unite People.

It was the mission of Christ to unite people; to bring peace on earth; to harmonize conflicting interests and contending forces, and this he proposed to do, not by presenting a basis of union, doctrinal, formal or otherwise, but by transforming them and thus making them capable of dwelling together in unity. The cause of our divisions is our smallness of soul, our littleness of spirit, our narrowness of vision. We are divided not because we differ on matters of doctrine or policy, but because we are self-willed, selfish and proud. We aren't big enough of soul to dwell together in unity when we differ intellectually. It is no sign of Christlikeness for us to be able to labor and worship with those who hold the same convictions we hold. Christianity becomes triumphant in our lives when, differing as we do and must and always will, we still are united in love and service.

Convictions and Convictions.

It is well to have convictions of truth and duty but we need to take heed lest they overrule our spirits and dominate our lives to the hurt of the cause we would serve. Jesus had convictions and for them he suffered and died but he did not nail others to the cross. The Pharisees also had convictions and because of them they crucified the Son of Man, but took good care that they were not crucified. It would be well for us to ask concerning our convictions: which way are they leading us? Do they make us willing to suffer and still to pray for those who wound us, or do they cause us to be arbitrary, harsh and murderous in spirit; do they make us brotherly or unbrotherly? "This," says Rauschenbusch, "would be Christ's test of any custom, law or institution: does it draw men together or does it divide them?" If our convictions divide us, if they cause us to turn away even from our enemies in haughtiness and ill-feeling we should examine them again to see if they are not poorly based.

Shameful to Allow Doctrines to Divide.

Christ's ideal of union is one of believers, who, abiding in him, have become partakers of his character. It is a union not merely of beliefs, of forms or of practices, but of love so real and so true that each would die for the others if such a sacrifice were needed. It is the shame of Christians that we have allowed our doctrinal convictions to divide us. It argues not our loyalty to Christ but rather our disloyalty to his spirit and purpose. Nowhere has he demanded of us that we should be separated from any thing but evil, or any one but him who is given over to evil. If in our defense of what we conceive to be truth or duty we find ourselves thrust out from fellowship with others who do not agree with us, as did Jesus, we should still yearn over them and pray for them. The lines of communication should be kept open; and the more so, since we cannot be certain that we are right and they are wrong. We foolishly insist upon the finality of our convictions. At best they are but working hypotheses to serve us for the time being. Our disposition to regard them as final is a great barrier to union and a great hindrance to our own growth as well. It is more than probable that the last word has not been spoken about any of the great doctrines to which the church holds so tenaciously. A larger Christ is yet to appear and a truer appreciation of the Scripture is sure to result from its constant study. This does not mean that we should easily surrender our convictions but it does mean that we should be open-minded and open-hearted. When in the spirit of true discipleship we find ourselves growing into the fullness of Christ we shall also find ourselves being gradually perfected into one. This is Christ's ideal of union.

The Dogmatic Point of View.

In view of this, one witnesses with disappointment the disposition on the part of many, not a few of whom are professed advocates of union, to erect into barriers their own dogmatic convictions. Rev. George Frederick Wells, writing in the Homiletic Review, June 1911, on the subject of Church Federation says: "Dogmatic church union is that kind of union which is sought by a denomination or class of people who try to believe and teach that their church alone represents essential Christianity, that they are right and all others are wrong, that at least they possess the larger truth and others only part truths, and that when the end of the race is reached they will be the all-inclusive Christian body. * * * It is a sad fact that so many of the 168 denominations of organized religion in the United States today hold this dogmatic point of view. Christ's rebuke to the spirit of 'I am holier than thou' ought to be effective in this generation if never before."

Desire for Union Not Deep Enough.

I am not disposed to resent this characterization of much of our modern Christianity. Too many instances in current events and literature tend to confirm it. Our desire for union does not go deep enough. In a recent issue of one of our periodicals the following sentence appears in a brief article from the pen of one of our trusted leaders, a man for whom I have great respect: "Even if our plea historically considered were for union at the expense of aught that Christ commanded us, I should immediately abandon it and continue to teach and preach 'Jesus only.'" That is to say the author of this statement regards the commands of Christ, as he has interpreted them, as of paramount importance. Suppose we turn the statement around and see how it sounds. Even if our plea, historically considered, were for the emphasis of the commands of Christ, at the expense of his desire for union as voiced in his intercessory prayer, I should immediately abandon it and continue to teach and preach "Jesus only." Is a command voiced in positive language more sacred than a desire voiced in passionate intercessory pleading?

Statements Must Be Harmonized.

The two statements put over against each other disclose two differing conceptions of Christianity which must somehow be harmonized. In the one instance there is emphasized the commands, those positive, specific utterances which have occupied so large a place in our thought and teaching, and in obedience to which so much of our modern Christianity consists. In the other instance there is emphasized the spirit of Christ, not so readily discerned nor so easily stated as are the more overt features of his life and ministry, but which tempers it all. It is no greater loyalty to Christ to obey his commands than it is to discern his spirit and manifest it. Indeed there can be no obedience, however true to the form our action may be, unless there be at the same time loyal submission of our lives to the accomplishment of his spiritual purposes.

Convictions of Truth and of Duty.

The problem of union is not one of agreement nor of compromise but of discipleship. There is the greatest need of patient, painstaking investigation, with an open mind and a humble spirit, of these time-honored but dogmatic conclusions which we hold. It is of primary importance that we continue to sit at the Master's feet in an effort to know his will and discern his spirit. Whenever we find ourselves completely en rapport with him, differing as we may and probably will in matters of doctrine and formal practices, we shall still be united in spirit and purpose and devoted to the great interests of the Kingdom of God. We shall have less to say about our conscientious convictions of truth, and more to say about our conscientious convictions of duty. We shall love each other with such sincerity that we can freely talk together about our differences of opinion, our intellectual divergences, and still be united in fellowship and worship. That will be a triumph of Christianity indeed, a triumph worth striving for, and one upon the attainment of which the solution of the problem of Christian union waits.

PERRY J. RICE.

Social Survey

Parcels Post in Next Session

After a long, notoriously backward period covering many years, the United States post-office department has awakened to remarkable development under the administration of Mr. Hitchcock. The success of the postal-savings department—for which Postmaster-General Hitchcock was an ardent worker in the days of its adoption—is not without a share in the creation of a public sentiment for further progressive measures for the benefit of the country. Mr. Hitchcock has wiped out a long-standing deficit and reported a substantial balance in the post-office through the careful substitution of systematic for unsystematic methods, and by the extension of the service along profitable lines. It is argued that the express companies are making enormous profits by taking all the short-haul business and leaving to the post-office department the long-haul package trade which can only be maintained with small profit, if, indeed, it does not entail an actual loss. It is claimed that the express companies are carrying on an illegal traffic. This assertion is based on a law which says that no private carrier shall transport "letters and packets." Each successive postmaster-general has allowed to stand the unwritten ruling, of former Attorney-General Wayne MacVeagh, that the word "packet" here means a packet of letters. On the construction of that one word lay the fate of the express monopolies. The express companies have become so powerful that it has been said there are just four reasons why a parcels-post bill cannot be passed, and those four reasons are the four great express companies. The subject of a parcels-post will be made a prominent issue in the next regular session of congress. The sub-committee investigating the matter will be fully prepared to report by that time. Already there are ten bills before the house relating to inaugurating such a service. The most sweeping and also the most important of these is the Sulzer bill, presented by Representative Sulzer, of New York. This bill provides as follows: Establishing a general parcels post; increasing the limit of weight of the parcels to eleven pounds and decreasing the postage to 1 cent for each two ounces; fixing the sale on local letters and sealed parcels in free delivery territory at 2 cents for four ounces and 1 cent for each additional ounce; fixing a rate of 5 cents a pound and 2 cents for each additional pound on parcels mailed at postoffice, hauled not more than fifty miles, and called for at the post-office or delivered by rural route; fixing indemnities for the loss of packages and fees for registration and insurance; depriving the express companies of transportation of mailable matter; authorized an investigation of the value of the property of express companies with a view to submitting to congress a proposition to take over these systems for parcels post. This bill has the backing of the Postal Progress League. It is the one most feared by the interests and the one which they are fighting the hardest in the lobby. Its passage would be a terrific blow to the express companies, but it would benefit the people by reducing package rates, and it would increase the efficiency of the post-office department by drawing to it the profitable as well as the unprofitable package transportation business.

The British Coronation Festivities

At just 12:37 o'clock p. m., June 22, the crown was placed upon the head of George V., and he was proclaimed king of the British Empire. The ceremonies of the coronation season have been impressive. For months London has been preparing for this gala season, and the doors of Westminster Abbey, where the climax of the festival was reached in the coronation rites, have been closed to the public for three months. Beginning the evening before, the people began to flock to the vantage points in the line of march of the procession, standing all night and the following morning to hold the coveted places. By noon hundreds of thousands of people had gathered and the streets were kept clear of people by a solid row of soldiers and police on either side. Sixty thousands soldiers and 12,000 police were employed in this service. In all, only about 7,000 persons were admitted to Westminster to witness the coronation because of the limited capacity of the building. Included in this assemblage were about forty relatives and members of the royal family; 200 foreign princes, princesses, and special representatives; 1,420 peers and peeresses; 300 clergy, statesmen, and ambassadors; 900 members of parliament and their wives; and 800 colonial representatives. Peers and peeresses were present in full robes of position, medals, insignia, and with coronets ready to place on their heads as soon as the king was crowned. The activities at Westminster Abbey began about ten o'clock with the entrance of canons bearing the regalia and crown jewels which are kept in the Tower of London, in accordance with an ancient tradition. This was followed by the arrival of the royal guests—foreign princes and princesses; and later by the Prince of Wales and the royal family. Then came the queen with her retinue and lastly the king himself, with a gorgeous array of the highest peers of the land. As the royal pair arrived, the cheering, which had been deafening, ceased. The impressiveness of that momentary hush was greater than the thunderous roar which preceded it. As the queen passed the section reserved for the students of Westminster college, the boys, exercising their traditional privilege, burst shrilly, "Vivat Regina Maria! Vivat Regina Maria! Vivat! Vivat! Vivat!" and as the king passed they repeated, "Vivat Rex Georgius! Vivat Rex Georgius! Vivat Rex Georgius! Vivat! Vivat! Vivat!" The ritual was then carried out as outlined in a recent issue of The Christian Century. On the instant that the king was crowned, silver trumpets sounded the royal salute; just outside the building a thousand drums rolled the glad news to the waiting throng; the news was instantly flashed to every corner of the world, and at the signal, guns all over the United Kingdom thundered the salute. Following the ceremony the royal pair led the procession back to Buckingham Palace and then, wearing their crowns, appeared upon the balcony of the palace, bowing in acknowledgment of the lusty cheering of the huge crowd assembled about the palace. In the evening London presented a beautiful spectacle in the grand illumination of the palace and the greater part of the city. This closed what is probably the greatest and most gorgeous coronation in the history of the empire.

A National Park at Washington

Washington, D. C., the national capital, widely known as the great white city, has long been the pride of the nation as a city beautiful. Upon it has been lavished the wealth of the country, and its broad avenues and beautiful buildings are much admired by people all over the world. Until recently, Washington was almost exclusively a residence city. As we have come to associate Pittsburgh, Pa., with smoke, so have we learned to link Washington with sunshine and comfortable homes. It is with mingled astonishment and chagrin that we learn this city is fast becoming a great industrial center and that it may soon take on the soot-begrimed characteristics of a manufacturing center. Such an event would be little short of a national calamity. When the site was chosen which was to be the national capital, it was practically unsettled, and in the midst of a wilderness. People ridiculed it as the "capital in the woods." The wisdom of selecting an uninhabited tract and building a city around the capitol in harmony with it was not appreciated. The original tract set aside by Maryland and Virginia was much larger than the present District of Columbia, but it was not anticipated that the city of Washington would ever become so large as it is now and the Virginia portion of the original reservation was ceded back to the state of Virginia. That was a great mistake, but it is not irreparable. It is claimed that the growth of Washington as an industrial city will be checked if the outlying territory is purchased by the government and transformed into a great national park. This land comprises about 100,000 acres on the Virginia side of the Potomac, extending half-way to Baltimore. It was originally forest land, but now is mostly stripped of trees. It is suitable for rehabilitation and is held at from $8 to $25 an acre. The effect the purchase of this land would have on Washington's industries is, of course, problematical, but in another way it would quite materially affect the city. It would be one of the largest, if not the largest, park in the eastern part of the country, and could be made to add greatly to the charm of the national capital. The sentiment of those urging the movement in congress is to place it in the hands of the forestry bureau where it could be made an excellent example of what can be accomplished in the way of reforestation.

It is told of Mr. Finnegan that he died, and when he greeted St. Peter he said: "It's a fine job you've got here for a long time."

"Well, Finnegan," said St. Peter, "here we count a million years as a minute and a million dollars as a cent."

"Ah!" said Finnegan, "I'm needing cash. Lend me a cent."

"Sure," said St. Peter, "just wait a minute."

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Universalist

"Diluted Out of Existence."

When the church ceases to lead men to God, its work is done. This old world knows what the church stands for even if some members of the church do not know, and when the church has nothing to say about God except to question or deny his existence, the world will look to other institutions to do its social work. In the following paragraph the Universalist Leader tells how one man discovered a thing or two about the source of the church's power:

There was a man in our town who was so wondrous wise that presently he became a fool. His wisdom manifested itself first in making him a really great preacher, so that multitudes flocked to see and hear him, and his church could not contain the crowds. The next manifestation was the enlargement of his own head with the notion that he was the object of attention rather than the message he had to bring. Next his disposition was affected and he became intolerant and independent of all others and resented all authority of man or church; he knew it all! And then began the diluting process—he called it broadening. He must suit all the people who wanted to come and hear him. He would allow no theological beliefs to stand between him and the people who hungered and thirsted after him! He demanded a bigger church building from which all restrictions were to be removed; to it were to come Christians and Jews, Protestants and Catholics, Mohammedans and heathen; just come to him and be fed! But the members of the church which had been set for a purpose in the world, said: While we have the kindest feelings in the world for all humanity, this particular church is to do a specific work for humanity, and so must stand for something!" Then the great preacher became wroth, and in a loud voice called his people bigots, and said he would go away where he was appreciated! And he went and hired a hall, and spoke to the multitude and asked them to sustain him, and support him, and they answered with a shout and thrust their hands deep into their pockets and found a stray penny, but the tax upon them was too great and after a few Sundays they went back to the old established churches where other people paid the bills! And the great preacher waxed eloquent in behalf of religious liberty to dwindling audiences, until he could no longer pay the rent of the hall, when he went back to his old communion and proclaimed that they had no right to drive him out of their fellowship, for at heart he was more orthodox than any of them, and was just making an experiment to show the foolishness of diluting doctrine!

United Brethren

Reverence for Symbols.

It is impossible to respect a man while we despise the symbols of his deepest faith. We may know of symbols that would express more truly his faith and it is our right to call his attention to the higher privilege open to him, but if his life is godly and he uses a certain symbol to express his life, we must treat the symbol with reverence. The prophets denounced the forms of worship observed at the temple because the worshipers had nothing worthy in their lives to offer to God. But what shall be said of those who regard lightly the symbols of their own faith? On the influence of personal reverence for the house of God the Religious Telescope says:

David's care for the ark was a beautiful expression of interest in the work and worship of God, and the jubilant character of his feet when it came to Jerusalem, where he danced before its presence, indicates the sense of delight he experienced in everything that pertained to God, even the outward symbols of his presence and power. These symbolic straws show that the spiritual wind bloweth where it listeth, and that the pleasure of the heart is in the infinite and eternal God. "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand." "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go up to the house of the Lord." It is not easy for a man to be inwardly close to God unless he approaches his outward symbols with unsandaled feet. The reason many sacred songs and soulful sermons fail of their proper effect in the sanctuary service is because the house of God has been desecrated before the very eyes of the people, either by picture shows or some other profane performance, all of which help to rob the house of prayer of the presence and power of God, at least in the estimation of those who most need the influence of personal reverence for the Lord's house. Let the fun makers and the money changers keep out.

Churches in Boston.

We are indebted to the Religious Telescope for the following statement concerning the churches in Boston:

In the last forty years the Unitarians lost five churches in Boston, while the Baptists have increased from twenty-two to thirty, with an increase of fifty per cent in members; the Congregationalists from twenty-two to thirty-four churches, with about the same increase in members as the Baptists; the Methodist Episcopal churches have increased from nineteen to thirty-three, and have doubled their membership; the Episcopalians have doubled the number of their churches and trebled their membership; the Presbyterians have gone from three to nine, with a corresponding increase in membership; while the Lutherans have exceeded all other Protestant churches, having increased from two to fourteen churches, and their membership from 400 to 5,000, in round numbers, mostly of foreign birth or parentage. The Roman Catholics have increased their churches from seventeen to sixty-one. In that time the population of Boston has increased from 300,000 to 700,000—more than doubled, you see. But the cause of Christ has more than kept up with the growth of the population, and for this we are very, very glad.

Methodist

Wanted—Metropolitans.

No religious body is satisfied with its work in the cities. Of the work of Methodists the Central Advocate says, "We cannot lay any very flattering unction to ourselves that we are 'on the job' when less than one man in a hundred in the city is a Methodist, and when what we are actually doing in city missions is so puny, so very negligible in comparison with the crying need, that we are made dumb and others take our crown." The remedy proposed is the metropolitan superintendency. The work of the city should be under the direction of one man of organizing and administrative genius. The trouble and the remedy are thus pointed out by the Central:

In New York Dr. John M. Farley has the charge of 1,240,000 members with nearly a thousand priests, and charities and missions, and colleges ab libitum. And yet does anyone think that Mgr. Farley is not equal to the administration of those interests? Then he is very poorly informed. Of course it can be done.

But what have we done? We have broken up the administration of the great city, parceling it out in districts until there is no possible possibility of a great, unified, constructive, dependable, far-visioned program. The city has been compelled to take second place in framing conference programs. There is the trouble. We have parceled out our cities among several presiding elders simply here and there to give them a better financial support, to give them a nice place to live, to add to their personal prestige, to increase the prestige of a given district, etc., making the city a convenience rather than a battlefield for a great campaign. And with what consequence? We have created a situation in which no bishop, even if he had the wisdom of Solomon and the will of Cromwell, could really do anything. And those who are informed know that this is true.

What is the solution? Consolidate the diocesan administration of the city. Make the district superintendent a metropolitan. Get a man in New York who can match in brain and capacity the masterful mind of Bishop Greer, who comprehends Manhattan, who can fight the wild beasts of Ephesus, who can design the plan, who can build to the plan, who can wait, who can inspire, who can get the money. That is what the city needs. With things as they now are, with Manhattan Island, for example, divided not only into various districts but (what fatuity!) divided actually into different annual conferences, with Chicago divided against itself—at times within the past generation—what can a bishop do? He can break his heart.

The Mormon Jonah.

It is always safe to preach against the Mormons, especially in the Middle West and in the East. It is also necessary to preach on the Mormon question. Members of Christian churches ought to be informed as to the beliefs and aims of the Latter Day Saints. That the Mormons have been misrepresented is very probable, but that does not change the fact that their ideas of the family are abhorrent to Christian sentiment and that their hierarchy is a menace to freedom. The relation of the Mormon Church to the government is a subject much discussed. We give from the Central Christian Advocate this contribution to the discussion:

The reigning Mormon dynasty has been driven into a corner where it has had to offer a sacrifice to appease public opinion indignant at the revelations made by three magazines as to actual conditions reigning in Utah right at this time. Everybody knows that polygamous relations have been maintained in Utah since the manifesto, just as previous to it. It was the manifesto of President Woodruff that cleared the track enough to let Utah get statehood. But the practice of the polygamous relations did not cease, nor did polygamous marriages cease. A recent issue of a Salt Lake daily printed a list of plural marriages which have been contracted since Utah became a state. Out on the high seas, just beyond the riparian rights of the federal government, the ceremony has been performed, and in Old Mexico, and in the Dominion of Canada, the bridal party of polygamists have come back under our laws, cherishing the theological doctrine that they have not violated the agreement by which Utah was allowed to enter the sisterhood of states.

But the aroused feeling of the country is so strong that the hierarchy has had to get a scapegoat and punish him (outwardly) and so divert attention from the main facts. The hierarchy has picked on Apostle Crowley and has unfrocked him and put on him church censures. We wish it would irritate him to a point where he would tell all he knows.

But we are certain that neither America, nor England, nor Germany are deceived by this grandstand attitudinizing by the man, President Smith, who still lives with five wives and has dozens of children.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

The Faces I Have Loved Long Since and Lost Awhile

If we love, we must lose. Where love is not, there is nothing to lose. Inasmuch as loss is inevitable, the wise man will ask whether it does not have a meaning deeper than any the reason of man has yet formulated, and he will try to have that attitude toward life and death which makes grief ennobling.

The tasks of some who have gone before seem to have been completed. After years of toil and triumph these workers have gone to their reward.

"Fear no more the heat o' sun,
Nor the furious winter rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home hast gone and ta'en thy wages."

At the grave of the child and of the young man or the young woman there comes the feeling that earth has been robbed, that there are tasks and no one to do them. It is then that we need to recognize the imperfections of our knowledge and to believe "That nothing walks with aimless feet;

That not one life shall be destroyed;
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete."

We do not lose those whom we love. It is true that we say of

"But in the sun they cast no shade,
No voice is heard, no sign is made,
No step is on the conscious floor!"

Yet they are ever with us. Our lives are poor in feeling and imagination if we cannot find the meaning of Tennyson's lines,

"Thy voice is on the rolling air;
I hear thee where the waters run;
Thou standest in the rising sun,
And in the setting thou art fair.

"Far off thou art, but ever nigh,
I have thee still, and I rejoice;
I prosper, circled with thy voice;
I shall not lose thee though I die."

In the hour of temptation and when duty is hard the memory of one who trusted us in our days of weakness and blindness saves us from cowardice and sin. There are those who say they are weak because father, mother, wife, husband, or friend is gone. Have not such persons learned very imperfectly the lessons of affection? Are they eye-servants who do nothing well when the master is absent? Is their affection so earthy that it cannot live upon memory and hope? If we have not been selfishly receiving, and giving in return nothing of value, ought we not to be stronger when those who have taught us what is worth while and have inspired us to put out best into our work are no longer with us to guide and cheer us? The patriot is stronger because he has before him the example of his country's heroes. The Christian rejoices in tribulation, for he believes he is continuing the work of the martyrs of his faith. Is the example of those whom we have known less powerful than that of those whom we have never seen?

We have lost our friends for awhile. The Christian lives in hope. With Paul he says, "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." The love of God is the basis of hope. Those who have not the certainty of God's love may use the word hope, but they know not its meaning. The boundless ocean upon which our loved ones have embarked is the ocean of God's love. "That which drew from out the boundless deep" has turned again to its home.

"What is excellent
As God lives is permanent;
Hearts are dust, heart's loves remain;
Heart's love will meet thee again."

[Midweek Service, July 12. 1 Thess. 4:13-18; Heb. 11:39-12:3.]

S. J.

A Letter From Lowell C. McPherson

Editors The Christian Century:—When I was a student in Eureka College I was correspondent for one of the predecessors of the Christian Century, since which time I have been a reader of the paper, and with interest. I am glad my vision of issues inevitably arising in a progressive movement making for Christian unity in a way different from any other, namely, the movement of the Disciples of Christ, has not been limited to any one paper.

(1.) With many readers of The Christian Century, I believe, I am not yet certain what is your position related to unimmersed Christians' church membership. Your criticism and discussion of the Christian Standard, and especially of the Christian-Evangelist, still leave me uncertain as to what you believe.

(2.) To-day, in your answer to the Christian Standard, and in a tone of approval of the Hyde Park Church's program, you state: "The Hyde Park Church does, indeed, provide membership in its congregation for such persons, though it receives only immersed believers into the church. * * * The church and minister have gotten beyond the stage of discussion of the plan."

Also, to-day, replying to the Christian-Evangelist, as if that paper were waiting to hear either from the missionaries or Cincinnati or from the brethren generally, or from all, before deciding its position, you state:

The conviction of The Christian Century on the question is well known to all our readers. This paper believes that Methodists, Presbyterians and the rest are Christians, members of the church of Christ, BAPTIZED members of the church of Christ. Believing this, there is no conceivable Christian attitude to take toward any who apply for fellowship with us save to acknowledge them as members of the church and receive them joyfully into the fullest fellowship. In a word, The Christian Century recognizes the validity of the ordinances, ministry, membership and discipline of the churches to whom the Disciples make their plea for union."

(3.) Do you "recognize the validity of the ordinance" of infant sprinkling?

"Valid" means "having sufficient strength or force; founded in truth; capable of being justified, defended or supported; not weak or defective; sound; good," according to Webster.

(4.) Let me state that one hundred years ago the "ordinances, ministry, membership and discipline" whose validity you recognize now, could not have been recognized in the conception of our fathers making a consistent plea for Christian unity. If they recognized then such to be valid, and we now do also, according to the representations of The Christian Century, how could there have been any sensible, necessary plea, and what is our plea now? Are we to "recognize the validity" of that in which we do not believe?

The inception of this great movement on the part of the Disciples of Christ, a hundred years ago, was based in the rejection, and not in the recognition, of divisive names and ordinances and discipline among Christian bodies. Else, there could not have begun such a movement for Christian unity, nor could it have been perpetuated through the century if it had begun. Then it is unnecessary for accusations to be made that we do not regard the denominations about us to be Christian bodies, because the plea could not have begun, if so.

The sad spectacle before the world is the divided condition of Christendom, against which the Disciples of Christ, I believe, are making protests the most consistent and scriptural of all the Christian bodies. Our New Testament plea for Christian unity has also accomplished more of what exists now than has any other religious movement. Therefore I have no apologies to make for standing by it with "malice towards none and charity for all."

Keuka Park, N. Y. LOWELL C. MCPHERSON.

The above communication was received before the opening editorial in the issue of June 22, entitled "Irregular, but Not Invalid," was published. That editorial treats directly of the matters involved in Mr. McPherson's letter. Nevertheless there are some points in his inquiry to which it is desirable to make specific reference. The paragraph numbers are inserted by the editors.

(1.) It is rather humbling to the editors that so discerning a reader as we know Mr. McPherson to be is not yet certain what the position of this paper is regarding the church membership of unimmersed Christians. We do not know how to say it in any more clear-cut terms than those which he has quoted from our recent editorial. We have therefore had the quotation set up in italics

(in the body of his communication above) to call his and any other reader's attention to it. If after re-reading this quotation there is any doubt as to what the position of this paper is, either in Mr. McPherson's mind or any other reader's, we shall be glad to take the matter up again.

(2.) In referring to the Hyde Park plan we were simply making a statement of fact. There is no "tone of approval" in the statement which Mr. McPherson quotes. Further on in the same editorial it is said that The Christian Century "holds no brief for the Hyde Park plan." Our view of this plan was stated in an editorial in the issue dated August 25, 1910. We gladly acknowledge our respect for the work of the Hyde Park Church and its pastor, and especially for the courage with which they have pioneered a way to the enlistment of all Christians in coöperation and fellowship. In that particular community and with Dr. Ames' leadership the "plan" is succeeding. But The Christian Century sees no need of any "plan" whatever in the practice of Christian union. Ingenious devices like this at Hyde Park eclipse the issue. We have no "plan" to offer except the Disciples' plan, namely, that of extending the right hand of fellowship to any accredited member of the church of Christ who desires it. The way to practice Christian union, it seems to this paper, is simply to practice it.

(3.) The Christian Century does not recognize the validity of the "ordinance of infant sprinkling," for the simple reason that there is no such ordinance. Sprinkling is not an ordinance, whether the subject be an infant or an adult. Neither is immersion an ordinance. Baptism is an ordinance, and should, for many reasons, be solemnized only by immersion in water and administered only to believing penitent adults.

With reference to infant baptism The Christian Century holds no view other than that to which all representative Disciples subscribe, to which Mr. McPherson himself subscribes, namely, that a certain proportion of the membership of the church of Christ consists of men and women who received no other baptism than infant baptism. They are Christians, members of the church of Christ, just as truly members of the church of Christ as are Mr. McPherson and the editors of The Christian Century. Their membership in the church is not determined by the fact that they had water sprinkled upon them in infancy, nor is our membership determined by the fact that we were immersed in water in maturity.

The essential factors which determine church membership are the individual's assumption of the obligations of the Christian life and the church's acknowledment of him as now a member of the Christian community, which assumption and acknowledgment are marked and symbolized in an approved outward act. That this outward act should be immersion only—because of Christ's example, because of its historic dignity, and because of its obvious symbolism—is the urgent contention of the Disciples.

But in making this appeal for the practice of the historic and proper outward act of initiation into the church and for the abandonment of the misleading and harmful practice of infant baptism the Disciples do not for a moment invalidate the membership in the church of Christ of those whose baptism has been solemnized by an irregular substitute. Mr. McPherson himself does not.

(4.) The question of the validity of the ordinances, ministry, membership and discipline of the churches wearing denominational names, was never squarely met by the "fathers" or by any generation of the Disciples until the present. No thorough-going effort has been made to define our ideas as to the status of Methodists, Presbyterians and the rest. The issue is being forced upon us now by the rise of Christian union sentiment throughout Christendom and especially on the mission field.

The Disciples have talked much, it is true, about "restoring the primitive ordinances," and in the case of baptism have adopted the erroneous Baptist idea that "immersion" and "baptism" are equivalents in the New Testament. So that much of their teaching on baptism has seemed to involve a clean-cut decision against the validity of affusion-baptism. But their plea for Christian unity and their practical attitude toward others as Christians, members of Christ's church, have always contradicted this view that "baptism" and "immersion" were equivalents and implied that, however important it might be to re-establish immersion, not all baptized persons have been immersed.

Neither of these contradictory lines of reasoning was followed to its conclusion by the "fathers," but each was broken off by contact with the other, and we have been content to allow our ultimate ideas to remain in non-committal vagueness if not confusion.

Mr. McPherson asks, "How could there have been any plea," if our fathers recognized the validity of the ordinances of their brethren of the denominations? Our reply would be, How could there have been any plea had they not done so? Their plea implied the validity of the Christian church membership of those to whom the plea was made, and this involved the validity of the baptism by which such church membership was constituted.

He further asks, "And what is our plea now?" To which we reply, Precisely the same as the plea which the fathers made and which the Disciples have always made: An appeal to all Christians, members of Christ's church, to abandon all sectarian and divisive practices and tests of fellowship—sectarian names, sectarian creeds, sectarian communion, sectarian forms of baptism, sectarian organizations, the spirit of sectarian exclusiveness—and practice only those things upon which a united church may be maintained—and to do this because it is the supreme will of Christ the Lord that his church shall be one.

This is the historic plea of the Disciples. And there was never a time when it was so important to proclaim it as the present hour.

The Christian Century believes that when a Presbyterian Christian, for example, wishes to abandon his sectarian name, his sectarian creed, his sectarian organization, and his share in the perpetuation of a sectarian form of baptism, he should be joyfully received into the fellowship of the Disciples of Christ, a brotherhood whom God has set in the world for the express purpose of providing fellowship for just such as he.

And in holding this belief we do not ask the Disciples to change any of their views or convictions but simply to practice a conviction which has been commonly held among them from the beginning.

Herbert Moninger's Passing

The news of the death of Herbert Moninger startled and subdued the hearts of the thousands who have come under the influence of his personality during the eight years of his notable prominence in the Sunday-school life of the Disciples.

Mr. Moninger was but thirty-five years old. He was born near Washington, Pa., and graduated at Bethany College and the Divinity School of Yale University. His success in the building up of the Sunday-school at Steubenville, Ohio, where he was pastor, attracted the attention of the Standard Publishing Company, and he was put in charge of the Sunday-school department of that institution. From the start his work was phenomenally successful. The Teacher Training idea, with his interpretation, backed by the Standard, swept through the churches of the Disciples like a genuine revival. In no other denomination did the idea spread as among our people. This was due more to Mr. Moninger's influence, the popular character of his publications and his own fascinating personality than to any other single cause.

With Mr. Moninger's methods, it is needless to say, The Christian Century was not always in accord; and the results of the teacher-training movement among us are, in the judgment of this paper, not unmixed with harm. It would be unjust, however, to hold him responsible for all dubious elements in the outcome of a movement in which so many forces were coöperating.

But of the charm and beauty of his character, his amiable personality, and his Christian walk and conversation we wish to bear unfeigned testimony, and join with all who knew him in expressions of regret at his early taking away, and of tender sympathy toward his wife and the two little girls who must finish the path without him.

The Statements of the Foreign Society

It is two weeks since the Executive Committee of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society sent forth a statement entitled "A Protest and a Plea," accompanied by a final statement of his views by Guy W. Sarvis.

In substance the Executive Committee's statement contained a protest against the right of The Christian Standard to demand any statement; a disavowal by the Committee of any purpose or desire to depart from the accepted practices of the Disciples, particularly in the matter of receiving unimmersed Christians into our churches, at home or on the mission field; a representation of the sentiments of all its missionaries as in accord with this view and a declaration that the Committee "would not appoint, and, indeed, would recall any one known to be not in such accord"; a plea for the confidence of the brotherhood in the Society; and a suggestion that an arbitration committee be appointed to which shall be referred any further accusations made by The Christian Standard.

The substance of Mr. Sarvis' statement is that he is not an advocate of receiving unimmersed Christians into church-membership; that he makes a distinction between recognizing them as Christians and admitting them into local churches as members; that this distinction was overlooked by those whose reports of his views have been made the basis of The Standard's charges; that we [presumably the Disciples] gladly accept members of pædo-baptist churches at the communion table but deny that they are members of the Church of Christ, though Mr. Sarvis himself contends that they are Christians.

The effect of these two statements has been to estop The Christian Standard's campaign against the Foreign Society, adding yet one more to a long series of similar defeats which that paper has suffered in its long-time hostility to the Society and to the cause of progress in our brotherhood.

The two weeks that have elapsed since the publication of these statements have brought to The Christian Century many letters of congratulation on the prompt and effective way in which this paper interpreted the Standard's sinister purpose and elicited from the brotherhood such a vigorous and representative expression of condemnation.

* * *

Along with these letters of rejoicing there have come a number of earnest-toned messages of counsel. For these we are especially grateful. The writers recognize with us the exceeding delicacy of the present moment, and in view of the announced purpose of The Christian Century to comment later on the Society's statements they have been solicitous that we might be guided to speak the right word. Most of the correspondents regret the fact that the Executive Committee and Mr. Sarvis made a second statement. They feel that the influence of The Standard is virtually broken in the brotherhood, that its reactionary policy is well understood and that the brotherhood itself will amply protect the Society against every sort of menace and usurpation.

With one exception, all our counsellors advise us to celebrate the victory that has been gained and look not too closely at the price that has been paid for it. A singularly fair and large-minded pastor, whose letter is typical of all the rest, writes as follows:

I wish the officers of the F. C. M. S. had ignored The Standard's attack. Their statement has gone the length in positive assertion of their position and yet it will not satisfy The Standard. The statement by Mr. Sarvis has only opened the way for further attack upon him and the society and I shall not be at all surprised if his appointment is nulled.

But despite this action of the F. C. M. S. and the repressive influence it will have in India, and feeling as we do about it, we must stand by the Society. We must not even embarrass it before the brotherhood by pointing out too clearly what seems to us to be a tactical blunder. However serious it may be it can be corrected and will be, I doubt not, in the years to come.

The Century has the ear of many of our leaders. It has won its way splendidly in these recent years. Many admire your wholesome frankness and they will read you with interest and profit when you discuss abstractly the questions involved in your proposal for practicing union. But you will lose them if you try to make the case too concrete, especially if it involves a suggestion as to the policy of our missionary societies.

I don't want you to lose them. I want you to say some more, and then some more, and some more still on the subject of union, and I want you to say it when you have the ears of the multitude. You need not recede from your position, but you can be a little less strenuous at times and you can avoid involving the societies too particularly.

Another writer, an ardent supporter of the Foreign Society and a conservative friend of progress, says that he recognizes that "from your point of view the statement of the Committee is more or less vulnerable. I am sure you will not be entirely satisfied with it." He calls our attention to the fact that the Committee represents the brotherhood, and while he says he "cannot speak for a hundred years from now or even ten years from now" he feels sure that were the Society "to advocate what you advocate its receipts would be reduced one-half, if not three-fourths."

* * *

The weight of this counsel rests heavily upon us. It rests so heavily upon us that the enforced delay in publishing an editorial comment has been accepted with gratitude as giving a chance for our earlier judgment to correct itself before going to the public. But the days only deepen the conviction that while a notable triumph has been gained over a private adversary bent on injustice, it has been gained by the sacrifice of the long-run interests of the Kingdom of God and the plea of the Disciples.

We make no apology for criticizing an act of the Foreign Society. We have not condemned The Standard for criticising the Society. Our condemnation of The Standard was based on that paper's evident purpose to disintegrate the Society if possible; to deflect offerings from its treasury; to injure the reputations of its officiary; and to harry its missionaries with test questions wholly inconsistent among a people who, having flung away human creeds, find their unity in simple allegiance to Jesus Christ the Lord.

In differing from a policy of the Foreign Society The Christian Century is guilty on none of these counts. We believe in the Society and support it against the crude methods of anti-ism. We plead with churches and Sunday-schools to send money to its treasury. We honor its officials and esteem its leaders as God's best gift to the Disciples of Christ. As to the missionaries, our conviction is that no group of workers in the Kingdom of God are more intelligent, consecrated and worthy to be trusted than they.

In offering a criticism upon the Society at this moment we recognize that this paper is putting itself in a position of diplomatic disadvantage. It would be more politic, more reassuring, to forget the principles and ideals involved and hold an unalloyed celebration in our pages over the decisive defeat which the Society has administered to the foe of progress in our ranks. Such a celebration would manifestly capitalize much partisan feeling to the profit of The Christian Century.

But we cannot do this. This paper does not wish to be a partisan friend of the Foreign Society. We wish to support the Society because its cause is just, and, conscious of our fundamental loyalties, remain free to take earnest exception to any of its specific acts or utterances.

* * *

One letter only, in all that we have received, has revealed an awareness of the deeper issues involved in the late struggle and tended to confirm our purpose to interpret the victory in terms of ideals rather than of partisanship. The letter follows:

Dear Brother Morrison: I want to be counted a friend to the Foreign Society, and to let you know of my satisfaction with your defense in the present unchristian attack on our growing missionary interests. The Foreign Society will not suffer. It has prospered increasingly on these unscrupulous bombardments for a number of years.

My fear is that the secretaries, and perhaps The Century editors, on the Society's behalf, may assume an unwarranted conservative position in the presence of a great opportunity. What I am writing grows out of the Society's statement in this week's issue declaring their unwillingness to send to the field any one advocating union such as is discussed today, and their purpose to withdraw any on the field sympathetic with that movement. I also noted in a previous issue your partial correction of the statement concerning the proportion of missionaries in India holding favorably to the proposal to practice Christian union there. I cannot help feeling that your correction would not have been made with full knowledge of the facts, except to shield the Foreign Society or the missionaries. I am certain the Society is not aware of the attitude of many of its missionaries on this live question. Evidently, the missionaries are loth to reveal their conviction to the Committee, and they will be more so on seeing the Society's statement, doubtless.

My acquaintance with missionaries is not extensive, but I can recall, within the past year, no less than a half dozen who have made positive declaration, in my presence or in letters I have received, of their conviction that a free union must and should be practiced on the foreign field. And there was no effort to conceal that they meant the reception of all Christians from other missions without demanding immersion. I have no desire to insist on this practice in America, but I do not want the missionaries to suffer from a restraining influence so far removed from the field of action. If the proportion of all missionaries desiring to practice Christian union is as great as among my acquaintances, I should believe you are fully warranted in your earlier statements, and the Society is only postponing the day for consideration of this acute problem, and blocking the missionaries' most effective work. If our missionaries are to be obstructors of Christian union on the foreign field, they had far better be laborers in fields where division is already deep rooted, and where the need is not so great as in heathen countries. I say this in all kindness, both to The Century and the Foreign Society. I should be glad to have my name signed to this statement, but do not wish any possible embarrassment to our living-link missionary.

* * *

The pith and essence of our conviction concerning the two statements is that in their deep concern lest the offerings were being hurt by the Standard's attack, both the Committee and Mr. Sarvis have been driven into making positive pronouncements on a far-reaching policy of missionary statesmanship without being either in a state of mind or in possession of adequate data to do justice to their problem.

* * *

There are three heavy-weighing facts with which their statements do not reckon.

First of all is the fact that forces are gathering on the mission field wich are bound to eventuate in not many years in united indigenous Churches of Christ in the several countries in which the gospel has been well established.

That such a goal is in sight is as glorious as it is inevitable. But it is inevitable. Any acceptable philosophy of missions provides for the passing of the mission church from the paternalistic control of the missionaries to an independent status. The principle upon which missionary work proceeds is that of making itself finally superfluous. This final stage is a long way off yet in the Orient. But decided progress is marked with the emergence of self-consciousness in the native church and the assertion of its autonomy.

We are passing into that period now in many mission fields. Native leaders are being produced in the Oriental church—men of intellect and scholarship. The native mind is reacting upon the Christian gospel with eagerness. The Chinese Christian is coming to see that he has not simply adopted a new religion but has come into possession of a new life—a life which works from within to change and enrich his own world with its customs and truths, not to exchange it for an occidental world to whose customs and modes of thought he is alien.

This is the way Christianity always does. It fertilizes the native mind on which it falls, releasing hidden energies, opening secret springs of living water and making thus each convert and each converted nation an original interpreter of the gospel.

It is not strange, therefore, in the light of this gracious process, that the church in China and India and Japan is not interested in our occidental sectarian distinctions. Our distinctions of creed and name and form do not interest them as does the essential gospel itself. Possessing the same gospel they marvel at our divisions. And as they grow toward independence they grow toward unity.

No denominational missionary society operating from the other side of the world will be able to withstand the social energies implicit in this movement for a united native church. It will come to pass in spite of occidental hindrances. A Methodist missionary from South India where the unity movement has gone farther than in any other mission field, publicly warned his faltering brethren in the great federation conference at Jubbulpore in Central India, that if the missionaries did not unite the churches would do so in spite of them!

On the mission field the pivot on which unity turns is the principle of inter-communion, which includes not only the open celebration of the Lord's supper but a free interchange of members between church and church, by letter, on the basis of the recognized validity of the ordinances, ministry, membership and discipline of all participating churches. This, of course, is the pivot on which unity turns in the home field, too, only it is not so easy to see it here as there. There can be no unity without this free inter-communion.

The missionaries of the Disciples of Christ, pleading with their Christian brethren of other names to unite, now find themselves in the anomalous position of being pleaded with to practice their own distinctive message!

This is one of the facts which, it seems to The Christian Century, the Executive Committee did not frankly and adequately consider in defining the policy set forth in its recent statement. Such a policy if adhered to will put the Disciples in a tiny sectarian pocket in India and China while the great Church of Christ goes forward to its divine task.

* * *

The second fact which the Committee, in the heat and hazard of the Standard's attack, was not able adequately to weigh is that there is a considerable body of sentiment among our missionaries favorable to the practice of Christian union by accepting letters from churches practicing affusion-baptism without raising the question of the applicant's form of baptism.

Let it be noted that The Christian Century is content with saying "a considerable body" of sentiment. We shall not speak in terms of proportions.

Let it be further noted that we say a considerable body of "sentiment." We are not disposed to characterize it in terms of enthusiasm, or conscience, though all the indications we have received would warrant the use of those terms.

Still further let it be noted that our statement reads "sentiment . . . favorable." We do not believe there is one missionary on the foreign field who would advocate the practice of union in the face of a contrary suggestion from the Society. Indeed we do not believe that there is one missionary who would even consider the practice apart from its relations to the Society and to the brotherhood at home. Our missionaries are humble-minded workers in the Kingdom of God. Their work is not their own. They are partners with the great brotherhood that supplies their support and binds them to God by their prayers.

But we do mean to say that there are many missionaries who would rejoice were they told that the brotherhood and the Society bade them be free to put into practice the plea we have made so long. And we mean to say further that to many missionaries' hearts the statement of policy sent out by the Committee brings pain.

This is not to be taken as a contradiction of the assurance given by the Committee that "all missionaries appointed and supported by them are in sincere accord" with the policy of practicing union only with immersed Christians. This statement of the Committee is true.

The Christian Century believes that were the question opened out in a big-minded way to our big-minded brotherhood; were the facts furnished us by the missionaries themselves without fear of jeopardizing collection or prestige; were the men of leading and of insight to discuss the theoretical or doctrinal aspect of the matter; were the newspapers to speak plainly and earnestly, but without vituperation or disloyalty—were this brotherhood of ours to take up this most vital problem which we have faced since the day the missionary societies were organized, in such a manner, the outcome would mark leagues of progress for the cause we love.

The Christian Century would not prejudge the outcome of such a gracious inquiry. But this much we feel secure in predicting: That the brotherhood and the Executive Committee would say to its missionaries—

You have become a community, a brotherhood, in yourselves. You are not boys and girls but men and women of mature minds, some of you with a score of years of missionary service behind you. You know the Disciples' plea, and are loyal to it—none of us is more loyal than you. Above all you know Jesus Christ and are loyal to Him—none of us knows Him so well or has proved his loyalty to Him so plainly as you. You are to be trusted. You are on the ground. You know the problem—better than we can know it, better than the Executive Committee can know it. It is your problem. Solve it in the grace of the Holy Spirit!

And then our brotherhood would become a mighty prayer meeting, beseeching the throne of grace for the divine guidance of our missionaries!

* * *

The third fact which the Committee overlooked in affirming its policy is that there is a deep-rooted and rapidly spreading conviction among Disciples of Christ that both our historic plea and the demands of the age into which we have come call for the casting away of this one last survival of sectarianism in our practice—the practice of selecting from among Christ's followers only the immersed and rejecting all others from our fellowship.

There is no change of disposition with reference to the practice of immersion-baptism. No true Disciple considers for a moment the possibility of relegating immersion to an optional basis alongside of sprinkling and pouring. It is increasingly plain that the practice of Christian union calls for the practice of immersion only.

But there is a widespread disillusionment with regard to the immersion dogma. The sanctions for this dogma are breaking down.

The New Testament facts are against it.

The spirit of Christianity is against it.

The spirit of the age is against it.

The vital, effective, triumphant movements of today ignore it.

Not one great modern interpreter of the social ideals of Christianity has an ounce of interest in it.

Not one great modern interpreter of the inner life of the soul has an ounce of interest in it.

Not one great modern interpreter of missionary passion and the missionary enterprise has an ounce of interest in it.

It would seem as if there is almost no exception to the rule that as an immersionist goes farther into the field of social or missionary service, or deeper into the spiritual mysteries of the soul of man, he loses interest in, if he does not develop a contempt for, the dogma of immersion.

The immersion dogma is a sectarian obsession in which the big, sane-visioned men and women of the world, who are working at the world's real tasks—at Christ's real task—have no interest.

So long as this dogma obsesses the mind of a Christian community that community will not fling itself with complete abandon into the great brotherly enterprises that really carry the world up toward God. Such a community will be finical, hair-splitting, sectarian in temper, exclusive. It may gain adherents, but it will be too particular about technicalities to render its full meed of service. Its intake from the world may be worthy of boasting, but its output into the world will be an occasion of shame.

Among Disciples the disillusionment has long since begun. A new spirit—a spirit of fraternity, of co-operation, of fellowship, of unity—is abroad in our hearts. This spirit is not to be inhibited by dogmatic considerations. It freely regards every Christian as a brother and desires his fellowship and is willing to give that fellowship through the "right hand"!

It is too late in the day for the Foreign Society to commit the Disciples of Christ to a policy of aloofness from our brethren in the mission fields because, forsooth, they have not been immersed! Disciples know that Christian character and membership in the Church of Christ is not limited to those who were immersed at baptism.

This body of sentiment, not reckoned with by the Committee, asks only to have itself registered. It is not a trouble-making sentiment. It makes no demands. It cannot conceive a threat.

It suffers, rather. It waits, patiently. It teaches. It prays. It does not ask to lead. It claims no place on programs. It even approves the Committee for its statement while deploring it, while turning its face away for the shame of it, as perhaps the best the Committee under the circumstances could do.

The Christian Century believes its duty lies in the direction of simply registering this sentiment side by side with the Committee's own statement, and in the same hour the Committee's statement is in the mind of the brotherhood.

This duty we discharge in love, in loyalty and in the fear of God.

—Here is something for those to meditate upon whose self-righteousness leads them to think slightingly of the church. Dr. Charles R. Brown of Yale University puts it this way: "What a farce the judgment day would be if every man should say, 'Lord, I saw thirty Christians who were hypocrites; I saw a dozen men right beside me who shirked their duties.' To which the Lord might reply, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Thou hast been extremely acute in detecting the weaknesses and inconsistencies of others. Enter thou into whatever measure of thy Lord's joy thou art capable of experiencing.'"

—Rev. Reginald J. Campbell of City Temple, London, in an address to the British Liberal League, which includes men theologically so far apart as Father Benson (Roman Catholic) and Professor Peake (Primitive Methodist), gave an admirable presentation of what he thought ought to be the chief aim of the league. It is quite as fitting to represent the aim of the Christian Church. Here it is: "Our first aim should be the development of the spiritual consciousness in ourselves and others, the quickening of the sense of God in the life of today, and the acquirement of spiritual force through habitual intercourse with the eternal." This is the immediate and supreme office of religion. Could the ministry of the Church secure this the triumph of the Church would come sure and soon.

Interpretations

Alexander Proctor—Some Reflections

Only once was it the privilege of the writer to hear that forerunner of emancipating thought among us, Alexander Proctor. It was in a chapel talk I heard him, and he spoke from the text: "Seeing they see not, and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand." Although I very well remember his long, gaunt form, his irregular but kindly and studious face, his quiet, slow and drawling voice, and the deep impression he made upon my mind; yet I very greatly regret that I am unable to recall a single thing he said.

How I would like to be able to read what this seer had to say on that great text? But very little of the products of the mind of Alexander Proctor were put in permanent form. He has gone from us and has not left his message, save through tradition, for us. His was a mind that saw into the deep of things. His mind sought realities, not their semblances. He said to the younger men not so much "This is the truth;" as "Seek and ye shall find." Truth to him was not done up in parcels, but was what the soul could appropriate and make its own.

That Alexander Proctor died without leaving an adequate record of his splendid mind and heart is a loss to be deeply deplored. It is a wonder that among so many who praised, no one was found to do us the service of handing his message down to our generation. (The one book the Missouri prophet left us is recognized by his friend, the editor, as very inadequately interpreting him.)

Doubtless the paucity of our literature is owing to the fact that the most of our men of vision have failed to leave any of their writings, indeed have failed to write. We need to be rescued from this literary barrenness. Nothing will lift us from provincialism as will world-literature.

The beat of humanity's heart needs to find a place in our writings. The note of the universal is seldom struck. The great men among us are ministering in their local fields; but are not speaking to the world. The men who have the world view are speaking to local groups while frequently those having the local and sectarian view are speaking to their thousands. (Fortunately there are exceptions of long standing.) Many of our Proctors are growing old and dying, leaving no word for the wider and future peoples.

We are obsessed today by dogmatic, reportorial, and outline writings. The eternal emotion of the human soul is in none of these.

The dogmatic boastings cramp life. They sectarianize the soul. These writings cannot be called literature; they are but for a day; they will not be read by anyone ten years from now. They have a heat and a narrowness in them that will not be felt or appreciated tomorrow. It is time we were passing from the age of tracts to the age of books.

The reportorial conception of religious journalism is an enemy to the production and reading of literature. We are sorely surfeited with reports. What we need is light and vision. One word from "on high" is preferable to many telegrams. We cannot go far in the strength of reportorial writings. May the Lord send us editors, authors, prophets, and withhold from us more reporters.

We are obsessed by outline writers. Our Sunday-school men are guilty here. Our souls cry out for the living spirit rather than for the dry outline.

Official publications lack the prophetic voice. There is an authority in real literature that the outline can never give. Counting "one," "two," "three," can never stir the soul to great things.

Whenever I look upon the Sunday-school "literature" brought to our conventions, I feel that there is a great void. I miss the passion that I find in magazines and books of the day. There is no soul cry in it. There is not the reckless abandon that does and dares. I can sit quietly in my chair after going through many outlines; but after reading one real article I find myself on my feet and crying out, "Something must be done."

We are in need of prophets. Too long we have had the narrow dogmatician crying, "You will be damned if you do not go this way."

Too long we have had the timid reporter saying, "I will show you the way you have gone and what you have done."

Too long we have had the Sunday-school expert saying: "Have you seen this chart explaining——;" yes, explaining everything but man and God.

Now we need the supra-man, the prophet, revealing God's truth for our day, and compelling us by the divine oughtness to the real Christian life.

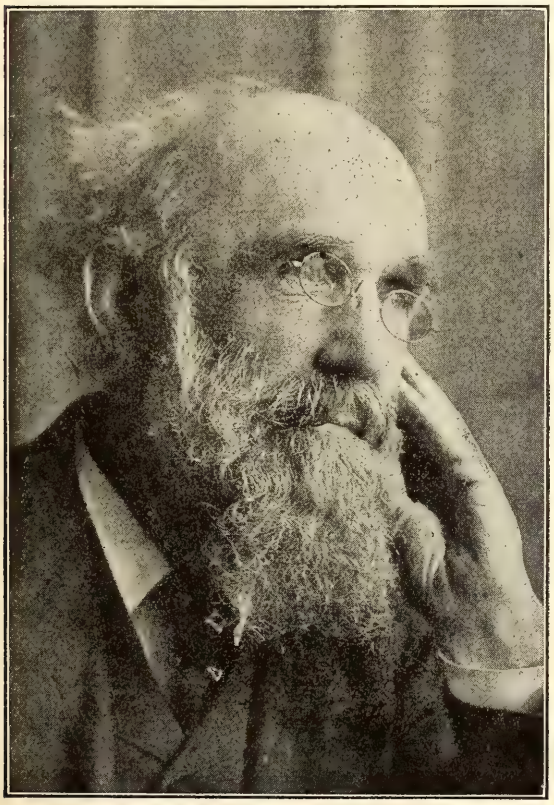
GEORGE A. CAMPBELL.

World Meeting of Baptists

Sixty Nations Represented in Ecumenical Fellowship

BY ARTHUR HOLMES, PH. D.

The Baptist World Alliance is an organization of all the Baptists of the world effected to plan and carry into execution world-campaigns for the advancement of Baptist interests. Eight million communicants are represented in it. The first convention was held at London, 1906; the second at Philadelphia, June 19-24, 1911; and the next will be held in Berlin, 1916. To the Philadelphia conference just closed, sixty nations sent delegates. About five thousand people attended each session. Momentous topics were considered. Special committees for inaugurating world-wide movements were appointed for the young people's work, for missions and for social service.



Dr. John Clifford, Retiring President of the Alliance.

Responsible delegates pronounced it the greatest gathering of Baptist forces ever effected and possibly ever to be effected in their history.

Manifestly it would be impossible adequately to report such a meeting. The comparatively grosser, or more palpable circumstances of songs, speeches, and resolutions are far too numerous and complicated even to mention. The subtler forces at work behind these manifestations would be utterly impossible to catch and set down. Not more therefore, can be here attempted than to touch upon some of the salient features.

Three Wave-crests.

Among the chaos of events as they appeared to a casual on-looker, three general wave-crests might have been discerned as the convention progressed. The first might be called the period of generating enthusiasm; the second, the period of considering world-wide evangelization; the third, the period of considering social service. The periods, of course, are not periods. They were more like overlapping waves. They began, rose, reached their climax and died down again. Their beginnings and endings were not in the convention. Their genesis and the modes of their treatment depended much upon the general opinions extant in the church at large. Much was Christian; some was Baptist. They are offered here merely to afford the mind some grasp of the tremendous events of the week.

Roll Call of Nations.

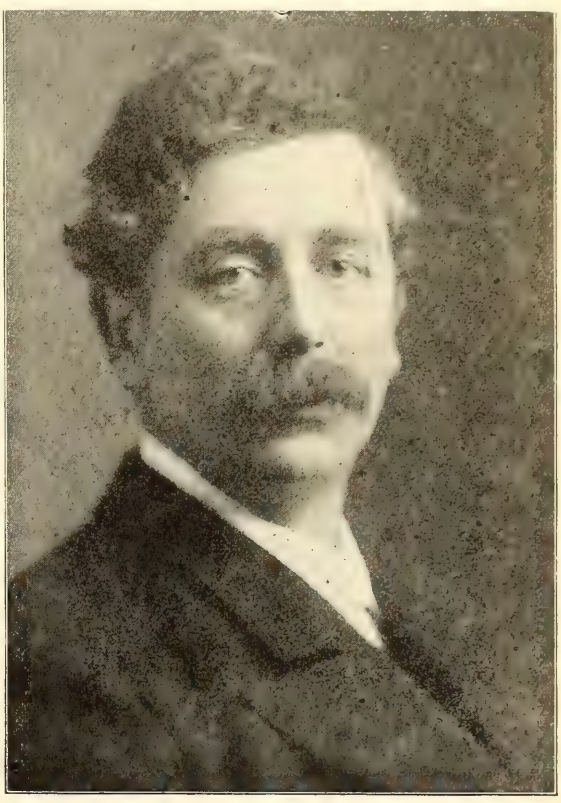
The formal addresses of welcome and other preliminaries were put out of the way on the afternoon of June 19. In the evening the real conference began with the roll-call of the nations. With that, the first period of generating religious enthusiasm was begun. When the grand old cadences of that battle-scarred hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" had died away the rapid fire of individual testimonies began. The delegates of the nations were called to the front. They spoke diverse tongues; they wore manifold garbs; they represented the customs and the manners of many nations. But unified in their common belief they came from the four corners of the earth to tell in terse, powerful, dramatic sentences the stories of their struggles, sacrifices, oppressions, of bodily sufferings almost unbelievable overcome with a zeal yet more incredible. Men and women in their prime, tottering old people and slips of youths mounted the platform, gave their witness and sang their hymn with the ring in it that goes with reality the world over. As each one finished singing in his native tongue the great audience took up the refrain and rolled it back and forth like the reverberation of a thunder peal. "Sing! Sing!" shouted the multitude when Paul Besson of Buenos Aires arose to speak. But the man with the face and the figure of a crusader-monk, threw aloft his arms and shouted back, "I am no singer. I am a soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ!" Then for three minutes he poured forth upon them such a fiery flood of testimony concerning his ten years in South America that at the end, the great crowd was lifted en masse from their seats and threw themselves into "Onward Christian Soldiers," with such fervor that the steel girders of the Temple fairly rang again.

Many more testimonies were like this one. All were of the fire and water and blood order. They came from continents, countries, corners and way-places of the earth, from civilized cities and savage jungles. All of them rang with the tone of the devotee. They made the listener clench his fist, set his jaw, and say within himself, "Now it has come at last! The day of the real is here."

Dissent Followed by Applause.

The second great wave reached its flood-tide in world evangelization. The beginning of it appeared on the very first night in a remarkable speech by Dr. George H. Ferris, First Baptist Church, Philadelphia. Dissent and then applause followed his assertion that the Baptists owed their world-power to their disintegrating ecclesiastical individualism, coupled with their unifying co-operation in the end to be accomplished. Co-operation became the key-word for the evangelization of the world.

First, it appeared in dealing with the young people's interests. One whole session was given to their work. At the end, a committee of twenty-five was appointed to consider ways and means of uniting all Baptist young people of the world in one organization caring for their religious and social welfare.



J. H. Shakespeare, Secretary Baptist World Alliance.

Second, co-operation upon a world-wide scale appeared in the resolution brought forward by the Southern Baptists, and seconded by the retiring President, John Clifford, of England, to appoint a committee for the purpose of taking up with the various denominational boards some plan for introducing organic unity into all missionary operations of the denomination. The president declares that the church had no more important nor more significant task before it than that of co-ordinating its forces on the foreign missionary field.

Mute Russian Exiles Presented.

The general considerations of world-evangelization were brought to a climax by the presentation to the Alliance of sixty Russian Baptist exiles. They made no speeches; they voiced no pleas. But as each one stepped upon the platform a brief record of his sufferings and heroic deeds was given. Some held aloft wrists with the scars of irons upon them still. The bodies of some bore the marks of the lash. But the faces of all were set like flint with deep-drawn purpose in every graven line of suffering and sorrow for the regeneration of their beloved Grace Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, where Sessions were Held.

Russia. Many had been in prison; one, thirty-one times. Some knew Siberia. One had slaved in the treadmill; had spent years in jail and was old and gray at forty-one. Another had spent sixteen years in exile. Nine of them he did not even know where their wives and families were. Some were at the convention under bail and must go back to trial. One had baptized 1,500 persons; another 2,000; another 1,000 Cossacks; another had converted fifty criminals while lodged with them in jail. So the record ran. So the people of the twentieth century heard again the persecutions of the Dark Ages. They sat with something of the same emotions animating them as those who sat at Nicea felt when the martyrs appeared before them mutilated, crippled and with eyes gouged out so they could not flee.

The impression was profound. This episode stood at the very apex of the period of world-evangelization. It furnished the point of crystallization for the enthusiasm generated by all the stories of other missionaries. Characteristically it took the American form of monetary expression. In a few minutes $70,000 was subscribed for a Baptist University at St. Petersburg and two delegates were appointed, first to secure the consent of President Taft, and then to lay the matter before the Czar. So ended the second period, built at first upon individual liberty in matters of doctrine and focussed at last upon community of work for the Kingdom of God.

Deepening Interest in Social Service.

The third great interest—social service—was not so clear-cut or definite. It was present from first to last and permeated the speeches of many leaders. The interest was always on tap, as it were. It gradually grew until the end of the conference when the whole thought of the delegates was devoted to this comparatively new phase of church activities.

In the opening address of President John Clifford, June 20, the essential democracy of the Baptist Church was laid down as the guarantee for openness of mind to all problems of the day. Logically the Baptists must march in tune with the progressive spirit of the times. On the same day Professor Shailer Mathews, of the University of Chicago, gave splendid expression to the need of the hour for the church to apply the gospel to modern social and industrial life. He declares that the real evangelization of the world was the tranfusion of the forces of civilization with the ideals of the Christian religion.

High Water Mark of Social Interest.

Possibly the high-water mark of social interest came with the last two days of the conference. On Saturday Dr. Robert S. Gray of New Zealand—the country probably more advanced in industrial organization than any other on the globe—devoted himself to the working man and the church. He iterated the well-known facts concerning the alienation of the working man—and especially the European working man—from the church. Following him, the Rev. Frank M. Goodchild of New York, in his address on "The Church and Workingwomen" brought a terrible arraignment against society and the church for the industrial treatment of women. To the hardships of the laboring man society has added the terrors of the damned. For industrialism not only overworks and underpays but destroys the very souls of many female workers.

The conclusion of the social gospel was given by Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch. He stood squarely for church leadership to moralize and spiritualize our economic system. His demands went to the core of things. Nothing but a church led regeneration of American industrialism would answer. His sentiments, though pronounced "revolutionary" by the conservatives, were generously applauded.

The immediate practical result of the consideration of social ideals was the appointment of a social service committee to bring about more perfect plans for social and political amelioration and reform.

Modern Spirit, Intense Earnestness.

Such is a brief summary of the more salient points. If the convention was not epoch-making it did certainly furnish a milestone to mark the progress of the church. Its spirit was broad, comprehensive and thoroughly modern. Intense earnestness and an honest desire to meet squarely every issue were manifest. Progress was written in every line of effort.

This was indicated by the absence of some very usual emphases. The first signal absence was the lack of intensity upon theological tenet or dogmas. The "peculiar beliefs of the Baptists," as they were more euphemistically styled—came up for reaffirmation occasionally. But such demands were sporadic and limited chiefly to the pure theologians or teachers of seminaries. The need of affirmation advertized the weakness of their hold. The ordinances fared but little better. One speaker did insist that the "Baptists would meet the other denominations in the Jordan River and nowhere else," but on the whole the splashing of baptismal waters was little heard in the anthem-peals of unity in effort upon great practical tasks.

Significant Limitations.

There were other more significant limitations. This is said not in criticism but wholly to point out just how far the church has really advanced as indicated by the Baptist convention. The liberal consideration given to social problems showed that the church is wide awake upon the issue of the century. There was not however a clear, clean grip on the problems presented. A few seers could discern a social programme as a light on the horizon. The mass were still groping. The actual moves toward social betterment were sporadic and dissevered. Opium traffic in India was condemned. Workingmen and workingwomen received generous sympathy. Wealth, individualism, greed, and competition came in for good round periods of unlimited condemnation. But when it came to grappling with the underlying social problems on anything like a systematic scale the convention was unready. The jungle has been found; the beast has been located; the struggle has begun; but the throat-grip has not yet been taken.

Church Working for Itself.

This is possibly due to the still prevailing notion of the primacy of the church. It still aims to "hold" or to "secure" people whom it tries to help. The workingman is to be "won to the church." Redemption of Russia's peasants took the form of a Baptist college. One of the most promising resolutions ended with the words "whereby Jesus Christ may become a fact in the social life of the world," to which the condition was appended, "This action shall not involve the Alliance in any expense." The restriction—probably perfectly sound in itself—epitomized too aptly the attitude of the conference on the whole social program. Social redemption must not cost anything; or, at least, not too much. The church has not come to see its service to humanity in such self-forgetful terms of devotion that it says: "If it costs everything; if organizations are demolished; altars torn down; edifices reduced to dust and ashes and adherents scattered to the four corners of the earth: still we will take up this battle and fight it to the bitter death." In this the Baptists are by no means alone. In fact, their attitude represents the most advanced amongst denominations.

Conference Marks Actual Advance.

In the light of such a radical—and it ought to be said, at present impossible ideal—the conference had its limitations. They are set down here merely for the sake of better definition. In the light of the Church's present, and even recent past, the conference was away beyond the expectations of many most ardent believers in the essential progress of Christendom. It combined unconsciously, almost, the deepest and most fervent spirit of religion grounded upon the eternal verities of the Christ with an almost anxiously progressive spirit in bringing Him to a needy work. To the souls of those who love the Church this was as the voice of waters in the springtime when the weary winter has loosed its bonds and the earth puts forth a new season of life. May the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Berlin mark as much progress and bring as much inspiration to the world as the one just ended!

Jacob the Redeemed

BY G. CAMPBELL MORGAN

"The God before Whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which hath fed me all my life long unto this day, the Angel which hath redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads!"—Genesis xlviii. 15, 16.
"By faith Jacob, when he was dying, blessed each of the sons of Joseph; and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff."—Hebrews xi. 21.

It will be immediately recognized that the passage in Hebrews throws light upon that in Genesis. When the writer of that letter referred to Jacob, he named this act in which he blessed the sons of Joseph as the supreme expression of his faith.

I have of set purpose chosen this passage in its relation to the word in the letter to the Hebrews because it gave us Jacob's outlook upon his own life, not in the midst of its stress and strain, but from that calm, quiet, vantage ground which he had found near to the bound where the burdens are laid down.

By way of introduction we may notice that in these words there is a threefold recognition of God. In the Hebrew we have in the first place Elohim, without the article; and in the second place Elohim, with the article, and finally, the Angel.

The Angel.

"The Angel which hath redeemed me from all evil"; that is a confession of the profoundest personal value of his relationship to God.

It is this profoundest personal value that I propose to consider. First, let us try to see the man; secondly, let us take the declaration concerning the redeeming God in its general terms; and finally illustrate the declaration by the history as it is contained in this book of Genesis.

The first thing I want to say concerning Jacob, trusting to your familiarity with all the details, and therefore not tarrying with them, is that he was the child of his mother. We can never understand Jacob until we know Rebekah. It is perfectly evident that the dominant influence in the life of this man was the influence of Rebekah. Here, as is so often the case, the mother was far more able to communicate to the boy who loved her, her own nature and disposition, than was the father able to communicate his nature to the boy whom he loved. No one would imagine that Esau was the son of Isaac; but everyone knows that Jacob was the son of Rebekah. The evidences of that sonship are to be found in the fact that he was strong-willed, far-seeing, scheming by nature.

A Suspicious Man.

Temperamentally he was suspicious, always so; suspicious of men, of events, afraid as to how things would eventuate; and over and over again in crises, suspicious of himself. He was unscrupulous; mark his dealing with Esau. Esau was a profane person and sold his birthright; but the man who took advantage of a hungry man to obtain the birthright was utterly unscrupulous. Watch him in his dealing with his father, Isaac. Watch him in his dealings with Laban. I am inclined to say that the only comfort I ever get out of the study of Jacob's dealings with Laban is that Jacob was one too many for Laban. Laban is still alive! He is the man of correct external habit, the man who will take advantage of godliness in another man until he has squeezed the last ounce out of him, and then fling him away. That is Laban, utterly, absolutely, for ever contemptible. When you are inclined to criticise and to speak of a Hebrew as Jacob, do not forget that for every Jacob, I can find you ten Labans waiting to rob him.

A Sensitive Nature.

But there was another side to Jacob. He was a man of singularly fine, sensitive and tender nature. Read the story of his love for Rebekah. Read the story of his love for Rachael. Read the story of his love for Joseph and Benjamin. There is nothing finer than this man's love for his mother, his wife, and his two youngest children. You say, You are contradicting all you have already said! I know it; but the contradiction is in Jacob, not in my imagination. Have you never known him? I know him to-day, he lives in London; the man with a fine, refined, sensitive side to his nature which manifests itself in uniform kindness and courtesy to certain upon whom his love is set; and on the other side he is rough and uncouth, unscrupulous, driving his way through with awful brutality. That was Jacob, strange, magnificent, combining in one personality all these apparently contradictory facts.

The Deeper Facts.

So far our examination is superficial. Let us attempt to look at this man in the deeper facts of his life, not content with first impressions. Jacob was a man of faith, intellectually sure of God, never wavering in that intellectual certainty. I must trust to your knowledge of the story without staying to turn to our Bibles. Let the history pass through your mind, all those outstanding events with which you are familiar. Can you find any moment when his intellectual faith in God wavered for a moment? I cannot. It was ever there; the deepest fact in his life, that perfect certainty of God.

I go further; not only intellectually was he a man of faith, but in his purpose and in his desire he was a man of faith, desiring above all else to come into realization of God's purposes for him, manifesting that desire by the very activities of his meanness. His mother knew before he was born that in the economy of God the elder was to serve the younger. There can be no doubt that Jacob knew the secret too from earliest years. When he snatched at the birthright, he did so in order that he might realize the Divine intention. When by scheming he sought the peculiar parental blessing which rests only upon the firstborn, he did so because he desired to be in line with the Divine purpose as declared. All the way through we find the same things; intellectual certainty of God without any wavering; faith in him that created his purpose in life and his desire. I will summarize the whole story by declaring that in every circumstance this man's faith in God was demonstrated sooner or later. There is no story of him but that in it we find this underlying conviction, and this deep desire to reach the Divine goal, and to fulfil the Divine intention.

Faith and Fear.

But side by side with that fact of his faith, it is equally evident that he was a man of fear, never able to let himself go completely in answer to his own faith, always afraid that the consummation would not be reached, always attempting to help God, and to hurry the Divine purpose. That is the explanation of the eager haste with which he bought the birthright; that is the explanation of the meanness by which he sought the birthright blessing. All the way through these two elements were at work. Faith in the purpose of God, desire to realize the purpose; fear—let me put it as he never would have put it—fear lest somehow God would not be able to manage the business, and a smart attempt to help him. That was the perpetual trouble in the life of the man; these conflicting forces, faith the deepest, and fear, haunting fear that created the false courage, fear that made him dare to do things that faith would not have dared to do, because they violated the Divine method.

Experiences with the Angel.

Let us listen then to this man's declaration in that hour of wonderful illumination, "The Angel which hath redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads." When he said this he was looking back and remembering the definite experiences in which he had been brought into personal contact with the Person. He had met him as "The Angel."

Just a moment in an aside let me suggest to the young people who are studying the Bible, that they take their Bibles and gather up the occasions when "The Angel" is mentioned; not an angel, or angels, but "The Angel." If they do so they will find that under the old economy, ever and anon, in certain conditions, for certain reasons, God took form in which it was possible for men to hold communion with him. We describe those appearances as the Theophanies of the Old Testament. There is a central mystery of his being in which God has never been seen of man, nor can be seen of man, and never will be seen of man; but there is in the mystery of Deity, the power, of manifestation for certain reasons, and the central and final fact of that method is the incarnation. But long ere the days of the flesh of the Son of Man, God appeared in the flaming, burning bush to Moses, and the Angel of the Lord spoke to him. Before that, the Angel of the Lord appeared to Abraham. The appearing of The Angel was the Divine method of direct and personal manifestation in order to meet the necessity of certain particular cases.

Five distinct times God had drawn near to him, and for definite purpose, and he now declared what the purpose of the Divine drawing near had been, "The Angel which hath redeemed me from all evil." Thus in the second place we observe by this word of Jacob that the activity of God was that of Redemption from all evil.

The Evil.

The word made use of for evil here is a word that means breaking-up, or ruin, a word that signifies an act of wrong and its consequences. In the Old Testament we have at least eleven distinct Hebrew words in order to express the Hebrew conception of sin. This is one of them. It is a word which generally indicates the rough exterior of wrong-doing as a breach of harmony, and the breaking up of what is good and desirable in man and society. Jacob was looking back at the evil of his life, at those breakings away which had issued in disaster, at those acts of rebellion or of lack of faith and all the consequences issuing from them; at the rough exterior of wrong-doing in bygone days by which a breach had been made in the harmony, and the breaking up of that which is good and desirable had resulted. He was recognizing the evil in his own nature and in his own life.

The Disciples at the University of Chicago

New Buildings Planned for the Divinity House and Hyde Park Church

Enterprise Will Appeal to Entire Brotherhood.

New buildings are being planned for the Disciples Divinity House and the Hyde Park Church of Disciples. Two buildings are needed now. One should be a Hall, primarily for the Divinity House, but serviceable also for the educational and social purposes of the church. The other should be an auditorium, primarily for the church, but appropriate as a chapel for the Divinity House.

The Divinity House owns the lot on which the present church building stands. The lot is valued at $25,000. It is an ideal location for the group of buildings needed. The equipment should cost not less than $100,000 and the work of securing that amount is now being planned. The importance of this great enterprise in this magnificent location is shown by the following letters of appreciation and encouragement. Other letters of this character are being received as rapidly as our friends learn of our plans.

E. S. AMES.

Disciples' Divinity House

Professor Herbert L. Willett, Ph. D., Dean.
Professor Errett Gates, Ph. D.

OFFICERS OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

William D. Mac Clintock, President.
Edward S. Ames, Secretary.
Kinter Berkebile, Treasurer.

TRUSTEES.

J. H. Garrison.
H. L. Willett.
W. D. Mac Clintock.
E. M. Bowman.
Kinter Berkebile.
Charles R. Wakeley.
Geo. W. Muckley.
R. A. Long.
Errett Gates.
Edward S. Ames.
W. S. Brannum.
Leon L. Loehr.
D. M. Hillis.
Van Dyck Fort.
O. F. Jordan.

Dear Brother Ames:—Your attempt to erect a building has interested me immensely. It is not much more yours than mine, it will belong to the brotherhood; and as such, will be a part of our history. So don't be discouraged nor overpersuaded, but do something worthy of the cause and the location.

To me that corner is the finest one of the University, and the Bartlett gymnasium and the Commons call for more than an ordinary structure. To fail in meeting that call, would be as disastrous as to fall below a call on mission fields, for, to me, that's what your plant will be to the University.

Chicago is in the eyes of the world; great giving is characteristic of her; her buildings are her glory. Be worthy of the city! Any man able to contribute, I am sure, if he were at all familiar with the site, would dissuade any attempt short of $100,000. I believe the brotherhood will respond to a worthy appeal. Make it.

Excuse my offer of advice; but I am intensely interested in our plea, and am jealous for our standing. Questions and points of view change, but the architecture of our movement abides. Feeling you will understand me, and, being human, will appreciate any word of encouragement, I write to pledge you my interest and influence.

C. G. KINDRED.

Englewood Church, Chicago.

Dear Mr. Ames:—I am glad our people contemplate the erection of a large and adequate plant to take the place of the present Hyde Park church. There is no more important field in Chicago than the south side. Many of the most commanding churches of the city are located there, and if our people are to make any marked impression on that community and upon the University circle, with our plea for the restoration of the Christianity of the New Testament, we must have a building that will command attention.

AUSTIN HUNTER.

Jackson Boul. Church, Chicago.

Dear Brother Ames:—Your location cannot be excelled nor can the importance of the work be overstated. It is a big undertaking, but I believe you will succeed. Such faith and devotion certainly merit success.

C. H. WINDERS.

Downey Ave. Church, Indianapolis, Ind.

My dear Bro. Ames:—The Hyde Park Church stands in the most strategic site in Illinois. One does not need to know more than that it is the most accessible church to the greatest university of the Central West to be impressed with the importance of a building commensurate with the opportunity. It ought to be the pride of the Disciples of Christ everywhere. The lot, the environment and above all the need make it imperative to build a churchly structure, to cost at least $100,000. I commend your purpose most cordially.

FINIS IDLEMAN.

Central Church, Des Moines, Iowa.

Gentlemen and Brothers:—I doubt whether any other building enterprise now before the Disciples of Christ can compare in importance with the proposed joint structure of the Disciples' Divinity House and the Hyde Park Church of Chicago. Its consummation should be regarded as a brotherhood event for reasons local, world-wide and educational.

1. That the Disciples may have a worthy share in the stupendous work of Christianizing a great city like Chicago there must be equipment adapted to, and commensurate with, the task. This thing cannot be "done in a corner." Let big interests have big room.

2. The Hyde Park Church has already burst its walls, and, with life and substance, leaped over into China. The enlargement of its local facilities will mean growing investment and power in foreign missions.

3. Academic relations with a great seat of learning like the University of Chicago, is an opportunity which should be secured and honored by an enduring Divinity Hall architecturally comportable with the contiguous University structures. Such a building devoted to thorough Biblical scholarship and sound Christian training has vast meaning for the future ministerial, missionary and educational leadership of the Church of Christ. The whole enterprise is a work of necessity and far-sighted vision.

CHARLES T. PAUL.

Principal Missionary Training School, Indianapolis.

My Dear Ames:—It ought to be a proud day, not only with the Chicago Disciples but with us all throughout the Middle West, when a worthy building shall arise on your well chosen site, facing the great groups of Chicago University structures. Within its hospitable walls our young men will find shelter and companionship and inspiration through all the years. Such a center is greatly needed and if built will reflect credit on our people and our cause. To have adequate facilities also for the congregation, which in the future years will grow larger and larger, is a matter of prime importance. I hope you may accomplish the undertaking and am sorry that I haven't something more substantial than words to give for the Divinity House.

A. B. PHILPUTT.

Central Church, Indianapolis.

The Hyde Park Church

Minister — Edward S. Ames.
Minister's Assistant — Miss Caroline Breyfogle.
Missionaries — Mr. and Mrs. Guy W. Sarvis, Nanking, China.

OFFICERS.

W. D. Mac Clintock.
Oliver W. Stewart.
Errett Gates.
C. R. Wakeley.
F. F. Hummel.
H. W. Caldwell.
H. C. Waite.
Clifford G. Roe.
Harry McCormack.
W. R. Faddis.
Dr. A. S. Dabney.
Joseph Detweiler.
Dr. W. E. Duncan.
Van Dyck Fort.
Kinter Berkebile.
W. L. Carr.
W. D. Freyburger.
Samuel Mac Clintock.
Chas. T. Hallinan.
Dr. E. B. Hutchinson
Chas. F. McElroy.

My Dear Ames: — Success to your enterprise. It is truly a work of faith to undertake so large a task, but the church that leads the brotherhood in missionary giving will do things equally great at home. Your rapidly growing work will receive immense impetus when it is adequately housed, and the Hyde Park Church will become one of the leading religious factors in that great university.

A. W. TAYLOR.

The Bible College, Columbia, Mo.

My Dear Dr. Ames:—I am delighted to know that you are moving in the matter of your new building. The opportunities before you and the Hyde Park Church are surely the greatest that offer themselves to the Disciples in Chicago, and, so far as Hyde Park and the university are concerned, the greatest that offer themselves to any people, the Baptists, perhaps, alone excepted. Your location, the hold you have already got on the university community, and the splendid virility of your noble church, and the position and influence of the university in this middle west where we are strongest, all combine to make your opportunity one of exceptional significance. There are few things the Disciples could do by which they would do themselves so much honor and add so much to their educational equipment as to provide you with ample means for the erection of buildings for your church and the Divinity House on a scale commensurate with your great opportunity.

If you can but get the vision before our people you will have no trouble about the money. If there is any place in this middle west where a free expenditure of money just at this time would seem to be justified, that place is Chicago and Hyde Park. All success to you. E. M. Todd.

The arrow points to a corner of the roof of the present Hyde Park Church, showing its location in reference to these University Buildings.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

Dear Dr. Ames:—I certainly appreciate the significance of the announcement that an effort is to be made to build a suitable building for the use of the Hyde Park Church and the Divinity House of the Disciples. In a very large sense the Hyde Park Church is destined to be the center of the activities of the Disciples in Chicago. There can be no question that the presence of our Divinity House makes the University of Chicago the intellectual center of our people in Chicago. As older communions build cathedral churches in certain strategic centers, so it would seem to me that the erection of a suitable building at Hyde Park is a brotherhood enterprise, which should command the co-operation of us all, and from which we all shall derive benefit. I realize that $100,000 is an unprecedented sum to be invested in one of our Chicago churches. It seems, however, to be the minimum that we could invest in a community graced with some of the noblest models of university architecture.

Hoping success may wait upon your efforts, I am, Yours fraternally,

Evanston, Ill. O. F. Jordan.

Dear Brethren:—I sincerely trust that you may be able to carry through the renewed undertaking of providing a complete equipment for the Hyde Park Church and the Disciples' Divinity House of the University of Chicago. There is a sense in which the Divinity House seems destined to become the crowning educational institution among us, and the sooner we equip it as we should, the better will it be for our cause.

From one point of view, the Disciples ought to congratulate themselves that they have no considerable universities of their own. The fact of our undeveloped educational institutions has forced our more ambitious young men to attend Harvard, Yale, Union and other universities and divinity schools, and especially the University of Chicago, for their larger equipment. This has inevitably freed these men from sectarian bias, and their influence has been for the same effect throughout the church.

On the other hand, it is around the University of Chicago that most of these men and others of liberal culture have naturally gathered. Many a man has saved himself to the Christian ministry, and many another loyal man has been saved to the ministry of our people, because of the Divinity House. This kind of influence will become vastly greater with full equipment for the church and Divinity House and the need for it is decidedly greater with every passing year.

Practical strong men pass through the period of the reconstruction of their theology, as did Martin Luther and Alexander Campbell. It is of the greatest importance that this experience be undergone when one is surrounded by friendly and not alien influences. Hence the very great importance of the Divinity House.

So I most earnestly wish you success in securing the $100,000 you need for equipment. C. C. Rowlison.

Iowa City, Ia.

My dear Ames:—I am glad that the Disciples' Divinity House and the Hyde Park Church are ready to take up the work of building appropriate quarters. The Divinity School has a great opportunity to develop into a leading institution for the study and teaching of religion and the Hyde Park Church has one of the most strategic positions in this part of the country. We are building new churches in almost every town and city of the Middle West. It is to be hoped that a fine building will soon be possible at such an important post as the University of Chicago. C. B. Coleman.

Butler College, Indianapolis.

My dear Ames:—The Disciples in the past have held too much aloof from university centers. But fortunately a new determination is possessing us, viz., to have an inner fellowship with the institutions that are influencing thought in every department of life. We are no longer opposing them because we are understanding them. We do not ridicule their scientific conclusions; but we do need to interpret their findings religiously. That is why I am anxious to see a magnificent building for the Hyde Park Church and the Disciples' Divinity House right up against the campus of the University of Chicago.

A group of men would be in control there who would know and feel the thought-life of the university, but these men would come to their intellectual problems through the teachings, friendship and spirit of Christ. They, therefore, will be Christian interpreters, defenders of the faith. They will interpret to scholars the spiritual significance of their findings—and to a brotherhood somewhat perturbed over our present transition—an abiding faith in the unchanging, as well as a deep joy in the eternal progress of humanity.

I want such an institution to be a great vital bulwark to faith. I want it to lead our boys who are shocked over evolution and other modern teachings to know that these are not the undoing of our Christianity. These men, burdened with this holy task, will be interpreters of God active in his world in our generation. If I mistake not, there is no more crying need in the church today than such interpreters.

For of the sake of their boys who have gone to universities, thousands of parents would rally to the support of such an institution if they only knew.

Hannibal, Mo. George A. Campbell.

Gentlemen:—Your favor of the 23rd instant at hand announcing the proposed combination building project of Disciples Divinity House and Hyde Park Church; and it is needless to say that this commends itself to me as a very timely and desirable undertaking and has my cordial approval.

I think it is quite apparent to every one who has considered the subject that the main reason why the Disciples have found such difficulty in getting a foothold and making headway in Chicago is the lack of suitable, up-to-date and adequate buildings.

It is, therefore, a matter for earnest congratulation that the Divinity House and Hyde Park Church are about to do something worth while toward overcoming this serious obstacle. These organizations have an excellent location and cannot get a building too good to fit, and they are certainly taking a step in the right direction.

The important and desirability of the enterprise cannot be denied and assuredly merit the hearty and generous support of the brotherhood.

With best wishes for your success, I am

Cordially and fraternally yours,

Leon L. Loehr.

Merchant's Loan and Trust Bank, Chicago.

Dear Dr. Ames:—I am delighted to know that the building enterprise of the Divinity House is to be taken up seriously at this time. I was at the university, as you were, almost on the ground floor (if not even in the basement) and I have seen the magnificent development of the physical equipment of the university. It remains, however, for the Divinity House to secure an equipment which will be worthy of the work it is doing, and of the still greater work which it is yet to do. It was by a streak of great good fortune, as well as by the exercise of far-seeing wisdom, that the site belonging to the Divinity House was secured. There is not another equal to it in the vicinity of the university, and I hope that in the not distant future on a visit to Chicago I may see there a building worthy not only of the site and of the goodly architecture of the vicinity, but, which is far more important, worthy of the institution which it will represent. W. E. Garrison.

President New Mexico College of Agriculture.

Friend Ames:—There is no doubt in my mind that if you can carry through successfully the improvements contemplated on the Hyde Park ground for a new church building that it will encourage our people in Chicago and the Central states more than anything else that has taken place during my residence in Chicago. We have never recovered full confidence in a general way since the failure of the Old Central Church. People expect a nice church building in cities the same as all of you ministers expect a nice chicken dinner when some one invites you out to a Sunday meal.

W. S. Brannum.

Mercer & Brannum, Lumber, Chicago.

My dear Ames:—The erection of a building to serve the combined needs of the Disciples Divinity House and the Hyde Park Church seems eminently wise. Surely no more strategic spot could be found for such a building than the one elected. The money invested in this enterprise should yield large returns to the Disciples of Christ. May the best of success attend the project.

Pasadena, Cal. William C. Hull.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXIX. The Early Years of Jeremiah

July 16.—Text for Special Study, Jer. 1.

QUESTIONS.

1. How does the length of Jeremiah's prophetic history compare with that of other prophets?
2. What elements of deep human interest are most prominent in the works of Jeremiah?
3. Why has he been called the weeping prophet?
4. Where was his birthplace?
5. About what year was he born?
6. To what tribe and order did he belong?
7. During what reign and in what year did Jeremiah begin his prophetic work?
8. How did he come to take up this task?
9. What were the visions by which Jeremiah was committed to the prophetic work?
10. What did these visions signify?
11. What were the conditions prevailing in Judah as the result of Manasseh's reign?
12. What were Josiah's early efforts to purify the religion?
13. What body of law was discovered and where?
14. What explanation can be given regarding its origin and the reason for placing it in the temple?
15. How did the reading of this document affect the king?
16. What efforts did he make to carry out its requirements?
17. What views are held in regard to Jeremiah's attitude toward the reforms attempted by Josiah?
18. How did the people receive the reforms inaugurated by the king?
19. What other examples can you recall of popular disfavor toward reformatory measures?
20. Do you think that Jeremiah had any part in preaching the new covenant?
21. What tragic event befell the reformers, and how did it affect Jeremiah?

1. THE YOUTH OF JEREMIAH.

The longest prophetic career recorded in the Old Testament is that of Jeremiah. During the entire period from the early years of Josiah, about 625 B. C., until after the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the people to Babylon and Egypt, he was a spiritual adviser and leader. More than this, the career of Jeremiah is touched with a human interest which belongs to few of the prophets, for throughout almost his entire experience as a preacher of righteousness, he was subject to suspicion and persecution which made his life a constant martyrdom. In truth he has been called "the weeping prophet," though probably that title took form rather because of the tradition that he was the author of the Book of Lamentations than because of his personal sufferings. Yet the latter might well have entitled him to such a name.

Jeremiah belonged to a priestly family residing at Anathoth, a town in the ancient territory of Benjamin. He was probably born about 650 B. C., and was therefore very nearly of the same age as King Josiah. Indeed he seems to have belonged in his youth to that circle of young men who formed the companionship of the young prince, and which may have included, besides Josiah and Jeremiah, the young man Hilkiah who was later to become the chief priest, and another youth, Zephaniah, whose name suggests to us the great doctrine of the day of the Lord.

Jeremiah was from the first a youth of serious character, devoted to his country, anticipating the career of a priest, but deeply conscious that the ceremonial of religion was little calculated to change the character of the nation from its indifference to religious sincerity and earnestness. The long and reactionary reign of Manasseh had been followed by the brief but equally unfavorable period of Amon. During all those years prophecy was virtually silenced, and the servants of God could only wait, with hope that at some future day not too far distant, there might be inaugurated a reform that would restore the ancient religion to its rightful place.

2. THE PROPHETIC CALL OF JEREMIAH. (CHAP. 1.)

It was some time after Josiah came to the throne in 639 B. C. that Jeremiah became conscious of the fact that there rested upon him the obligation to take up the preacher's task rather than to devote himself exclusively to the work of the priesthood. The opening verses of the book may be an editorial addition, but they inform us that it was in the thirteenth year of Josiah (626 B. C.) that Jeremiah first began his work as a prophet. From that time on, through the reigns of Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin and Zedekiah to the very close of the national career in the fifth month of 586 B. C., he continued his ministry as a preacher and teacher.

Whe Jeremiah first became conscious that it was the will of God that he should become a prophet he demurred on the score of his youth (1:6). But he was given to understand that from the very first he had been destined for the prophetic office, and that his task was divinely appointed both for the destruction of existing conditions and the upbuilding of a new nationalism. He was both to overthrow and to restore.

As in the case of several other prophets, Jeremiah later on described to the people his first sense of a summons to his task in terms of a vision. Whether the prophets would have us understand that these visions occurred to them as the means of informing them of their work, or were devised by them as the easiest illustrations by which to convince the people of the nature of their message, is a question worth studying; nor is it easily answered. The two visions of Jeremiah consisted first of the appearance of a flowering almond tree, whose white blossoms gave it a ghostly look in the twilight. It seemed like a divine watcher, and this suggested at once the watchfulness of God over his word to bring it to pass. Again the prophet described the appearance of a boiling caldron whose seething contents were poured out over the land from north to south. And this was explained as the picture of the coming Babylonian power that should overflow the land of Israel and devastate its cities. All this was made necessary by the fact that the land had forgotten its God and was madly pursuing that mongrel religion which had wrought such disaster in the Northern Kingdom. Against this downgrade tendency Jeremiah was bidden to set his face like a flint, and to assume the attitude of a fortified city, an iron pillar and a brazen wall, opposing thus the princes, priests, prophets and people of the land who were bringing trouble upon Palestine.

3. DEUTERONOMY AND THE GREAT REFORMATION.

In spite of the fact that Josiah was in warmest sympathy with the prophetic party, the reforms that he instituted did not go far in opposition to the heathen tendencies of his age. The results of the long years of Manasseh were not easily obliterated. Probably chapters 1 to 6 contain the reminiscences of Jeremiah's preaching during the early years of his work. Then a great event happened which was destined to have far-reaching results in Israel's life.

In the year 621 B. C., which was the eighteenth of the reign of Josiah, more vigorous measures were taken to purify the national faith and repair the shrines of Jehovah. Certain repairs were made in the temple at Jerusalem, and in the course of these repairs a law book was found and brought to the attention of the king. So startling were its teachings and so little in harmony with the customary practices of religion in the age that Josiah was thoroughly alarmed. The book purported to be the work of Moses, the great law-giver of the past, and yet it stringently forbade the worship of Jehovah at any but the central sanctuary. Practices of local worship that had grown familiar through centuries were forbidden in the most urgent and explicit terms. In order to comply with the requirements of this newly-discovered law, a thorough-going reformation must be undertaken.

In our study of the dark days of Manasseh's reign (Lesson XXII) we saw that the only means by which the prophets of that time could prepare for a better future was by organizing a body of law in the spirit and with name of Moses as its guarantee. That code which we now know as Deuteronomy, with its body of laws running through chapters 12 to 26, and its framework of historical narrative and exhortation uttered in the person of Moses, seems to have been the result of this profoundly needed effort to stay the tide of irreligion and immorality which was sweeping over the land. Those silent workers brought their task to completion, but saw no opportunity to give it to the nation. They laid it away therefore in the holy house, in the hope that some later hand would bring it forth and make it the standard of the nation's life.

This time had now come in the providence of God, and when Josiah read the document which priestly and prophetic hands had prepared a half century earlier, he was aroused at once by fear and piety to make the new code the law of the land. He sent forth his messengers to all parts of Palestine, north and south alike, to demolish those shrines which the Deuteronomic code so sweepingly denounced. All signs of the heathen religion were swept away. Worship was strictly centralized at Jerusalem. Priestly activity was strictly limited to those of Levitical family. A great national assembly was held and the new covenant was read in the hearing of the people. And throughout the land the preachers of the new order went upon errands of evangelism inspired by "this covenant" (2 Kings 23:2-4). That Jeremiah joined in this evangel seems probable (11:1-3, 6). By these means Josiah was really attempting in a serious way to purify his land of idolatry and to conform the worship to the Deuteronomic law. If it is true that Jeremiah threw himself into this enterprise, these may well have been the happiest years of his life.

4 THE RESULTS OF THE REFORMATION.

Biblical scholars differ greatly as to Jeremiah's attitude toward the reforming work of Josiah. There is little material in the book that can be used to support any positive view. Some would insist that Jeremiah was a leading spirit in the reformation, and that the later sadness of his life was in large part due to the early death of the king and the reaction that followed. Others, again, deem the work of Josiah too sudden and drastic to have secured the approval of so cautious a spirit as that of Jeremiah. They affirm that the prophet was never deeply in sympathy with the efforts made by the king, feeling that they were destined to have but superficial results, and that a much deeper foundation would have to be laid before national righteousness could prevail.

Whether the one or the other of these views is the right one can hardly be determined in the life of the meager evidence afforded by the record of the books of Kings and Jeremiah. Certain it is, however, that the reforming work of King Josiah was never very effective. It is probable that the people were more pleased with the spectacular rites of Manasseh's time than with the sterner ideas of the reformation. It has ever been so in history. The people of Florence responded eagerly to the call of Savonarola and burned their vanities in the public square, but they soon wearied of the great preacher's program. They wanted to enjoy again the games and the revelries they had formerly known. The frivolities and obscenities of Lorenzo's court were more attractive than the messages of the great preacher. The Puritans in England made headway for a time against the luxury and tyranny of the Stewart regime, but after a brief taste of the stern rule of Puritanism and the protectorate of Cromwell, England plunged with mad delight into the levities of the restoration. Israel was not different. It did not take easily to reforms, particularly when the worship was robbed of scene and ceremonial. At best it was difficult to make headway against the strong current of popular practice. Jeremiah must have felt this tendency as a most depressing feature of the age. The difficulties of the task were very great, and his complaints are at times pathetic. (11:9-23, 12:1-6).

5. THE DEATH OF JOSIAH.

Then came the tragic sequel. King Josiah as a vassal of the Assyrian power learned of the northward march of the king of Egypt to try issue with the Assyrians somewhere on the northern frontier. Deeming it his duty or his privilege to play a part in the great drama, he intercepted the Egyptian line of march at Magiddo on the plain of Esdraelon, and there either in parley or battle, was slain. The warriors and courtiers who brought his body back to Jerusalem must have shared with the prophets the sense of desolation and grief. Their friend and patron was dead, and this event seemed to mark the divine disapproval of all the reforming program of his life. Had not God signified by this singular event his displeasure with the entire enterprise of Josiah? So at last the enemies of the royal and the prophetic ideals insisted, and it seemed as if the argument lay with them. Whatever Jeremiah's attitude may have been toward the royal enterprise, his work became distinctly harder now that the king was dead. Henceforth his life was a long tragedy of misinterpretation, suspicion and hatred. He is the martyr prophet of Israel.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

Section XXX will deal with "The Last Days of Judah," and XXXI will have for its title, "Jeremiah and the Fall of Jerusalem."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The relations of priesthood and prophets as illustrated in the life of Jeremiah.
2. The form of the prophetic call, and its significance as an element in the prophet's message.
3. The personal life and characteristics of Jeremiah.
4. The relation of Jeremiah to the Deuteronomic reform.
5. The relation of the reform efforts of Josiah to other similar efforts in religious history.
6. The Moral Effects of Josiah's Death.

LITERATURE.

Cheyne, "Jeremiah, His Life and Times" (Men of the Bible); Kirkpatrick, "Doctrine of the Prophets"; 291-325; Budde, "Jewish Religious Life before the Exile," 141-218; Articles on Jeremiah in the Introductions, encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic, July 16, Our Debts: What Are They? How to Pay Them?—Rom. 13:7-10.

We are far on the way to a proper conception of life when we fully realize that we have debts. This indicates vision, thoughtfulness, delicacy of soul. Only the selfish, irresponsive person enjoys the privileges and opportunities which come to him as a matter of fact. He alone fails to see that they have been bought with a great price and have been passed on as free gifts. We are debtors for Christian homes. The love which reigns there not only provides for our physical wants in our infancy and childhood, but it provides for our spiritual needs as well—our obligation to God and to our fellow men. For our sake no sacrifice is too great. In a very singular fashion are we indebted for the land of freedom and opportunity. We are guaranteed every safety and protection as we pursue the life purposes we have adopted. Moreover the world is before us with its boundless opportunities and possibilities and we are free to the limit of our strength. No despotic hand presses down upon us and denies us the fruit of our toil. We have the right to speak our mind and to uphold our ideals. Then, too, here are the free institutions of our land—the public schools, colleges and universities, the press. In these we can pursue our studies and develop our minds. In this same connection we should never forget the sacred and blessed influences of the church of which the Christian Endeavor Society is an outgrowth. In these we have an opportunity to develop the whole man—soul and body. These we have not produced. They were here when we were born. They make up our inheritance. True and worthy men of other generations created them and bequeathed them to us. We are, therefore, indebted for them in a very real sense. These are our debts.

How shall we pay our debts? We cannot in dollars and cents. Paul says to love one another. This is both interesting and significant. Love is comprehensive. It lays all our powers under tribute. The payment of this debt consists not merely in adoration of those who have gone before, but in our willingness in rendering a service similar to theirs for the generations yet unborn. Glorious as our institutions and life privileges are, they are not perfect. It remains for use to do our part toward their perfection. Hence, all the ways for an unselfish service in the home, in the state, in commerce, in trade, in industry, in schools, and in the church are our inescapable obligations. We must pay our debts in a service for others. All the ways for relieving suffering, for enlightening the minds and purifying the hearts of others weigh heavily upon us. The opportunities for benevolence at home and missions abroad equally claim our attention. So long, then, as there are wrongs to be righted, distress to be relieved, and hearts to be made pure, we have debts which we should pay.

Looking Backward

I want to commend you for your brave fight in behalf of conscience and right, and to add my protest against the unconscionable attack of The Standard on the Foreign Society. It will come to naught, as all similar attacks from that source have done.

It would be interesting for some historian to recount The Standard's great battles during the past dozen or more years. With all the fights that have waged, they have no victory to their credit as far as recalled.

Going back to about fifteen years ago when Drake was governor of Iowa, and signed the Mulct Law Bill, The Standard vigorously sought his ex-communication and disfellowship by the church and brotherhood. No attack of recent years was more spleenful. Yet it failed. Governor Drake remained in the fellowship of the brotherhood, and at his death, a year or so later, columns of eulogy were published in this same paper.

2. Then the historic war on Dr. Willett was begun in an effort to dislodge him from the ministry and from official recognition by the brotherhood. True, they have not yet published pages of eulogy of this man—but he is not dead yet!

3. Hiram Van Kirk was dean of Berkeley Seminary in California. The Standard became maliciously disposed toward him, and through a series of months, gave this educator gratuitous sensational advertising, such as will not easily be forgotten. They not only lost their fight, but were compelled to send out an agent to look into the situation and return an apology on behalf of the company. The apology was made to the effect that The Standard's source of information regarding the dean was not reliable. A part of the unreliable "source" of that information is said now to be pastor of a church in Indiana, and The Standard does not avail itself of the opportunity of exposing a thoroughly discredited man in the ministry!

4. Then The Standard attempted to compel the return of ten thousand dollars contributed by John D. Rockfeller to the Foreign Society. A warmer fight never was waged among us—and we are not inexperienced in battle! When the hosts were assembled at Norfolk, not a single Standard official dared to second their representative's motion to refund, even when entreated to do so. Following this defeat, The Standard secured a new editor and side-tracked the man whose reputation they had destroyed by the editorial policy dictated for him while in the employ of The Standard conpany.

5. The program of the Centennial convention did not entirely suit the owner of The Standard, because H. L. Willett's name was printed thereon. It would seem the erasure of a single name from a program would be a small thing to accomplish, but after weeks and months of bombardment of the Centennial Committee, with pages and pages of editorials and contributed matter, at last the war ceased and the hosts at Pittsburg heard Willett.

6. Then as a sequel of the Centennial convention fight, The Standard Publishing Company sought to foist on the brotherhood a dishonest report of the convention, by leaving out certain addresses not to their liking. But the brotherhood was not to be browbeaten or deceived by malicious assumption of authority, and, as far as the writer knows, The Standard still possesses practically the entire edition of its report as a souvenir of its corrupt finessing.

The writer is not a historian, but records the above facts to the credit of a brotherhood which will see that a great agent like the Foreign Society is not allowed to suffer from a commercialized publishing house, whose attacks have heretofore been so frequently and successfully resisted. A. L. C.

San Francisco Letter

Two notable religious gatherings have just closed on the Pacific coast,—The Congregational Home Missionary Society, and the International Sunday-school Association. The first was made doubly interesting because of the presence of Dr. Aked. Many were anxious to see just how he would fit into his Congregational environment. Judging from certain utterances he is perfectly at home. In his address of welcome to the delegates assembled in the First Congregational Church, of which he is now pastor, he said, "Our Congregationalism needs no one to sing its praise." Then he facetiously added, "For we are perfectly able to sing it ourselves." The Congregationalists are rather jubilant over securing Dr. Aked, and feel satisfied that he will do a notable work on the coast. He does not seem robust, perhaps is not, and has been ill. To date, he has attracted more notice than any clergyman that has come to the coast within recent years.

The International Sunday-school Convention exceeded all expectations. Upwards of 8,000 delegates were in attendance, and San Francisco proved a gracious host. In fact the city strained not a little to please and leave a good impression. The papers were unusually kind, and really vied with one another to give the news, make scoops, and become "the official organ" for the convention. The parade in which 10,000 took part was heralded as the greatest thing of its kind in the history of the West. The Gideons had furnished Bibles, and the men carried them through the streets while thousands lined the walks and cheered.

The addresses were strong for the most part, the speakers having sensed social problems as well as other problems. The most talked-of address of this character was given in the Greek Theatre across the bay in Berkeley by Rev. Robert Coyle of the Central Presbyterian Church of Denver. He said that the time has come when we must broaden our Christian ideal from the individual to the social. After making this remark he pitched in red-hot, and, if he had been standing on a soap-box at Seventh and Broadway, Oakland, instead of on the stage of the Greek Theatre in the presence of 10,000 Sunday-school workers, he would have been taken for a Socialist. But some of the ablest addresses of the convention were made by Disciples. Robert Hopkins, R. P. Shepherd, and F. W. Emerson delivered telling speeches. Mr. Emerson, who has just been called to the pastorate of the First Church in San Francisco, sounded no uncertain note about the need of social salvation as well as individualistic.

But San Francisco had something else beside the Sunday-school Convention—Pastor Russell was in the city. No, he was not there as a delegate, perhaps he did not attend at all, but the people to the number of 5,000 heard him in Dreamland Rink on the subject, "Hereafter." He naively told them that the fiery pit is a myth, and denied eternal punishment in a lake of fire as if he had just made an original discovery. He took it upon himself to define the belief of both Catholics and Protestants on this question, found both wrong and himself right, and wound up by expounding his theories to a curious, but hardly interested audience.

Oh! we've had most everything in the last three weeks. A new healing cult came to us, a health apostle has been telling us how to live rationally, new forms of Christian Science are manifesting themselves, religious catholicons galore are being offered us, and the West never saw so many vagaries as cures for all its ills. To cap the climax the ministers, Mayor McCarthy, and some physicians got mixed up in a clinic to regulate vice and its effects, and before the jumble ended the chief of police had to resign, and two-thirds of the police commission should have done likewise, though the chief was about the cleanest man San Francisco has had for many a day.

But, after all, San Francisco has a marvelously developing moral and religious sentiment, though not expressing itself through the church as fully as many of us would like. The work of Heney and others has been far-reaching, and even Hearst's Examiner is now telling through the pages of a certain popular magazine just how graft was fought and destroyed. Verily moral sentiment and stripes and bars for a few grafters doth work reforms in newspapers. The West will get religion yet, but not as some have had it. J. R. Perkins.

Alameda, Cal.

A Philosopher—And Human!

By E. S. Ames.

During commencement week at Drake, the main event to the Alumni was the fact that Professor Shepperd was closing his long service in the university. For thirty years he has been a member of the faculty. He was there at the beginning and he is the last of the original group of teachers. He is retiring, under the Carnegie pension system, at a better salary, perhaps twice better, than any professor received in the early eighties at Drake. He is going to enter upon a new life in a new section of Texas. He will be a farmer, but he assured us that he would have a share in the general life of the new community. Hale and hearty, having never missed a class on account of sickness in thirty years, he will be able to enjoy to the full many years of activity and practical achievement.

That isn't exactly according to the conventional notion of a retiring professor—especially of a retiring professor of philosophy. But the world has many things yet to learn about philosophy and about the men who cultivate it! At any rate, there are many full-blooded, practical, human-hearted men working in this rich field, and Professor Shepperd is one of them. He has always been a scholarly professor, but he has also attracted students by his human qualities, and has served the institution and the community in many practical ways. Without striving for popularity he has become the most influential professor among the seven or eight generations of students during his term of service.

Among his traits as a teacher have been his own thoroughness of preparation, his stimulating manner of instruction, and his consequent success in impelling students to further graduate study and professional careers in this field. When he gave up the chair of mathematics in 1888 to devote himself to his growing interest in philosophy, he first went abroad for a period of study. His daily preparation was of the same conscientious sort. He had a way of "fishing" around in students' minds and of bringing them to an eager use of their powers. The fact that he was modest of his own opinions to the point of evasiveness often exasperated those who sought categorical declarations, but it helped all serious students to independent thinking. He knew the best literature in philosophy and kept up to date, and he was ever urging, intellectually teasing and impelling his classes into first-hand contact with the great living thinkers. The consequence was that his most responsive students found themselves well equipped when they went to the great universities for post-graduate study. This is one of the highest tributes which can be paid to Professor Shepperd's work and it gives his work the fullest possible dignity and distinction. He has been, first of all, a teacher. It is exceedingly unfortunate that he leaves no books or manuscripts of his own to aid in perpetuating his intellectual influence in the fertile soil of the university life. Perhaps the exacting duties of an overtaxed professional career, such as most colleges impose, is the explanation.

There are several unique features of Professor Shepperd's career at Drake. He was one of its founders. It is doubtful whether another college will be founded by the Disciples. The tendency is now toward selection and enlargement of a few among the institutions already existing. Religious bodies are destined to do more intensive work, especially at the great state universities. Those pioneer days at Drake are even now bathed in an atmosphere of romance and heroism and the noble actors in them are being set apart by the increasing appreciation of all who hear and tell the stories and legends of the beginnings. Professor Shepperd also founded the chair of philosophy. Others had taught philosophical subjects, but he was the first to devote his whole time to the department and to organize and develop the instruction adequately. He has succeeded so well that he has brought philosophy into a leading, if not a pre-eminent position among the departments of the university. He has seen psychology develop under his influence to the point where it could be made independent and given into the hands of a thoroughly qualified expert with a well-equipped laboratory.

All this zest for learning and loyal devotion is emphasized by the fact that while his life work has been given to this school of the Disciples, Professor Shepperd is himself not a member of any church. His attitude toward religion has ever been that of the utmost respect, and his philosophical thinking is well within the lines of moderate conservatism. But he has not been formally identified with the church. Perhaps his career forces recognition of the fact that a man may be religious without being churchly, and that the only way the church can effectively reach such persons is by making it clear that the church affords still further means of being genuinely and practically religious. Insistence upon ecclesiastical authority and outward forms will scarcely avail. This man will long be remembered for his Christlike care of the sick and sympathy for those in any trouble. It was said in the public addresses of appreciation that when he left no one would know the paths to all the graves of the Drakes in the woodland cemetery—so tenderly and spontaneously did he hold all these deep experiences in his heart.

One of the most beautiful things about

(Continued on page 20.)

Ilinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

Hamilton Church made an offering of $11.45, on Children's Day.

The Children's Day offering from Cameron Sunday-school was thirty-two dollars.

E. W. Sears has resigned the pastorate at Winchester, to become effective September first.

W. W. Weedon, of Assumption, was one of the orators for the Fourth of July celebration at Blue Mound.

At Lewistown, the Children's Day offering amounted to sixty-four dollars. More than double that of last year. B. H. Cleaver is pastor.

Lovington Church, where A. L. Huff is minister, has become a living link in the Foreign Society, and will support Mrs. P. A. Sherman in India.

At St. Francisville, where J. A. Battenfield is pastor for part time there were five additions, during the pastor's last visit at the church.

Fred Galliger is pastor of the churches at Center Ridge and Oreana, where the Children's Day offerings amounted to thirty-five and thirty-one dollars.

During his last appointment at Gays, the pastor, J. S. Rose, received four additions to the church, three of whom were by baptism.

The church at Concord, where E. P. Gish is pastor, was successfully dedicated by Secretary J. Fred Jones. On the day of dedication, all money was raised to defray the expense of building.

E. E. Hartley concluded his work at Alvin, and is ready to locate with another church or to engage in evangelistic meetings. He can be had for a tent meeting during July, asking only for the free-will offerings.

At Arcola, the Children's Day offering was seventy dollars. The church here, which is ministered to by W. T. McConnell, will hold evening union services with the other congregations of the city during July and August.

Elmore Sinclair began the fourth year of his pastorate at Watseka last month. During the year there were fifty-six additions to the church, and improvements to the amount of one thousand dollars were made on the property.

E. D. Murch, pastor of Rantoul church, is to deliver the memorial address for the local Oddfellows, and also for the same organization at Dewey. Mr. Murch delivered the baccalaureate sermon for the Rantoul high school.

The Scoville meeting, at Galesburg, resulted in more than five hundred additions in four weeks; the largest meeting ever held by the Galesburg church. J. A. Barnett is pastor and is accomplishing an exceptionally strong work in the city where he has been ministering three years.

Charleston Church, the pastorate of which has been resigned by George H. Brown to accept a call to Austin, has extended an invitation to John McD. Horn of Highland Park Church, Des Moines, Iowa, to become its pastor. Mr. Horn has accepted the call, and will become pastor immediately on the removal of Mr. Brown.

At Kankakee, where W. O. Livingstone is pastor, Mother's Day was celebrated, with an appropriate sermon and music. The auditorium was inadequate to accommodate the congregation. The Modern Woodmen of America and the Royal Neighbors were present in a body at the service. The Sunday-school and other departments of the church are being organized for added efficiency in work.

The contract for the new church at Virden was let recently to Kuhne & Company, of Champaign. The contract is for a building of colonial architecture, 75 x 84 feet. The cost is to be $19,800. On Sunday, the 18th of June, ground was broken for the building, the sod being turned by John D. Alderson, eighty-two years old, the oldest charter member living, and his grandson, John Campbell, aged ten years, the youngest member of the congregation. The motive was to exemplify old age and youth interested in the kingdom and the welfare of the church. Witnesses to the scene were deeply moved by its significance.

Chicago

On Sunday, June 2, the Douglas Park Church met with the Jackson Boulevard Church in a union service. Austin Hunter, pastor of Jackson Boulevard, being in attendance at the Portland convention, the pastor of Douglas Park Church preached the sermon.

One cannot help being impressed by the activity of the many agencies in Chicago whose interests are humanitarian. The Daily News Sanitarium for sick babies reports that over two thousand people visited the sanitarium June 26-28. During that time 161 sick babies were cared for. A tract entitled "How to Feed a Baby for Ten Cents a Day," has been issued in English, Germany, Norwegian, Swedish, Hebrew, Russia and Italian editions.

In the absence of the pastor, Dr. E. S. Ames, the pulpit of the Hyde Park Church was filled Sunday, June 2, by Dr. Errett Gates. Mr. Guy Sarvis, missionary of Hyde Park, under appointment by the F. C. M. S. to the University of Nanking, China, will preach Sunday, July 9. Chicago Disciples are invited to attend Hyde Park and hear the farewell message of Mr. Sarvis. Mr. and Mrs. Sarvis sail from Montreal on July 20.

It is encouraging also to note the interest of the Chicago Association of Commerce in the improvement of housing conditions for the city's poor. A "Housing Committee," recently appointed is already at work. Educational literature will soon be distributed, not only for the alleviation of present conditions, but to outline a campaign for the construction of model tenement and lodging houses.

Chicago's interest in the promotion of a Sane Fourth is heartening, and sets an example for other cities. Since the successful outcome of the previous efforts toward a sane Fourth, many cities have followed suit, and the country at large is aroused. Such organizations as the American Medical Society, The American Civil Association, and the National Committee for the Promotion of a Safe and Sane Fourth, deserve no little credit for the fast increasing popularity of a Sane Fourth Observance.

West End Church meets for a union service with the Jackson Boulevard Church Sunday morning, July 9. Meade E. Dutt preaching.

VAUGHAN DABNEY.

An Inspiring Conference

The fifth annual conference on summer work in the churches and in the open air, was held at the Moody Church, Chicago, in June, with four daily sessions and a list of noted speakers, including Rev. F. B. Meyer, London; Dr. W. H. Griffith-Thomas Toronto; Mrs. E. M. Whittemore, and Don O. Shelton, New York; Melvin E. Trotter, Grand Rapids; and James H. Cole, A. M. Bruner, and Harry Monroe, Chicago. Noon meetings were held in the downtown district at the Garrick Theater, which were very successful in attendance, and interest. Workers were present from many states of the union and from across the seas. A feature of the conference was the nightly open air meetings in the vicinity of the Moody Church, under the direction of Rev. C. P. Meeker, of the Moody Institute. Twenty-five meetings were held simultaneously on as many different street corners and at least two hundred workers participated. Many conversions were reported from these street meetings.

At the daily conferences many of the speakers deplored the absence of people from church services and advocated open air preaching in order to reach them.

Meetings for Farmers.

Mr. Melvin Trotter told of his open air country work around Grand Rapids, Michigan. He gathers an auto-bus load of workers, with Bibles, hymn books and organ, and goes out into the country several miles to a convenient grove and holds Sunday morning and afternoon meetings, returning to the city in time for his evening Mission meeting. These outdoor meetings are largely attended, from 500 to 800 being present. The farmers bring their dinners and stay all day. Mr.Trotter says that he has found many country churches in Michigan nailed up. He was very careful to say, "in Michigan," but it is true in every state. He said that the farmers are getting to be up-to-date and are backsliding worse than their city brothers. They need the gospel and Christian workers must go where the people are and take it to them.

Meetings for Old Soldiers.

At the Soldiers' Home at Grand Rapids, there are about 1,300 old soldiers. The chapel is on the third floor and small and hot. "Think of those old fellows going up to the third floor to attend church on a hot summer's afternoon," Mr. Trotter exclaimed in his own inimitable way. "They asked me to come out to speak to the old men," he said, "and I promised on condition that they would hold the meeting out in the open air. Well, I went, and we pulled off the meeting and about the whole show was there, 1,300 of them, and we had 65 decisions for Christ!

We could not have gotten 65 of the whole bunch to attend in the chapel."

A Contrast.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed Mr. Trotter and the physical contrast was striking. Mr. Trotter is rotund, a rapid fire speaker, always smiling and usually slangy, the picture of health and success. Mr. Meyer is slender, stooped, severely in earnest, choice in his use of words and the embodiment of monastic spirituality.

Mr. Meyer mentioned the fact that he was stopping in D. L. Moody's old rooms, where he and the great evangelist had met, and prayed together frequently during so many sacred hours. "I am glad to find, he said," "that the fire has not gone out of the institution which Moody founded. I have been here many times in the last twenty years, and I think that the work was never in a more prosperous condition. I am now, again a pastor, not at my old Christ church, a beautiful church, but at Regent's Park Chapel—also a beautiful edifice, and I would be glad to see any of my American friends whenever they are in London."

"Trotter and I have each had our fight," he continued, "I envy such a man, and the likes of him. But after all we are much alike. We are both in the flesh and both have a common Savior from sin. I wish to speak about the flesh. The flesh lusteth against the Spirit. Spell it with a capital S. It means the Holy Spirit. The fight is not between me and my flesh but between my flesh and the Spirit of God.

There are three ways mentioned of conquering sin; first, by Eradication; second, by Suppression, and third, by Substitution of the new nature of Jesus for the old nature which is now on the cross. I believe in the third way.

Temptation—Now—Then.

Temptation is stronger to me now than in youth, but not in the same way, not to impurity and passion as it was once, but it goes deeper now. I am tempted to jealousy, to envy, to self-conceit, to pride and to things deep down in my nature which I cannot talk about. Boys care little for green apples, but try to get the ripe ones; so the Devil tries to get the real Christian to fall.

We must be filled with the Holy Spirit morning by morning. I spend quite a while every morning being filled with the Spirit. Then when I go out I let the Spirit fight the battle with the flesh for me.

Definite Knowledge.

You may know that you are filled with the Spirit by two things; first, you will think much about Jesus, and, second, you will be sensitive about the approach of temptation. I used not to see temptation until it was against my nose but now I see it three or four fields off. I was once invited to spend a week with friends in North England just after I had crossed the Atlantic. I went to their beautiful country place and they asked me, "How do you like our fine country air? Is it not sweet?" Now I had noticed a peculiar odor about the premises which I could not locate as coming from any particular place however much I hunted around. The next morning I investigated the country side and about two miles off I found a sewage farm which was polluting the whole region. My friends had not noticed it because they had come from the foul atmosphere of London; but I discovered it at once because I was fresh from the pure atmosphere of the Atlantic. So it is with temptation. A keen nose is needed in Chicago, and London and New York in summer and all the time. Therefore, I do not go to the theater for this good reason. There may be some good plays, but the bad plays make the good ones go. I cannot afford to go. I have a big enough fight on of my own. A Christian lady on shipboard handed me a novel which she said was good and I took it to my stateroom and began to read, but after about fifty pages, I got up and flung it through the port hole into the sea. It was not good. I will not put myself into the very heart of temptation.

Why Temptation?

Many people ask the question, "Why is one tempted?" Has not God made a mistake in allowing us to be tempted? It seems to me that contact with evil is doing for us what nothing else would do. It causes you to think of Jesus. It causes you to pray for help to Jesus. It drives you to Jesus and you must forget self and rely wholly upon Him!

Doctor Gray.

The success of the conference is largely due to the tireless energy and spontaneous enthusiasm of the dean of the faculty of Moody Bible Institute, Dr. James M. Gray. He believes that you cannot have religion without religion and he believes that Christ is the center of religion and that we must do as Christ did, go out to the multitudes with the bread and water of life.

Chicago's Great Evangelistic Center

One of Chicago's greatest institutions is The Moody Bible Institute, founded by the great evangelist whose name it bears; which was never more prosperous than at the present moment, with its teaching staff of more than four score men and women; its present enrollment of 400 students, and the new buildings which add to its efficiency. The men outnumber the women two to one. The Word of God is honored, and therefore God honors the institution. Its spiritual influence is felt everywhere. It is one of the greatest spiritual forces in Chicago, its influence being felt in every part of the city; and its graduates are preaching the gospel in every country on the globe. The institute has not lost the evangelistic note that Mr. Moody gave it, and through it he is still reaching and influencing the world.

Women's Building.

On June 5 occurred the dedication of the beautiful and commodious Women's Building, just completed at a cost of $225,000. In a tour through the building one is everywhere impressed with the idea of simplicity and beauty combined with utility.

On the first floor, the main entrance on the east leads into a large reception hall in the center; at the right is the parlor, decorated and furnished in the soft color tones that are so pleasing and restful. At the left of the reception room is Massey Chapel, dedicated to the memory of Mrs. Eliza Phelps Massey, and given by her son and daughter to the institute. These three rooms are so arranged that when the folding glass doors between the chapel and the reception hall are open, it makes one spacious room, an ideal place for large social gatherings. Back of the above-mentioned rooms are the offices of the ladies of the faculty, and several other rooms for various uses.

The next five floors are occupied by rooms for the young women. The decorations in one story are blue, another brown, another green, and so on. On each floor, immediately in front of the elevator, is a pleasant reading room. The rooms are decorated neatly and simply and furnished with mission style furniture, in keeping with the excellent taste shown throughout the building. Two hundred girls can be accommodated here. The seventh story is still unfinished.

Two hundred forty-one women have been enrolled during the year. Twenty-eight states of the Union and Canada, England, Scotland, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Germany, Bulgaria and India, including 25 different church denominations, have been represented.

Men's Building.

At the rear of the Women's Building, and facing Institute Place on the south, is the Men's Building recently built at a cost of $81,000, and providing room for 95 students. The two buildings are joined by a corridor. In the basement of the Men's Building is the large, pleasant gymnasium which gives ample room for physical culture, and is also used as a music room wherein Dr. Towner may train his splendid chorus choirs, and for the weekly socials of the student body. The old Men's Dormitory Building has been remodeled at an expense of $53,000, a new heating plant for the entire group having been installed in that building.

Mr. Moody's old study, on the northeast corner of the second floor, is kept as it was when he occupied it.

Rev. H. W. Pope is the superintendent of men. The quality of the students is steadily improving. Ninety-nine men there last year, or 25 per cent of the total enrollment, were college men. Students were in attendance from fifty different states and from nineteen foreign countries, representing thirty-one denominations.

Evangelistic Service.

During one term last year, street meetings were conducted in sixteen different languages at the same time, 466 open-air meetings were held last year, 111 neighborhood meetings, 1,422 mission meetings, 300 factory meetings, 617 children's meetings, 23,962 persons were dealt with, 3,196 persons confessed conversion.

Financial.

The present endowment fund of the Institute is about $140,000. The entire plant represents an investment of over a half million dollars. The total income is about $85,000. During the past year about $360,000 has been put into new buildings, all of which has been raised except about $60,000. Three more buildings are needed immediately, and will be erected as soon as the present indebtedness is paid and other funds secured.

H. P. Crowell is president of the Board of Trustees; H. S. Osborne, vice-president; A. P. Fitt, recording secretary. The other trustees are Judge McKenzie Cleland, Thomas S. Smith, William A. Peterson, James M. Gray, F. A. Wells, E. K. Warren, W. W. Borden. The financial success of the Institute is largely due to the efficiency of the business manager, Mr. A. F. Gaylord.

A Philosopher—And Human!

(Continued from page 18.)

Professor Shepperd is the fact that he gave up his bachelor life in mid-career, and became the happy husband and father in a charming family circle. His talented wife and three sturdy children have softened the angularity of the single life and contributed a wealth of new interests and influences to his rich and effective personality. His family life has given the final measure of human quality which has made the professor of philosophy so great a power in all circles of the university life. There is much more which should be said—when he dies. But this may suffice now as a slight tribute to our good friend who is launching valiantly into new adventures with the optimism and vigor of youth.

Church Life

A new church is in process of construction at Hobbs, Ind.

Revival services are in progress at Ardmore, Okla.

Frank L. Bowen, of Kansas City, Mo., dedicated a church at Grain Valley on Sunday, June 25.

F. F. Walters, pastor at Independence, Mo., will be available for a meeting during the month of August.

James A. Challener, for some time pastor at Windsor, Mo., has accepted a call to the church at Chickasha, Okla.

J. K. Schellenberger, gave an address at the men's banquet at Richmond Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., on June 24.

Charles E. McVay, of Hardy, Neb., will sing in a meeting at Haigler, Neb., in July. Mr. McVay has an open date for August.

B. S. Ferrall, pastor of Richmond, Buffalo, N. Y., officiated at the laying of the corner stone of Woodlawn Church, Buffalo, on July 2nd.

A meeting was held recently at Central Church, Lexington, Ky., where I. J. Spencer ministers, to consider the organization of a local brotherhood.

The dedicatory services of the new church at Napa, Calif., were held June 18. F. M. Dowling, pastor at Anaheim, Calif., preached the dedicatory sermon.

First Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has secured pledges for the coming year sufficient to cover the entire budget of current expenses and missionary offerings.

Frank Waller Allen, of Paris, Mo., and Alva W. Taylor, of Columbia, Mo., were among the speakers at the Christian Endeavor Convention held June 21-22 at Central Church, Moberly, Mo.

C. M. Keene, for five years pastor at Owosso, Mich., has resigned. Mr. Keene has had a successful work here, a new church edifice being built and all indebtedness cleared during his pastorate.

Announcement has been received of the marriage of Miss Sara E. Marshall, daughter of Levi Marshall or Hannibal, Mo., to Daniel D. Mahan. The Christian Century extends congratulations.

Flatbush Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., hass called Fred Marsh Gordon of Knoxville, Pa. He has accepted and will begin work September 1. Mr. Gordon succeeds Walter S. Rounds, now occupying the Bible Chair of the State University, Bloomington, Ind.

F. L. Moffett, pastor of South St. Church, Springfield, Mo., gave an address on "Our Civic Conscience," and G. L. Peters, of Central Church, Springfield, spoke on "The Leavening Power of Christianity" at the recent Christian Endeavor convention at Lebanon, Mo.

A campaign is in progress at Oklahoma City, Okla., to raise funds for the erection of a building by the congregation of Maywood Church. It is planned to erect an edifice at a cost of about $25,000. This congregation has been organized recently and numbers about 150 members.

The National Benevolent Association has made its best annuity record this year. The total amount received is $23,801. This is a gain in nine months over previous years. This indicates a growing confidence in the business integrity of the Association, and a growing disposition on the part of God's people to share with their less fortunate brethren.

First Church, Hutchinson, Kan., is establishing a mission in South Hutchinson. O. L. Cook, pastor, assisted by the men of the congregation, superintended the building of a tabernacle accommodating 800, which was completed in a day. A meeting is now in progress under the leadership of Mr. Cook, assisted by C. S. Van Dolah, who will have charge of the mission work.

John Ray Ewers, pastor of East End Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., is giving a series of Sunday mornings during July on the subject, "What Did Jesus Teach?" The following are the sermon topics: What Jesus Taught About Prayer; What Jesus Taught About Temptations; What Jesus Taught About Private Property; What Jesus Taught About Talking; What Jesus Taught

The first anniversary of the beginning of church building in Gary, Ind., was recently celebrated by a week of varied features, one of these being a banquet which was largely attended. Among the speakers were Cecil Sharp, Claude Hill, L. H. Myers and Congressman E. D. Crumpacker. Much encouragement is felt in the progress of the work here, three churches having been organized in the year.

Reports submitted at the annual meeting of South Geddes Street Church, Syracuse, N. Y., showed the church and its societies to be in the most prosperous condition since its organization seven years ago. C. R. Stauffer, who has been pastor for the past four years was voted an increase in salary. During Mr. Stauffer's pastorate 191 new members have been received, making a total membership of 225. The Sunday-school has an enrollment of about 400.

There was a large attendance at the jubilee convention of the New York Christian Missionary Society, held recently at Buffalo. Among the speakers were: Ira L. Parvin, Charles Bloom, Philip A. Parsons, Frank A. Higgins, M. M. Ammunson, Miner Lee Bates, and E. J. Gantz. Claude E. Hill, of Valparaiso, Ind., national superintendent of Christian Endeavor work among the Disciples, was also present and gave an address on the Christian Endeavor movement of today and its power for unity among the churches.

The Sunday-school of the Third Chruch, Indianapolis, Ind., for which Harry G. Hill ministers, is making itself manifest in unusual ways. It has an undefeated baseball team in the Saturday Afternoon League, the only team with a perfect score. The basket-ball and bowling teams of last winter were concluded in the finals. The debating team was recently given the unanimous decision of the judges in a debate with the College of Danville. This is an unusual record for a Sunday-school.

Dedication at Hastings, Neb.

On Sunday, June 25, the writer dedicated the beautiful new church at Hastings, Nebraska, to the worship of Almighty God. For primitive Christianity it meant a great victory for the whole state of Nebraska. Hastings is a city that lies about one hundred miles west of Lincoln. It is located in one of the richest parts of the state. It is a rapidly growing city. It has a population of about 9,000 people. It is the seat of Hastings College, the state college of the Presbyterian Church. It is a center of commerce and culture for a large area. In this city our cause was planted a goodly number of years ago. It grew very slowly until four years ago, when the present pastor, R. A. Schell, took charge of the work. Two years ago this winter Chas. R. Scoville held a great meeting for the church. The church has had a steady growth during all the years of Mr. Schell's pastorate.

The new house of worship cost the congregation something more than $27,000. It is a building that is one of the most perfect workshops that the writer has ever been on the inside of. It is characterized in its structure everywhere by simplicity and great utility. One of the daily papers, in describing it the day before it was dedicated, said of it: "The beautiful edifice of the Christian church which will be dedicated with appropriate services at the corner of Lexington avenue and Fourth street tomorrow will be one of the handsomest of the many houses of worship in the city."

On dedication day, $13,000 was needed to dedicate free of debt. Under ordinary circumstances, this amount would have been a great amount for the Hastings church to raise, for this is not a wealthy congregation. But the situation that prevailed made it doubly hard to raise the amount needed.

To make a long story short, when the day was over we had routed doubt, drouth, and debt. We were able to write on the flag of the old ship of Zion $12,270 raised. It is needless to say there was great rejoicing among the saints. WILLIAM OESCHGER.

A Word From the Metropolis of Southwestern Oklahoma

Our work at Lawton, under the leadership of A. R. Spicer, is still up to its usual high standard. During Mr. Spicer's fifteen months of service there has been a gain in every department of the church. There have been over 200 additions at the regular Lord's Day service. There has been a gain of from 50 to 100 per cent in every department of the work. The Sunday-school is one of the best organized and most aggressive in the city. It is on the Honor Roll for American and Foreign Children's Day and Benevolent Work. The various organized classes have launched and successfully consummated some unusual enterprises. The Christian Endeavor is on the Honor Roll of the state work. The C. W. B. M. is a banner society, having averaged $1 per member, gave $20 self-denial week, is supporting a native helper, and received two life memberships. The men of the church pulled off the biggest event in the city's history recently. The trustees at the recent school land sale secured splendid tracts of land for future church locations, thus giving us three of the most strategic sites for church properties in the city. This move was regarded by our leading business men as one of the most far-seeing moves ever made by a congregation in this place. The church is giving $125 per year for the education of a young man for the Christian ministry. He is the son of a former pastor and is one of the most promising students in the Southwestern Christian University at Enid. We are striving to make our church a living link in the home and state mission this year.

Our minister is recognized as a leader in every department of our city's life. He is in great demand as a speaker upon all public occasion. In addition to pastoral duties, he is president of the Fourth District, comprising seventeen counties, and was recently elected president of the state Brotherhood work. He is also a member of the state board and executive committee, so we and others endeavor to keep him busy.

H. C. STUBBLEFIELD.

Jacob the Redeemed

(Continued from page 13)

Redeemed.

Let us turn to the word "redeemed." This is the first occurrence of the word, or the idea expressed by the word, in the Divine Library. What is this word? It is the word which in course of time came to express the activity of the next-of-kin. It means, to demand back again, to extricate from difficulty. From this Hebrew word came the word redeemer or goel. The supreme illustration of its use is to be found in the words of Job, "I know that my redeemer liveth." that is my Goel, my kinsman-redeemer. If we want perfectly to understand the meaning of the word to the Hebrew we find it illustrated in the book of Ruth in which pictorially the work of the redeemer, as the Hebrew understood it, is revealed. The work of the kinsman-redeemer was first that of identification in experience with the one who needed to be extricated from difficulty; secondly, vindication of that one in some way by righteousness; and ultimately, the work of the redeemer was the restoration of the one in trouble, even at cost to the redeemer. In this assembly and in this hour all the ultimate values are in our minds as we have seen them realized and operative in and through the one Redeemer of the race. Jacob used the word with all these significations.

If I may express the statement in other words, this is the thing that Jacob said, "The angel has identified himself with me and extricated me from all my wrong-doing and its consequences, and has restored the broken harmony." That was the final vision of triumphant faith.

The Teaching of the Story.

What is the teaching of this man's life story? There is a primary teaching, a central teaching, and a final teaching. Primarily, this man's life story is a revelation of the patience of God. How I love to read it, over and over again, and in the light of that last word, "The Angel which hath redeemed me from all evil." God was "the God of Jacob," of Jacob with his meanness, with his fears, his scheming, his faltering. Oh, my heart, take courage!

The central lesson is the revelation of the value of faith, however fearful it is. I feel that out of this study there ought to be encouragement for many troubled, discouraged men and women. Never mind those other men and women of stronger faith; never mind because you have not the faith of Abraham equal to great adventure; in the name of God do not be troubled because you have not the splendid, quiet, passivity of Isaac, content to dig wells and live the meditative life. Have you faith? Do you believe in God? Quick and ready the response is coming out of your deepest life. Of course I do, but . . . Never mind the "but"! If there be faith, that is the principle upon which God can work, that is the connecting link between your life and God. Oh, Jacob, mean man, thou didst believe in God, and on the basis of that principle of true belief, notwithstanding all the folly and failure and wandering, there came an hour when looking back thou didst say, not, I have fought the fight, I have kept the faith—some men cannot say that—but "The Angel which hath redeemed me from all evil."

Not Able To Say It.

So many of us will pass on presently. Many of us will not be able to say—we know it now for the past makes it impossible. We have fought the good fight, we have kept the faith; but we will be able to say, God has kept us through faith. The Angel of his presence has redeemed us from all evil.

Yet is there not a final message? Does not the study of this man's life call us to more enduring faith? Is not this man a witness to us, and a warning also? Do not let us take comfort out of our failure. All the comfort we need may be taken out of the faithfulness of God. But ought not that very assurance of his faithfulness, and of the fact that he will perfect that which concerneth us, to appeal to our hearts to trust him better, and to have done with our clever, fussy attempts to manipulate events in order to reach the goal of His intention? May it be given to us to trust him wholly, and to wait patiently for him.

Notes From the Foreign Society

The Sunday-school at Marshall, Mo. sends an offering of $630 for Foreign Missions.

Dr. L. F. Jaggard and wife of Longa, Africa, have returned on their first furlough and are at home in Des Moines, Ia. They have done splendid service at this new, prosperous station on the Bosira River.

Word comes from Luchowfu, China that the attendance is one-hundred and eighty in the Chinese Sunday-school. They have great need of a chapel for their work. The missionaries are building an addition to the overcrowded hospital at this station. They expect to raise $3,000 Mexican from the Chinese for this building. The hospital is in great favor among the Chinese. There are over thirty-five thousand treatments in this institution each year. Dr. James Butchart is the medical missionary.

Leslie Wolfe of Manila, P. I. reports that there were seventeen baptisms in the Tagalog Province during April.

Because of the generous gift of R. A. Long in the building of the Girls' College, Tokyo, Japan, the building has been named for his deceased mother. It is now called the Margaret K. Long Girls' School. A bronze tablet with this inscription was sent by Brother Long and on June 6, F. M. Rains made the dedicatory address.

Secretary F. M. Rains landed at San Francisco on June 23, after an extended tour of the mission fields. He writes that he is very happy to get back to America. He will visit the Portland convention before returning to Cincinnati. His visit to the mission fields has been of untold value to the work. Everywhere he has counseled and planned with the workers. The information he brings back will be of great value to the Executive Committee. Mr. and Mrs. Rains have visited Hawaii, Australia, Ceylon, India, China, Philippine Islands, Korea and Japan.

A letter from O. G. Hertzog who has been visiting in China this year brings the news that the new hospital for Dr. Osgood at Chuchow is nearing completion. Brother Hertzog has been superintending its construction. He and Mrs. Hertzog will return to America this winter by way of India, Palestine and Europe.

The receipts have improved much in the last week. Both the Sunday-school and the churches are gaining.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Secretary.
Cincinnati, Ohio.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
Think What a Bell Should Be—They Are That!
Reasonable in price with tone unsurpassed, having a rich, clear and inviting voice, which is sufficiently loud and far sounding to awaken the sense of duty and obligation in the habitual stay-at-home, and arouse impelling memories in the mind of the recreant.
Write for prices with beautiful and comprehensive bell catalog A and literature free.
THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO.
Sole Makers of "Blymyer" Bells
CINCINNATI, OHIO

A MAGAZINE of LAUGHTER
THE FUNNIEST OF ALL THE FUNNY MAGAZINES
Brimful of wholesome wit and humor. Join the campaign for One Million subscribers by sending 25 CENTS in Coin for One Year or five(5) separate subscriptions for $1.00. Foreign sub'ns, 25 cents extra.
THOMPSON'S MAGAZINE, Dept. DH, 328 Federal St., Chicago

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.
NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business
FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet
THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

Between
CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY
via the
Chicago & Alton
Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis
For Time Tables and Fares Address:
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO

The Founders of German Hymnody.

MEADE E. DUTT.

The 16th century marks the beginning of one of the great transitional eras in history. The western world had just been discovered about which hung a curtain of mystery and romance. The spirit of the Renaissance was sweeping through France, Germany and England. Guttenburg had discovered that impressions could be made with moveable types and the social cauldron was emitting odors of the coming reformation. There were two great scholars who aided the reformation very materially; Erasmus who "laid the egg that Luther hatched," and Reuchlin, who, though not in sympathy with either Luther or the reformation, aided it indirectly. Both these men were university professors and their teaching was leaven in the hearts of their students.

About this time Ulrich von Hutten began to call on his countrymen to assert their national unity and ancient rights against the Italian priests and Spanish mercenaries. He was very materially aided by the hymns he wrote. He discarded the Latin and wrote in clear, ringing German. He succeeded in making himself heard among the German masses and paved the way to the Reformation.. At one time he was forced to seek an asylum in the castle of his friend Franz von Sickingen and while there wrote the following hymn which became a favorite with the earliest adherents of the Reformation. "I have ventured it" was Von Hutten's motto. I give the first two and last two verses.

"ULRICH VON HUTTEN'S SONG."

I've ventured it of purpose free
Nor yet my deeds I rue;
I may not win, but men will see
My heart and life were true.
'Tis not my own I seek alone,
This they must know at least;
'Tis good of all, though me they call
A foe to church and priest.

But I will let them spread their lies
And chatter as they will;
If I would but the truth disguise,
And tongue and pen keep still,
Flatterers enow were mine, I trow,
Now I'm a banished man;
Yet think not I afar to fly,
Time yet will change the ban.

Now if my nation's gallant youth
Will not my warning take,
And bravely stand for Right and Truth,
It grieves me for her sake,
I must depart with heavy heart;
Yet deem not all is o'er,
Come foul or fair, I'll not despair,
But mix the cards once more.

No courtier's crafts shall me affright,
Though deep the game they've played;
An honest heart that loves the Right,
Can never be dismayed.
Full many a name will join the game,
Nor life nor wrath will cherish;
Up! burghers grave and horsemen brave
And let not Hutten perish!

The figures of "mixing the cards" and "playing the game" strike one as rather unusual for a religious hymn but they were doubtless very strong in those days.

Justus Jonas was a warm friend and colaborer with Luther. Of him Miss Winkworth says: "He was not merely a good theologian, but a skilful jurist, and naturally had to take part in all the many discussions and conferences in which the evangelical doctrine gradually assumed definite form and consistency, and the legal and political rights of its adherents were ascertained and asserted. * * * On one occasion a Spanish officer quartered in his house received a large bribe to assassinate him, but was so much impresse by the piety, integrity and kindness of his intended victim, that he confessed his purpose to him and entreated forgiveness. * * * What he did for hymnology was to help Luther in preparing metrical German versions of the Psalms, choosing, by preference, as one can well understand, those which speak of David's suffering from his enemies and trust in God's deliverance." The following are three verses from his metrical version of

"PSALM 126."

1

If God were not upon our side
When foes around us rage,
Were not Himself our Help and Guide
When bitter war they wage,
Were He not Israel's mighty Shield
To whom their utmost crafts must yield,
We surely must have perished.

3.

They call us heretics and lie
In wait to spill our blood;
Yet flaunt their Christian name on high
And boast they worship God.
Ah God! that precious name of Thine
O'er many a wicked deed muust shine,
But Thou wilt once avenge it.

7.

But heaven and earth, O Lord, are Thine,
By Thee alone were made,
Then let Thy light upon us shine,
O Thou, our only aid!
Kindle our hearts to love and faith
That shall be steadfast e'en to death
Howe'er the world may murmur.

1869 1911

Hamilton College
FOR YOUNG WOMEN
Lexington, Kentucky.

Standardized Junior College Course, requiring two years for a high school graduate to complete.

A shorter Preparatory Course for those not graduates of high school, admitting, without examination, to Vassar, Wellesley, etc.

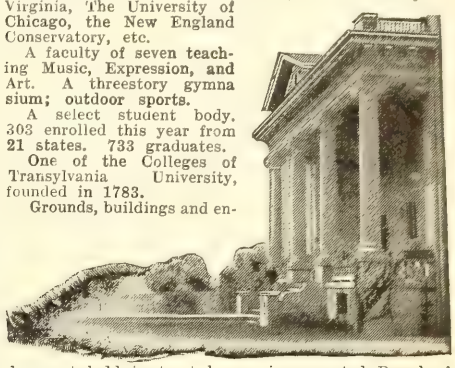
Faculty of 29, from Vassar, Yale, Wellesley, Columbia, Berlin, Leipsig, Paris, Cornell, The University of Virginia, The University of Chicago, the New England Conservatory, etc.

A faculty of seven teaching Music, Expression, and Art. A threestory gymnasium; outdoor sports.

A select student body. 303 enrolled this year from 21 states. 733 graduates.

One of the Colleges of Transylvania University, founded in 1783.

Grounds, buildings and endowment held in trust by an incorporated Board of Trustees, under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ.



by an incorporated Board of Trustees, under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ.

Large, shady, park-like campus. Five modern buildings, heated by steam from a central plant, and lighted by gas and electricity.

Delightful dormitories. Home care. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals. Libraries, laboratories, etc., fully equipped.

Forty-third session begins Sept. 11, 1911. Write for catalogue.

H. G. Shearin, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

A BIBLICAL and THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of high grade located at COLUMBIA adjacent to the UNIVERSITY of MISSOURI

University Credit Courses—Ministerial and Missionary Training Courses. Departments:—Biblical and Systematic Theology, Social Service and Missions, Old Testament and New Testament. Next Term Begins Sept. 18, 1911.

For Catalog and Information address Charles M. Sharpe, Dean.

1798 Transylvania University 1911
OLDEST COLLEGE WEST OF THE ALLEGHENIES
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY

In the Heart of the Blue Grass

Continuing Bacon College, Founded in 1836, the Oldest College among the Disciples

Standard courses leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., LL. B., and A. M.
Faculty composed of professors especially trained in the best American and European universities.
Students from 30 states and foreign countries.
More than 150 ministerial students.
The Law School of Henry Clay and Justice Harlan.
Average cost to student, less than $200 a year.

For catalogue and other information, write to

R. H. CROSSFIELD, President :: Lexington, Kentucky

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR

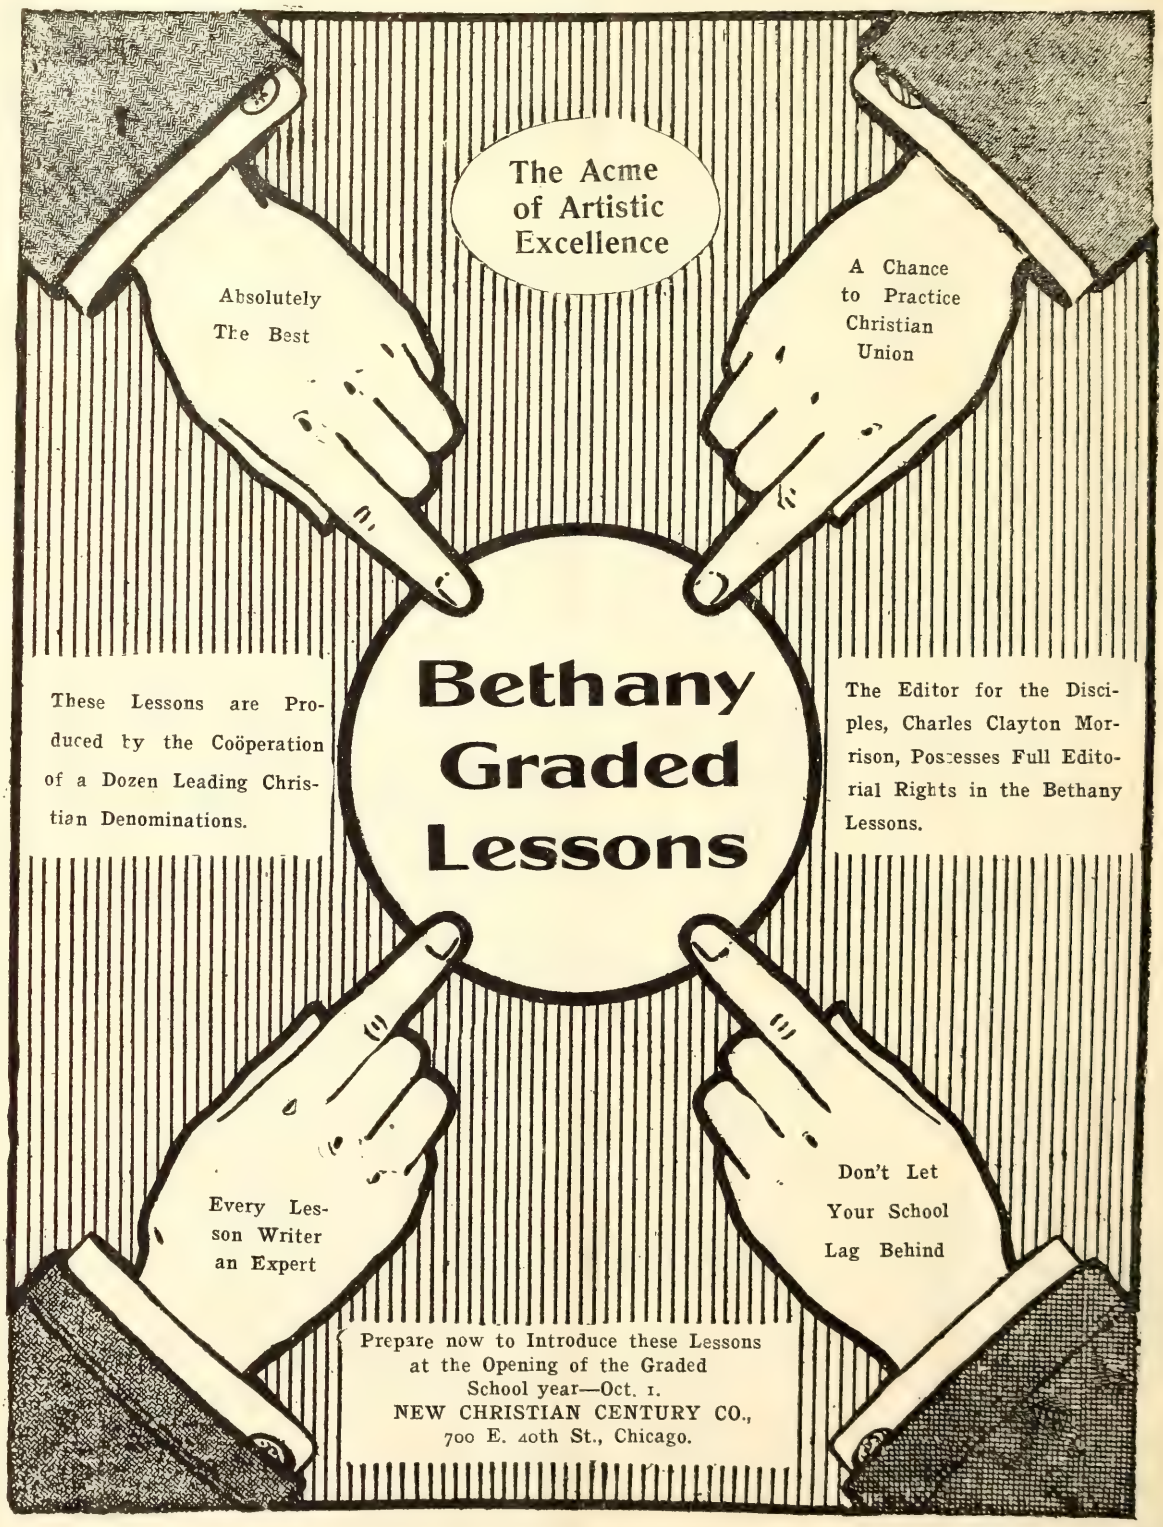
CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
FOR YOUNG WOMEN
An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $31,000 building just completed. Twenty college-trained, experienced teachers, Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior-College course leads to an A. B. degree; College, Preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field, Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated catalogue address MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, PRESIDENT

Next session begins Sept. 12. Columbia, Mo.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Prepare now to Introduce these Lessons at the Opening of the Graded School year—Oct. 1.
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Sharpe C. M. Dec11

Volume XXVIII. July 13, 1911. Number 28

EDITORIAL NOTE.—The interesting article on Professor Shepherd entitled "A Philosopher—and Human!" printed in last week's issue, was allowed to pass the proof-reader without the author's name attached.. Those words of appreciation sprang from the heart of Professor E. S. Ames, himself a philosopher—and human also. It is a matter of regret that this likeness of Professor Shepherd was not received in time to accompany the article of his pupil and friend, but after the long struggle of getting the subject's consent to furnish a photograph we are more than pleased to be able to exhibit his countenance to our readers even if it is the week after.

PROFESSOR-EMERITUS BRUCE E. SHEPHERD, OF DRAKE UNIVERSITY.

CHICAGO

Ilinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

A week's meeting at Mill Shoals, conducted by B. S. Kello, resulted in eight additions.

E. A. Cory will be assisted in a revival meeting at Franklin during the fall by Evangelist Charles H. Bloom.

The pulpit at Versailles will soon be vacant on account of the resignation of W. Harry Walston.

A. Proffit, of St. Louis, preached at Auburn, as a candidate for the pulpit, which has been vacant for a short time.

On the first Sunday of the fourth year of Elmore Sinclair's pastorate at Watseka, there were eleven additions.

Christopher Church is without a pastor, and will be glad to correspond with a suitable minister to locate there.

D. H. Shanklin is available for supply pulpit work during the months of July and August. He can be addressed at 304 Mason street, Normal.

The congregation at West Frankfort, where C. W. Freeman preaches, more than doubled its apportionment for foreign missions this year.

The Children's Day offering at Roseville was largely in excess of the apportionment made by the Foreign Society. The pastor is M. S. Metzler.

D. W. Conner is pastor of the church at Palestine, where the ministers of the city are co-operating in union services during the summer.

Major Griffith has concluded his half-time pastorate at Argenta, and is ready to engage with another congregation. He can be addressed at Decatur.

C. R. Piety, of Hillsboro, will be glad to hold a meeting for some congregation during July and August. If desired, he will furnish a singer.

Round Prairie Church, a small country congregation, where W. H. Grover of Litchfield, has been preaching for thirty-two years, received an offering for missions amounting to fifty-five dollars.

The pastor at Winchester, E. M. Sears, delivered an address at a banquet of the Knights of Pythias. The Protestant churches of Winchester united for Sunday evening services during the months of July and August.

S. Elwood Fisher, pastor of Dixon Church, was unable to be in his pulpit for three successive Sundays on account of throat affliction. He has now recovered, and led the church in a "F. D. Power Memorial Service" on a recent Sunday morning.

At Pekin, where O. C. Bolman preaches, union services are being held during the summer months by six congregations of the city, including the Church of the Disciples. This church is arranging to hold a meeting in the early fall conducted by the pastor.

The G. A. R. Post, of Pontiac, attended the morning service at the Christian Church recently, when a patriotic song service was held. National hymns were sung, preceded by an interpretation and history of the song. B. W. Tate, the pastor, was in charge of the service.

W. T. McConnell will hold a meeting for his home congregation at Arcola in September, being assisted by a singing evangelist. Union services are being held here with the other congregations of the city during the summer.

Columbus Church Sunday-school gave its annual Children's Day exercises, resulting in an offering of thirteen dollars for foreign missions. The congregation here is presided over by J. T. Parrick, who will be assisted in September in a revival meeting by George F. Chandler.

At Carmi, the Evangelical churches of the city are united in a series of vesper services. It is the understanding that the sermons are to be evangelistic. L. A. Chapman, pastor of Christian Church, preached the first sermon on "The Pentecost Plan of Pardon."

Guy L. Zerby is holding revival services at Henry, where H. C. Reickel is minister. Already, there has been a considerable number of additions, and such an interest as to necessitate the Methodist Church being employed to accommodate the Sunday night congregations.

Ipava Church will hold a revival meeting in the fall, conducted by Jasper Brown. The pastor is C. R. Gains. This congregation enjoyed the privilege, not long since, of a Sunday evening sermon from Evangelist H. O. Breeden, whose home is in this town.

H. H. Wagner, pastor at Mt. Auburn, delivered two memorial addresses the last Sunday in May, one being at his former pastorate, and the other at Boswell, Ind. The church, of which he is pastor, is contemplating a short meeting following the state convention, to be held by Secretary J. Fred Jones.

Peoria, Central Church, has recently liquidated an indebtedness of $1,000 on its building, and repaired, partially reseated, and in other respects improved its edifice. The Children's Day offering amounted to 121 dollars. This church, together with Howett street, has become responsible for the support of Mrs. Cunningham as a living link missionary in India. W. F. Turner is pastor.

F. Boyd, minister at Belle Plain, closed a two weeks' revival meeting, which resulted in sixteen additions. Mr. Boyd had the assistance, for several nights, of J. T. Moore of Toluca, H. F. Kern of El Dara, and S. S. Lappin, editor of The Christian Standard. This successful pastorate is to be terminated in order that the family of the minister may have better educational facilities.

H. J. Reynolds has been pastor of Camp Point Church for six years, during which time there have been 412 additions. The congregation now has a membership of 481. After the close of his anniversary sermon a few Sundays ago, one of the elders of the church, in behalf of the congregation, presented him with money to defray his expenses to the national convention and another member duplicated this gift to enable the minister's wife to accompany him on the journey.

The Seventh District Convention was in session at Sandoval, when the news of the death of Herbert Moninger was received. They passed beautifully-worded resolutions of the spirit of which the following sentence is typical: "Recognizing the commanding talents of our brother, the place he occupies in the affections of all by whom he is known, beside the inestimable contribution his life and services have made to the sum of the world's good, we deem it not out of order to here give expression to our sense of loss in his calling away."

Cyprus R. Mitchell, since his graduation from Eureka College, has taken up permanent residence in Cooksville, where he is pastor of the church. The Children's Day offering from this church amounted to $100. A study has been added to the church building, and repairs and refinishing of the inside are now progressing. In addition to this, there is a possibility of excavating for a basement under the church, to give more adequate room for the Sunday-school. Three churches of the town have combined their evening preaching services for the summer months, and as a preparation for the union meeting, to be held in August.

A Sunday-school contest of notable proportions was concluded between the schools of Litchfield and Centralia. The contest lasted through a period of six months. On the final day, Litchfield had an attendance of 855, with an offering of 1,750 dollars, while Centralia han an attendance of 1,245, with an offering of 625 dollars. The contest was won by Litchfield, with a score 25 per cent larger than that of its competitor. The superintendent of Litchfield school is John H. Taylor, perhaps the youngest superintendent in Illinois. The pastor of this church is Charles W. Ross. The superintendent of Centralia Sunday-school is T. G. Braden, and the pastor is J. F. Roseborough, who has resigned, and will be succeeded by A. L. Huff, now pastor of Lovington Church, August first.

Chicago

O. F. Jordan celebrated his fourth anniversary as the leader of the Evanston church July 2. The church building was decorated, appropriate services were well held, and five new members were added to the growing congregation. In the morning Mr. Jordan spoke on the theme, "Four Years in Evanston." Chicago Disciples rejoice in the recent refusal of Mr. Jordan to accept a call to Missouri, and are gratified to note the steady advance of the Evanston church into larger things. During the four years of Mr. Jordan's ministry a fine work has been done in the Evanston church. A struggling band of Disciples meeting in an almost dilapidated building in one corner of the town have now become a factor in the life of the suburb with their new building so centrally located.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, ... EDITORS

Modern Society and the Church

The Gist of the Presidential Address at Portland

BY HARRY D. SMITH.

It seems a long way from Jeroboam II and Hezekiah to President Taft; from Jerusalem to Washington; from that speck of a country beside the Mediterranean to the greatest of republics. And so it is in miles and years and in certain other units of external measurement. But essentially, which is to say in matters of the soul, it is not as far as it seems. What were the questions that confronted kings, animated statesmen, aroused prophets, precipitated revolutions, and the bad handling of which brought the crash of doom twenty-five hundred years ago in Judah and Israel? Well, the land question was one; the labor question was another; the liquor question was another; the question of foreign relations was another. The question of having a day of rest and worship, the question of divorce, the question of training the child, the question between faith and formalism, the question of sectarianism were others. And the grand question of all these was between Jehovah and "the gods of gold and silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone." Familiar, are they not? Quite modern, quite American, in fact. True, the stages and phases of them at which we have arrived are in some cases at least somewhat different from those which challenged the thought and evoked the brave and righteous word of the Hebrew prophet. Nevertheless, this Old Testament is very new. Taft and Jeroboam are almost contemporaries and neighbors, and in the histories of the little kingdoms of long ago the mighty republic of today may find charted, if she will, all the shoals, rocks and maelstroms of national peril, and all the free, safe waters of national progress and all the havens of national peace.

Idolatry Not Obsolete.

The only one of these questions that even looks strange to us is that of idolatry. It is only here and there upon our soil that some foreigner raises his image and worships it in the crass fashion of the idolaters of ancient Israel. But may we thus lightly clear ourselves in respect of idolatry? Does it really matter so much that gold, for example, is minted into eagles instead of being made into images, and that we carry it in our pockets and on occasion toss it about carelessly as though it were cheap, instead of setting it aloft in temples and shrines? What if we spend our time and strength to get and keep it, counting not the welfare of our neighbor, the safety of the state and our own honor too great a price to pay for it? What, in the last analysis, is idolatry? It is, of course, as we have been taught repeatedly, the worship of the "Eidolon," the thing seen. Whoever, therefore, is seduced or obsessed by the seen; whoever is badgered, bullied, browbeaten by the physical in nature or art; whoever on the terrible field of the world, where soul is ever at war with sense, fights on the side of sense, is an idolater. The idolater has not passed, even in America, and it is appropriate that it be said to us, as it was to the Christians of the first century, "My little children, keep yourselves from idols." We have not ceased utterly, believe me, from praising "the gods of gold and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood and of stone." We praise them often even in our churches, especially when we pare down the truth for the sake of a contribution for the building of a church, the support of a mission or a charity, or the endowment of a college. And how readily even the minister, if he would permit himself, would be persuaded to think of the church as a considerable corporation, with revenues and somewhat stately buildings perhaps, and not at all as the spiritual thing our Lord devised. Well it is for him that the apostles hold before him a vision of "a spiritual house" built of "living stones" and filled with the Spirit of God.

Rev. Harry D. Smith, President American Christian Missionary Society.

Illustration From the Treatre.

In Kennedy's play, "The Servant in the House," Manson, the hero, who is a kind of shadow of our Lord, speaks of his church, directing his words against this very idolatry to which the pulpit of this age of business is so liable. The speech is made to the Rt. Rev. James Ponsonby Makeshyfte, a bishop who is justly characterized as "a bishop of stocks and shares, a bishop of the counting-house, a bishop of Mammon." The bishop has just asked, "What sort of place is it?" alluding to the church. Manson answers:

> I am afraid you may not consider it an altogether substantial concern. It has to be seen in a certain way, under certain conditions. Some people never see it at all. You must understand this is no dead pile of stones and unmeaning timber. It is a living thing.
>
> When you enter it you hear a sound—a sound as of some mighty poem chanted. Listen long enough and you will learn that it is made up of the beating of human hearts, of the nameless music of men's souls; that is, if you have ears. If you have eyes, you will presently see the church itself, a looming mystery of many shapes and shadows, leaping sheer from floor to dome. The work of no ordinary builder!
>
> The pillars of it go up like the brawny trunks of heroes; the sweet human flesh of men and women is moulded about its bulwarks, strong, impregnable; the faces of little children laugh out from every corner-stone; the terrible spans and arches of it are the joined hands of comrades; and up in the heights and spaces there are inscribed the numberless musings of all the dreamers of the world. It is yet building—building and built upon. Sometimes the work goes forward in deep darkness; sometimes in blinding light; now beneath the burden of unutterable anguish; now to the tune of great laughter and heroic shoutings, like the cry of thunder. Sometimes in the silence of the night-time one may hear the tiny hammerings of the comrades at work up in the dome, the comrades that have climbed ahead.

Surely this is a noble voice, and coming as it does from the contemporary stage, a most notable one also, this voice which would recall the minister of Christ to himself and his proper service from the easy worship of the seen. But we pass over the sensational fact that in this voice the stage takes a hand in an effort to purify the pulpit, to note simply that we have in it one of a host of credible testimonies that idolatry is a fact widespread and deadly in our present Anglo-Saxon life.

Unity of the Church.

But perhaps we distrust our own program as we see how far away the goal appears to be. Let us look at it a moment. Take this first item in it. We say with our fathers in this movement that conversion of the world waits for the unification of the church. What fault shall we find with this? Did not we get this from our Lord? Did he not pray that his disciples might be one that the world might believe that God had sent him into it? And do not our divisions hinder our work of evangelization and instruction daily and hourly? Do not, then, the word of our Master and our own experience agree that only a reunited church can have a well founded hope of a converted world?

Let us take the second step in this program. We say to Christendom that her divisions are the fruit of scholastic refinements and other glosses upon the teachings of Jesus and those who were authorized by himself to speak for him; and that the simplest, and, as far as we can judge, the only way to be rid of the divisions is to go back of those refinements and glosses to Jesus and the apostles, believing that they were able to speak to us all, of all parties, so that we shall all understand alike what is necessary to be understood. What shall we say of this item of our program? First, as to our account of the origin of sectarianism, who gives any other? Again, as to going back to Christ, that we may sit reverently down at his feet and there unlearn the things that rend us asunder, while we learn anew, and with holy purpose, those things that draw and bind us together. Could anything be more simple, more reasonable, more axiomatic, more hopeful than that? And thirdly, is it too much to expect the Divine Teacher to be able to teach so as to effect and preserve among his true disciples the real unity and union for which he prayed?

(Continued on page 13)

Social Survey

Patent Medicine Label Whitewash

One of the peculiar, and yet not infrequent twists in the wording of a law, was brought to light in the recent opinion rendered by the Supreme Court on drug labels. It was held by the court that the pure food act prohibits the use of labels bearing a false statement of contents, but that the law does not prohibit the use of labels bearing false or misleading claims of curative properties. The seriousness of such a decision is easily apparent. The unscrupulous manufacturer of patent medicines is allowed to prey unhindered upon the incredulity of an ignorant public, suffering from disease or ailment. This decision of the court was reached by a six to three vote. The court confined itself to an interpretation of the existing law. No opinion was rendered on the power of congress to make a law which would prohibit this dishonest practice. Although he had repeatedly urged congress to confine itself to action in the matters presented in his message, and to leave other matters until the regular session this fall, President Taft considered this matter of such gravity that he sent a special message recommending the passage of a law which would effectively put an end to this form of fraud. Congress is deep in the tariff wrangle, but a call as urgent as this should impress it as the need has impressed the President, and should receive speedy action.

Cicada Year for the United States

The year 1911 has been called a "red letter year" in the insect world by a prominent entomologist, and the title seems to be justified, especially in the eastern portions of the United States. This year completed the cycle of development for two branches of the cicada, commonly known as the locust—the northern, or seventeen-year-cycle variety; and the southern, or thirteen-year-cycle variety. This dual occurrence will not again take place for 221 years. There are other species of cicada in the United States with cycles of various lengths, but the above-mentioned branches are by far the more numerous and, therefore, to us, most important. Long ere the cicada season arrived, entomologists warned us that this year the "locusts" were due and declared that their appearance heretofore had been invariable. This forecast occasioned alarm in certain parts of the country. The visitations of grasshoppers in the Middle West a generation ago were recalled, and many people feared this year's locust pest would be a repetition of them. This alarm was quite groundless. The cicada crop is harmless, and is not to be confused with the grasshopper pests in the Middle West. The latter visitations were of ordinary varieties of grasshoppers in years highly favorable to their multiplication, and the swarms moved over great expanses, eating every green thing in sight. The cicada lives but short while. It emerges from the ground plump and fully mature, and thereafter eats almost nothing. Mating season takes place immediately. The female deposits eggs under the bark of twigs on trees and brush, and then dies. The eggs develop into grub worms which fall to the ground. Immediately they burrow into the ground, not again to appear until fully developed at the end of thirteen or seventeen years, according to the species. In the ground the grub attaches itself to some rootlet from which it derives its nourishment. It never moves unless its source of food is disturbed. These cicadas are similar to those mentioned in the Bible as locusts, but are not the same. The Bible variety, we are told, devoured everything green in sight, and reduced the people to the necessity of eating them or starving. Modern American locusts seemed at first to be as harmless as they are useless. Some chicken farmers, however, were found rejoicing and, in explanation of their glee, pointed out fine flocks of fat chickens eagerly devouring this plentiful supply of food. If chickens become plentiful on "cicada years" we may even grow to anticipate the years of their visitation with pleasure.

More Sherman Anti-Trust Indictments

The government is evincing an ardent desire to enforce the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. Following the passage of that law, the federal authorities took up the new weapon cautiously until they had determined what it covered. They first attacked the most flagrant violators and their actions were conspicuous. Recently they have taken up many cases and are preparing for an active program of prosecution. The latest activities have been directed against the manufacturers of steel and copper wire. Eighty-five indictments against the heads of thirty-five firms have been returned by the federal grand-jury in New York. In the indictments the thirty-five companies are charged with belonging to nine associations which control 70 to 95 per cent of all the wire business. Not all these associations are now existing, but the old members are charged with carrying on practically the same work that the associations accomplished. They meet in informal luncheons at which business agreements are made which, it is charged, are more than so-called "gentlemen's agreements." The government claims it holds proof of an elaborate system of rules and fines by which the manufacturers were governed at these luncheons. All the luncheon associations are said to have been under sole charge of Atty. W. E. Jackson, Jr.

Russian Disregard of Obligations

Sometimes there seems to be no sense of honor in the St. Petersburg government to compel it to respect its treaty obligations with other countries. It does not hesitate to break them, if it thinks it can do so with impunity. By the treaty of 1832, Russia and the United States each agreed to honor the passports of the other and admit citizens bearing them to travel, fully protected, within their borders. The United States has followed this agreement to the letter, but Russia has failed to do so. Gentiles she has usually admitted, but since the signing of the treaty she has refused to permit the entry of Jews. Thus some of our best and most influential citizens are barred from entry, no matter what their mission. Three-quarters of a century of this kind of treatment has filled this country with disgust. Resolutions were recently introduced into both houses of congress to abrogate the treaty of 1832. News that the old agreement was likely to be chloroformed alarmed Russia, and the foreign minister at once communicated with the Washington authorities. That was the time for the United States to have used a firm hand, but instead the officials accepted Russia's promise of better faith. Russia expressed her sorrow that the charges were true, and promised to rectify the matter by legislation, but said it might take a long time because of a duma hostile to the measure, and because the duma is buried in a constitutional wrangle with the government. This charge, that the trouble is due to conflicting laws and can only be rectified by legislation, is said to be entirely false. Numerous cases are cited where the Russian supreme court declared despotic maltreatment of the Jews unconstitutional, and decrees were ignored by the czar and his ministers. Russian provincial governors often override the rights of Jews and they are imprisoned, or banished, without provocation, with the approval of the general administration. This statement reveals the fact that the passport trouble is not a constitutional one. Now we receive the intelligence that the Russian government never intended to place the matter before the duma for consideration. It is officially stated that no change in policy is even contemplated. Russia impertinently says, in substance, that she will act as she pleases in regard to our passports. Some solution must be found soon. If the treaty is worthless, let it be annulled, and when Russia has experienced a little indigestion due to the absence of it, perhaps she will be in a frame of mind more fit to adjust the matter by enforcing the provisions of a new treaty.

The Short Ballot

Asked why he favored the short ballot, and why he regarded the commission form of municipal government as progressive, Dr. Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard University and chairman of the National Municipal League's Executive Committee, made this reply:

"I have no views with regard to the short ballot that are not obvious. It is clear that the long and complicated ballots in use confuse the voter and make it impossible for him to know most of the persons for whom he is voting; he, therefore, must accept the opinion of somebody else—either the party organization or some other steering machinery.

"Commission government is entirely separable from the short ballot, except that it reduces the number of department heads to be voted for. The principal advantages of commission government is its subordination of the employes, combined with the better classification and assemblages of the executive functions. For example, streets, bridges, sewers, and gas can better be handled by one department than by four.

"The short ballot is like all reforms in government—they help good government, but do not guarantee it. When the most nearly perfect political methods are adopted, there will still be plenty of bad government because of the defects of human nature."

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Baptist

Dr. Clifford on Baptist Principles.

Among the distinguished men who spoke at the recent meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Philadelphia no one commands greater respect thon Dr. John Clifford of London, president of the alliance. His ability, his patriotism, and his zeal for God entitle him to the confidence of his brethren. In his presidential address he states thus his conception of Christ's authority as Baptists understand it:

But this organization is a World Alliance of Baptists, and that means that the catholic principles on which we base ourselves we derive straight from Jesus, are accepted on His authority, and involve in all who accept them total subjection of soul to His gracious and benignant rule. He is Lord of all, and He only is Lord of all. Our conception of Christ's authority is exclusive. We refuse to everybody and everything the slightest share in it. It is absolute, unlimited, indefeasible, admits of no question, and allows no equal. The right to rule in the religious life is in Him and in no other. In no other, be he as saintly as St. Francis, as devout as St. Bernard, as loving as John, or as practical as Paul; not in any office, papal, episcopal or ministerial; not in tradition, though it may interpret the goings of the Spirit of God, and illustrate the effects of obedience and disobedience; not in the Old Testament nor yet in the New, though their working values are great since they enable us to know His mind, understand His laws of conduct, and partake more freely of His spirit; not in the long annals of the life of the church; or the agreement of "the whole church" at one special moment; yet we welcome the illumination church history affords of His administration of the social life of His people, of its aim and spirit; of its difficulties and hindrances, and of the sufficiency of His grace. Jesus Christ holds the first place and the last. His word is final. His rule is supreme.

In short, the deepest impulse of Baptist life has been the upholding of the sole and exclusive authority of Christ Jesus against all possible encroachment from churches, from sections of churches, from the whole church at any special moment of its life and action, as in a Council, from the traditions of the elders, from the exegesis of scholars, and from the interesting but needless theories of philosophers. It is the momentum of that one cardinal idea which has swept us along to our present position.

Christ's Idea of Unity.

The sort of unity for which Jesus prayed is described in the following manner by Dr. Clifford:

But with equal frankness we say that a visible, formal, and mechanical unity has no charm for us whatever. It is not the unity Jesus prayed for; nor is it the unity that increases spiritual efficiency, augments righteousness, or advances the Kingdom of God. Nor can we forget that the welding of the churches together by bands of state gold mostly leads to slavery and not freedom, to subserviency and not manliness, to stagnation and not life. As to the unity of Rome, the unity of an ecclesiastical empire rigidly ordered under one priest as emperor, history has judged it, and condemned it, out and out. We distinctly disavow any hankering after a world-wide unity of organization on the platform of that of the Seven Hills, on the one hand, or that of Moscow on the other, confident that it would suffocate originality of thought, block boldness of initiative, quench enthusiasm and fetter souls in what ought to be the very citadel, and best defence, of freedom. Unity of life, of love, and of governing ideas and ideals, let us have by all means, but unity of "order" of "machinery" of of "creed," is not in keeping with the "unity and diversity" either of Nature or of Grace.

Besides it avails nothing to make light of the fact that we do not think as Christendom thinks on the vital elements of Christianity. The great historic churches are against us: the Roman Catholic, the Eastern, the Anglican, and some other communions; and against us on subjects that go to the uttermost depths of the soul of the gospel of Christ; and therefore "Separation" is one of the inevitable conditions of faithfulness to our experience of the grace of God, to our interpretation of the claims of Jesus Christ, and to the principles He has given as the ground and sphere of our collective life. It connot be helped. We accept the isolation, and all the penalties it involves.

Religious Progress of the Negro.

Those who get their idea of the negro's progress from newspaper reports of lynchings have no just appreciation of what has been done since the Civil War. Some figures given by Dr. Booker T. Washington to the Baptist World Alliance justify the negro's pride in his race:

"I am proud I am an American citizen, that I was a slave, that I am a negro and a Baptist. We have 2,261,000 negro Baptists, which is more than either the Northern or Southern Baptist Convention. When you white Baptists get where you can agree we are ready to absorb you. When we came here we were twenty in number. Now we are ten millions. If any one is off color he falls to our pile. The negro is the only dark-skinned race to live alongside of a white race and survive. We started out with only a few chickens gathered from miscellaneous sources. In the South we now have $600,000,000 worth of property and fifty-six banks. When we catch up with the American white man there will be no one ahead of us. Fifty-eight per cent of our race can read and write. We have 32,000 ministers, 56,000 churches and $56,000,000 worth of church property. We are going fast. A negro was arrested and put on trial for being in a shooting scrape. The judge asked him if he heard the bullet. 'Yes, sir, I heard it twice; once when it passed me and once when I passed it.' An old negro had a dream that he went to the bad place and there every white man was holding a negro between him and the fire. I used to fight. But I recalled the fact that when I was holding the other boy down in the ditch I had to go down with him. We have a great future. Some have no future. Old Aunt Caroline said, 'I'se done been where I'se gwine.' All our problems can be solved. An old preacher, in order to be in time for a train, asked a white driver to take him. The white man refused. The old man said, 'You get in and ride and I will drive.' That settled the problem. We went into slavery pagan; we came out Christian."

Roman Catholic

Indian Education.

The manner in which the Indians have been treated by the government of the United Stats and by land grabbers and other plunderers calm our indignant feelings when we read criticisms like this from the Catholic World:

Under the regime of the Franciscans, the Indians were gathered around the mission churches, and their lives were regulated by these devout men. At stipulated hours they attended mass, went to their daily toil, and assembled for evening devotions. They were taught to cultivate the land, plant grains and fruits and to live decently. When secularization came, it brought a host of the evils of civilization to these creatures. There moral condition today is frightful. They drink, gamble, and race horses, while purity among the women is unknown. They are dirty, lazy and ungrateful. Far, far better had it been to have left the Franciscan fathers in control of them. Secularization took away from them all that they had, and gave them absolutely nothing in its place.

Separation of Church and State in Portugal.

We Protestants of America are usually glad to hear that some country of Europe has broken the bond that unites church and state. We do not believe that a state church can adequately represent the religion of Jesus. Our Catholic friends are apt to think otherwise. They are entitled to be heard. The following criticism of the Protestant view of separation in Portugal, as that view is expressed in the Continent, comes from the Catholic World:

Referring to the proposed law for the separation of church and state in Portugal, this paper severely animadverts on what it styles the "stubborn intransigency" of Pius X, as made evident by his treatment of both France and Spain, and in a still greater degree by his way of dealing with the Portuguese proposal even though, as the Continent expressly asserts "The Portuguese authorities, in comparison with the French and Spanish statesmen, are very much more complaisant and have offered the Pope opportunities to abate his antagonism without humiliation." How little truth there is in this statement will appear from the account of the provisions of the proposed law, from which it will be seen that so far from being better than the French they are much worse. Not only are all the present possessions of the church to be appropriated, but also all future acquisitions; if a congregation desires to build a new church, the building is to pass after ninety-nine years to the state. All gifts made to the church are to be handled by parochial commissions, and the church is to receive only one-tenth, the remainder to be distributed as the government thinks fit. The state is to appoint the professors in seminaries; these seminaries are to be reduced from thirteen to five in number; convents of nuns are to be abolished, priests are to be encouraged to marry, by pensions to be given to their wives and children. The stipends which are to be given the priests themselves, the giving of which at all is considered by the Continent as so striking a mark if the liberality of the government, are to remain under the control of the parochial commissions and other state bodies, and those are generally opposed to the church. It is hard to see how any Pope, or, in fact, any one who is friendly to the church or to religious freedom, could approve of proposals so distinctly anti-religious and even despotic. Nothing could be more opposed to American principles.

Methodist

The Methodist Episcopal Church has 119 schools and colleges. The value of buildings and grounds is twenty-six million dollars. The amount in the endowment funds is equal to that invested in buildings and grounds. The number of students last year was 22,935.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—SILAS JONES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the months to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES.—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

False Assumptions and Arguments of the Enemies of Temperance

The mother of John Wesley gave this bit of wisdom to her son: "Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sense of God, or takes off the relish of spiritual things—in short, whatever increases the strength and authority of your body over your mind—that thing is sin to you, however innocent it may be in itself."

Many of the arguments of the enemies of temperance come from men who have no respect for reason or conscience. They are lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God and of righteousness. The joys which reward the students of human experience and of nature are unknown to these persons. The saint who glories in the tribulations incident to the service of God and man appears to them as a fool.

It is often assumed that drink makes a man a good fighter. It certainly starts many a quarrel. But commanders of armies and navies are learning that sober men are the best officers and privates. Kaiser Wilhelm says, "Victory in the next war will crown the banners of the nation that consumes the least alcohol." Admiral Charles Beresford of the British navy says, "I do not believe alcohol in any form ever had or ever will be any good." In his Soudan campaign Kitchener did not allow a drop of alcohol to be used outside the hospitals.

The old superstition that drinking men are well protected from disease is still alive and seems to have the promise of many more years. The facts do not have much weight with men who are held by this superstition. The drinking man cannot resist disease like the total abstainer. Pneumonia attacks him more frequently and his chances for recovery from it are fewer than those of one who does not drink. It has been found that the war against tuberculosis must be combined with that against alcoholism.

The desire for drink has to be encouraged. This is quietly ignored by the advocates of the saloon. Few men would believe that they needed alchoholic drinks if it were not for the organized traffic which creates a market by teaching boys and young men to use its goods. "Men will drink." Yes, after the appetite has become insatiable a man will sell the bread and clothes of his children for drink. But where it is not fashionable to drink and where the opportunity is lacking, men are sober and prosperous who, if the enticements of the saloon had been presented to them in their youth, would now be ragged sots.

For the benefit of any who think they cannot endure cold weather without a glass or two of whiskey, I give the testimony of Dr. Grenfel as it appears in the Pilgrim Teacher. "Why do I not want alcohol as a beverage in a country where cold is extreme, exposure is constant, and physical conditions are full of hardships? Simply because I have seen men go down in the struggle for want of that natural strength which alcohol alone has robbed them of. The fishermen that I live among are my friends, and I love them as my brothers, and I do not think I am unnecessarily prejudiced or bigoted when I say that alcohol is inadvisable, after one has seen it robbing his best friends of strength, honor, reason, kindliness, love, money and even life.

"During twenty years' experience on the sea and on the snow in winter—an experience coming after an upbringing in soft places—I have found that alcohol has been entirely unnecessary.

"I have been doctoring sick men and women of every kind and I have found that I can use other drugs of which we know the exact action and which we can control absolutely with greater accuracy in cases of necessity for stimulating the heart."

It is assumed that certain classes of men must have the saloon for their entertainment. The sailor, the miner, the logger, and others engaged in hand to hand contests with nature are supposed to find their natural enjoyment in carousals. That some of them do seek enjoyment in the saloon only shows that they have been brought up to that sort of thing or that nothing better is provided for them. The experience of Dr. Grenfel among the fishermen of Labrador is of value here. He says, "I know of no set of men happier and enjoying their lives more than the crews of my own vessel, and the many, many fishermen who, like ourselves, neither touch, taste nor handle it." [Midweek Servive, July 19. Ps. 24:1; I Kings, 18:16-18; Ecc. 8:11-13; Hab. 2:9-14.] S. J.

A Letter From Z. T. Sweeney

Dear Brother Morrison: On my return home I found The Christian Century of June 15, containing my letter and your reply and while I fully appreciate the Christian spirit of your reply, I regret to say that it is not entirely satisfactory. Permit me to call your attention to a few statements from your editorial which will present the matter as I view it. First, you say that baptism is a solemn act of self-consecration to Christ and initiation into the church of Christ. Second, that baptism was solemnized in apostolic times exclusively by the act of immersion in water. I would call especial attention to the word "exclusively." Third, affusion became the substitute for immersion in the third or fourth century. Fourth, nobody had a right then to make such a change. Fifth, nobody has the right now to make such a change.

1. (a) If the above statements from your pen be true, and they are true, what right have you or any others to recognize the validity of anything but immersion in water? In the first sentence of your article, "Irregular but not Invalid," in the Century for June 22 you say, "Disciples of Christ contend that the baptism by which most Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists became members of the Church of Christ is irregular, but they do not deny that it is valid." Now, Brother Morrison, I have been a preacher of the gospel for some years before you were born, and (b) I wish to stand up and be counted among those who deny that any baptism is valid except that which was practiced by the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, acting under the vocal command given them by Jesus Christ himself in the great commission.

2. I am not a bigot and I can fellowship my Christian brethren spiritually when they have the spirit of Jesus Christ; I can fellowship them practically when they practice the precepts of Jesus Christ and I can fellowship them formally when they obey from the heart the form of doctrine required by Jesus Christ. A man may have the form of Christianity and deny the power thereof; he may have some of the power of Christianity and deny the form thereof. In either case he is defective and if I am true to the gospel I must challenge his attention to that defect.

3. In conclusion I wish to call your attention to the difference between what is merely statutory and what is organic or constitutional in any form of government. A man may defy or override the statutory law of his government and be guilty of only a crime or misdemeanor, the punishment for which may be slight; but when a man defies or overrides the organic or constitutional law of the government, he is guilty of high treason, the punishment for which is death. Baptism is a part of the organic or constitutional law of the Kingdom of Heaven. It took God four thousand years to develop Jesus Christ; it took Christ thirty-three years to develop one single command which is embraced in the great commission, and we are told by the sacred historian that on the day in which he had given this commandment by the Holy Spirit to his apostles whom he had chosen, he was taken up into heaven. His work was done.

4. All the conditions of admission into the kingdom of God are found in that one commandment and baptism is one of those conditions. The man who overrides that commission or changes it, or substitutes something else for it is guilty of high treason against the kingdom of God. If you can change a single item of that commission, you can change it all. You can change anything in the kingdom of God. If you can substitute sprinkling for immersion, you can substitute "do penance" for "repent:" you can substitute "think" for "believe:" you can do away with sprinkling, pouring and immersion and substitute the rubbing of oil behind a man's ear for baptism; in fact, you can displace anything in the kingdom of God with something else.

5. In our desire for Christian union we ought not to be lead into any form of union except union in Christ. This is the form of union for which the leaders in this great union movement have always plead, and a man is skating on pretty thin ice when he attempts to commit the church of Jesus Christ to any other platform of union.

I would like to see the union of all Christians before I die, but I would infinitely prefer to die calling a sectarian and divided world to a basis of union which has been prepared by the Almighty himself than to succeed on some other basis.

Sincerely and fraternally,
Z. T. SWEENEY.

Columbus, Ind.

1. (a) Our good friend falls again into the same mistake which we pointed out to him in our former reply. We fear he has read our direct answer to his communication less carefully than our editorial entitled "Irregular but not Invalid" to which his present communication mainly refers. He asks: "What right have you or any others to recognize the validity of anything but immersion in water?" Our reply is that we do not recognize the validity of anything else. The question under discussion is the validity of baptism—of baptism as administered by Presbyterians, Methodists and others— not the validity of either the physical act of affusion or of immersion by which it is solemnized. We are glad to have General Sweeney's approval of our definition of baptism (quoted in his letter above) as a solemn act of self-consecration and initiation into the church. This of course makes baptism a much larger and richer act than immersion. Immersion in water is a part of the act of baptism, the symbolic, objective part, but by no means the whole of the act, nor yet the essential part of it. It is to that total act—a joint act of the personal will of the candidate and the corporate will of the church—that the term "validity" is applicable, not to the outward physical symbol which marks and publishes the act. It does not make sense to assert that the physical act either of affusion or immersion is valid or that it is invalid. The term does not apply at all. But one may affirm, of course, that the irregular form of affusion, when substituted for the original and historic symbol, immersion, invalidates the baptism of those who submit to it. And this we understand is the position Mr. Sweeney wishes to take. It is this position The Christian Century, in agreement with the implicit logic of the Disciples plea and in agreement with their actual attitude, squarely denies.

(b) If by this statement Mr. Sweeney means "to stand up and be counted among those who deny" that Presbyterians and the others are members of the church of Christ on the ground that their baptism is invalid, it puts him, of course, in a clear, logical position. We are not sure just how he would have us construe his utterance.

But if he holds with The Christian Century and the Disciples that Presbyterians are members of the Church of Christ, then he must tell us how they became members of the Church of Christ without valid baptism. And if he holds with The Christian Century and the Disciples that Presbyterian churches are churches of Christ, then he must tell us how this can be if the baptism by which their membership is constituted is invalid.

The Christian Century, in agreement with the Disciples, knows of no way of becoming a member of the Church of Christ except by baptism. If there is any other way, our discussion of the validity or invalidity of affusion-baptism as administered in, say, the Presbyterian Church, is futile and immaterial. It must be kept in mind that we are discussing, not the baptism question, but the question of church membership. There is no difference between Mr. Sweeney and The Christian Century as to the practice of baptism.

Our duty to practice Christian union with all Presbyterians who may wish to practice Christian union with us rests upon the unexceptionable fact that they are already members of the Church of Christ. Our recognition of their Christian Church membership carries with it the recognition of the validity of the baptism by which their membership was constituted. We may take exception to the regularity of their baptism in that some other symbol was substituted for the historic and appropriate symbol found in the New Testament, but we cannot deny the efficacy or validity of their baptism—if we acknowledge them as members of Christ's Church.

2. This paragraph sets forth an analysis of "fellowship" that is clever, and, perhaps, admirable. We half suspect, however, that its cleverness consists more in the pairing and balancing of words than in elucidating a real idea. The Christian Century's way of getting at it is much simpler and more secure than General Sweeney's. We ask concerning a man: Is he a Christian, a member of the Church of Christ? If he is we give him full fellowship,—"all kinds" of fellowship,—spiritual, practical and formal. And if any analyst more subtle than Brother Sweeney could find any other kind of fellowship we should feel impelled by the will of Christ to extend him that kind of fellowship too. Because we believe Presbyterians are Christians, members of the Church of Christ, we cannot in loyalty to Christ withhold any kind of fellowship from them.

3. When one reads this paragraph by itself it sounds as if it might be a help in clearing up our ideas. The distinctions between organic and statutory law are interesting. But when one makes application of these legalistic ideas to actual facts they are seen to be preposterous. To say that a man who is baptized by affusion is guilty of treason against the Kingdom of Heaven makes many of the foremost citizens of the Kingdom guilty of treason. Are Robert E. Speer and Washington Gladden and Jane Addams and W. J. Bryan guilty of treason against the Kingdom of Heaven? Are not they rather among the leaders in the Kingdom of Heaven?

It is not plain just what is meant by Jesus taking thirty-three years "to develop one single command." Nor does it appear that Brother Sweeney makes it relevant to any thing in his argument. We surely have no fault to find with the statement.

4. We are at a loss to know at whom our correspondent is driving in his warning about "changing things" in the Kingdom of Heaven. If he means the Presbyterians and Methodists and Congregationalists, the preposterousness of his reasoning about treason, etc., is obvious in the light of the fact that the structure and substance of the Kingdom of God is made up, in such large proportion, of Christians wearing these names and baptized by affusion.

But if he is directing his warning at The Christian Century we cannot help resenting it after his quotation of our clean-cut statement that nobody ever had the right or has now the right to change from immersion to affusion in administering baptism. The Christian Century is just as deeply interested in the task of correcting this departure from the example of Jesus and the historic precedent of the early church as is our correspondent. This paper will be found right at the front with General Sweeney and all true Disciples, opposing any one who proposes to tamper in any way with the New Testament form of solemnizing baptism.

5. The Christian Century is glad to find in the last two paragraphs a sentiment with which it is in devout agreement. No union is Christian union but union in Christ. To undertake to lead the church to any other kind of union is as fatuous as it is sinful. The basis must be God's basis, not man's.

But no union is on God's basis that excludes those whom God has received into His church. No union is Christian union that selects a certain set of the members of the body of Christ (the immersed) and refuses to receive the rest. The spirit of unity does not discriminate among Christ's followers. If He has received them spiritually, practically and formally it is enough: We too must receive them spiritually, practically and formally—and joyfully!

First Impressions of the Portland Convention

The International Convention of the Disciples of Christ opened at Portland on "the day we celebrate," and it began in celebrating fashion. For great enthusiasm was created by a proposition from R. A. Long. At the Annual Board Meeting of Ministerial Relief he expressed his willingness to give $6,000 per year for five years for this cause provided the Brotherhood would raise from $20,000 to $30,000 per annum for the same period of time.

The first session was held at the White Temple (Baptist), and in the absence of Governor West, Doctor Hinson, the pastor, made the address of welcome. He touched upon the relations existing between the Baptists and the Disciples and was very happy in his manner. He said that he hoped that they would draw even closer together, and he seemed to have struck a responsive chord, for he was heartily applauded. The temper of the convention thus far was expressed in this session and augurs well for the remainder.

The attendance is good—perhaps even better than the local committee expected, for many things combined to cut it down. Portland is on the edge of the continent; it is like having a convention of Disciples in Canada; moreover, the International Sunday-school Convention which convened two weeks ago in San Francisco and the vacation period have contributed in keeping the attendance somewhat lower than usual for a beginning, though large delegations are arriving hourly. When we realize that the distance between Los Angeles, the center of our Western strength, and Portland is upwards of fourteen hundred miles we can realize that it is about as easy to come from the middle west as from Southern California. Anyhow, the papers are saying that it is the "largest church convention ever held in Portland." The local press is very courteous, the weather is ideal and we are feeling pretty good, notwithstanding the recent flurry in our ecclesiastical markets.

One thing is pleasureable—the counter displays of our publishing houses are not so large and loud as formerly. The charts, blood red, and illustrating the "Plan of Salvation" and the "History of Creation" are hardly as conspicuous as on former occasions, though there may be several boxes as yet unpacked. In other words, the spirit of exploitation and of commercialism is not so manifest. In fact, there is a quiet dignity about it all that is positively restful, and so unexpected that if a vested choir should appear and give us a chant instead of a galloping, hilarious hymn from the "facile pen and fertile brain" of some provincial author none of us would be too greatly surprised.

Thus far there has been no ecclesiastical cloud-burst. Just what may happen we do not know; still, there may be a surprise or two in store for some who imagine that the Northwest, especially Oregon, is a stomping-ground for reactionary movements. In-so-far as the Disciples are concerned the state has been compared with certain regions of Texas and Tennessee. However, in meeting the Oregon men at this convention one is impressed with the fact that most of them are not much concerned about "keeping the faith" according to religious journals, but rather according to the Word.

We are missing some of our leaders, both old and young. The familiar form of the beloved Power does not loom before us. Others, too, whom we have seen in many national gatherings are not with us. One thing is noticeable, younger men seem to the fore. Perhaps the work of our national conventions is passing from the hands of the third generation of preachers into the care of the fourth. True, here and there a landmark remains, but the metamorphosis has set in.

J. R. PERKINS.

At the Root of the Problem

The Disciples of Christ in England are leading their more numerous and vigorous brethren of America into the true path for the realization of their plea for unity. A year ago in Caxton Hall, London, an interdenominational Conference on Christian unity was held, promoted by the Disciples but participated in equally by representatives of various denominations, including the Church of England, Congregationalists, Friends, Baptists and others.

At that Conference it was decided to issue a "Manifesto" to all Christian people on behalf of the cause of unity. After a year of study and further conference the "Manifesto" is now sent forth, calling upon all friends of Christian unity to league themselves together for "the one purpose of helping to answer the prayer of our Lord."

The proposed league is to be interdenominational. Its work is to be done within the denominations. It frankly declares its purpose to be to oppose "the denominational idea" and to enlist the denominations themselves in a movement to break down this idea.

This is getting at the problem of unity at the root. This is what Thomas Campbell had in mind at the time he wrote the Declaration and address. It was not the intention of our fathers to start a new organization outside of the already existing organizations, but to quicken the consciences of Christian people everywhere to the sin of division and the duty of union. Following is the simple text of the call sent forth by the Christian Association, signed by Rev. Leslie W. Morgan for the committee:

A FRIENDLY MANIFESTO.

To all religious denominations and Christians everywhere, Greeting:

GREETING:

Encouraged by what has already been accomplished in the development of a spirit of unity, and urged on by what still remains to be done before the prayer of our Lord "that they all may be one," be answered, we believe the time is ripe, and the call urgent, that there should be formed a special organization for the promotion of the cause of Christian Union.

There are societies for almost every conceivable purpose, but a society composed of Christians of all shades of belief, organized for this distinct purpose, does not exist. There are certain societies within certain communions, such as the "Commission on Christian Union" of the American Episcopal Church and the "Council on Christian Union" of the American Disciples of Christ; but the suggestion of this Manifesto is, that there should be formed a League of Christians from all religious bodies dominated by the one purpose of helping to answer the prayer of our Lord.

There are many interdenominational movements that have made splendid contributions toward a better feeling among Christian people, but in the very nature of their organization, with their consequent denominational limitations and loyalty, they are rendered incapable of carrying the matter to a final issue. It is believed, however, that these various societies have prepared the way for an organization frank enough to declare itself opposed to the denominational idea, and bold enough to invite the denominations themselves to co-operate in finding the way to a complete union.

Heretofore the denominational sentiment has tended towards exclusiveness rather than union. This is manifest in the multitude of isolated missions and independent congregations, sadly lacking in the power which comes from co-operative effort. Having wearied of denominationalism they have chosen separation. It remains to show these isolated Christians, as well as the highly organized denominations, the way to union.

All of us need guidance in this perplexing question. Many denominational leaders have indicated their desire for Christian Union, but no practicable program has been placed before the churches. We may not be ready for a program, but an organization such as is suggested would act at least as a clearing house for information on the subject, and might eventually be enabled to give positive leadership in bringing about the desired end.

For the formation of the League the following tentative suggestions are made:

1. NAME.—Christian Union League.
2. OBJECT.—To keep the question of Christian Union before the Christian world with the object of promoting the spirit of unity, creating a desire for genuine union, and to find the true and Christ-like way by which the prayer of our Lord may be answered.
3. METHODS.—The objects of the League to be promoted by prayer in public and in private, by public addresses and sermons, by the circulation of literature, by interviewers, by correspondence both in the public press and with individuals, by conferences, and by such other means as may be devised from time to time.
4. MEMBERS.—The membership to be composed of individual Christians who are in sympathy with the objects of the League, and who will undertake to pray and work for the promotion of Christian Union. Local churches, religious societies and denominational organizations, in sympathy with the objects of the league, to be affiliated.
5. MANAGEMENT.—Provision to be made in the rules for an annual meeting open to all individual members and representatives of the affiliated churches and societies, at which time an executive committee and a general committee shall be elected.
6. FINANCE.—Individual members and affiliated churches and societies to be left free to subscribe such annual amounts for the maintenance of the work of the league as they may elect.

Our English Disciples are not strong enough to back this great idea of Thomas Campbell which they have revived and so clearly announced. There should be given them both moral and substantial support from this side the water. It is by this permeative method more than by the organization of new churches and a new sect that the plea is to run and be glorified in British church life.

And not in British church life alone, but in America and everywhere the Disciples' essential business is to start and foster such a league as this for the leavening of the church with the desire for unity.

Indeed our Disciple ideals have not been fully grasped until we actually become such a league, working not after the fashion of the denominations in a separate body, but holding fellowship with all Christians and with them practicing the will of our common Lord who desires above all other things that all his disciples may be one.

—Mr. Charles Stelzle hit the nail right on the head when he declared, as he did recently, that "It is unfortunate for the church but much more unfortunate for the great body of men and women who are becoming increasingly interested in social questions, that so many of the teachers in departments of sociology are cynical critics of the church. The result of this constant and unjust slander upon the church is to make the young people in their classes bitter and censorious against all religious organizations and their work. A constructive criticism is always in order and should be welcomed by every honest churchman, but the criticism that one hears in the average class in sociology is usually based upon a narrow prejudice, which, however, is mistakenly termed 'a liberal attitude' toward all religious forces, programs, and doctrines."

How much duty-doing is spoiled in the doing! It is grudging, or it is put off, or it is conceited, or it is languid, or it is cross, or it is unkind. It is possible for worms and bugs to make even a rose unlovely, and these ugly qualities will take all the loveliness out of what would otherwise be the finest living. There are ways of helping that make the help a hindrance. There are ways even of comforting that take all the comfort out of it. The form of duty-doing seems to satisfy some folks, but every counterfeit has the shape and design of the true coin; what it lacks is the genuine metal. There is much counterfeit duty-doing.—Congregationalist.

Monday Moods

Another "Preacher's Preacher"

I have just finished reading "The Pilgrim Church and Other Sermons" by Percy C. Ainsworth. I have been a full year getting to this volume over which several of my ministerial friends have waxed eloquent in their praise. I came to these sermons with great expectations and they were realized. Like W. L. Watkinson, though in a different way, Percy C. Ainsworth is "a preacher's preacher." This is to say that he is germinal and suggestive in style and thought. He takes a familiar scripture, plows beneath the surface and in a single paragraph turns up a wealth of homiletic loam. Some really great preachers, men whose influence over vast audiences was extraordinary, in their published sermons lack entirely this quality so luminous in Robertson, in Brooks, Beecher, Watkinson and a few others.

Percy Ainsworth was something of a mystic, a good deal of a poet and a natural born preacher. During his lifetime he was recognized by many as a man of genius and great promise, but it remained for Sir. W. Robertson Nicoll to discover him to the world, after death had closed his brief and brilliant career.

Referring to this volume of sermons (The Pilgrim Church) Dr. Nicoll thus wrote in The British Weekly: "I had not read for five minutes before I recognized that in Percy Ainsworth the church had a great preacher—one of a thousand."

Before one turns to the sermons in this volume of which there are seventeen, he should read the "Foreword" by "W. S. H." It is both a life sketch and a tribute and the human interest bulks very large in its six pages. It adds to the intrinsic worth of the sermons to learn that the author "as a student read widely and profitably" that he was "attracted by good style and fond of the poets," that while there was "a touch of reserve about him," his intimate friends "knew his fund of merriment, his quick eye for the grotesque," and that in his bachelor days "he kept a few snakes as pets and watched their career with an interest half scientific and half humorous" and that when recognition came it "brought him no foolish elation."

Ainsworth was only thirty-six when he died. How many brilliant preachers have perished in their prime? From before McCheyne to Maltbie Babcock and more recently, the list is pathetically long. I know intimately a church that had for six months a young pastor of unusual brilliance and power. None knew him but to praise. He was intense and whole-hearted in his devotion to the ministry. He was as good as he was good and noble looking, and the church was supremely happy with such a superb leader. Suddenly, tragically, the young man was stricken down, not yet thirty-four years of age. Today his gentle face with expression of singular purity looks down from the parlor walls of the church whose members mourned so deeply his loss. His death occurred nearly a decade ago but the influence of his six months' ministry is richer than that of many a pastorate six times as long.

There is a sermon in this volume of Ainsworth entitled, "The Hireling Shepherd" from John 10:12 that is specially fine. Here are five sentences from the heart of the discourse.

"The saints make mistakes. A brave shepherd may make a tactical error, but only a hireling runs away from the wolf. We talk about a man rising to an occasion, but in the last deep truth of things that is a shallow and misleading phrase. No man ever rose to an occasion. If he meets the great occasion and deals with it as it should be dealt with, it is because he is living all the while on the level of that occasion." I am tempted to quote from sermon number four which is based on Mark 14:5 and entitled "A Plea for the Priceless," but I shall not. Every sermon is strong and helpful but I should say that the ones on "Star Counting and Heart Healing" and "Twilight and Trembling" show this rapt spirit at his very best.

In particular have I been impressed with the beauty and appropriateness of the poetical quotations in this volume. They are not many or lengthy but they are chosen with exquisite taste. Take for example this one which crowns a paragraph of tender and pathetic moralization on the incompleteness of the life that now is.

> "Just when we're safest there's a sunset touch,
> A fancy from a flower bell, some one's death,
> A chorus ending from Euripides—
> And that's enough for fifty hopes and fears
> As old and new at once as nature's self."

Bloomington. EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

Interpretations

Mark Twain's Home

Mark Twain's boyhood home is about to be sold. Some altruistic men are leading in an effort to buy it and dedicate it to the public. Every lover of the finer feelings of life will be interested in this movement. The West has as yet very few such historic homes. At a recent dinner the writer of Interpretations said this word:

"There may be some peoples and some individuals that have only a formal and slavish regard for monuments. There can be a monument worship that binds only to a dead past. I have no interest in the type of mind that finds its chief interest in souvenirs, but I believe in monuments and particularly in preserving this home of the illustrious Mark Twain. I believe in monuments, not primarily because they link us to a past for which we should ever be grateful, but because they inspire us to the service of the present and of the future. They speak to us of ideals, and ideals are more important than bread.

"I have much sympathy with the semi-caricature of American life by the brilliant London writer, H. G. Wells. Attending once an antiquarian society meeting in Boston the talk was so entirely of the past that he says the atmosphere grew stuffy and he could stand it no longer, so he took his hat and went out into the fresh air. But singing in his ear was this refrain: Every good book has been written, every worthy song has been sung, every great painting has been painted and every noble deed has been done. He thought the girls of Wellesley were too much concerned with the art of Rome and too little with the life of Boston and New York.

"At last he went to Washington, which he was told was the intellectual center of America. He thought here all will be thinking in terms of present-day needs; but about the only question asked of him was, have you been out to Mount Vernon to see the grave of Washington. 'Praise the Lord,' he said, 'I did not go, for I was interested in the living and not the dead.'

"But George Washington has been a great inspiration to the living; and so will Mark Twain continue to be. It is because of this I am in favor of preserving for our citizenship and the citizenship of the world that best of all monuments, his boyhood home. It has more inspiration for the living than a marble statue.

"Mark Twain interpreted to the heart of the world the lowly and common western life of his time. He knew this life and he wrote as he saw. He will not live by his historical novels, but by his interpretations of the humanity, humor and struggles of the people he came to know while he lived here. He was not at home with fine writing; but was one of the world masters in revealing the inwardness of boys and men unsophisticated. He was a great interpreter of life—he interpreted us to ourselves, and we looked up and laughed; and when we laugh we go forward to duty with new courage. A boyhood friend of Mark Twain's said to me the other day: 'This Mark Twain is a greatly over-estimated man; why, I myself was a great deal smarter in school than he.' I do not doubt it. Many Hannibal men doubtless were smarter. Yet Mark Twain was the only one who spoke to the heart of the world. Others might have done so, but they somehow failed to express themselves. They never got started or refused to persist.

"The old home of Mark Twain certainly would be an inspiration to many youths of this city. Surely some of them would through this inspiration come to believe in themselves and in the future and determine to write a book that no man as yet has written, to sing a song that no singer as yet has sung, to paint a picture that no artist as yet has painted, and to do deeds that no hero as yet has done. It is in making personality that Hannibal is to find its true glory. If all Hannibal were now vacant ground and I were asked to reassemble the buildings, I would place all the factories and shops and stores on the low grounds; then I would locate the homes on the smaller hills; then on the small mountain tops (not counting convenience) I would put a great school and a great church to dominate the city. On the lowlands we would make our livelihood, on the smaller hills we would culture our children in love. But up at the very top we would gather our youth for inspiration, for vision, for power. Up here, at least figuratively, I would place the home of Mark Twain. It would be a school to fire the ambition, to warm the heart, and to set free the imagination of every discerning youth. But the mountain top would exist not for itself, but to send forth to the service of the lowlands and smaller hills that the brotherhood of man might be realized."

Hannibal. GEORGE A. CAMPBELL.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT

Section XXX. The Last Days of Judah

July 23. Text for Special Study, Jeremiah 36.

QUESTIONS.

1. What king followed Josiah upon the throne of Judah?
2. What important battle was fought between the Egyptians and Babylonians?
3. What was the character of the Babylonians in the thought of the Hebrews?
4. What was Jeremiah's position after the death of Josiah?
5. Was his life ever actually in danger?
6. What kind of a king was Jehoiakim?
7. What were the occasions of his revolts against the Babylonians?
8. Why did Jeremiah oppose Jehoiakim?
9. What was Jeremiah's relation to the other prophets of his time?
10. What made Jeremiah's message so unpopular?
11. Why was the prophet tempted to discontinue his work entirely?
12. How did Jeremiah prepare his roll of messages?
13. Where was it read and by whom?
14. How was it brought to the attention of the king?
15. What did Jehoiakim do with the roll of the prophet?
16. What was Jeremiah's prediction regarding the death of Jehoiakim? Was it fulfilled?
17. Who followed Jehoiakim as king?
18. What was the fate of Jehoiachin?
19. What were the characteristics of Jeremiah's message during this period?
20. What were the four phases of his preaching?

1. THE REIGN OF JEHOIAKIM

The death of King Josiah in the unfortunate parley or battle at Megiddo changed all the plans of the reformers in Judah. The people of Jerusalem took one of Josiah's sons, Jehoahaz by name, and placed him upon the throne. But after only three months the king of Egypt, who was now the master of the land, took this prince from the throne, removing him in chains to Egypt. He placed in power another son of Josiah, Eliakim, whose name he changed to Jehoiakim. Soon after, the important battle of Carchemish was fought on the Euphrates, between Egypt and the newly rising power of Babylonia under its aggressive and successful king Nebuchadrezzer (605 B. C.). From this time forth Babylon became the synonym for all that was cruel, oppressive and heathenish in the vocabulary of the Hebrews. That usage prevailed even to New Testament days and Rome, that became the new tyrant to persecute the church, is often spoken of as "Babylon" in the apocalyptic literature of early Christianity. The Hebrews conceived an intense fear and hatred of Babylonia whose armies were recruited from the wild and brutal Scythians and other vandals of the time. Perhaps it was this fact which explained the frequent revolt of the nations against the seemingly impregnable power of the empire. There came times when even the certainty of defeat seemed better than the awful cruelty practiced by the soldiers of Nebuchadrezzer.

This period was the beginning of Jeremiah's lifelong martyrdom. Isaiah had lived in a time when it was possible to preach the comforting and optimistic doctrine of national success. He believed and insisted that Jerusalem was protected of God because she was essential to his program. He felt confident that nothing could harm the holy city. But Jeremiah knew that the time of hope was past. It was his unhappy fortune to proclaim the fact that Judah's day of redemption was gone, and that nothing remained for her but captivity (ch. 7-10). He realized the burden of his mission sorely (9:1, 2). He saved himself with difficulty from plots against his life (ch. 26). He was scourged and mistreated (ch. 20). Yet he felt under the constant constraint of a prophet to oppose the royal program.

2. JEREMIAH'S PERILS.

Jehoiakim was an easy-going, luxurious, selfish, conceited king. His chief activities were the gathering of funds from his people to expend in building schemes in his capital. He was denounced by Jeremiah for his conduct, and was constantly warned by him against his impending folly of revolt from his Babylonian overlord. Yet it was only the third year of his reign when he committed the folly of rebellion. It was strange that such open and courageous words of rebuke as those of Jeremiah did not bring him into even greater peril. Another prophet Urijah, who spoke against the royal policy after the manner of Jeremiah, was put to death by the king (Jer. 26:20, 21).

Jeremiah stood practically alone as God's representative in a time of wide apostasy. There were many prophets to be sure, but they were for the most part the smooth, unaware, easy-going, professional preachers whose words awakened no conscience. Then there were preachers of the type of Hananiah who were fired with a nationalism that overlooked entirely the deeper moral issues perceived by Jeremiah. They delighted to insist that God would take care of his people.

Thus Jeremiah was doomed to preach an unwelcome message while the false prophets persuaded the people that he was unpatriotic, uninspired, and pessimistic (14: 13, 14). This made his task almost too difficult to endure. His cries of anguish were at times pathetic (15:15-18, 20:14-18). At other times however, when his enemies planned schemes against him, he broke out into a storm of fury and poured forth maledictions upon them (18:18-23). Even his patient nature turned at last against such slander and opposition. Once he said he would utterly refuse to speak in the name of God. But the divine word was a fire within his bones and he could not forbear to speak (20:7-9).

3. THE KING AND THE PROPHET. (Chap. 36.)

His relations with Jehoiakim were not friendly, and he rarely endangered his life by visiting the court. But in the fifth year of this reign Jeremiah prepared a roll containing the substance of his messages during the past few years. This he wrote by dictating to his faithful friend Baruch. Later he sent his secretary to the temple to read the contents of the roll in the hearing of the people, on the occasion of a public fast. The document attracted the attention of some of the courtiers who asked Baruch to come to the palace and read it to them.

This he did, and the word filled them with such concern that they resolved to call the attention of the king to the matter. Jehoiakim was sitting in his winter palace in Jerusalem with a brazier of coals burning before him. At first he gave attention to the reading of the document by one of his servants. But soon he became angry at the prophetic message, seized the roll, cut it into shreds with his dagger, and threw it into the flames. Some of his officers protested against this misuse of the prophet's roll. But in vain. The king even attempted to seize Jeremiah and Baruch, but was unable to lay hands upon them for they had wisely concealed themselves.

This and other acts of outrage filled the heart of Jeremiah with deep anger against the man who misused the office of king. He poured out his reproofs in strong words (22.13-19), warning Jehoiakim that he would come to an unhappy end and be buried without honor. This prediction does not seem to have been fulfilled, as Jehoiakim passed away just on the eve of the tragedy of Jerusalem's first downfall.

4. JEHOIACHIN AND THE FIRST DEPORTATION.

The fruits of the rebellious conduct of Jehoiakim were not reached until shortly after his death. Four years before he had revolted from the power of Babylonia (601 B. C.), but in 597 in spite of warnings and experience he committed the folly of a second rebellion. His death almost at the moment when the invading army was at the door prevented him from paying in person the penalty of his folly. But his son, Jehoiachin, fell a victim to his father's misconduct. This king, who is also called Jeconiah and Coniah, suffered the chastisement due a rebel and witnessed the spoilation of his capital.

The court and many of the leading citizens, artisans and soldiers to the number of ten thousand, were taken to Babylon. And the unhappy king was shut in a Babylonian prison for a period of thirty-seven years, only to be brought forth a pallid, weak old man after the death of Nebuchadrezzer (Jer. 22:24-30, 2 Kings 25:27-30). Cf. Jer. 52:31-34). An uncle of the king named Mattaniah was placed upon the throne of Judah, and his name changed to Zedekiah (2 Kings 24:8-17). The words of the prophet were speedily reaching fulfilment. The city had not fallen, and there was still a remnant of power in Judah, but Jeremiah knew that it was only a question of time and that the beginning of the end had come.

5. THE WORK OF JEREMIAH.

Jeremiah was essentially the prophet both of disaster and of revival. He had no doubt that Jerusalem would fall soon under the onset of Babylonian power. Yet he was equally certain that the doctrine of the remnant, preached so earnestly by Isaiah, would be realized in Judah, and that a revival would come after the nation had paid the penalty of its long unfaithfulness in a seventy-year capacity.

The work of Jeremiah easily divides itself into four phases: there was first the time of fierce rebukes during the early days of Josiah; secondly, there was the time of disallusion and silence that followed the failure of the Deuteronomic reform; then there was the period in which he was gradually clearing his soul of doubt and questions, from the time of Josiah's death to the appearance of the Babylonian armies before Jerusalem; and finally there was the time of full illumination and power during the siege and at the fall of the city.

With singleness of purpose Jeremiah devoted himself to his great life work. He was never married, believing himself consecrated from birth to the high enterprise of his life (16:1). Like Hosea he was deeply sensitive to the moral deficiences of the time, especially the sins against the purity of domestic life. He saw that the conduct of the nation was bringing it to its death. Yet he believed that this death was only the prelude to a more glorious resurrection, in which the divine message would be understood and realized, and Israel become the enlightener of the nations, the beautiful pioneer in the vanguard of the world's progress.

FOLLOWING STUDIES.

The title of section XXXI will be, "Jeremiah and the Fall of Jerusalem," and that of XXXII "Obadiah and the Foes of Judah."

TOPICS FOR SPECIAL STUDY, REPORTS AND PAPERS.

1. The relations of Egypt, Assyria and Babylonia in the last quarter of the seventh century B. C.
2. The doctrine of the inviolability of Jerusalem, as preached by Isaiah and denied by Jeremiah.
3. The character of Jehoiakim of Judah.
4. The relations of Jeremiah to the other prophets of his day.
5. Literary features of the book of Jeremiah.
6. A character study of the prophet Jeremiah.

LITERATURE.

H. P. Smith, "Old Testament History," 260-300; Cornill, "Prophets of Israel," 91-107; Kirkpatrick, "The Doctrine of the Prophets," 291-325; Cheyne, "Jeremiah, His Life and Times." (Men of the Bible); Articles on Jeremiah in the introductions, encyclopedias and Bible dictionaries.

Christian Endeavor Lesson

BY W. D. ENDRES.

Topic July 23, Lessons From the Animals. Ps. 104:10-31. (If convenient have an out door meeting).

This is hardly the source from which we ordinarily look for a lesson for the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting. But this is no reason for rejecting it. The fact is, due to our contentment with long standing habits, our eyes are often closed to many truths which are fairly staring at us. Is it not so in this lesson? Why not study the lives and habits of animals from the religious points of view. Do not all creatures live in God's world? Are they not all his creatures? Then let us open the book of nature and read from God's revelation there as well as from the words of the prophets in these and other days.

One can never cease to be impressed with the perfect way in which the animals live their normal life and fulfil their function in the universe with the instincts with which the creator has endowed them. With a care and a precaution that astonishes the naturalists, the animals provide and protect their young, and preserve their species—in a word they adjust themselves to their life conditions and fulfil their life mission. All this from those creatures which are not endowed with the powers of abstraction.

But when we turn to man, he who is endowed with the highest powers—to think, to reason, to execute—we hold endowments for the more perfect growth of his life in the universe of God, he often actually uses them in a way positively detrimental to his life. Instead of using the fine intelligence which he possesses for the promotion of the ultimate values of his life, health, wealth, knowledge, beauty, sociability, and rightness, he often uctually uses them to the subversion of these high ends and seek the gratification of his appetites which are in themselves good, but which when abused become tyrants and masters, yes enemies of that which they otherwise should serve. The point is then, that quite as much from the animals and beasts of the field as from the holy men of God in all ages we learn the great truth, viz., that we find ourselves in a great universe to which we are adapted and that it is our duty to seek the fulfilment of our lives here to the highest possible degree. No young man or young woman then whether he be a Christian Endevorer or not, has the right to ignore the essential obligation with which he is born into the world.

When then we see any person whether young or old, spending his life in his attempts at immediate gratification of appetites, such as drinking and general debauchery, or personal gain and enjoyment, such as the building up of a fortune large or small, to the neglect and possibly the discomfort of others, he is using his ability to think and plan not for the promotion of the highest life functions. In a word though endowed with the highest of powers he is using them less wisely than do the lower animals the instincts upon which they must depend for their guidance.

After She Graduates—What?

FRANCES KINGDON.

She has lived in a state of responsibility and excitement for weeks, this fair young graduate, whose school days are just over, and she thinks that for a long time she would like to do nothing but just rest. She is so tired after the strain of those final examinations, the rehearsals for the class play, the fittings at the dressmaker's, the farewell parties and the usual wear and tear on the emotions of a young heart at commencement time, that for the summer, anyway, she says she is going to sit around on the porch and read, or lie in the hammock and sleep, and then in the fall she is going to start her life work. Long before the summer is over, however, if she is the average girl, she has had enough "kimono resting" and is weary of aimlessly killing time by occasionally helping mother with a bit of sewing, baking a cake or mixing some salad. She begins to find it a little depressing after awhile to wake up in the morning and wonder what one is going to do all day. After one has lived a very methodical life for four years with an engagement to keep almost every hour, it seems rather appalling to look ahead to years of aimless drifting and unimportance. It does not seem reasonable or fair either to keep on indefinitely asking father for money. Somehow it was perfectly natural and right at college to spend every bit of the checks father sent her, but now she feels urged by a very great desire, a restlessness that cannot be quieted to be independent of the family income, to know all the glad freedom of earning one's own dollars, and to have a real commercial value in the world, as well as an ornamental one.

Mother does not see the situation just this way, however, and talks plaintively of always being able "to buy our daughter what she really needs," and suggests that just staying at home, learning to make her own clothes, keeping up her music a little, helping Mary in the kitchen and sharing in the social life of the community, ought to make her contented and womanly. "But mother," argues the young graduate, "can't you see that isn't enough for me? I want to find a place in life where I am really needed and can be important. I want to do some bit of work a little better than any one else can do it. Now, besides, father is growing old, yet he goes on working every day because he thinks his family needs the money and I'm not helping him at all. He can't afford to buy me another suit this fall, so wouldn't it be grand if I could make enough money to buy one myself? And you know how badly we need a new set of dishes; wouldn't you be proud if I gave you one for a Christmas present? You say you don't want your 'little girl' to be common and belong to the 'employed class,' but mother I tell you I would die of shame if I believed that actually I wasn't worth one cent in the business world; that my brain or hands didn't amount to anything financially. It is not greed for money, either, that I want, but the power and self-respect it gives every individual who can 'deliver the goods.' I couldn't be happy asking poor dear father all his life for money or eke along on pin money from my brothers. Of course, I know that you can take care of me, that the bills can always be managed somehow or other, but that makes me ashamed. I want to take care of myself, earn my own money for clothes, buy little things for the house and save up my own vacation money."

This is the spirit of almost all young graduates after commencement—ambitious, independent and brave, they long to get out in the world and do something, but alas, what is that "something" they want to do? Have they any idea of what value it will be in the business world? The college girl discovers that about all she can do is to teach school. If she has specialized in the languages, science or history, perhaps, she can get a position in the town high school or academy. She can't get a city school without a two years' course at the 'Normal," and teaching the district school is hard, for there are fires to be attended to, long walks in cold weather, boarding at a farm house, besides the difficulty of managing several grades in one room. If she wants a position as librarian she discovers that she must take a special course along that line of work and if she longs to be a "private secretary" she must learn shorthand and typewriting first.

It is all pretty discouraging and after awhile the young graduate comes back to her parents and demands to know why they sent her to college. "For culture," "but what value is that, financially?" "For discipline," "I could get that at home much cheaper." "For friendship,"—"but my friends are scattered from one end of the country to the other."

Church Life

—Following the custom of past years, during the remainder of July and August the size of The Christian Century will not be so large as during the rest of the year.

—To those of our readers who also receive The Christian Standard or Christian Evangelist it is only fair to explain that the reason they are getting Mr. Smith's presidential address a week later in our paper than in the others is that it was assumed in this office that he would prefer not to have it read on Wednesday when it was not delivered by him until Friday. There is a well-defined conscience on this point in secular newspaper offices which it would be well for religious journals to emulate.

* * *

A new church is under process of construction at Hanford, Wash.

A handsome structure is being erected at Oakwood, a suburb of Hannibal, Mo.

F. B. Ellmore, pastor at Chillicothe, Mo., reports three additions on a recent Sunday.

There were twenty-seven additions at the meeting at Marquand, Mo., led by C. B. Stevens.

J. E. Dinger, pastor of First Church, Ft. Worth, Tex., reports five baptisms at a recent service.

There have been one hundred additions to East End Church since John R. Ewers began his pastorate there.

A new church edifice is being planned for the congregation at San Dimas, Calif., to be begun in the near future.

Ben M. Edwards, of Central Church, Chandler, Okla., has resigned his pastorate there.

Harold E. Knott, pastor of First Church, Lynn, Mass., has resigned to accept a call to Melbourne, Australia, his former home.

L. O. Bricker, pastor of First Church, Maryville, Mo., has resigned there and accepted a call to First Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Work is progressing at First Church, Saginaw, Mich., where A. R. Adams ministers. New members are added at nearly every service.

A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor of First Church, Sedalia, Mo., was one of the speakers at the Christian Endeavor Convention held recently at St. Joseph, Mo.

The new house of worship at Gladesville, W. Va., was dedicated on July 2, T. E. Cramblet, president of Bethany College, delivering the sermon.

The congregation of College Hill Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, erected a building in one day recently on their newly acquired property.

The church at Wenatchee, Wash., which was organized seven years ago with fifteen members are rejoicing in the dedication of their splendid new building.

W. C. Lessley, pastor at Tecumseh, Neb., has received the unanimous call of his congregation to remain with them another year at an increased salary.

The congregation at Hat Springs, Ark., has disposed of its old property and purchased a new lot in an excellent location. A building will be erected in the future.

A new church will soon be erected at Danville, Ky., where H. C. Garrison ministers. The total cost will be about $50,000 and of this sum $20,000 has already been subscribed.

Crayton S. Brooks, has concluded his pastorate at New Castle, Pa., and taken up his new work at Portsmouth, Ohio. During Mr. Brooks' pastorate, seven hundred members were added to the New Castle church.

An error in printing in the account of the dedication at Hastings, Neb., made it appear that $13,000 was needed. It should have read $12,000, and as $12,270 was raised the indebtedness was more than provided for.

L. J. Jaggard and Mrs. Jaggard, are now at their former home, Des Moines. This is their first furlough since they began their work at Longa, Africa. They have done splendid service and accomplished much in this field.

As a result of the meeting being held at Magnet, Neb., by Joel Brown of Des Moines, there have been about twenty additions. An Endeavor Society has been formed and the whole work of the church strengthened.

Charles S. Earley sends a good report of the work at Hill City, Kan., their recent missionary collection amounting to $133. Mr. Earley, with A. E. Buss as singer, will be open for engagement for meetings this fall.

B. S. Denny has begun his fourteenth year as corresponding secretary of Iowa. Iowa Disciples are keenly appreciative of Mr. Denny's service, and for his sane, progressive methods. He is also president of the Mississippi Valley State Secretaries Association and a charter member of that organization.

Carl A. Burkhardt, John W. Burkhardt, Claude M. Burkhardt and Hally C. Burkhardt, four brothers, were recently ordained to the ministry at Downey Avenue Church, Indianapolis, Ind. The first three are all graduates of Butler College and the last named is now a student there.

Preliminary plans have been selected for the new church building at Phoenix, Calif. It will be built of reinforced concrete at a cost of about $20,000. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of about 20,000, and there will be a number of Sunday-school rooms, a library, study and social rooms.

The general camp-meeting of Northwestern Texas will be held at Crowell, July 28-Aug. 13. W. A. Haynes of Caney, Kans., and E. C. Tuckermann will be the evangelists. After a four years' pastorate, Mr. Haynes will again enter the evangelistic field, and is now open for engagement.

The new church at Sullivan, Ind., will be dedicated on Sunday, July, 16. George L. Snively of Lewiston, Ill., will deliver the dedicatory sermon. The building is of brick, modern in every particular. It will seat 1,500 and was erected at a cost of $25,000. J. W. Vawter is the minister.

The new church at Humeston, Ia., erected at a cost of $9,000, was dedicated recently by I. N. McCash of Cincinnati, Ohio. When the building was completed, there remained an indebtedness of $3,800, and $4,550 was pledged at the dedicatory service, clearing the indebtedness and leaving a goodly sum in the treasury.

George H. Clarke, formerly of Rensselaer, Ind., has accepted the pastorate of Sixth Church, Indianapolis, Ind., and preached his first sermon there, Sunday, July 2. Mr. Clarke's pastorate of more than six years at Rensselaer was very successful, a new church being erected and the membership more than doubled in that time.

Five years ago, W. H. Morse established the Rose Memorial Mission at Hartford, Conn., and its progress since has been phenomenal. Recently, at its fifth anniversary service, Gen. John P. Harbison, a wealthy citizen of Hartford, offered to erect a chapel to cost $5,000, on the condition that the congregation would raise half of that sum.

W. D. Endres, recently pastor at Harvey, a Chicago suburb, has accepted a call to the church at Kirksville, Mo., a city of 8,000 people with a student population of over 2.000. Kirksville is the home of ostepathy. The church membership is 600. Mr. Endres is a finely endowed and equipped man for this work. He wil lead thte church to new achievements.

On account of the constant depletion of the membership, due to its downtown location, First Church, St. Louis, Mo., will lose its pastor, E. A. Cole. Mr. Cole has done splendid work here during his pastorate of a year, but the constant removal of members from that section of the city made it impossible for the church to meet its financial obligations.

Disciples of Vancouver, B. C., are rejoicing in the purchase of a lot in a splendid location and the prospect of a building to be begun immediately. Services have been held here for the past five years, but the lack of a suitable meeting place has been a serious handicap. The congregation and pastor, Charles C. Rush, are greatly heartened by this forward step and look for great progress in the future.

H. H. Peters, Endowment Secretary of Eureka College, has accepted the work at Arthur, Illinois, for half-time preaching in connection with his work for the college. He began the first of July. The Endowment Campaign is moving along nicely and will be completed by September 1. It will take several months to collect up and properly invest the funds. The committee is now looking forward to this part of the work. The hope is that the entire fund may be collected and properly invested by the January 1912 meeting of the board of trustees.

Following the resignation of Joseph Hapwood who has occupied the president's chair at Virginia Christian College since its founding eight years, S. T. Willis has been made his successor. He was recently installed with impressive ceremonies. This school has just closed a successful year, having an enrollment of two hundred with every prospect for a much larger attendance next year. In the short period of its existence this institution has accumulated property and equipments valued at $200,000, against which there is only about $25,000 unprovided for.

Harry L. Ice, pastor at Shadyside, Ohio, writes us as follows: "The church here has taken a step recently that we feel sure will meet the approval of all progressive Disciples. We have joined the Methodist and Presbyterian brethren in having union meetings on Sunday nights during the months of July and August. We have secured the high school auditorium for these meetings, as neither of the churches would be large enough. The best of spirit prevails among these churches and the writer is just thinking how much better it is and how much more they are showing the spirit of Christ than they did a few years ago when some of the preachers of town would not speak to each other. May God speed the day when all churches will wake up to realize that the day of dogmatism is past and when we can dwell together in peace and harmony. Then as we learn the joy of unity of spirit we will also, as we go to our different churches to worship the same God, learn the necessity of union of strength."

Modern Society and the Church

(Continued from page 3.)

Let us take up for a moment our third step. We say that the Bible is the only authentic and authoritative depository of what is known of our Lord and his religion, and that in our effort to ascertain his will we must appeal to him through the patient and utterly reverent study of the Bible. What shall we say of this but that unless we can be perfected together in the same mind, and in the same judgment, through the instruction of those who were appointed and empowered by Jesus himself to preach and teach his gospel, there is scant hope of any real and proper unity of the church.

But not the least important matter of our present case as a people, is that we should keep and foster the temper of unity among ourselves. The fault, dear brethren, is not in our program, nor in our fellow Christians of the denominations wholly, but in ourselves also if we do not plead as successfully as we would wish to do the cause of unity. They who espouse such a program as ours must possess and grow in the greatness of love, or merit the rebuke and perhaps receive the contempt of all who consider them. The end of the charge is love. The greatest thing in the world, in the church, in heaven, is love.

"And he's an heir of heaven
That finds his bosom glow with love."

Among a people claiming to be dedicated to such a work, and invoking such sanctions as we claim to be dedicated to and as we invoke, personal and partisan strife, ready suspicion of one another, ready destruction of even their best and saintliest, prostitution of the pulpit to the use of divisive theological fads, debasement of a public press founded in the name of Christ upon the monetary support and the moral countenance of a people of Christ, to plead for the unity of the church in Christ into an organ of private gain, or an engine of private grudge, must cry mightily for the reprobation of all good men and the frown of the good God.

Brethren, the supreme heresy is hate; the final measure of orthodoxy is love.

Congress of Baptists and Disciples

It is a pleasure that in the succeeding issue to that in which was given Dr. Holmes' brilliant report of the Baptist gathering in Philadelphia we are able to give our readers the preliminary program of the Joint Congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples to be held at Atlantic City, Nov. 14-16, 1911. Subjects and speakers as announced herewith make an attractive program:

The Program.

"In What Sense Is Christ Divine?"

Writers—Prof. Frank Aubrey Starratt, Hamilton, N. Y.; Rev. Wm. Bayard Craig, D. D. LL. D. (Disciple), New York.

Appointed Speakers—Rev. Homer J. Vosburg, Camden, N. J.; Jacob G. Walker, D. D., Mantua, Pa.

"What Are the Assured Results of Biblical Criticism?"

Writers—Rev. Chas. W. Gilkey, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.; B. D. Rahn, D. D., Springfield, Ill.

Appointed Speakers—Rev. John R. Brown, Providence, R. I.; Prof. Herbert L. Willett, Ph. D. (Disciple), Chicago, Ill.

"What Hinders the Union of the Baptists and the Disciples of Christ?"

Writers—Rev. Peter Ainslie, D. D. (Disciple), Baltimore, Md.; A. S. Hobart, D. D., Chester, Pa.

Appointed Speakers—Pres. W. H. P. Faunce, LL. D., Providence, R. I.; Rev. I. J. Spencer (Disciple), Lexington, Ky.

"Immersionists and Church Union."

Uneeda Biscuit
The Perfect Soda Cracker
Uneeda Biscuit are the perfect soda crackers. The flour used must meet a perfect test. The very purity of the water is made doubly sure. Even the air in the mixing and bake rooms is filtered. The temperature and humidity of the atmosphere is accurately regulated to a uniform degree. The sponge is kneaded by polished paddles. The baking is done in the cleanest of modern ovens. Then Uneeda Biscuit are packed fresh in the purple and white package that keeps them crisp and good from oven to table. Is it any wonder that are recognized as the National Soda Cracker?
Uneeda Biscuit
Never sold in bulk
5¢
In the moisture-proof package
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

A BIBLICAL and THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of high grade located at COLUMBIA adjacent to the UNIVERSITY of MISSOURI

University Credit Courses—Ministerial and Missionary Training Courses. Departments:—Biblical and Systematic Theology, Social Service and Missions, Old Testament and New Testament. Next Term Begins Sept. 18, 1911.

For Catalog and Information address Charles M. Sharpe, Dean.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $31,000 building just completed. Twenty college-trained, experienced teachers, Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior-College course leads to an A. B. degree; College, Preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated catalogue address MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, PRESIDENT

Next session begins Sept. 12. Columbia, Mo.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

Writers—A. T. Salley, D. D. (Free Baptist), Lewiston, Me.; Pres. F. D. Kershner, M. A. (Disciple), Milligan, Tenn.

Appointed Speakers—Pres. Harry Pratt Judson, LL. D., Chicago, Ill.; R. S. MacArthur, D. D., New York.

"Pauperism—Its Causes and Cure."

Writers—Geo. F. Mosher, LL. D. (Free Baptist), Boston, Mass.; Prof. J. P. Lichtenberger, Ph. D. (Disciples), Philadelphia.

Appointed Speakers—Mornay Williams, Esq., New York; Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch, D. D., Rochester, N. Y.

"The Mystical Element in Christianity, What Is It and What Is Its Value?"

Writers—Rev. D. H. Clare, D. D., East Orange, N. J.; Pres. Alfred W. Anthony (Free Baptist), Lewiston, Me.

Minnesota Convention

The annual convention of Minnesota Disciples was held this year, June 12-14, at Austin. In addition to the many able addresses by local workers, a number from other states were present, among them: A. McLean, of Cincinnati, Ohio; John H. Booth, of Kansas City, Mo.; W. R. Warren, of St. Louis, Mo.; William Oeschger, of Bethany, Neb., and C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Dr. and Mrs. Pickett, missionaries in the Philippines, and Miss Adelaide Frost, of India, were also present and gave addresses.

New York Jubilee Convention

The Jubilee Convention of the New York Christian Missionary Society has gone down in history as the greatest state convention ever held in New York state. From the opening address of the Ministers' Congress by Prof. Philip Parsons of Syracuse University to the closing address by P. H. Welshimer of Canton, Ohio, there was a feast of good things too numerous to mention. The program, lasting a week, was worthy of a national convention. Claude E. Hill gave the young people a great vision on Tuesday evening. I. N. McCash, of the A. C. M. S., made one of the greatest addresses on home missions that was ever delivered by one of our secretaries. President Miner Lee Bates of Hiram College, in his practical and forceful manner, presented the subject of Christian Education; S. J. Corey, who needs no introduction to a New York audience, presented the needs of the Foreign Field, and Fred Cline, of St. Louis, presented the work of the N. B. A.. W. R. Warren, of St. Louis, showed us the possibility of the Religious Journal, which no doubt will bring forth much fruit in the Empire State.

Saturday evening the Brotherhood dinner was held and J. K. Shellenberger, of Kansas City, gave us one of his characteristic addresses, which made every man want to do more for his Master. There were 134 men in attendance at the dinner. Following this, Ed. H. Packard, of Boston, delivered an illustrated lecture on "Church Advertising and the Evangelism of the Press," which was an eye opener to all who heard it.

Sunday morning services were held in the various churches, of which we have six in Buffalo and a large number in the surrounding towns. The pulpits were supplied by the visiting ministers, both to the delight of the churches and the ministers. In the afternoon the Bible-schools of the city and the visitors assembled at the Jefferson St. Church and, headed by the Wellsville Bible School Band, marched, over twelve hundred strong, over a mile across the city, through the best residence district of Buffalo, to the Richmond Ave. Church, where a great Model Bible School Session was held in the Model Building of the Richmond Ave. Church. Sunday evening, simultaneous meetings were held for men and women. James A. Whitmore, secretary of the Men and Religion Forward Movement, enthused the men of this great movement that is taking hold of the church, while a fellowship and devotional meeting was held by the ladies.

Monday was Bible School Day. It was great from beginning to end. Marion Stevenson, of St. Louis, and E. W. Thornton, of Cincinnati, conducted conferences through the day, every minute of which was full of something good for the wide awake Sunday-school worker. We were proud to think that our brotherhood possesses two such consecrated and efficient leaders as these two men are.

Monday evening, the closing session of the Jubilee Convention was preceded by a Memorial Service for Herbert Moninger. During the convention the sad news of his death came to us. Tender and appreciative words concerning his life and work were spoken by a number who knew him and worked with him.

The closing address of the convention was delivered by P. H. Welshimer, of Canton, Ohio, on "Making the Wheels Go Round." He speaks not simply theory, but from actual experience, and when we had listened to him we began to understand why he has been able to lead in the great Canton church and school.

Dr. E H. Long, of Buffalo, was reelected president of the state society, and D. Krebiel, of Williamsville, was reelected treasurer. Robert Stewart, of Rochester, was reelected recording secretary. On account of the growing demands of the state work and the growing demands of the Syracuse church, which the present corresponding secretary serves as pastor, it was recommended that a field secretary be employed for his full time. As soon as the suitable man can be secured, he will be placed in the field to do a much needed work among the New York churches. During the convention, fourteen life memberships were subscribed.

R. H. Miller, chairman of the Jubilee Committee and pastor of the Richmond Ave. Church, with V. W. Blair, of the First Church of N. Tonawanda, and B. S. Ferrall, of the Jefferson St. Church, deserve our heartiest appreciation for the splendid program and the plans which were carried to a successful completion, which made the convention the greatest in the history of the Disciple of New York State.

C. R. STAUFFER, Cor. Sec.

Syracuse, N. Y.

Men's Missionary Conference

Lake Geneva, August 2-6.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement will hold a conference of church leaders at Lake Geneva, Wis., Aug. 2 to 6. The design is to combine a delightful vacation with spiritual uplift and training for service. The conference will be national in scope and especially designed for ministers, members of missionary committees, church officers and other workers in the local church. It is hoped that the churches in the central states will avail themselves of the advantages offered by this conference.

A rare opportunity is thus afforded. The conference provides common ground on which the man at the front and the man at the home base meet and share what each has to contribute. There will be inspiration, information and also practical application.

The special feature of the conference will be the report of five commissions. These commissions are made up of missionary experts and the subjects reported on will be of vital interest.

The afternoons will be entirely given up to recreation and whatever group meetings desired.

Lake Geneva is noted for its surpassing beauty and charm. The conference will be held at the Y. M. C. A. Camp, which is recognized as a superb meeting place for conferences of a Christian character.

Lake Geneva is two hours' ride from Chicago on the Chicago and Northwestern and

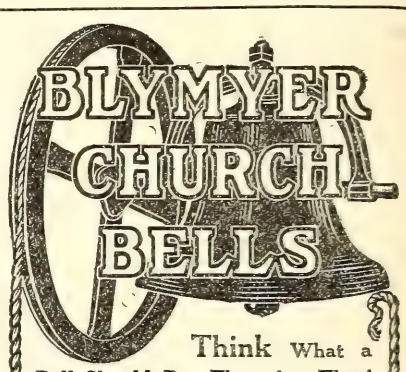
Subscribers Wants

Readers of the Christian Century find its columns valuable for advertising their wants or wares. The charge is one cent for each word, with a minimum of thirty cents for each insertion. Cash must accompany the order to save bookkeeping.

DO YOU NEED HYMN BOOKS for Church or Sunday-school? Write for prices, care of M. NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY Co.

CHURCH CLERK: Do you need church letters? We furnish a well-designed letter in blocks of fifty at 50 cents. Write us, care of X, NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY Co.

J. M. LOWE, GENERAL EVANGELIST.—Church Dedications, Special Addresses. Permanent address, 1350 25th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

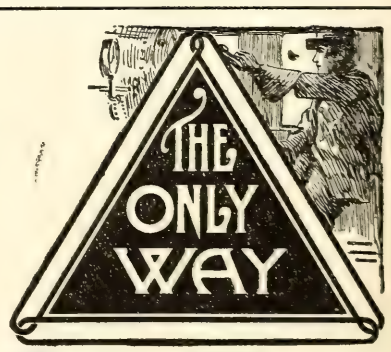


Think What a Bell Should Be—They Are That!

Reasonable in price with tone unsurpassed, having a rich, clear and inviting voice, which is sufficiently loud and far sounding to awaken the sense of duty and obligation in the habitual stay-at-home, and arouse impelling memories in the mind of the recreant.

Write for prices with beautiful and comprehensive bell catalog A and literature free.

THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO.
Sole Makers of "Blymyer" Bells
CINCINNATI, OHIO



Between
CHICAGO
ST. LOUIS
KANSAS CITY
via the
Chicago & Alton

Automatic Block Signals
Rockballasted Roadbed
Electric Lighted Trains
Unexcelled Dining Service
The Only Double Track Railroad
between Chicago and St. Louis

For Time Tables and Fares Address:
R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent
CHICAGO

Chicago, Milwaukee and St Paul Railways. Persons using the Chicago and Northwestern should purchase tickets to Williams Bay. Those using the Chicago Milwaukee and St. Paul should purchase tickets to Fontana. Those coming from the Northwest may use either road and should secure tickets to Fontana. Steamers for the camp will be in waiting both at Williams Bay and at Fontana.

A large villa, six cottages and ninety cottage tents provide every style of lodging, according to the individual taste. The tents are of heavy canvas, comfortably furnished, and from the hygienic standpoint are preferred by most people.

For full conference period, Wednesday lunch to Monday breakfast, inclusive: in tents, $7.50 per person; in cottages, $8.75 per person; in the villa, $12.50 per person. By the day for those remaining part time only: in tents, $2.00 per person; in cottages, $2.25 per person; in the villa, $3.00 per person.

Those who wish to reduce expenses may be assigned two in a room at the following rates: for full conference period: in tents, $6.25; in cottages, $7.50; in the villa, $10.00.

A gymnasium, athletic field, running track, baseball diamond, tennis courts, golf course, rowboats, canoes, sailing yachts, swimming piers, etc., afford means of recreation.

The stay of delegates at Lake Geneva may be prolonged at the same rates until August 14. Delegates may bring their families with them. For full information write F. J. Michel, 19 South Lasalle street, Chicago, or Stephen J. Corey, Cincinnati.

Church Extension Notes

In May the churches did well in paying out on their loans. Grove, Okla., Wylie, Tex., and Comanche, Tex., paid in full after a visit from the corresponding secretary Pittsburg, Kans., Berkeley, Cal., West Fourth avenue, Columbus, Ohio, Altamont, Kans., paid their loans in full. The church at Elon College, North Carolina, a country church was sold and the proceeds, $112, sent to the Board of Church Extension. On this sale the board loses thirty-eight dollars, which makes the total loss to the board in such cases, $1,051 since the beginning of this work. The board has handled in loans $870,000, which is now in the permanent fund, plus the returns on loans since the beginning, $1,145,000, which makes $2,015,000 in round numbers. This loss of $1,051 is about one-twentieth of one per cent of the $2,015,000 handled. Can any commercial or banking business make as good a showing? And yet there are people who say that the business of the church cannot be done in a business-like way.

From October 1, 1910, to May 31, 1911, the new receipts have been $39,918.15. The gain from the churches is $2,528.89. There is a falling behind in individual receipts of $18,872, due to receiving less annuities than last year.

At our June board meeting the following churches were promised loans from the general fund at 4 per cent; Paduca, Tex., $1,000; Winter Haven, Fla., $1,000; Waterloo, Iowa, to save their property from loss, $5,000; St. Louis, Mo., Hammett Place, $7,500; Hanford, Wash., $500; Elkins, W. Va., $2,500; Spur, Tex., $1,000; White Mills, Ky., $300; Lafayette, Ky., $600; Warwood, W. Va., $1,500; Kamiah, Idaho, $250.

From the annuity fund at 6 per cent the following churches were promised: Kingman, Kans., $4,000; Selah, Wash., $1,000; Burlington, Colo., $800; Dodge City, Kans., $1,500 and Nowata, Okla., $3,000.

In May the following loans were paid on completed buildings: Milford, Ill., $3,000 at 6 per cent; Centralia, Wash., $3,500 at 6 per cent; Nampa, Idaho, $2,500 at 6 per cent; El Centro, Cal., $3,000 at 6 per cent; Pampa, Tex., $500 at 4 per cent; Cumby, Tex., $500 at 4 per cent; Holyoke, Colo., $500 at 4 per cent; Coldwater, Kans., $800 at 4 per cent and Roanoke Church, Kansas City, Mo., $6,000 at 4 per cent.

In May the corresponding secretary attended the Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma conventions. Our associate secretary, John H. Booth, attended the Ohio and West Virginia conventions and made most acceptable addresses. Brother Booth visited eight churches in Oklahoma that owed the board money and collected $632.62 cash and raised in pledges $415. Many commendations of his work have come to the board and we believe we have secured the right man.

Preparations are now going on for the annual offering in September which the board hopes will be the most liberal and general in our history.

G. W. MUCKLEY.

William E. Adams, pastor of First Church, Danville, is planning a trip and camping period for the young boys of his church and Sunday-school during the summer. This church enjoyed the presence of Marion Stephenson, of St. Louis, at the graduation exercises of a teachers' training class composed of twenty-eight graduates.

1869 1911

Hamilton College
FOR YOUNG WOMEN
Lexington, Kentucky.

Standardized Junior College Course, requiring two years for a high school graduate to complete.

A shorter Preparatory Course for those not graduates of high school, admitting, without examination, to Vassar, Wellesley, etc.

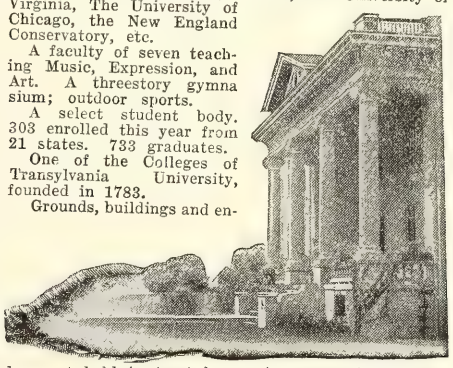
Faculty of 29, from Vassar, Yale, Wellesley, Columbia, Berlin, Leipsig, Paris, Cornell, The University of Virginia, The University of Chicago, the New England Conservatory, etc.

A faculty of seven teaching Music, Expression, and Art. A threestory gymnasium; outdoor sports.

A select student body. 303 enrolled this year from 21 states. 733 graduates.

One of the Colleges of Transylvania University, founded in 1783.

Grounds, buildings and endowment held in trust by an incorporated Board of Trustees, under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ.



by an incorporated Board of Trustees, under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ.

Large, shady, park-like campus. Five modern buildings, heated by steam from a central plant, and lighted by gas and electricity.

Delightful dormitories. Home care. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals. Libraries, laboratories, etc., fully equipped.

Forty-third session begins Sept. 11, 1911. Write for catalogue.

H. G. Shearin, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President

VALPARAISO UNIVERSITY
(Accredited)
VALPARAISO, INDIANA

One of the Largest Institutions of Learning in the United States

Thirty-Ninth Year Will Open September 19, 1911

In 1873 the school had 3 Departments, 4 Instructors and an annual enrollment of 210 different students. Now there are—

25 DEPARTMENTS 191 INSTRUCTORS
and an annual enrollment last year of
5521 Different Students Excellent Equipments

The reason for this remarkable growth is in the fact that the Institution is constantly increasing its facilities, strengthening its courses of study and offering additional advantages, without making the expense to the student any greater

DEPARTMENTS:
Preparatory, Teachers', Kindergarten, Primary, Pedagogy, Manual Training, Scientific, Biology, Civil Engineering, Classical, Higher English, German, French, Spanish, Italian, Elocution and Oratory, Music, Fine Art, Law, Pharmacy, Medical, Dental, Commercial, Penmanship, Phonography and Typewriting, Review.

THE DENTAL DEPARTMENT
recently acquired by the University is the well-known Chicago College of Dental Surgery, one of the oldest and best equipped dental schools in the country, Dr. Truman W. Brophy, Dean. Chicago, Illinois.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.
The course of study in the Medical Department is the same as that of the best medical schools The University owns its college and hospital buildings both in Chicago and Valparaiso. Two years of the work may be done in Valparaiso, thus reducing the expenses, or the entire four years may be done in Chicago.

THE NEW MUSIC HALL
enables the School now to accommodate all who wish work in music.

CIVIL ENGINEERING.
The Revised Course in Civil Engineering is proving a most valuable acquisition. No extra charge.

The expenses are made so low that anyone can meet them.

Tuition, $18 per quarter of 12 weeks.

Board and furnished room, $1.70 to $2.75 per week.

Catalog mailed free. Address,

H. B. BROWN, President,
or O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

CALENDAR:--Thirty-Ninth Year will open Sept. 19, 1911; Second Term, Dec. 12, 1911; Third Term, March 5, 1912; Fourth Term, May 28, 1912. Mid-Spring Term, Apr. 2, 1912; Mid-Summer Term, June 25, 1912.

BELLS.
Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O

EUREKA COLLEGE
A CO-EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION OF HIGHER LEARNING

COLLEGIATE COURSES
Classical A. B.
Science B. S.
History and Economics A. B.
Ministerial A. B.

OTHER COURSES
Preparatory
Commercial
Music: Vocal and Instrumental Manual Training
Public Speaking
Art

For further information address
Eureka, Illinois President, Eureka College

Studies in Social Reform And What to Do

These lessons in Social Christianity, edited by Josiah Strong, who has done as much as any one man to enlist the modern church in the social enterprise, have awakened a response among wide-awake progressive pastors and church workers in all parts of our country. Back of Dr. Strong is an Advisory Committee of thirty leading representatives of the various denominations. Hundreds of groups—Men's and Women's Clubs, Young People's Classes, Adult Bible Classes, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. classes as well as prayer-meetings—have been using these lessons during the two years of their existence.

So wide-spread has been the interest in this line of study that the Publishers of the Bethany Graded Lessons have made arrangements to co-operate with the American Institute of Social Service in supplying the maturer classes of our Sunday Schools with this literature.

Beginning Next October.

No one will take exception to the statement that these Lessons on Social Service are the most vital, timely, thought-provoking, reverent and satisfying treatment of the big problems of the social order that have ever been offered to Sunday Schools.

And not the least of their value is that they elicit an interest at once in every one to whom their subject-matter is mentioned. New classes can be easily organized for this study. Old classes can be doubled and trebled! The Lessons fit up close to the every day life of the people.

Look at These Live Subjects for the Fall Quarter!

DANGEROUS AND UNSANITARY OCCUPATIONS AND CONDITIONS.

OCTOBER: Accidents
1. Christ's Valuation of Life.
2. Our Increasing Number of Accidents.
3. The Reduction of Accidents in Foreign Countries.
4. What We Should Do.
5. Employers' Liability.

NOVEMBER: Sanitation and Hygiene.
1. Health a Christian Duty.
2. Unsanitary Occupations.
3. Sanitary Legislation.
4. Housing and Sanitation.

DECEMBER: Tuberculosis.
1. The Tuberculosis Crusade.
2. Economic Causes of Tuberculosis.
3. The Need of Education.
4. What the Church Can Do.
5. Review of the Progress of the Kingdom During the Year.

These lessons are published in magazine form and issued monthly. The subscription price—50c a year—makes them less expensive than the usual adult lesson literature.

Pastors and church leaders who wish to see the work start off in the autumn with zest and inspiration will recognize at once the value of starting these classes in the study of Social Reform.

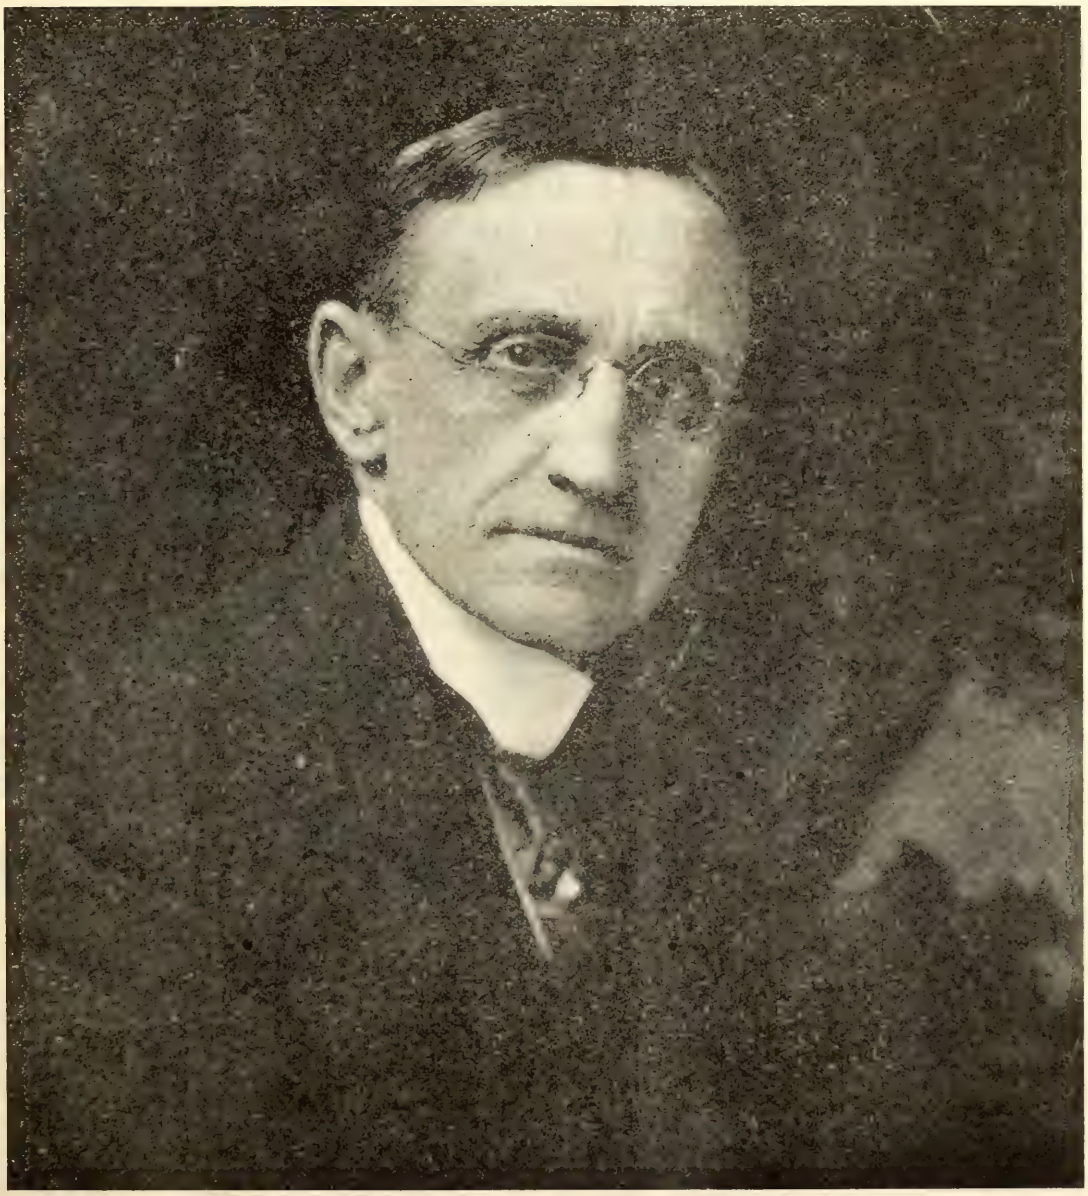
Send 5c in stamps for a single copy of the magazine. Do it now and begin at once to talk up the new program for the Fall Quarter! Address,

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.

700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Vol. XXVIII. Chicago, July 20, 1911 Number 29



MR. P. A. LONG, OF KANSAS CITY.

Leading factor of all good causes among the Disciples of Christ. Announcement was made at the Portland Convention that it was his purpose to give one million dollars to the great National Christian Hospital to be built in Kansas City, provided another million was contributed from other sources in the next ten years.

Married by the Justice of the Peace

By William E. Barton.

The Pastors' Department, seeking ever for great men to be honored by the ministry, holds up to the high regard of all ministers of the Gospel the name of Judge Gibbons, of Chicago.

He says he has stopped marrying people, and will not do it henceforth.

He says it is a minister's job.

And he is right.

A certain Montana justice of the peace is said to have used the following as his form of marriage:

"Have her?"

"Yes."

"Have him?"

"Yes."

"Married. Two dollars. Next."

That was a perfectly legal ceremony and would probably be so held in any state in this union.

And it is as dignified and impressive as the way in which many things are done in some of the most dignified courts in this fair and happy land.

"Hold up your right hand. You do solly swear that . . . you shall give . . . wherein the State of Illinois is plaintiff . . . defendant . . . so help you God."

That is not quite the way they do it, for it is impossible to express in type that inaudible, blasphemous mutter.

If judges and justices do so with the solemn things that rightfully belong to them, what will they do with the solemn things which rightfully belong to some one else?

A marriage by a justice of the peace is a pretty dreary bit of ceremony. Well had it been if judges and justices long ago had done what Judge Gibbons has done. And well will it be if now many of them follow his example.

Marriage, my dear friends, is not to be entered upon lightly or unadvisedly, but reverently, soberly, discreetly, and in the fear of God.

So far as the mere legal part of it is concerned, in some states it is not absolutely necessary that there be even a justice of the peace; but the reason why there should be a justice is a reason why there should be some one instead of the justice.

Society has a vital interest in weddings.

All the world loves a lover; and half the world loves the girl he loves.

The establishment of a new home is one of the most significant events in the life of any community.

These two young geese suppose that because they love each other, with a love such as no two young people ever had, or by any possibility could have had for each other, the only important thing is that some one should say to them, "I pronounce you husband and wife," and let that end it so far as the rest of the world is concerned.

But the rest of the world is vitally concerned with that event, and is likely to be concerned for generations to come.

Whatever can be done to invest that event with some of the many suggestions of its true meaning and dignity is well worth doing. And if the minister can do this better than the justice he ought to be there.

In primitive conditions and on the frontier it may have been well for justices of the peace and judges of the courts to marry people. But those times are rapidly passing, and in most communities have already passed. What now is needed is that marriages should be so sacred, so pure, so thoughtfully entered upon and so well lived up to, that good and permanent homes shall be established. The farther the young people keep from courts and judges the better. Start with a justice of the peace, and end with the divorce judge. Better start with the minister, and make the event so sacred, so significant, that the marriage shall be long and happy. You cannot add to its sacredness, but you can recognize that sacredness if you try.

Judge Gibbons is right. It is a minister's job.

It would be far better for the community if justices of the peace should cease altogether to perform marriages.

And ministers will do well in no way to cheapen the sacred meanings of the ceremony, but use to the full extent the occasion as one of deep social and spiritual significance.

One among the many weak things in Barrie's story, "The Little Minister," is the undignified way in which the minister himself marries the Gipsy girl. I believe they had to change it in a number of things when Maude Adams began to play it, and they made more of a woman of Babbie, and I hope a more dignified matter of the marriage. And I think Maude Adams was better there than in putting on feathers and playing Chanticler. But all questions of the stage aside, which are not in my line, this seems to me incontrovertible, that the interests of society and the homes are best served by making marriage a sacred covenant, and I think the average justice of the peace will make no pretense of doing it as well as the minister. Wherefore to all judges, justices, and other magistrates, I commend the example of the Chicago judge, who himself was once a minister.

1869 1911

HAMILTON COLLEGE

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Lexington, Kentucky.

Standardized Junior College Course, requiring two years for a high school graduate to complete.

A shorter Preparatory Course for those not graduates of high school, admitting, without examination, to Vassar, Wellesley, etc.

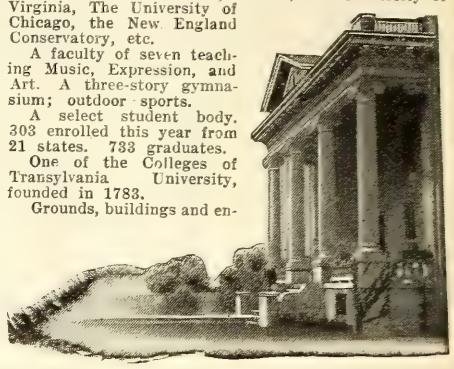
Faculty of 29, from Vassar, Yale, Wellesley, Columbia, Berlin, Leipzig, Paris, Cornell, The University of Virginia, The University of Chicago, the New England Conservatory, etc.

A faculty of seven teaching Music, Expression, and Art. A three-story gymnasium; outdoor sports.

A select student body. 303 enrolled this year from 21 states. 733 graduates.

One of the Colleges of Transylvania University, founded in 1783.

Grounds, buildings and endowment held in trust by an incorporated Board of Trustees, under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ.



Large, shady, park-like campus. Five modern buildings, heated by steam from a central plant, and lighted by gas and electricity.

Delightful dormitories. Home care. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals. Libraries, laboratories, etc., fully equipped.

Forty-third session begins Sept. 11, 1911. Write for catalogue.

H. G. Shearin, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale),
President

1798 Transylvania University 1911

OLDEST COLLEGE WEST OF THE ALLEGHENIES

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY

In the Heart of the Blue Grass

Continuing Bacon College, Founded in 1836, the Oldest College among the Disciples

Standard courses leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., LL. B., and A. M.
Faculty composed of professors especially trained in the best American and European universities.
Students from 30 states and foreign countries.
More than 150 ministerial students.
The Law School of Henry Clay and Justice Harlan.
Average cost to student, less than $200 a year.

For catalogue and other information, write to

R. H. CROSSFIELD, President :: Lexington, Kentucky

THE BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

A BIBLICAL and THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of high grade located at COLUMBIA adjacent to the UNIVERSITY of MISSOURI

University Credit Courses—Ministerial and Missionary Training Courses. Departments:—Biblical and Systematic Theology, Social Service and Missions, Old Testament and New Testament. Next Term Begins Sept. 13, 1911.

For Catalog and Information address Charles M. Sharpe, Dean.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $31,000 building just completed. Twenty college-trained, experienced teachers, Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior-College course leads to an A. B. degree; College, Preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated catalogue address MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, PRESIDENT

Next session begins Sept. 12. Columbia, Mo.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS

Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

700 East Fortieth Street - - - - Chicago, Ill.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT, - - - - EDITORS

In Memory of a Minister's Wife

Nine years ago last September, Arthur A. Wilson began his ministry with the First Christian Church in Bloomington, Ill. No pastorate ever opened more promisingly. The church was happy in the coming of such a good and gifted man and he was happy in the leadership of such a loyal congregation. With his wife and little daughter, Mr. Wilson took up his residence here with expectations of a long and fruitful ministry. He had many and large plans for this church and at once he threw himself with splendid abandon in to the work. But alas, only too soon the church and community most of all the faithful wife, were to learn the deep pathos of the lines:

"Just when we're safest, there's a sunset touch,
A fancy from a flower bell, some one's death,
A chorus-ending from Euripides—
And that's enough for fifty hopes and fears,
As old and new at once as Nature's self."

Arthur Wilson died after a pastorate of but six months here and while he was in the full tide and strength of young manhood. How long and pathetically eloquent is the roll of brilliant young preachers who perished in their prime. Robert Murray McCheyne Frederick W. Robertson, Maltbie Babcock, Percy C. Ainsworth tc recall but a few of the great names.

A Perpetual Ministry.

I seriously doubt if ever a six months' ministry was as richly influential for good, as uplifting as Arthur Wilson's for this church and community. It was wonderful. It is still wonderful. After nearly a decade, I still can feel the influence of this good man's life in the homes of our city. In many a humble dwelling in this city, as well as the more stately, the portrait of Arthur Wilson has an honored place and "none name him but to praise."

When he died, the grief for him was deep, widespread and of a crucial nature. And since when Arthur Wilson died, hundreds wept who only knew him as pastor or friend, what shall be said of the awful heartache and sorrow sustained by his wife? For some experiences, words are feeble. They fail me now. To whom did the life and love of Arthur Wilson mean so much as to his wife and child? Think of the hopes suddenly blighted, the happy plans forever frustrated, the joyous home life rudely shattered. Here is a grief that lies too deep for tears—a loss that was irreparable. Brave heart, how nobly she tried to live and love for their child! Who can know, save God, the heavy weight Mrs. Wilson bore, the terrible loneliness and heart pang, the nine years of longing "for the touch of a vanished hand, and the sound of a voice that is still? And then slowly but surely an insidious disease laid hold of this brave woman and on a recent Sunday at midnight, her spirit returned to God who gave it.

A Minister's Wife.

Mrs. Wilson was a minister's wife, and the dutiful and helpful wife of a very gifted and widely loved minister at that. Do we always realize just what this means? For one thing it means that she had to sacrifice a good deal for him. It means that she had to give him to the service of others when she would have liked much to have had him herself. No married man has ever been great and good in the ministry, except by the help of his wife. She shields and protects him, encourages and inspires him. And all the while she stands in the shadow. Thousands may know him where only one knows her. Hundreds compliment him where one praises her. The dust of David Livingstone slumbers in Westminster Abbey today but the dearer dust of his wife sleeps on in dark Africa's soil.

Mrs. Wilson's great influence over and in behalf of her husband will never be known to us fully, but we all know that she was faithful, a helpmate indeed, and that much of his success was due to "the wife of his youth."

Friendships in Bloomington.

Mrs. Wilson was loved in Bloomington for her own sake. There is a little group of good people in this church who never forgot her. They corresponded with her and with Catherine. They remembered them with gifts and in manifold ways indicated their affection. Nearly every year Mrs. Wilson came to us for a brief season and sat in this auditorium where so many things reminded her of the dear days that are no more. These visits were appreciated by this congregation. Every time Mrs. Wilson worshiped here, she was greeted with fine spirit of courtesy and affection. We were always glad to see her. We shall miss her sorely. We liked to think of her as the wife of our "promoted pastor."

The Beauty of Chaste Sorrow.

Mrs. Wilson's life since her husband's death has made us see the beauty of a chaste sorrow, for there may be and frequently is a beauty in a sorrow that is met and borne with Christian fortitude. Somehow it softens and glorifies character. There may be little of "the garish day" in it but there is much of the holiness of the twilight hour. Mrs. Wilson never obtruded her grief and I should imagine referred to it but seldom to her most intimate friends. It was a sacred possession. But one could not be in her presence long without feeling that she had been with Christ in Gethsemane and had learned to say with Him, "Thy will not mine be done."

The poet priest has told us aright that sorrow hath her beautiful and necessary ministry.

"I walk down the Valley of Silence—
Down the dim, voiceless valley—alone!
And I hear not the fall of a footstep
Around me, save God's and my own;
And the hush of my heart is as holy
As hovers where angels have flown!

Do you ask me the place of the Valley,
Ye hearts that are harrowed by care?
It lieth afar between mountains,
And God and His angels are there;
And one is the dark mount of Sorrow,
And one the bright mountain of Prayer."

Arthur Wilson and his wife have gone from us, but they have left us and the world a part of their very selves. Their daughter Catherine, like William Cowper in his famous lines, can truthfully say:

"My boast is not that I deduce my birth
From loins enthroned or rulers of the earth,
But higher far my proud pretensions rise,
The child of parents passed into the skies."

Certainly this dear girl has a rich heritage. Through her now, these beautiful lives will speak and live again. Somehow we cannot but feel that God has a great work for this young woman to do and that through her the father and mother may continue to minister to the world.

"All Things Work Together for Good."

There was one text that Mrs. Wilson often dwelt upon, sometimes turning to it in question, sometimes with full assurance, but always with a trustful heart. That text is from Romans, the eighth chapter, "For we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." Arthur Wilson loved God. His wife loved God. Why was he cut off in his prime? Why was their bright dream shattered? Why? Mrs. Wilson could not know fully here and now, any more than you or I, but she kissed the rod believing with all her heart that some time the day would break and the shadows flee away. That day has broken for her as it did for him and while we who still abide in the flesh must walk betimes mid shadows, we like much to think of the dear spirits of Arthur and Mary Wilson as dwelling now in a shadowless sphere.

EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

Social Survey

The New Western Naval Training School

It is not generally known that America's newest and largest naval training school is situated on Lake Michigan, about thirty miles north of Chicago. The academy at Annapolis is a different sort of school, being designed to train officers for the navy. During the Spanish-American War the attention of the navy department was called to the advantage of a training school in the Central West in order to provide sailors for the navy. The young men of the West respond to the inducements offered by the government much more readily than do the young men of the eastern states. With the increase in the size and strength of the navy it has become necessary to devise some means to increase the number of non-commissioned officers and men. To meet this need, the new training station has been provided. Three and a half million dollars were expended upon it as an initial cost, and ample provision was made for future growth. The plant covers 182 acres of ground on the lake front and thirty-nine buildings have already been erected. It is estimated that the institution can easily care for 2,500 men. One of the difficulties which the government had to overcome in establishing the new training school was in providing it with a war vessel suitable for use as a training ship. Under the provisions of the treaty with Canada, neither country is permitted to keep a war vessel of any description on the lakes which lie on the boundary. This provision does not prohibit this country from keeping such vessels on Lake Michigan which lies entirely within its own borders. After negotiating for many months, it was agreed with the Canadian authorities that a vessel might pass through the straits, but it was necessary to ship her guns to Chicago by rail.

The "Maine" Investigation

Many prominent engineers agree that the unwatering of the battleship "Maine" in Havana Harbor, Cuba, will prove of little value in settling the question whether the ship was sunk by an explosion from within or from without. No official statement has yet been made by the board of engineers in charge of this work, but there is a feeling prevalent that the final explosions, and the ones which wrecked the vessel, were internal. Gen. W. H. Bixly, chief of the army engineers, expressing his opinion unofficially said: "The work of unwatering the 'Maine' so far proves nothing as to the origin of the explosion of the magazines, but already shows such extensive destruction of the forward part of the boat that it is quite probable fuller unwatering will fail to give any proofs, either way, as to the origin of such explosions. I have so far made no reports or statements as to the origin of the explosion." This opinion is substantiated by Admiral George W. Melville, who is credited with having said: "I have always maintained that the 'Maine' was destroyed from within and not from without. I have said the examination of the ship in Havana Harbor would prove the explosion occurred within it. One of the powder magazines was situated between two coal bunker heads and one of the shell rooms also was near by. The coal, taking fire, probably heated the shells in the shell room and caused the explosion of one of the magazines." Such an opinion from two men of their standing "must give us pause." Thirteen years ago the "Maine" was sent to Havana Harbor to represent the United States in an effort then being made by our government to settle peaceably the perplexing problem of the mistreatment of the Cuban people by the Spaniards, then in control of the island. The presence of this warship enraged the Spanish authorities who regarded it in no friendly light. On Feb. 15, 1898, the vessel was sunk by an explosion in which two-thirds of her crew were lost. No one escaped who could give any hint as to the origin of the explosion, and the word was flashed over the world that the Spanish in Havana had destroyed the vessel by submarine mines. This supposition, added to the wild talk in congress, precipitated the Spanish-American War. With a hurrah, and shouting the battle cry, "Remember the 'Maine,'" the American people went into the conflict. They carried the day after but a few months' fighting, but a doubt has always remained concerning the origin of the explosion. At a cost much greater than the salvage from the vessel, a concrete coffer-dam has been built about the vessel and the water pumped out. The inspection of the wreck may settle one point—that the vessel was sunk by the explosion of its powder magazines. Whether this internal disaster was superinduced by the explosion of a mine under the vessel or resulted independently will probably never be known. But the mute testimony of the outward bulging sides and of the uplifted decks is fairly conclusive that an internal explosion was responsible at least in part. There is some doubt that the question, whether Spain was or was not responsible, will ever be settled.

Fall of the Monis Cabinet

